

French

English

Full text of " Historical Documents on 19th Century French Nationalism "

See other formats

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google Books

<https://books.google.com>

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves with the utmost precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the world's hidden treasure.

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs to the public domain. "Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to copyright. Expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our knowledge, too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced in this digital edition. The long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to the internet is a testament to the power of the written word.

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them available. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular by implementing technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

+ Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

+ Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the Google Books Search program.

For large amounts of text, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service

+ Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not do No cases.

+ Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is your Be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country. The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply posting Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to which The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages contribute to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

[has

ide: QE RS ne TE RS Re ne rs

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

rent Ci em es et

Mr

In Proud ;

WAR

| TO
| Secret Chronicle
1 + vi
The Stock Exchange and the Railways.
By the Author of Rothschild the King of the Jews

THERE
.

PRICE: 20 C.

PARIS,

AT THE PUBLISHER'S, 4 RUE COLBERT, 4846.

mt

D issued ne

To se

° + # .
Office printing shop, 28 rue Coquillière,

WARSROWS

Se-.-

| A

'Speculation is a consequence of Ja
July Revolution, which was the triumph of the bourgeoisie. The power of the bourgeoisie geoisie is linked to the money she possesses.

It's nothing.

Rights and power cannot
to belong to the one who does not possess.

"To be a national guardsman, electorate

ea

mayor, city councilor, magistrate, de-

Hey, journalist H-you must have it.

Power is measured by wealth:

With an income of 1500 francs, one is a guard

National: 5,000 francs gets you a juror's license or voter, with 10,000 you are a member of parliament

and with a capital of a few hundred

For a thousand francs, one has the freedom to say one's thought in accordance with the laws.

september.

Everywhere money reigns and rules;

he doesn't ask where he comes from, but where he is, A man who at twenty-five thousand

Ufesnes rent is by right knight: of

"The Legion of Honour. |

Mr. Rothschild is only a baron. Tomorrow

He would be a prince if he deigned to want it.

It's this immense power of money

squi-a erée et souteau la corruption eyniof our time.

During the French Revolution,* the 4

The "0

-'y-

ideas of emancipation and progress

were coming to power, each one thought: to the future of the people and the triumph of the Freedom, some through ambition, others

out of devotion:

Under the Empire, only courage could aspiring to glory, power and the fortune. Everyone was brave,

Today, money alone gives the Consideration: and power, everyone sees

(has

We want to achieve wealth without... secured by work. The average life is thirty years old, so you can see that pete
The sound cannot have the time to work
1st. 11. Fortune must therefore be kind.
with a speed befitting the era. For
To achieve this, we take risky business decisions.
where one risks everything: Or
We throw ourselves headlong into speculation.
U y. had in December 1845 61 comp-

at - 6 -7 L

railway companies formed for the ex exploitation of only five lines, it was so twelve companies and a fraction for each line. That is to say, a call to 6 billion 100 million. One sixth of the France's monetary wealth. It was upe commission of EIGHTEEN MILLION
for gentlemen bankers, because, for example,
Mr. Ganneron's property, these generous bene-creators of humanity, take their share mission not only on the first
-fifths and tenths paid, but in-core on four-fifths and the nine-tenths to be paid. So it was a triple sum given to the carryover, during-tage and speculation.

Maleré the mergers, two-thirds of the Companies were left empty-handed.
which will amount to about forty Millions lost, wasted, and stolen.
twenty winning bidders were

7 -

they were not shaken by the immense costs
His facts before any exploitation?

We have. invented to designate the compa-
gnies a significant word that is missing.
A wealthy company takes the name of sometimes the least serious ones, because for They use a railway as a pretext for bonus; thus:

A company is formed and opens a subscription of 100 million; it distributes
Take 40 or 50 million and keep the rest.
The public makes its payments: the com-
the company does not pay, on the contrary, its coffers fill up every day, stocks are rare and in demand, she sells his with a premium, and when She realized, she pours in her turn, after having collected profits considered

bles. |

It is through these frauds that the ac-

D: THE,

ù

tions: s'ébvent"amdéseus- di patt:: Are the first sermissions. is tlonsse 'verrdént avec prie'et weaker than 'soft:this premium,
to the companies from: ie, nd da
btes; The presidencies of certain companies gues fondires dans celle de M! Rbthectl for the Dunord line 'ont'paptté en détrx months more than 500,000 'francs Sat
count leppots-desvin.:

The tribune's voices will resound from the outset:
actionmasters "against" the coalition of large:corpagiies. Justice considers itself Cléréé: powerless against them, rhaîé
elleta- frappé : dürement' lés costiäbtrs of workers. The first ones by dice tactful and fraudulent add a sie Perftu to their superfhi, the row workers
milk at the price of: their travel: ajoatèr'ui pen of bread to the bread of Sr days near

They were not punished.

year

ALL FRENCH PEOPLE ARE EQUAL.

YAWT'LA LOI On o8e condemnér dés'oux
nérs carpenters, but who dares rat'élève la voit contté MM. Rothé:
ctfid; Decaen: and Lebtuf, Pepii-Lehkle their, Délamarré-Marti-Didiér,. Key Lañlte' (1), etc. It would be fine to see ttather
the little ones of the gentlemen bDanthièrs el correctional police, next to the blouse@
The worker's hole and hole.

Views: current: 16

Mieans, ditésvots: if that is the case, lar@
The pressure is just right:

1) We dared to do it in Rothschild I, King
Jüts;.el ça nous' va dei retides

Î Hons'infèmes, des menaceodicusesi ef allaques j lières de ces lăches ère wa jounrat' dd

fu, on the twenty-second: coast qué
Pos asser courageus pour 'dire cons peur

" – 10 –

But the bankers' covenants

They regulate trade; but for fifteen every year has seen the death of an industrialist sorting, and incessant bankruptcies give a bitter rebuttal to prosperity always increasing official discourse.
But you punished the worker, you
You must punish the speculator, or else he will...
These words must be erased from the Charter.
authors.

All French people are equal before the law. What I know and what I say, the

And the judge knows it too.

Is it only for the rich?
Does justice wear a blindfold?

Railway shares are entirely fictitious values when oneself-Xante companies are formed to exploit five lines, fifty-six companies must be rejected or merged. However,

YOU

THERE
speculate on stocks that apply
In any case, it's a lottery and a game. The laws have eliminated one and the other-

There are bankers who have rebuilt themselves
a loan using a line invented at remarks. What did it cost them! a regis-stump tree, a few books and a few reams of printed paper. After the pre-first actions given to the peer by fa-
. veur, the other scraps of paper se would sell with a premium and deferral, and one
- Knows that the bonus is never returned.

So companies were formed with Just two words. BONUS and DEPORTATION

'We cite houses that have thus gained

50 percent based on fictitious values, it All these financial thieves needed was the bonus and deferral, bonus to help the postponement, the postponement to double the bonus.
That tomorrow these companies will be ex-

-s'19--

due by the Minister; - and "will be the money to their subscribers, saufubdac"

except for the blessed bonus swindled at

If there are companies that have been few actions at the paif, there are eh'a qi n°en
They didn't issue it early. Everything happened in faïille:and the sharing took place entered mesgentlemen, the bank presidents, of the 80-society and committee members. Such a bankquier fimeux that we could name has made 'mass of shares' be subscribed to its committed and did not leave them one ne 0 mme mire 20

Another banker did dearly
pay: to a company the credit that he gave his name, He demanded a quarter for the tenths, not only paid but to pay and, moreover, has taken on the most

a large number of actions under the pretext to increase the bonus.

"Previous companies have filled"
subscription in a sudden manner.
with the help of signatures from men of:pallle, Following a major recent merger, yn. € company. was located in

in front of her, twenty-four hours a day to complete her subscription. She had to:
a general who remembered appropriately
of his former profession. :In. time of
In war, he said, every citizen becomes a soldier;
In times of speculation, any man can to become a shareholder, even if even his name would be nothing but a jaybird courts, or registered on the courts of our prisons. The general then rallied
These dubious industrialists who, one day, bro-
They can stockpile shares, and in the evening they sell...
Coptremarques, or font mille-trafics hon-
e.g., at ten cents per share,

ei

He was able to submit a book in time.
of illusory signatures. Such a fraud committed with a cynical air
Dace should have been brought before the courts.
nothing of the sort happened, and the company cou-Pable was only expelled without noise.

History will tell what role that played.
rulers in two famous eras
through speculation, and perhaps people will be surprised to see Law's system protected by the regent, and the bankers of our time, by the current government.

The government that sued Islands political associations, associations
working-class Catholic associations
he was not moved for a single moment by the associations
Financial matters. Facing the bandits Stock market fluctuations, it's hard to understand to take the excessive forbearance of the-justice. She therefore doesn't know what's going on.

sb

But just yesterday, there were numerous bankruptcies.
must have awakened him. Agents currency exchange offices, notaries, brokers
are seriously compromised by speculation
of Pandæmonium from vol. Fortunes Huge ones collapsed, others have suddenly appeared and certainly they are not due to nothing but the most shameful maneuvers.
It is a troubled hour or something each band is doubled.

In di

{1 is a troubled hour,
Or from some scholarship for each double band of 80,

One o'clock strikes! The bell rings...

these condottirides of finance, who ruin
with impunity, the public treasury. Hence These individuals with suspicious faces come and withered? Who are these industrialists con-naked only at the Palace of Justice, species

de lazzaroni, without profession or existence

me M6 ==

"Admitted tence. They go to the Stock Exchange expensive-Dear Ja, daily pasture, ready to subscribe to commercial notes or
"actions of iron rhemins, and all
For a few pennies. These degraded beings
-80nt-recognizable by their gaunt faces
-and withered, with their greasy, dented hats and blushing, at their sordid clothes, at a low, exhausted expression, to eyes shining with lust, at ma-nières of lackeys and ha- merchants
jaignant:àune cynique andace, Hne Obsequious baseness, these poor devils
who cannot even pay laundered-
#ewe, talk about their 'future' profits
ænec:a pssurance that would make one laugh if it @c was pitiful. Ades - hear, they do for: hundreds, thousands of francs of af-areas, their needy state must 'incessmentably cease; and tomorrow they will have ia
more brilliant fortune; but.in the meantime

= 7

the happiest among them are the very

_ kambles. agenis: of: some. brokers,

Marrobs, more skillful than delicate. Log us, tasked with lowering the price, exclaimed 21
Who wants the no to 30-252
-How many did you have if we were going?
One hundred: CURE.

Jekcsprends:

After having done: which markets: do same nature and have offered abundantly what they lack, if they are able-naked to operate a decrease, the broker buys. While those who do the increase, employs even maneuver and buy shares that their broker does not will only receive it if he has the placement of avance.

It is with such miserable means that the wolf-hawks of the Stock Exchange deceive

"They are acting in good faith."

Re m8 – TR

But above the petty rogues

What do we see? Men who, at

with the help of a royal commission, ruin
their customers and take a tithe teuse on the unfortunate players.

If stockbrokers are a scourge necessary, let justice weigh heavily at least on the brown brokers, –the behind the scenes and the business burners. We the let us ask in the name of morality and of public safety. re

Sims 19 &

{TL

Steam is undoubtedly one of the
the most beautiful conquests of intelligence;
It is the tree of good and evil that must
to give as fruits wonders and wonders.

Suddenly life enters its womb
metal; the steam bubbles, a long pa-
A cloud of smoke emerges whistling from the nostrils.
my monstrous iron ass; a hissing sound
A sharp sound is heard, and the wagon, mu pie
an invisible spring, leaps into the es-ES: cities, houses, trees,

hills swirl and disappear-
It is near the flying city; it is at

f

It is difficult if the air can compete in speed; the gnomes and ghosts of the Arabian Nights Nights declare themselves defeated. The gaze is less prompt, only fear can at-dye,

But the deaths in the ballad come quickly
also, and there steam is 'powered for the
For better or for worse. Those who, otù distorting God's blessings can also distort the intelligence of today
Maine, no matter, the whole of France n@
will soon be just one single town, Bordsatx.
Lyon; Marseille, on Nantes: will be, -dums
a distant future, the Paris. From: the brotherhood of the cities of the inali _tre la fraternité: des peuples; c'est à direia

reign of: liberty,:

Humanity must have its own paths.
like industry, see the locomotive to dart off: whistling; one: MORE ;oDe

has

ns" % : 55

Tell him: You won't go any further, you break against me. But the locomotive pours its march, se plonge comment un sword in the mountainside and in springs forth superb and triumphant.
Thus humanity continues its course generous, will break the rock before her of egoism and will triumph in its turn. The
The strength of humanity lies in one.
"It was a grand and noble idea that that of linking all the cities to the metropolitan: to bring men closer together. But it failed to prevent the speculation of the first This. Big idea and to shrink it in his selfishness, we must say it, the Sovereign by chance a large thought, man, did not know how to understand it.
*1] planted the first stone himself stock trading by pronouncing the award

gold from the railway
order,
The House had a choice to make between three means, the monopoly of the roads iron ore by the State, direct concession and free competition, he made a choice
last.

State monopoly was dangerous
For freedom. The direct concession could be used for corruption and fraud
electoral. Free and serious competition:
it seemed to offer all the necessary guarantees necessary for freedom and well-being of the country. But what has become of the competition?
it is in the presence of these scandalous mergers events that took place the day before the adjudication that, while no new compact it could not have the time to form. |

Facing the law so boldly Wolée, the minister should have abstained and not to succumb to the influence of a name and to the coeli financial arrangement. The direct concession was then a thousand times preferable in this that it allowed the minister to debate—

Competition without competitors becomes, at using an illusory discount, usurpation
of the most sacred interests.
"For the Northern line, the Roth company.
Schild presented herself alone, and with the help of a few days of discounts, obtained immense advantages. Judging herself-Likewise, the Northern Company had con-damned; the guilty one alone wants to corrupt-his judge. The members of both The rooms received magnificent banners.
quies, more than 15,000 shares; the jour-influential journalists received 75 of them, who 100, or even more. These p
The letters were addressed to judges!

And however rich the aristocracy may be 8-

es Ql me

nancy, she couldn't break it, -6t Clestavec éfroi qa'else verra se riser before her; this inexorable struggle. And subdued-
tin-que l'on.sppulle the people! |
The specters believed that ee qni
It had arrived by the line. From the North, it arrived.
has for all the dens and that the cpa-
Financial disputes would arise for the State,
Del ses caleuls faux qui ont donné.tant
of values to fictitious advantages.

The Basque people were soon spotted Qed'émission desactions équivalaià me emission of napies-monoaic.. A borrowing might be. difficult to operate on, 'ane -ensis-
his. of shares.offered the advantage: of the em-Paunt give some to the emprantewun bene-
fee, of 50:for 100,

"What had escaped the short eye of our statesmen could not escape
_aur pegards-des:vautours de l'escompf

ba-crétien:snhisede 1 1-compagakes has not mobile. From then on, the :princi-

Dieusoment; "I know: to collect bonuses" ar pe 19 ro sens avoir-de

to serve as a-

Well! The island has two of them.

rooms, in the nobility, in Les ca-I'm arranged, men

desde sans inteli-Sonce, so dignity, who sold themselves to ceppegniss-pour q der et
They were degrading, like their fathers.

were given paine: paine \ of remre Albusus = glorious.

tesu by the Passss, or the weapon
"line of men who speculated under the farmhouse"
that. The denunciation of NaTiowaAL has made to know that she was in the brothels

of the Stock Exchange, the share of ex#aint-simoniens Duveyrier and Pereire, and Îe Paessr, of the DEBATES, of the CENTURY and of the CONSTITUTIONAL. To fight with a Crushing taxes, journalism sells:
something other than advertisements and an-
nonces (1)! |
For journalism to be strong and ine-dependent, they should not be thrown between
the hands of money men, which:
what should be an apostolate has become:
sometimes infamous trade (1). The

(1) The Debates and the Century have been highly justified. The Constitutional Council has half-heartedly de-split, and the press argued that journalism:
had to get involved in the affairs, and that the fault was not to sell oneself, but to sell oneself well.
che.

(3: Let's give credit where credit is due to extremist newspapers:
left and to the legitimist newspapers. They left.
They are part of the struggle and are not involved in the turpitte

Ignorant or corrupt journalism has pro--
He has exalted evil instead of stopping it.
the bonus, and for the bonus only, of.
Numerous companies have formed.
The Paris to Strasbourg line was dis-putée par douze compagnies:

HAINGUSLOT, – GANNERON, – Lape
FITTE, NICE and FoL, – OpiorT, – Ar-
We, – DE HELL, – ROTHSCHILD, –
THE MESSAGING SERVICES, – BÉCHET, – OF La.
ROCHEFOUCAULD, – CAUMONT, – LA
FORCE, – D'ANTHOUD.

The auction was scheduled to take place on the 25th
and on the 15th, the two companies were re-led to two by a merger; again the Anthouard's company, excluded from the fu-Sion, was going to be excluded by the minister, this which rendered the competition procle- null and void
mée; which signals that from now on everything

The idea of competition is illusory.
We are well aware that mergers

smivégargent up to a certain point' the shareholder interests; but safeguard-dehtils those of the country? and the interest com
Isn't it worth a hundred times more than private interest?
from a few speculators.
Stock market speculators are divided seht in several classes. The capitalists ip with their own fortune; that bankers who, tasked with making 'the

from: medical

the hope of obtaining: ane prime, can 'to peiñe fairc:le premier paiement 'et SD forced volunteers the day before the second.
etc. come: the speculators-lazzaroni,
dhin'oatrien than a name already sn.

more serious naiesikes: companies

– 29 –

are precisely those who, having only pq rss actions, are found pa
new distribution; these actions usually servants, of coffee vendors, water carriers or.
small shopkeepers, those shareholders don't ask that the actions they can pay, and only count on the benefits.
probable benefits of exploiting the:
iron mins. Panic alone could have commit to selling and it is they who Raient: the benefits of MM, the wolves cranberries.

Stock market manipulations. They didn't cost no less than 60.4-70 million, is agent, intended for purchasing: rails; of machines and terrain, remained swollen fried in the dug holes. by Mole Islands
The stock market, the west, has become prey to our Donations to our English friends, |

Railways have given rise to a

– 530 –

new industry practiced almost all-days by deranged men. That's the one of an information provider. These in-industrial companies are responsible for providing the ad-company administrations, ren-accurate information on the solvency of shareholders. The Bot- Almanac
Tin actually bears all the costs; those who are there
Registered participants are considered good, and the others Detestable. That's the basis for our judgment.
the value of the information provided by these gentlemen. The newspaper Le Monde, having received similar information,
had to cease publication as soon as the cinema quintet day of his existence. His capital was complete, but its shareholders were insolvent.

Being that serious, it would not be
It's no wonder the work has stopped.
and the company was forced to dissolve,

4 –

after having spent, in expenses of all nature, the first fifths of the capital (4). The merger of the major companies Does it guarantee such a fact? The God of Northern Railway having seen the premium
of his shares from 500 francs to 348 francs.
4 felt obliged to immediately notify the en-
The increase in bonuses, which means that the God no longer has anything in common with the li-Northern gme, but it benefited from 140
roughly millions, and this gain compensates
quite suitably a recent loss of about fifteen million. That he im-afterwards carries the curses of the Stock exchange, the rich son of Israel remembers that his fathers worshipped the golden calf.

– rt

(4) Some well-informed companies have taken names of all the purveyors of empty promises,
But that did not prevent these industries from con-
to continue their trade, the promises being sold to reason of 20 to 30 cents per cent.

He os

French companies; more.or less serious ones had: com on: Ja cordial agreement of English capital, 4
The Paris Stock Exchange was in jubilation.
sed, timeo danaos. dona ferente

The English had positively: pr mis
to invest money in our business
When the money, that's what, at
They had to bring some to our place.
It was admirable! – and ours. Chan:
were already the god savethe, queen. and: the

our strongest companies. had.
eager to satisfy our requests generous overseas neighbors, and the...actions au pair. their had been enjoy with typical French gallantry. L
The English hastened to receive them

(4) But I fear the Auglaés (gr)ju T
1st place presiding: Auglais (Greeks) until in

SOS

|
I 20MD0S.ARECI OR: ROMNONL. Pleasure, munis
1 losgqué.laprime.leur, seemed quite _ } edible vases were made by English houses will retain them.
coentW'importans prestations et qui ni jeu |
| æent masses of shares sar:notre,
| already congested. It was by this MEANS,
| amesilayabque: british, that: our-ex-
| eyes:roinins, nonecurement:retirement
| lesongitals anis assient.en L'air de pla-
| tee in nes affaires, but ils-nerent en-
| care fairekes leurs avec les capitanx fran-
}
|

Pig at Y'aido-db the bounty (60:mit-

This honest conduct combined with that _ daroide.nos.banquiers, amena.la crise da Dec. A845 and preserved France from a immense disaster, because the panic, halting Debugging the dupes and the resources
usb nn EEE 1 of the che-

æ +

54 -"

mins of iron to climb as high as es Law's bank shares: what is
would inevitably have happened without the f-

see the precipice where we were inevitably heading a fall.

"But, momentarily stopped in its tracks,
Speculation is not dead; it will rise again.
tomorrow more ardent than ever, if justice
"tice" is a meaningless word, if the liberalities of Finance has silenced the chambers.
yours, if public opinion does not resound
his voice loud enough for the Dr
are forced to listen to it.

But what am I saying? Corruption appears—
It is a right of governments that want to slow to lean on her. To attack her is Attack them themselves. Look at the press.
Ministerial to do or to make apologies
Giess, look at our legislators, our Lycur—

|

E

— |

and our Solon, to mingle in this great social movement of our time.

Recently, the NATI6eNAL having deenergetically sanded, a financial operation a crime committed at the expense of the country and which-would bring in huge profits aa banker. What was the effect of the vigorous article from NarroNaL? He made the subscribers at the prince of finance-ciers, who cried out in a fit of galté:
— "I want the NATIONAL to have at-
So much patriotism once again, my subscriptions collected in twenty-four hours. "

Such an event paints a picture of the financial world, actions remain to be reported. At the time where shareholders' money must be returned after the auction and allocation of stocks, gentlemen bankers, are pushing downwards. We know that some subscribers-

- 56 -.

time has made their payments by small-time loan sharks, these lent on pawn, that is to say on the ti-very many shares; they kept them as long as The bonus was flourishing, but at the time of the debacle, driven by the bankers of which they were the secret agents, they have veadus to reinvest in their capital.

Others, seeing that the first ver-Sowing was done with difficulty, they did a new fundraising appeal (the company L. of Lyon), to discredit their ac-tions-and buy them back at rock-bottom prices. PPPendent that -cak «4th: pass: under the blinded by the eyes of justice, finance closes its counters at the comverce: it there is now only one line to follow, that of the railways which allows fishing in troubled waters and lending honor clearly at 60 percent.

NE cle PE RE PP D EN UE CR "ON US

- 357 -!

"The law punishes the revolt of the censers" against the crowns.:
She protects the revolt of the mtlfèôhs against the :frûs under.
Gold is king |
Through corruption and stock trading.i 3

©" Its agent is selfish individualism
Brutal; the current era abandons
Christianity to return to selfishness

God and he worships himself, : | RL
He inscribes these infernal mottos everywhere
. «Chacuæ cher $oï et pour'éois,; 0 Exploiter and ansmeser:.. Neither
. Dévbret les affronts pour parvetir:
In business, you should never be [redundant]:
Iieuaséntétre-ffipons": : he Heareux les-riches, etes; ete: 2.

=

T" Financial feudalism has replaced the nobility and clergy. These two orders have weighed heavily on the country, but the no-wounded was always ready to pour out her blood for France; but the clergy donated.
a portion of his wealth was born to the poor
Gold harvest;

The financial aristocracy has no heart, neither warfare, nor bravery, nor charity, nor homeland, nor religion.
A new Judas, she would sell for A few silver coins, all of humanity whole;

She would sell out religion and its priests;
She would sell out her country and her honor;
She would sell freedom and glory;

She would sell her brothers;
F She would sell herself to someone was Jâche enough to want to buy it;

- 79 -

. r 'But let her beware, the paga-

- nism has had its day ;:

The night is not eternal: 0
The blindfold of justice will fall away; and exploiters of humanity will remain
: under the yoke of the laws.

The law passed by the House is for-

Has this law been interpreted?

Only one Se showed up

she submitted a bid to

Strasbourg

For Nantes, two companies were present: a representative of the merger
bankers, the other the masters of possessions yours. The concession was for 35 years; the
The coalition offered a 350-day discount.
The postmasters are nothing. That would be certain,
That's a very bold reply.

if there wasn't something for me Again, how to D li

* debacle 20
and in the area of adherence: vis-à-vis serious competition: to put oneself in the position of herself outside: of concows: Three: ié
Gustrieis do bas-étages sont souscripious

LS
de6.,000 news of the commugtiie deb
Job postings! ;;
There was undoubtedly a cordial understanding.
to be in the Gnancière coalition:ct:sas advèt-| safwest. . |
Das use entreprise sérieuse-qui 68"
At db beautiful product: 2° the three" cinema
quibmes dé de la dépense part'Etat, ia roms tutrrr partielie faite-sprès une joustsatr6e !
years, one cannot nimettre
se:pisse des:balédths et 'des: nrystis ets: we could even les-qus"
liSérrptarsévèrement:

The minister has seen your records from 14 cortis.
postmasters' pêyuie, he saw at what resources we had returned<"
to complete the security deposit. Er ae"

"Will it ruin the competitive system?"

Ja condule: des-compegnies desti

LS

The cation is holy before God. It is 1s-mother of progress, industry and the

No, don't sue the association!
That capitalists have the right to... gather; but set a deadline, say: "two months before the filing of the stub books:
any association can take place and will be considered lawful. But this ex- term Piré, any merger will be viewed as .

a cause of disqualification and pursued by justice according to all the laws"
by forcing companies to wait two.
month, you give the competitors the time to arrive and free competition.
and seriously commits itself to the benefit of the State and citizens

* Or, if you prefer the ad- -
Dissected litigation that the chamber awards:
That very same person: everything will then be done on a grand scale.

>

has

rm NN SES x -

es Ti

- #4 -

- posts and Anthouard request

an investigation. It's time for justice to may it happen and may the country be purged of these leeches that suck up our very last-deny the shield.

Mr. Billault has already corrected the meaning of the law as it concerned shareholders,
the subscriber was bound to the company
engineering without the company being linked to it to the subscriber.

This abuse has just been reformed, but it
There are others as well, The system of Free competition is the best, we

We have to say it. But we must give true, the text of the law

- We are not asking for power prevents the association of capital not more than that of men.

To continue the association is to destroy brotherhood among men, The association

n)
° 4

There is still time, but tomorrow
Perhaps everything will be lost.
Today what has happened all- |
days in decadent times, THE |
AND steel and iron:
". Baal rompluceke true Ditu:' Onsepsit |

to the meter, or to diminish it. #4

What are our MPs? The dues of
The property alone is represented.
Only the property names the de-tбетésétles magistrates municipaux, et vous
want the property judge in its pro-pre cause, condemns itself, but This is madness!

Electoral reform alone can save power also shared then, will be able to

To be just and strong.

We may have been too hasty in calling
| The financial coalition, a feudal system, the . fecality wanted power for :the :pou-
she would see, and she would seize him with her hands.
_ of iron. The financial association. Doesn't want it
, power that for gain sondide, lalnere

..]

ES

ES

r

However, the problem does not lie within the association:
Capital formation: it is in the law against associations, in the law which forces the people and commerce to remain
unarmed, facing the bankers,
Twenty merchants cannot meet,
but nineteen bankers can; and if the illegal coalition of twenty traders
that of nineteen may be harmless

Anquiers, which is legal, can be mor-such as for commerce.

Make no mistake, the power
money and interest politics do not may only last for a limited time. The centralization-Capital influx ruins small businesses.
If we are not careful, it will be of the France, like England. There will be immense fortunes and immense miseries
res. Financial and territorial wealth French companies will be monopolized
and the crushed small businesses will fight each other

PES AT , |

will rest that in the face of the ruin of all the fortunes because it was built on the ruin of all powers. Feudalism has
It doesn't stop sometimes, but greed
It still works, it's more insatiable.
that ambition, and when it reigns by
the weakening of all the general principles
airy, she brings with her to power
the corruption of morals and selfishness.

The financial association is just one
A collective force, tending towards evil. That is to say-that is to say, acting in private interests for
to attain public power, through the
The most detestable means. Money, strength real is not in the financial association-
The governor-
the nement should rely on this strength
Instead of breaking it. Later, he will be him even the slave of the financial aristocracyre that he protects today, because he will have

The equality of fortunes; it is to this equal that we owe although

Lights of hope and freedom,

Se égalité que nous devons "noire
area |

Power should therefore not be Pne La cab contre. la libre cenenr-

On the contrary, did a prosecutor
Mu.roi recently said in .Un Br'OCÈS press release:

"In our opinion, the question of Selaira must
to be settled between the master and the worker, 90-Jon, the principle. Of a free:competition,
ALL (GOALITION is nge: infraction |
Aa law; no more. the. masters which |

a 43 to -

workers must not suffer. I will equate.
"May the balance be broken,"
Had the King's Prosecutor forgotten?

a few steps from him he was found
| M rai lived through tales let 0

even if he had ignored the deity of coalition:
commissioned by the speculators of Paris...

"When generous voices ask Ce.
dilemma: the children of the people are pla-
born in the alternative to slavery.
The death knell!

The King's prosecutor exclaimed, "gro

We are not called,

Gentlemen.
develop a system, but to punish a "Unpacking the back of daydreams and illusions."

Worker bent under the weight of labor, slave"
Volunteer, don't complain: Mr. Pros:
The king's cureacar said that your slavery was
has

0 -

your arms to feed your mother, your wife.
or your children, don't complain about your

Mr. (the polite king calls this:) a reverie, and he will find, if necessary, in the code a small article that punishes the il-illusions and daydreams!

M, the king's prosecutor finds the little-very happy, too happy even;
It is not the workers who work and qai write their names on a SAN-very, according to the King's Prosecutor, the:

The owners are angels and saints.

"What exactly are procreators?"
he exclaimed, honest merchants who have
They spent their entire lives in a...
MERCE ES es des sb tireless sons enjoy themselves today
Æ'hüi to cultivate the modest acquisition

—"H—

at the summit of their front, after long years of work.

In his optimism, the prosecutor Wouldn't the king have taken the exception for the rule. These are not, moreover, the prc®
the owners who are responsible, but the mar-slave traders, speculators and nsuriers, :

Is it at the stock exchange that Mr. Prosecutor
King Jallon saw the honest merchants

ts of his speech? Did he see much Rothschild or Gaanneron to cultivate the field acquired, more or less modestly not by the sweat of their brow, but by

with the help of L'Ac16, L'AG10 and L'AGI0/?

mi. Jallon doesn't 'resemble this'
excellent instructional style including the Cua-Atvart gave us the portrait? A pau-
The devil who stole a loaf of bread introduces himself in front of him and apologizes, saying that the

ES

Fainr has ushered him in. This vob —< Eh men
"God," replied the judge; "I have hungry, I'm hungry almost every day—and I don't steal for that reason.

– These are the: egotistical little people of: those:
who govern, who give so much bitterness– tumc to the generous spirits who defend the cause of the proletariat,

I myself am perhaps bitter.
my reproaches and yet I have not in the heart that is a love, that of my brothers.
I love the poor more ardently because that he is weaker and that he suffers, but I don't hate the rich, I'm just looking to!
to ecclesiasticalize it; I do not fight against wealth;
But the frill, I don't want it. (de–)
to fleece the owners, to sow the per-tnrbation in the social state; I ask “On the contrary, peace and happiness for
all. '

had

I am primarily defending sacred property.
inviolable and sacred, the property of the tra-yail

Bevenez: billionaires: if you canmez using your work ewe your in-Volligence, I will applaud you. But...

It won't stop me from telling you, you see.
sotre fans ei souffre. et secourez le.

“But I would relentlessly pursue the – “Fasuvais rich of the Evangelist. He who, like Schilok, trafficking in the choir .bu-Maine for a little gold, I would be without Have pity on these stock market speculators who plunge families into misery byüères and spread throughout the
the most egotistical and the most immense class corruption.

If I am guilty, the judges are guilty.
also; for every day they condemn thieves, I wrote these poems in a

to draw the attention of my fellow citizens to him toys. When the nation fell asleep in a deceptive security; when she cor-breaks and weakens, the duty of all A man of heart should warn him about his dangers; if his voice is not strong enough Health, what does it matter? The grain of sand plays a role.
sometimes a role in the fate of the em-near. After the unknown journalist who warns his fellow citizens, one can hear
Let the loud and powerful voice of La- resound!
Martine or Lamennais,

V.

- People might complain about my pr-dence. I reported some scandalous facts.
without naming the authors, but I believed having to complete an assignment without expressing myself to a defamation lawsuit.

The evidence of the fact being defended, the Conviction is certain, because gentlemen Bankers are public figures, so much so that...
that he will collect the money from the shares pairs, but they are private men when the truth offends them and they pursue
the perpetrator in the correctional police.

Recently there was a trial in dif-
friendship between:

The S6 Lo]
£ MM. de Girardin and Dorné;
A. Dumas and Eug. de Méricourt;
Ch. Marchal and Eug. de Mirecourt;
' (1) Granier (de Cassagnac) and C.

Surprisingly, the culprits are not not those who are wrong to be wrong, but those who are wrong to be right.

M... Dernés and Lebreton, Sing. de-Mé-Ricourt and Censor Hilbey were condensed.
born and I resolved not to add to their
ap celui from the author of this breach.

SU) M Grabier ostdé, Cnomgnac sommy fcertaine
ue sst of Holland. ù

= me:

= Nr

+

NOTE,

* The maneuvers of the Gex- ape co
TILL & T FoL have ph ue teurs n'ont j à une Sad.
serious indication MS that the funds they deposited with these gentlemen, have served-vi to make a house earn 6 million bank, which not only did not share-

nothing with them, gives them nothing

interest, but also holds them back for reasons

Studies have not been done and for fees that should be at the -
a small sum from the US 264,000 francs.

That's called... SKILL.

—_—. =

FIN. wine

IMPORTANT SCREW.

Roths' alleged response child [°° a Satan, containing in his first lines an in- slander soul and hateful, is the work of a
Mr. Mani, former grammarian ridi-

Today reduced to hiding for
to avoid the corrections he deserves.
(Read for more information)
LIBELLISTS UNMASKED, by GEOR-GES DAIRNVÆLL.)

mm mr

Digitized by Google

has

EXTRACT FROM THE SUMMARY:

»

Money was the god of the era, 18 million clerks Missions for the poor bankers – Morality of the bonus and carryover – 40 million lost by the shareholders – reputable companies – Revealed-information on speculators and share issues
The North – Strasbourg – Bankers in justice – Associations are not mergers
– Fraud and Monopoly – Usurious Bankers
– Shareholders with 10 cents – theft, theft, theft
–The crooks on the stock exchange–brokers and burners business – 11. Prodigies of steam – The human manity – The State – Public and private interest –
The good and the bad – Our tricks
good friends the English – A financier king – corruption – what lynxes are – I;
Singular judgments – conclusions.

Office printing company, 22 rue Coquillère,

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PRESERVATION SERVICE

SHELFMARK G0 S2 a. (9

THIS BOOK HAS BEEN MICROFILMED ((CC,)

MICROFILM NO mic
SJicucC

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized
by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google Books

<https://books.google.com>

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves. It is made available online as a precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the world's hidden treasures.

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs to the public domain. "Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to copyright. Expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our knowledge, too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced of the long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to f

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

- + Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used any commercial purpose.

- + Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field For large amounts of text, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service

- + Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not de No cases.

- + Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is y Be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply pos Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to wh The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages contribute to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and

online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

(LL

D! HN SPBL J

Soc. £900, 1

SD couxcr

%
FROM THE LIBRARY OF COUNT ALFRED BOULAY OF MEURTHE
%

PURCHASED APRIL, 1927

Digitized by Google

HISTORY
SAINT-SIMONISM

AND-OF THE FAMILY

DE ROTHSCHIED,

OR

BIOGRAPHY OF SAINT-SIMON AND BAZARD

BY

we

Messrs. MICHAUD and VILLENAVE,

1st

Sutvie of the biography

Li

14

+ At #12

DE MAYER-ANSELME ROTHSCHILD and DE NATHAN, his son.

1)

6

(Extract from the Universal Biography, volumes LVII and LXXX)

CAT LBp"

HAS Lei Company

Dec (2
"> Xe A. AC

of X #12

1st

Mo #12

4

f EL

Fr

AT THE OFFICE OF UNIVERSAL BIOGRAPHY,

RUE DE LA JUSSIENNE, N° 8.

ARS

\
Ar

—

M EBPCEH CE? BPCES
6) 9 6) 9 00 60 CS)

\t N(|

born

—

T4

1

#1
,
{
e
+
"
\
\

In

"IS

THERE

r

ÿ

y

:

:

; /

4

:

#

;

;

>

#

V..

:

"

&

,

\

0

;

.

eo +, '

: :

L

, L

5

,

:

,

:

has

Hey

To ra

L

.

#

,

has

,

- HAS .

L

LS

,

\

Related

nd

Li)

"=

*

THE]

V

4

And

HISTORY

OF SAINT-SIMONISM

AND THE FAMILY

DE ROTHSCHILD.

Read +

E. DUVERGER PRINTING HOUSE,

43 Rue de Verneuil

—

HISTORY

SAINT-SIMONISM

BIOGRAPHY OF SAINT-SIMON AND BAZARD

Messrs. MICHAUD and VILLENAVE,
Followed by the biography
BY MAYER-ANSELME ROTHSCHILD Er BY NATHAN his sons.

(Extract from the Universal Biography, volumes LVII and LXXX).

PARIS,
AT THE OFFICE OF UNIVERSAL BIOGRAPHY,

RUE DE LA JUSSIENNE, N° 8.

4847.

& 5 CE 4 0 LS V4 |
HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY
A7 FROM THE LIBRARY OF

COUNT ALFRED BOULAY OF MURDER
April 1927

PUBLISHER'S WARNING.

The chance of the alphabet has brought them together in the same volume (the Lxxx) from the Universal Biography), as we bring them together in this brochure, the name of two very distinct characters in the first aspect, but in which, however, one finds more relationships and by analogy, which we had not initially considered.

These names are SAINT-SIMON and ROTHSCHILD.

The first of these two famous men was the creator, the leader of a sect which, barely known for a few years, has fallen in oblivion and profound disrepute; the second, on the contrary, founder of the richest, best-accredited trading house said to be the head of the wealthiest family that ever existed that we know, the father of children who are in some way at- Today the representatives, the personification of the most religion ancient of the world.

The Jewish sect, the first of which was established on the dogma of the community of goods, based on contempt for wealth, and that in The other, on the contrary, seems to have long been a love of riches. time the principle and basis of doctrines; that even in their deviations, in their disregard for the laws of Moses, the ancient Hebrews ad- they brought down the golden calf, and from Mount Sinai to their triumphs Since 1815, the descendants of Jacob have not ceased to show themselves strongly attached to this secular worship.

After being dispersed like the Israelites, the Saint-Simonians have shown, it is true, less attachment to their doctrines, and the Most of them returned to the Jewish sect from which they had gone out. Welcomed, protected by those considered Today, like sovereigns or high priests, they have They invested heavily in the railways, and they held very good positions there. places, saying that this phase is just as good as the one announced by their Master. In this respect at least, there isn't as much difference. that one might think it was between the Saint-Simonians and the Jews. The ha- The sardine who brought them together in this publication is therefore not as blind, one might say,

First, in this brochure, you will find the Notice by Henri de Saint-Simon, leader of the sect that bears his name. That's the story. the most complete and truthful account ever published of his person and its doctrines.

To complete this story, we have included the Notice of Bazard, as our colleague Vil- Lenave, in our LVIT* volume: it's the story of the sect, after the death of Saint-Simon, of whom Bazard was one of the successors. We we only had to add a few facts subsequent to the death of this one, under the title of Last Era of Saint-Simonianism.

As for the biography of the Rothschild family, we do not Let's not be afraid to say that this is one of the most important pages of contemporary history. We believe that the two Notices, that of Mayer-Anselme, who died in 1812, and that of Nathan, his son, who died in 1836, which we present as they are found in the last volume of the Universal Biography (the LXXX'), are an equally impartial and comprehensive picture.

After drawing the facts from the most authentic sources- As for them, we imbued them with the truest colors, the more worthy of history, and especially of the greatness of Biogra- Universal Philosophy, from which they are taken.

The last part of this publication is the Landgrave's notice of Hesse-Cassel, whose history is essentially linked to that of the Rothschild family, and which we also present as it is found in volume LXVII of the Universal Biography, published health subject.

Thus we can guarantee that this Notice, as well as that of Bazard, was not made for the needs of the cause, as they say to Le. Our esteemed colleagues, Lesourd and Villenave, who They composed them, one in 1834, the other in 1840, and did not think then to the Rothschild family; they only thought about conforming to the principles of truth and accuracy which were the foundations and the an invariable rule of our editorial staff.

Digitized by Google

Big " univ. Er! fème LKEF Page #05.

Lith.Fourquemin.

TMS AN 1

CLAUDE-HENRI

OF SAINT-SIMON.

rm SEE

—

Founder of the sect that carries his name, he was born in Paris on October 17th October 1760, from the same family that the illustrious author of the Memoirs, contemporary of Louis XIV, and as he claimed to be descended from 'counts of Vermandois, and consequently— succession of Emperor Charlemagne. His father was the eldest, but having Having been disinherited, we do not know why— What, he lost both the title of a duke and a great fortune. Young Claude-Henri received an education a completely philosophical cation, in the meaning we gave to this word at the end of the last century, and he counted studious, and therefore strange in his tastes and ideas, he does not apply-qua specifically to nothing, just touching

all the arts, all the sciences, without going into any of them in depth. Gifted of an active, ardent imagination,
and with an inherited vanity, he believed early on that he was called to play
a major role on the world stage.
At seventeen, to imitate without no doubt the great Frederick who is making himself knows how to apply every morning a

With cold linen on his face, he gave or-tell his servant to wake him up Every day with these words: "Raise-You, Count, you have great things to do." Like most of the young people in his rank, he had entered the career
military in 1777, and, two years later, He had obtained a company. During-that Louis XVI sent an army to aid from the American insurgents con-between England, Saint-Simon was at number of officers who took part to this expedition. It was said that he was there was distinguished on many occasions

sions; but on that, as on beautiful-Unfortunately, we haven't had any other problems.
that his own assertions, and the history-
The lord must be wary of it. What is there in Sure, that's what most of the officers who fought in this war, he received, when it was finished, the de-Coronation of Cincivnatus. He still has said that, having become friends with Franklin, he engaged in a serious study of the organization of this new state, and that when peace was made, he parran through the southern regions of New World, especially Mexico

that, and proposed to the viceroy of this colony to establish communication between the two seas, by making navigable the In Partido river, of which an arm throws itself into the Ocean, to say that the other pours its waters into the South Sea; but it seems that vice-king attached little importance to this project. that others, moreover, had already Presented. Returned to France immediately.

after peace was concluded (1783),
Saint-Simon became a colonel, and, at

At the age of 23, he took the command

command of the Aquitaine regiment, infantry. It was a promotion.
pide, and a consequence of one of the

the greatest abuses of that time, which was to grant this high rank only to young people of the highest birth session, but which too often were, incapable, and, still residing at the court, rarely showed themselves to their regiment

It seems that Saint-Simon did not
Not otherwise. "A military career"
"Besides," he said, "he wasn't smiling at me."
"hardly. The sole purpose of the war"
"(The American one) interested me vi-
"vement, and this interest made me
"to endure the work without repugnance"
"Gnance. My vocation was not "to be a soldier; I was inclined to a
"a very different kind of activity, and I
"I can say the opposite. Study the mar-
"The human spirit, for work-
"then move on to the improvement of "Civilization, that was the goal: that I
"I offered myself." If the profession of soildatne lai convenait point en temps de
'War was much worse than peace'

to escape the boredom of a certain kind of a life that consisted only of doing the exercise during the summer and to show off at the court during the winter, he began to travel, and left for Holland in 1785. The Duke of La Vauguëyon, then ambassador to that country, had decided the Estates-General to do, in conjunction with France, an expedition against the possessions English in India. The command—the details of this expedition should to be given to Bouillé, who had done the American war with so many e-brilliance, and that Saint-Simon had con- It was intended to serve as a new... calf under his command. But this project, whose execution he pressed for a year— cution, having missed due to the illness— French diplomacy and the indecision of the Versailles cabinet, He returned to France in 1786, and left shortly afterwards to Spain, where he lived for the first time the tale of Redern, who was the Saxon ambassador in Madrid, and who later had to to be his partner. As was his custom,

he soon submitted various projects in government, between at- very much that of a canal intended to make to connect the capital with the sea. But largen't and the laborers man-

'quait; Saint-Simon consulted with Cabarrus, then director of the Saint-Charles bank, and which became later Minister of Finance. All two presented another project, whose completion was intended to bring about the almost abandoned company. Ca- Barrus pledged to provide the funds necessary, subject to the concession

Simon offered to raise a legion of six thousand men composed of foreigners Gers, of which two thousand would have held garrison, while the four thousand others would have been employed in the tra-

Canal valleys. The government would have only borne the costs of e-

'equipment and military hospitals;

the excess expenditure to be amply opened by the payroll, of in a way, he said, that with a sum modest, the King of Spain would have in

0

The most beautiful and most useful canal

of Europe; he would have increased his army of six thousand men and increased his kingdom of a born population-Constantly laborious and industrial-trielle. But this beautiful project did not have more seamlessly than its predecessors; and one must believe that there were some there difficulties that Saint-Simon. He did something more safe and, moreover, useful in establishing in Andalusia, stagecoaches at low cost almost identical to what existed from at the time in France, and which was lacking completely in Spain. He won there fairly large sums that he did not hold that it is up to him to increase it further; but always impatient for rest, and not unable to stay a year in the same places, nor take care of the same objects, he returned to France to the com-beginning in 1789, precisely at the time when the revolution began ait. 11 He stayed there at first, he said,

seeming to want to remain a spectator impassive to the events. However—while it is likely that his es-took to adventure and his taste for innovations carried him from the outset
then naturally towards the revolutions
tions, while his rank and the exem-members of his family were supposed to train him
in the opposite direction; but, on the other hand
On the other hand, his taste for travel and the risky ventures had a strong altered his fortune, and, as so many 'Otherwise he thought he saw in these songs—political movements a good way to to restore it. He, of such high birth—health, he, descendant of the proudest courtiers of Louis XIV, associa-cià with a Prussian Protestant, for to buy the spoils of the nobility and the clergy of France! If we do not con-
* It's astounding that profit and speculation mercantile, it must be admitted that the o—

The operation wasn't bad. They purchased the national assets of almost an entire department of the Normandy (that of Orne), and even some from the capital,

including the Grand Hotel des Fer-my [unclear] in Bouloi Street. For everything that they didn't even pay the first twelfth required by law

under penalty of forfeiture; and when The Terror would have forced the Prussian to save (see REDERN, LXXVII, 401) and put Saint-Simon as nobleman behind bars of Robes-Pierre, there wasn't one yet

penny paid. But that was precisely

by the causes that were supposed to destroy her that this company did an excellent affair. When, after the fall Robespierre, the Prussian could to return, and that Saint-Simon recovered his freedom, the value of The value of assignats was practically nil.
and despite that they were still admitted as payment for national assets nals; but the decline was in-
run, and it seemed impossible to evade it. However, they do not They did not despair. We know how much the powerful figures of that era showed themselves favorable treatment for buyers of national assets, and how they gave away easily, and at very low prices
areas they had not approached prayed that by shedding so much blood and tears! The Redern company and Saint-Simon found zealous individuals among them.

'protectors, and through them she succeeded to be relieved of his disgrace

so that his late payment-
This earned him the immense advantage
to pay, not one-twelfth,
but all of his acquisitions,

'with assignats that she bought at Six francs a thousand! Saint-Simon, who was not yet thinking about the

'community of wealth, trou-

came the liquidation of profits,
there were two hundred thousand francs of annuities for each of the two a-companies! It is true that Saint-Simon said that he hadn't been given everything that belonged to him, and that even there was a trial, which one might plead-da, that memoirs fureut echangges, and that finally the discussion ended with a life annuity of twelve hundred francs, which Redern confessing felt compelled to pay, not for re-
to establish the balance of the sharing that it maintained that it had been well done, but by consideration for a partner who had ruined in daydreams and madcap fantasies
companies.-According to Mr. Louis Reybaud, which we must declare here that the work entitled: Studies on the contemporary reformers, we
was very useful for the composition of this notice, the commercial period-
The social aspect of Saint-Simon's life was closed as soon as he had settled his accounts with Redern. Seeing himself in possession-sion of a rich capital, he approached,
he said, the scientific period and experimental, the toughest, the most stubborn of all, the one where Christ
new crown to wear
of thorns. To learn the basics of Ha science, he became a schoolboy, at the

"in the manner of the great lords, in attracting professors to his home, at instead of going to their place. Lodged first opposite the École Polytechnique, he received physicists at his table to learning physics, astronomy-

my way of learning astronomy;

he scattered it here and there, throughout your body

teacher, gold coins that we sometimes forgot to return it to him.

He had enough mathematical knowledge.
turned to physiologists, and moved to settle not far

j:

has

From there, near the medical school.
Thus he studied, not without some Fresh, but with all its comforts.
on the one hand, the science of inanimate matter,
on the other hand, the science of animate bodies
mes. The experience that followed was that travels. He traveled around England land and Germany "not meeting
"In the first one," he said, "none

"A crucial, novel, and surprising idea."

"the other in the middle of his philosophy"
"mysticism, a state of childhood of the "General science." And he adds that he "brought back nothing from this expedition"
"nothing, if not the acquired proof
"of a backward and con-
"Fuse..." – It was at the time of this

European tour that must be linked-

dear the strange visit he paid to madam
de Staël, and his strangest proposition again. While passing through Geneva, the phi-
The philosopher asked for the favor of being received at Coppet, and, barely inside: "Madam,
he said to the baroness, you are the woman-
the most extraordinary one in the world
as I am the most ex- man extraordinary; the two of us will be...
We would probably laugh at a child again
more extraordinary...» Madame de Staël had a mind well-formed enough to enrit,etil faut avoue qu'ellenepou- .

would hardly do otherwise. On the return

From this pilgrimage, Saint-Simon realized

his last and decisive experience;
In 1801 he married the daughter of one of his former brothers-in-arms in the war of American independence. This
The union was far from happy; for, at After a few years, the two
the spouses divorced, by mutual consent mutual understanding. "I wanted to use the ma-
"marriage," he said himself, "like
* a means to study the sa-
"vants, something which seemed to me to be ne-
"necessary for the execution of my
"enterprise; because, to improve the gold-

in 11 -

"Organization of the scientific system,
"It is not enough to know well
"the state of human knowledge, it
"we still need to grasp the effect that the cul-
"The nature of science produces in those
"who engage in it; one must appreciate
"the influence that this occupation
-< exerts on their passions, on their < spirit, on the whole of their morals
"and on its various parts." The
The strangest thing about this wedding,
that is what the philosopher experienced-their, having had no children, and despairing of ever having any, he wanted to go there-
to come about through the intervention of a third party;
and, convinced that children must always, from a moral and physically, to resemble their father,
he wanted his wife to marry a
A man of great genius. In this but he proposed it himself to one of them
of our greatest mathematicians,

Madame de Staël. The scholar having accepted, and the result was a son who,

it is said, did not respond, under all circumstances
reports, to the philosopher's expectation.

Moreover, most of the experiments statements that Saint-Simon then made were very expensive; he gave some balls, sumptuous dinners, experimental evenings, and for
He devoured the entire sum.
which remained from the Re- liquidation
Last. It was a kind of all-out gamble.
lordly which lasted twelve months.

Calm amidst this noise, jumagnifying others without being judged,
practicing everything, good and evil,
the game, the orgy, the decent maintenance,
the discussion raised, to have Experience of all things and of all positions; gourmet, de-lavish, prodigal, but by sys-

He lived by theme rather than by taste.
Thus, in one year, fifty years, and
He ran through life instead of walking.

expensive. In order to acquire it before the time
He used and abused the old man's knowledge.
of everything, so that one day, I can do to include everything in his calculations; finally he inoculated himself with the diseases of the century to to determine its physiology later. All His life was an experiment.

It would therefore be wrong to judge her by the standard.
of others; he himself does not know-
I don't know. "If I see a man," he said-
"He, who hasn't launched his career
"of general science, to frequent
"houses of gambling and debauchery,
"not to flee with the most scrupulous
"Beware of the society of people"
"of a recognized immorality, I say-
"rai: Here is a man who is losing his way;

"habits he acquires debase-
"will in his own eyes, and the ren-
"will therefore be sovereign-"
"Despicable man. But if this man-
"me is in the direction of the phi-
"theoretical philosophy, if the goal of its
"Research is to correct the line"
"of demarcation which must separate
"the actions and classify them into good
"and bad, if he tries to find-
"to find ways to cure these diseases"
"dies of human intelligence, which
"lead us to follow roads
"which take us away from happiness, I
"I will say: This man travels the car-
"behind the vice in a direction that
"will necessarily lead him to the "Highest virtue." Virtue or vice,
Saint-Simon was completely ruined there.
and instead of being able to host and feeding science, it was the turn of the science of housing and feeding it
She did it less magnificentlyshe was lying to him; for she intended the philosopher to one last experiment that of need and misery. Press-sensing this declining phase, he had thrown out the plan for a remuneration-popular tion, for scholars and the

- 12 -

men of genius, in his Letters
from a resident of Geneva to his contemporaries, bizarre and new piece who discerned the purpose of his last ideas. "Open," he said, "open a « subscription in front of the tomb of "Newton, subscribe all indiscriminately-"
s tement pour la somme que vous
"wishes. That each subscriber
-"names three mathematicians, three
'physicists, three chemists, three
"Physiologists, three literary figures,
"Three painters, three musicians. Re-
"Renew your subscription every year-
"tion; share the proceeds by-
"between the three mathematicians, the
"three physicists, etc., who will have ob-

"Degenerates will enjoy a reward"
"Worthy of them and of you..." That was it his first theme, which he then developed in a series of letters,
where he divided humanity into three large categories, seeking to prove-to all, and with arguments appropriate for each, the excellence of his method of remuneration; then he established the following formula: the spiritual power among the imams of scholars; temporal power between them hands of the owners; the power of name the individuals called upon to rem-
.blir the functions of top leaders of Humanity in the hands of all the world; for salaries to the governors Nantes, consideration. All of this,
As we can see, it has little value; it's just...
Piaton and the Abbot of Saint-Pierre to A state of amalgamation; it's a dream
After a thousand dreams, an innocent utopiapie which ends with a sort of 'prosopopoeia, epilogue of the piece'
where he supposes that God appears to him in a dream, and said to her: "Queen renounce-
"This will lead to the claim of being the leader-
"the place of my church; the pope, the "cardinals, bishops and pre-

They will stop speaking in silence.
"No, etc." The only fact that results
'This booklet shows the tendency theosophical of the reformer, already strongly accentuated. This trend is was better characterized later, during-that his works in philosophy and industrial economy seemed calling religion their dercorollary. — But other ou-Vrages were to mark this route:
the first was a response to a Napoleon's program, which had said to the Institute: "Report to me
"progress in science since
"1789; tell me what its condition is
"current, and what are the means to
"to use to make him do
"Progress?" To this question, then... asked, Saint-Simon had replied

scientific works of the 19th century, vast study which he himself felt unable to approach, and which he reduced to a more academic scale
in his Letters to the Bureau of the long-gitudes. There, as one might think, he does not accept the PiInstitut program that as a pretext and as a framework.
'Instead of receiving the impulse, he gives; instead of settling the past, it he foretells the future; he makes prophecy tie when asked for statistic. – Moreover, fundamental thought
The mental aspect of this work was always

to push scientists towards a reor-

organization, 11 it was said there: "Since
"from the 15th century to the present day,
"the institution that united the na-
"European tions, which put a
"a brake on the ambition of the people and
"streams, successively af-
"weakened; she is completely de-
"Trout today, and a war"
"General, a terrible war,
a war that is advancing like
"expecting to devour the entire population"

LS

– 19 –

= European, already exists since
"twenty years, and has reaped several emilkions of men. You alone
"can reorganize the euro- society
"Peau. Time is running out, the blood
"Flow, hurry up and pronounce it."
As a pledge of unity and progress,

Saint-Simon concluded by asking

a kind of intellectual magistracy

as a logical derivation, the hierarchy of capabilities, basis of the faithousand Saint-Simonian. This work is not the only one he left on these subjects. Letters on the Encyclopédie, les Mémoires sur la gravitation and on the science of man, se relate to that time and to that series of studies. – During which reform-Matear was thus pursuing a task painful and misunderstood, major events political events were stirring up France and Europe. The Restoration was coming to arrive, and with it a return to names of historical importance that. Saint-Simon, poor at the time, before emergency services, and simple copyist at Pawnshop, at a rate of one thousand francs per year, would undoubtedly have been ad-placed in the favor of the new court, if the strange direction of his ideas had not kept all offers away from him and all the advances. Nothing was done. nothing could be done for a no-similar value; he remained completely "Forgotten. Also, a few years later,

In 1819, he published a pamphlet

under the title of Parable, in the- which the tip of the great sei- ear an unsung genius emerges from beneath the surface development of the radical economist.

"We assume," it says, "that
"Ja France suddenly loses its five-
"as early as the first physicists, his "fifty early painters, his
"fifty first poets, etc."
"(follows the nomenclature), in all the

"three thousand first scholars, artisans-
"Yours and artisans of France. Like
"These men are the French
"more essentially producers,
"those who give the products
"More imposing are those who lead"

"tion and which make it productive"
"in the fine arts and in the "Arts and crafts, they are really
"the flower of French society, they "are of all the French the most "useful to their countries, those who pro-
"the most glorious ones are those who hasten"
"the more its civilization and its prosperity-
"Friendliness. France would need at least "an entire generation to repairtorment this misfortune; for men

"who stand out in the work

"of positive utility are to verify-
"Anomaly tables, and nature is not
"not prodigal with anomalies, especially
"of this species. Let's move on to another-"
"This is a supposition. Let's assume that the "France retains all men"
"of genius that she possesses in the "sciences, in the fine arts, in "Arts and crafts: but that it has
"the misfortune of losing on the same day,
"Sir, brother of the r@i, monsei-
"Lord the Duke of Angoulême, mon-
"Lord the Duke of Berry, my lord-
"Lord the Duke of Orléans, my lord-
"Lord the Duke of Bourbon, Madam"

-“The Duchess of Angoulême, madam”

to the Duchess of Berry, Madam
"Duchess of Orléans, Madame la du+"
"The Duchess of Bourbon and Mademoiselle-
"Condé's saddle. May she lose in
"At the same time, all the major offices"
"crown ministers, all the mi-

'State ministers, all the masters of

"requests, all the marshals, all
"the cardinals, archbishops, bishops-

"all prefects and sub-prefects,
"all employees in the mini-

- 14 - ,

"All the judges, and in addition to
"that the ten thousand owners
"richest among those who live
"nobly; this accident would grieve
"Certainly the French, because
"that they are good, because they do not know-
-would view with indifference the dis-
"sudden appearance of such a large

"Many of their compatriots. But

"this loss of thirty thousand individuals
"due, the most important of the State,
"would only cause them sorrow"
"from a purely sentimental point of view"
"mental; for it would not result in-
"cun mal pour PÉtat, premier par
"the reason that it would be very easy to "fill the places that would be empty-
"vacancies. There is a large "number of French people able to exercise"
"to perform the duties of the king's brother"
"As well as Sir; much
"are capable of occupying the positions
"princes just as suitable-
"ment that monseigneur the duke of An-"Goulême, my lord the Duke of Or-"Léans, etc. The antechambers of the
"The castle is full of courtiers"
"ready to occupy the positions of the great
"Crown officers; the army"
"has a large quantity of half-
"Litards as good captains as
"our current marshals. What a mess-
"Our ministers of state are worthless!"
"more capable administrators"
"Managing departmental affairs well-
"mentions that the prefects and sub-prefects"
"fets currently in operation! that
"lawyers who are also good legal experts"
"Our judges! Our priests too!"
- capable of our cardinals, that our

"our vicars general and that our cha-
"Noines! As for the ten thousand pro-
"Priors, their beritiers do not-
"would need no training"
"to do their salons proud"
"Just as good as them!" Cebizarreet bold pamphlet can be awkward for a few rebellious spirits, but we cannot grant Mr. Louis Reybaud, that it may be true in the end, com-

He claims it. What! The loss of all the heirs to the crown were born would not be a greater calamity than the death of some scientists! These would undoubtedly leave a great void
after them, but what could not be the results of the disappearance sudden of all people ap-peeled by their birth to the success-sion of the throne? History does not offer-
She didn't give any examples, otherwise it seemedbles, at least similar, and not Can't we see how many calamities, of disorder, civil wars
What kind of disturbance can it cause?
As for the high-ranking dignitaries, to employees, etc., Saint-Simon has ou-I forgot to make an assumption; it is that all those he cites would not be that intruders, and that the real merit would have been constantly dismissed in the distribution of honors and jobs. However, this cannot be, and these civil servants, of whom he is so good market, belonging themselves to most of this class he calls Men of genius would leave, in - descending suddenly into the grave,
a void that an entire generation
could not fill. But what good is it?
discuss a pamphlet where satire serves as reason, where one does not seek-
I don't know how to hit accurately, but how to hit strong, and to which it is necessary, thereforequant, point d'a donner plus important-what a serial article or the Charivari? Also the government was he wrong about that era, according to us, to bring a lawsuit against the other

Nantes, without a doubt, but of which he
it would have been wiser not to notice to see. It was a strange thing.

\

PS ARE

to see the Count of Saint-Simon, saying a 'descendant of Charlemagne, the grandson of the great lord
from the court of Louis XIV, to defend themselves,
before the criminal judges,
for having suggested that the death of the count
d'Artois and that of the Duke of Angoulême would create less of a vacuum in France
than that of a manufacturer. Sin-Sulier trial, including an acquittal
only increased the absurdity!
This parable remains, which we see...
no one to mention, was not, in the eyes of Saint-Simon, that a joke of which his disciples have always disputed the value and appropriateness. He finished around this time of more serious and more comprehensive: the Reorganization of European society, Industry,
the Organizer, the Politician, the S'ysindustrial volume, the Catechism of industrialists. All these publications, a very difficult flow, did not have
place only as a result of procedures Humiliating and lengthy. Little known So, Saint-Simon saw himself almost always forced to go begging
passing a publisher's alms from door to door.
"And these were not the only hardships."
More than once the heir of one of the

the most beautiful names of France saw themselves re-

Produced in the usual way of bread and water;

More than once, fire was not used.

winter, to arrive, with the help of pri-
personal vations, to the honors
of costly and thankless publicity.
"My funds being exhausted,
"he wrote in 1808, I have solicited
"a place, I addressed myself to
* Mr. Count de Ségur. He welcomed
"my request, and he announced to me at
* after six months he had obtained
* For me, a job at Mont-de-
* "Piety. This job was that of co-
"* track; it brought in a thousand francs"
* Per year for nine hours of work
"per day. I practiced it for "Six months; my personal work"

"was caught during the nights; I spat
"The blood, my health was in the most
"Bad condition, when chance me
"made him meet the only man that
* I can call my friend. I have
"I met Diard, who had been..."
"Attached from 1790 to 1797:"
"I had only separated from him in Pé-
"The time of my break with Lecomte"
* of Redern. Diard told me: "My.
"Sir, the position you occupy"
"is unworthy of your name as
"of your ability; I ask you to "come to my place; you can dis-"
* to lay down everything that belongs to me,
"you will work at your own pace and
"You will get justice."
"I accepted the proposal from this
"Good man, I went to his house, I..."
"inhabited for two years, and since
"At that time he supplied with em-"
"urgently attending to all my needs and"
"at the considerable expense of the work-"
"The one I printed." Unfortunately...
Fortunately for Saint-Simon, this friend
so devoted he died a few months afterwards, and the philosopher found himself, of new, in 1812, grappling with the need. "For the past two weeks, I've been writing-"
"Was he at that time, I eat some
"I eat bread and drink water; I work"
"without fire, and I sold even my "clothes to be provided at the expense of the "copies of my work. It's the pas-

"public, it's the desire to find a
"a way of ending in a way"
"sweet the terrible crisis in the-
"what the whole of European society
"is involved, which made me
"to fall into this state of distress."
Thus, it is without blushing that I can
"to confess my misery, and ask-
"to provide the necessary assistance for
"to put myself in a state to continue
"My work," all this pain.

THERE

= 160

in his great wisdom, the Messiah nou-calf. He had foreseen them; he did not back down in front of none of them. One day for-so much, just one day, sadness
He triumphed: the man crushed the god.
Bleeding on his cross, he asked thanks; and as if not a friend
found there to pierce it with a lan-
He did this service to himself.
with the more modern weapon of the pistol-let (March 9, 1823). The powerful heads-Yours seem to be more resistant.
that vulgar heads... Saint-Simon survived the suicide: the bullet had none of the organi- parties reached ques; he got away with it only for the loss
with one eye. If he had died by his own hand, his future authority remained singular-closely compromised, and, moreover, the complement of his doctrine would have been missing
which he told his apostles: the new Christ-Tianism did not exist. The Messiah in
. He therefore returned in poor health and deformed.
We saw Saint-Simon begin by personal experimentation for to arrive at Ja publication via the
the press, and a man of the world-to become a polemicist. Here now that he abandons both methods
for the role of evangelist and pro-Phetius. 11 deserts the practice of life,
the advertising platform, for the

"attacking the religious system of the "Middle Ages," he said to Olinde Ro-
"We don't have drugs before we die."
"It has really proven that one thing:
"It's because he's no longer in harmony"
"with the progress of positive sciences"
atives; but it is wrong to con-
"to conclude that the religious system of-
"was going to disappear entirely; it must
"only agree with
"The progress of science." Then he added, in a sort of return towards reality: "The final part
* of our work will perhaps be wrong

"Understood." This last part the works of Saint-Simon, that is The New Christianity. The pensée, in this contemporary gospel-rain, is neither protruding nor new.
This is still a plan to re-
religious form, based on this argument, for the use of schismatics
from all eras, since Arius
up to Abbot Châtel, via Luther, whom Christianity has been diverted from its paths, and that the pro-
The decline is blatant today.
in all churches. The author, after forty others, begins with
to establish the great split between the pa-divine role and human speech, in-between the revelations and the commentaries-res, between the text and the gloss; then,
Having established these premises, it can be summarized as follows:
concluding that Christianity, pro-aggressive by nature, should not have to become immobilized in the obstacles ca-

noniques; and that, on the contrary, rece-

giving as much impetus as it gives born, acting on the century like the century was acting on him, he should have to change according to customs, according to countries, according to peoples, according to the ages, and to preserve nothing eternal that this obviously divine adage:

Christ had said no different.

When he gets to the demonstration,
Saint-Simon, however, encounters his beautiful and new formula, the one that we would have compromised in experiments clumsy, if she weren't a Truth beyond reach. From the adage:

"Love one another," he

The following principle is derived: "Religion
"must steer society towards the great
"goal of the fastest improvement"
"possible fate of the most "Numerous and the poorest." All is there according to the master: religious unity
gious, priestly infallibility, of-

= (1 =

the nature of the cult, its morality, its influence That's it, it's all there. It's the new Chris-Tianism in three lines. Is it, in Indeed, to find the priests of the cult regenerated? It goes without saying that the prevery will necessarily be and natural-
the most capable men
to contribute, through their work, to the increase in well-being of the
the largest and most Poor. Only one thing remains to be settled.
the choice and the hierarchical ladder of the most capable men. On this Saint-Simon had not made any firm decisions.
nothing planned; he was professing his religion at A purely speculative state. In the
In practice, the hierarchical organization
of the most capable was of a difficult-
The problem was almost insoluble. It was turning the difficulty without addressing it; he does-
He knows poetry, not logic.
when he addressed a hymn to the powerful
* to the philosophers, to the scholars,

that they place themselves at the head of the cult regenerated, so that they may return it majestic and beautiful, so that they _raise by means of all the prestiges and all the magnificences
This theory was flawed by the two bases; for everything was needed at the _times that the privileged of genius wish-should command, and that the au-Many resigned themselves to obeying. If this organization, indecisive and hazy, Jaisse leaves much to be desired, the cri- part
the tics of the New Christianity pre-sometimes feels the traces of a study more positive. First tackling the Catholicism, Saint-Simon accuses the
The pope and his heretical church are three times more numerous.
leaders: 1° the vicious teaching of _ secular; 2° the wrong direction don-born into the studies of seminarians, and consequently ignorance and inability religious of the ministers of the cult;
3° Hidden and patent authorization

granted to two diamé- institutions
according to him, they were fundamentally opposed to the essential took from Christianity, those of Pin-requisition and the Jesuits; three heretics

three major errors of the cafho-

licism, destructive of the fundamental principle dimension of Christian revelation:

"Love one another;"
three insurmountable obstacles to improvement
tion of the fate of the most named class
The poorest and most vulnerable. Luther, to the Saint-Simon's eyes, is heretical first and foremost, to have, when he was master of his formula, when he had a clean slate before him, proclaimed
a morality far inferior to that which .
may be suitable for Christians in the e-current state of their civilization; and it

Jesus said it, organized the human species

Maine in the interest of the class larger and poorer.

Secondly, Luther is a heretic
for having adopted a bad cult,
for not having called, with the help of its reform, all the arts which charlife: poetry, music, the sculpture; to have prosaic the senses

Christian sentiments; for having deprived himself of sensual illusion, of emotion

scenic that Catholicism had so well implemented. Finally, Luther is heretical in the third count, because that he orders them to read and only read

The Bible, an exclusive and immoral reading.
often, rich in revelations about human depravities, naming

of these vices whose very existence

should be ignored; reading too much metaphysics, moreover, and which is not _lower down, one of the least active causes of the nebulous debauchery of the phi-German philosophers. So, on these three chiefs, Luther is a heretic,

as the Pope has been on other leaders. Both of them deviated from the

Born

tiel of all law and of all degree, the a-improvement of moral existence and physics of the most nomadic class-poorest and most vulnerable. To restore-
To bleak Christianity in its ways,

it was necessary, always according to Saint-Si-RO, to restore to it a material side-
list whose absence strikes him with ster-rility in its social action. The word of Jesus Christ: "My kingdom is not "not of this world," misunderstood and more poorly practiced, had established, in ancient religion, an eternal struggle neat and indefinite between matter and Intelligence, body and mind.

This struggle had to end, the cult
new had to be a fact at the same time
social and religious. Such is the Nou-Christian calf, from which the au-
The author deserved that what was said about him was said about him.
said of Luther: "He criticized well,

but poorly indoctrinated." From this booklets have resulted, for the disci-Saint-Simon's ples, first the two or three epigraphs of the new faith,
then the appeal to capabilities so that el-

'they had to contribute to the great work of religious renewal and social; and then again this apostolate,

new communion of martyrs at which only lacked bour-
the fiercest ones; finally the prince-

old, but forgotten, symbol of affection

fraternal bond between men, basis
of the new social organization which will replace military force with the peaceful union, which will dissolve the ar-assembled to regiment the labors theirs. Jesus Christ prepared the fra-

'universal eternity,' said the successes-

Sisters of the Prophet; Saint-Simon the realizes. The truly universal Church will appear: Caesar's reign comes to an end.

The universal Church governs the temp-
poral as well as the spiritual, the for ex-Terriar, like the inner self. The Science is sacred, industry is holy. Priests, scholars, and Industrialists, that's the whole of society, The chiefs of the priests, the chiefs of the sa-

_vants, the industrial leaders, that's it

The entire government. And all good is indeed of the Church; and all profess-Zion is a religious function, a rank in the social hierarchy. 4

each according to their ability, at each capacity according to his works. Alongside the text by Saint-Simon, {it is the gloss

had written his New Christianity,
His health deteriorated daily.

“Reduced to living on loans, prey to

If necessary, and riddled with debt, he:
p'en retained nonetheless a cal-
For me, an unshakeable serenity. In
In 1825 the evil intensified; during
For two months he lived on nothing but water.
and broth: The body was leaving,
but the head had lost nothing of his activity. Despite his suffering-
At that time, he was in charge of the foundation.
dation of a newspaper which conti-

“Nuât his doctrines and, preaching his work, followed it in its developments

ments. This newspaper was the Produc-
the dying man did not even the joy of greeting like the old-lard of the hymn. On May 19th he mo-he was in the arms of some disciples ples; they were Auguste Comte, his Benjamin, his chosen vessel, who had succeeded Mr. Augustin in 1817 Thierry in the functions of his se-crétaire, and who has since renounced the maf-
be. and Mr. Olinde Rodrigues, who glorified Saint-Simon with Bazard (v0ÿ.
(See the following notice) and Mr. Enfantin, then with Mr. Enfantin alone, to to withdraw to his tent on the day of the
The breakup. The funeral took place without pump, and we can well imagine that its
The body was not presented at the church.

His disciples themselves said in pt

the Globe, their official newspaper, which they had not wanted to ask a ceremonies and prayers to which he

He didn't believe it. Several speeches were... rent pronounced at his grave, en-three others by Mr. Halévy, one of his disciples. – This death of Saint-Si-mine would have remained under the veil, if Later, the disciples present did not had revealed the details. Their pious affection does not, we must believe, shrunk the hero. Perhaps even Did they take care to drape it for
to die. No matter, the story must be told.
Here, as they tell the story. The moment supreme has solemnities that disarm doubt was in Saint-Simon's mind.
life fled from him; he gathered around
From his bed, the confidants of his pen-sees and said to them: "For twelve days
"I am taking care, my friends, of the com-
"the most capable combination to do
"to succeed in our business (the Praduc-
"tor"); for three hours, despite
"My suffering, I seek you"
"To summarize my thoughts. You
"arrive at a time when efforts
"when combined well, they will achieve a
"A huge result. The pear is < ripe, you can pick it... The
"the last part of my work, the
"New Christianity will not be
"Not immediately understood. We have "believed that every religious system of-
"was going to disappear, because we had "succeeded in proving the obsolescence of the system-
"Catholic theme; we were mistaken; the "Religion cannot disappear from the world-
"of: she only transforms herself-"
"Sea... Rodrigues, don't forget it,
"Remember that, in order to do
* To achieve great things, one must not-"Issioned... My life boils down to this...
"with one thought: To ensure
"to all men the freest de-
"Development of their abilities."

11 then took a few minutes of silence, after which the dying man
he added: "Forty-eight hours after
"Our second publication, the party
"a workers' group will be formed:"

He put his hand to his head, and died.
– To summarize Saint-Simon, one must See it under three salient aspects and quite distinct: as experimental tator, as a publicist, as religious reformer. As an experhymer, he started from this fact, that the
the only way to push philosophy
in progressive ways was to
to engage in successful experiments sive and personal. Seeking, combining strange actions and unprecedented, or new series of actions, he knowingly abandoned himself to many crazy trials; he was extravagant according to the world, bizarre, immoral, disreputable: something that Jewish

it mattered little, for he dreamed of a mo-new reality. Here's how it defines this experimental phase himself-tnationale: "1° Conduct throughout the
the course of vigor in age life
the most original and the most active possible; 2° to become aware carefully considering all the theories and of all practices; 3° browse
all classes of society,
to place personally in the po-
the most diverse social situations,
and even create relationships that have not existed; 4° finally, em-
to spend one's old age summarizing the ob-reservations on the effects of its actions tions for others and for oneself, to establish principles on these sum-
my. » In the second phase of its
He summarized his life, as a publicist,
the impressions he had acquired in his experimental life; 11 dear-cha to make them profitable and pra-tics for the industrial world,

– 90 –

scientific and political. 11 essays and general applications, including the synthesis should only be found later in New Christia-nism, attic of his monument.

Finally, as a religious indicator, it crowned his previous work, traincomplete and preparatory values,
through the theory of socialization Christian; he gave the formula which according to him, this summed up the only principle revealed by Christianity, the only ar-article of faith which was of di- inspiration vine: "Religion must lead the society towards the grand goal of ame-moral and physical improvement, the most
as fast as possible, of the highest class
"numerous and the poorest." Sen-
a commitment to peace and fraternity, to a-death and union, which is worth it on its own
a whole code of morality; maxim holy woman before whom they come to be to die and die out the great and shameful motives of modern societies selfishness, hatred, isolation,
doubt, discouragement, the bad-
true faith; dogma already foreseen by the philosopher in the Letters of a resident of Geneva, better accused later by the Reorganization of European society, but arti-
only in a for-
Miss in the New Christianity,
This will of Saint-Simon. After having admitted the divinity of Christia-uism, he contradicts this assertion Without realizing it, he then exclaimed: "And
"My mission is also divine."
As proof, he recounts a vision
that he would have had during his detention in Luxembourg prison.
"Charlemagne," he said, "appeared to me
set w'adit: Since the world
"exists, no family has enjoyed
"the honor of producing a hero and
"a leading philosopher;

"This honor was reserved for my
"Home. My son, successes like"
"philosophers will equal those I have"
"obtained as a military officer and as

no one in the world who cannot claiming to have received from heaven a mission, and who cannot cite to the support of dreams of the same kind.
What surprises us, too, is not not that Saint-Simon had posed himself in new Messiah, but that he succeeded to make people believe in him, in the heart of the 19th century® century, in a time of doubt or indifference to all the questions religious practices. – Besides, one is would be strangely misleading if one believed to be found in the New Christia-nism the exposition of a religion nunnelle. In general, Saint-Simon was there more intent on destroying than rebuilding,

and we will point out in passing that his accusations against the Pope and Catholicism, even if they were true
in fact, would not convince by-core the Church latide of heresy, because its orthodoxy does not depend on the conduct of his ministers, so high wherever they are placed in the hierarchy-chie, but rather of the pro- doctrine spanking by the popes and the majority bishops. – Finally, as writer-

In vain, Saint-Simon is, in general, incorrect; his thoughts, even the most simple things only emerge with difficulty.

and this flaw becomes even more salient-

lant when he addresses a line of thought which, by their nature, demand the most great clarity, the greatest pre-precision in words. This flaw...

is common with Charles Fourier limits; but there are limits between the two reformers this difference, that the Second-year students have done and are doing in-core of incredible efforts to make his doctrines are intelligible, while

– 9% –

the Saint-Simonians seem to have taken on the task of distorting something-times and always to wrap with tea-increasingly thick shadows thoughts of their master. It is re-consulted that Fourierism is today-
of today constituted as a party, having its periodical press, its assemblies, its testing facilities, while Saint-Simonianism, after some years of a noisy existence and scandalous, fell into a discredit from which he will not recover without Never doubt it, despite the predictions.
of his high priest, who said so-wind to his disciples: "New "phases will come, which will place our
"doctrines on a path of glory"
"and prosperity." We know how-have these prophecies been fulfilled?
ties of a sect to which the public
From today onwards, I hardly think about it anymore.
than to Robespierre's supreme being or to the ridiculous theophilanthropy of La Révellière-Lépaux. – We have given as exactly as he gave it to us

The summary of doctrines was made possible.

of a man who, in the 15th century,

would have been considered a madman or a heretic-
that, and that perhaps we would have done pe-to laugh on a pyre, but who, in the 19th century, in a time that boasts to be more enlightened, wiser than all those who came before him, found Admirers, cultists!
We wouldn't dare say in the-
Which of the two eras is more of reason and truth. To do:

To get to know Saint-Simon better, we:

We will summarize his story as follows. Born in a very high position, very-proud and very vain like his ancestors,

but devoid of all knowledge and any instruction, like many of people of his rank were then, he entered the military career to

to take advantage of the benefits of his nobility,

and consequently through ambition ct out of vanity. Realizing, as soon as he
He had entered, and something else was needed.
that a high birth to arrive there-sitting in the front row, he left her to indulge in adventures, in trials, to experiments of all crazier, all the more fanciful-
that he did not possess the elements of no knowledge, and that he had to soon to lose what little fortune that he had amassed. Chance had... gave an opportunity to repair this loss, by acquiring
national assets, hence its name
and his background should have kept him away-gner. A soldier from a young age,
In a high rank, he could, in adopting the ideas of the revolution
as he did, soon found himself at that the glory of arms did not touch him Never; he wanted to stand out.

to be noticed by the crowd, but it-
was marked by strangeness, by extraordinary ideas that he wanted To fix one's gaze. One cannot conceive that a man so devoid of knowledge, also foreign to all sciences, could have undertaken to

to be the reformer, and that even he found listeners, sects

res. When he thought he had made sufficient progress,
He attended the sessions assiduously.
from the Academy of Sciences, for him to communicate his daydreams, that he - proclaimed them as wonderful discoveries. Here's what one of our
the most distinguished academics wrote to us recently at this oc-casino: "When this man (Saint-
"Simon," came to read his nonsense
"at the Academy of Sciences, he was "considered not only as a Sfou, but like an idiot; everything
The world was leaving, we were leaving it.
"Almost alone with the office... Ex-

"Explain to me how men
"of meaning could inspire enthusiasm"
"Siasm for such doctrines?..."
Answering this last question-tion of the learned academician, we let's say that our opinion is that he
there was never any real enthusiasm
as for the nonsense of Saint-Simon,
and that one could easily and without exaggeration, classifying sectarians

or the admirers of this man in Charlatans, shameless and deceitful, as credulous and gullible men. That's which demonstrates quite clearly history of this sect, later-

that she recounted, with all the care and the appropriate accuracy, our colla-Villenave manufacturer in his notice
on Bazard, who was one of the continuators Saint-Simon's influences (see the

(see the following notice). We do not add to it-

To complete the picture, that some subsequent events, which increasingly demonstrate that sec-silenced and masters, all were only men without conviction and without good faith. After having been convicted-born from judgments without appeal,

after being dispersed, expelled
by the police, after having wandered around...
for several years in Egypt, en-Türkiye, Algeria and other places
very remote areas, rather like charlatans, in adventurers rather than apostles, not having found in these distant lands
a way to sow their doctrines
or to create new dupes,
they returned to France, where this is always easier. Giving up then to preach to the community of possessions and contempt for riches, they son{ returned to the ways of the po-litigation or speculation; finally, one sees them today, ashamed of role they played, but always protected by the same party, occupy

um 2

large jobs in the railways
of iron and in the highest ranks
high levels of society and government nement. Here is the answer that was given recently one of them to Mr. Reybaud, who, astonished to see Him, as well as several of his colleagues, in the giotage, asked him how he had been able to forgo the phases of

'glory and splendor so solemn-elements announced by the master:

"Don't you think," said the disciple,
that this new phase is well worth it Another one? "That explains everything."
the goal and, as these mesgentlemen, the trends of the holy sirmonism. Mr. Reybaud Not very well understood. As we see clearly-more today than in religion,

as in politics and in many other things, there are none in all That's what charlatanism and lies are all about.
If he had to speak, again about social issues...
Lisies, we think that he does not
would not treat with the same indulgence geice. But he will be careful not to to revisit such a complex subject forgotten. We ourselves

we would criticize them for having talked about it too much long - time, if our task were not not to present it as it really isto show in all its truth of this era. Of illusion and of falsehood. - We will end this note by the 'list of writings plus or less absurd than the Master,
as his disciples called him,
published at different times.
It easily recognizes the variations of its system, Pincoherence and the uncertainty of his vain theories ries.. L.. Letters from an inhabitant of Geneva to its contemporaries on the System of the World, 1803, in-8°. II.

Letters addressed to the Bureau of longitudes et to the first class

* - 93 -

de L'Institut, 1808, in-8°. 11. Introduction to scientific work
From the 19th century, 1807, octavo*. This introduction and these letters presented the scholars of the Academy were not
They are neither better understood than the other.
What's worth noting, because that this is further proof of the va-
the author's interpretations and uncertainty,
that's what his works are from that era
are imbued with a very-pronounced for Napoleon, whom he sup-was then prepared to carry out a revolution solution in science and industry
as he had done in the poli-
An analysis of Introduction by ©. Rodrigues, who was also one of the successors of

Saint-Simon, in The Producer, philosophical journal of the industrial sorting, science and fine arts, where wrote several disciples of the e-Saint-Simonian school. IV. Nouold Encyclopedia, Paris, 1810, in-8°.

Only the prospectus and the first delivery. Saint-Simon had written in 1812 Memoirs on the En-Cyclopedia. In it, he explained the idea that one must attach to this word, and claimed that this title cannot be suitable-given that to a design

in which human knowledge Maines would be presented in the or-their lineage, their dependency genealogical dance. "The word ency-

"are Greek, means chain-
"Mount of Sciences; thus a work"

"bearing the title of encyclopedia must

"present views on the organization-
"tion of the scientific system; a
"a good encyclopedia would be a col-
"Complete reading of knowledge"
human, arranged in an order
"as the reader would descend, by
"equally spaced rungs,
"since the scientific conception the more generally, down to the ideas

* more specific, and vice versa.
"The 18th-century Encyclopedia has
"was done in a good spirit for the
"The weather was bad for the times ac-
"tuelle; it was built according to
"a plan proportionate to the lights"
"from then on, and much inferior to that which
"the insights gained since have "made it possible to conceive. 11 there is no
"even encyclopedic in every way"
"this work that the preliminary discourse-
"A huge gap remains.
"between this discourse and the body of
"the work which is merely a dictionary-
"General secretary. D'Alembert and Dide-
"rt admitted Bacon's division.
"di classified the sciences into scien-
"these memories, sciences of reason and "Imaginative sciences. This division-
"sion is vicious, because, each
"a particular science requiring the con-
"courses of all the faculties of our intelligence, a division that par-
"Tag our intelligence in three parts-
"cults, can only concern
"nuances, and necessarily leaves
"the most essential differences"

s entirely confused. For examplespleen, we can certainly say that bota-

"of reason and imagination, but
"one could not conceive of existence"
"of a botanist entirely devoid of- .
"Seen through imagination and reason. It is "the analysis of the progress of the mind"
Shamain, which is to serve as the basis for
"The encyclopedia; it's this analysis"
"who must determine the division of this great
"Book of science." Saint-Simon then undertakes, using the figure of a tree, to represent the development of designs incyclopean aspects of the human mind, from the most remote times until-than in the future. The stem of this
The tree represents the terms progress-

ground

sifs of the general idea, and its bran-various coordinations encyclopédics corresponding to these ter-my progressives. The tree divides into five eras; the first is represented felt by the top of its stem, which loses itself in a cloud, where these are found two inscriptions: Sensations primitives, establishments of the first Conventional signs. The four other periods are designated as the names and in the following order:
Idolatry, polytheism, monotheismme, physics. In the Saint- suite Simon significantly modified the explanations he gave at the time:

different terms of this es-sion. As we can see, the id
The mental message of this brochure is good.
but the initiative does not belong to him
to Saint-Simon. Before him, Leibniz had glimpsed the plan of a dictionary philosophical, in order of subject matter,
as can be verified in the Essays on Human Understanding and especially in the Discourse concerning the

to boast. But on what Leibniz did not-

Saint-Simon had only indicated that wanted to build an entire system. This was its pitfall. After having laid a While the principle is correct, it distorts its application.
tion, and the further he advances, the more he goes to the drift. because he forgets to take Panalogy as a guide. This suite one of his works bears the title of Memoirs on the Encyclopedia; but It was never published. V. Réorganization of the 'euro society-pagan, or On Necessity and ways to bring the peoples together Europe as a single political body,
while preserving each person's nationality
ality, by Henri Saint-Simon and Augustin Thierry, his student, Paris, 1814, one volume in-8°. This work was inspired by the events that ame-

da-

brought about the fall of the empire. Saint-Simon was then a supporter of the regime
parliamentary, but later he did not.
he considered him more than just a
a way to facilitate the passage of the Feudalism in the form of an association. The English constitution, with the amendments growths of which it is susceptible seemed to him the most para fact which the peoples could arriver, and consequently he su-

hated adoption by all the nations. He proposed the establishment of a European parliament which would have had functions, in relation to peoples he would have represented, of

to maintain peace between them and to ad-
to minister their common interests.

"He said, opposing coalitions"
"interests will bind Europe in
"this sad state of war of which we "will have tried in vain to pull her;
"This is what the event proves-
"Rail better still, that's what neither "neither good spirit, nor wisdom, nor the "desire for peace cannot make
"avoid; assemble congress on con-
"Congress; multiply treaties, con"ventions, accommodations;
"nothing you do will succeed"
"only in war; you do not destroy it-
"ground floor, you will be able to do everything at
"More than just changing her location. The Eu-" "Rope is in a violent state, all
"They all know it, everyone says it; but this
"What is its state? Where does it come from? a-
"Has it always lasted? Is it possible?"
"That he should stop? These questions are in-
"Core without response. At every meeting"
"of peoples, as at any gathering"
"Men need institutions"
"communities, we need an organization-
"tion; outside of that everything is decided by
"The strength. To want Europe to be..."
"peace through treaties and congresses,
"it is wanting a social body to sub-

She.

"It is based on conventions and actions"
"cords. We affect a contemptuous su"perb for the centuries that we call
"of the Middle Ages; we see in it only a
"times of stupid barbarity, of igno-
"Ranky, crude, superstitions"
"degrading, and we do not
"Note that this is the only time"
"where the political system of Europe
"was founded on its true basis,
"On a general organization."
After recalling the deadly wars triremes that have succeeded one another since the fall of papal power, which had been until the 16th century the link
of the European association, he continues like this: "Despite so many examples
"so striking, the prejudice was such

"could not fight against him. Not all do
"dating only from the 16th century the system
"European policy; all have
"looked at the Treaty of Westphalia"
"like the: true foundation of this "system, and yet it would suffice"
"to examine what has happened since
"this time to feel that the balance-
"The power dynamic is the combination of"
- the most false notion that can be
"done, since peace was the goal"
"and that it has only produced wars-
"Res, and what wars!" Exaini-nant what should the attractors be goals of parliament which he proposes institution, he wants him to be in charge
to organize and monitor the instruction public tion, to pronounce on the disputes that could arise
among the associated peoples, finally of proto lay and direct the large colonies
nisations, general colonizations across the globe. As for the manner of which this large political body should to be composed, it only admits the men in whom the dispositions
natives, education, work usual have subordinated the consi-

specific conditions, ailments
local vices and affections general. He then proposes, as means of arriving at the establishment of European Parliament, the pre-meeting
flag of France and England

under a common power. This pro-:

position, in the circumstances where
It was done, it couldn't fail to be poorly received; but Saint-

Simon was not a man to back down.

in front of your obstacles. Everything else his plan is also based on vain utopias. on chimera-

thoughts of peace and of see universals. VI. Letter from Henry from Saint-Simon to Messrs. Comie and Dunoyer, inserted in volume III
from the European Censor (1814), p. 334
to 356. VII. The Defender of Property-national domains, etc.
Paris, 1815. Only 11 of them appeared prospectus. VIII. Profession of faith
the authors of the announced book
under the title: The Defender, etc., Paris, 1815, in-8° of 8 pages. IX. Opi-agreement on the measures to be taken against the coalition of 1815 (with Mr. Aug.
Thierry), Paris, 1815, octavo, 14
pages. X. Profession of faith of the count

Saint-Simon's comments on the invasion,

sion of French territory by Na-Poléon Bonaparte, Paris, 1815, octavo
4 pages. XI. Some ideas about-put by M. de Saint-Simon at the as-

general assembly of primary instruction
mayor, Paris, 1815, octavo, 4 pages.
XII. Industry, or Discussions po-litigious, moral and philosophical
in the interest of all men dedicated to useful and independent work pendants, Paris, 1817 and 1818, 4 vols.
in-8°. Saint-Simon had as a collaborator - raters, in this work, Messrs. Saint-Aubin, AugustinThierry, who takes it
the qualification of adopted son of Saint-Simon, and Auguste Comte. The first

!

volume consists of the three opuscu-
the following, which had been printed at the same time, and that we bring together
only under a new frontispiece. These are: 1° The Literary Industry-raire and scientific allied with the in-commercial and manufacturing industry Laughter, or Opinions on Finance, politics, morality and philosophy
Sophie, Volume One, Part One tie, finances, by Saint-Aubin; 2° Part two, politics, by Ang.

Thierry; 3rd part, finance-

- these, by Saint-Aubin. The rest does not
This door is the north of Saint-Simon.
the work alienated the protectors that Saint-Simon had made himself in the world-of financier. Some of them they had encouraged his first publications on the industry, and had authorized the author to give himself in their leaflets supporting their names;

but when they saw that the goal was not-

it was nothing less than organizing them
in a political party, when they agree-said they called upon him at the head of Public administration, they were frightened by the alliance they had contracted, and by a letter dated the 30th
In October 1817 they petitioned the prefect
police officers willing to order
all the newspapers to record the de-formal flavor qwils made opi-
unions contained in the third vo-blade of Industry. They declared

more than by subscribing to the book of Saint-Simon, they had wanted
to perform an act of alms and not of sym-

MM. Cottier, Vassal, Heztseil, White, Hottinguer, Gros-Davilliers, Deles- serves, Casimir Périer, Guérin de To- No. However, all the magnates finance did not disavow the innovative, and among those who res- faithful Jacques Laffitte figure- would be in the first rank; which gives reason to believe that there was in all This has a political purpose. XII. The Poli- tic, by a society of people of let- tres. Mélanges, volumes I and II, Paris, 1819, octavo. This work, which appeared periodically, had to be divided into four parts, each having its own pa- specific training, 1° Policy pure; 2 Literary policy; 3 Po- scientific literature; 4° Mixtures. This last part alone was able to- forgotten. Saint-Simon had as a collaborator- author in this collection, Lachevardière, former consul, known for his op- ultra-revolutionary unions. XIV. The Organizer, Paris, 1819-1820, One volume, octavo. This work was published by detached pieces which then were brought together in a confused manner in successive editions. It's in the first delivery that is this parable we were talking about and which earned the author a trial in Assize court. XV. Letter from Saint- Simon to the jurors who must pro- to comment on the accusation brought against him tre lui, Paris, 1820, octavo of 43 pages. XVI. Considerations on the measures to take to end the revolution tion, presented to the king, as well as to Farmers, traders, manufacturers and other industrialists who are members of the Chamber of deputies, Paris, 1820, in-8°, XVII. Three Letters to the Farmers, Manufacturers, traders, etc., Paris, 1820-1821, in-fol. and in-8°. XVIII. Letter addressed to the industrialists, Paris, 1820, quarto, 4 pages. XIX. Six letters on the Bourbons, addressed- gifts to the king and to industrialists, Paris,

Triel, Paris, 1821, in-8°. XXI. Of Bourbons and Stuarts, Paris, 1822,
in-8°. XXII. Catechism of the Industriels, Paris, 1824, in-8°. XXHI.
Literary and philosophical opinions

word

and industrial, Paris, 1821-25, in-8°.
Saint-Simon had the following collaborators:
in this publication, Messrs. Léon Halévy, Olinde Rodrigues and the doc-
Mr. Bailly of Blois. XXIV. New Christianity, dialogues between a Conservative and an Innovator, Paris 1825, octavo. Saint-Simon also has provided some articles to the Censor

European and left in manuscript form.

several works, including those by Mé-memorabilia on the Encyclopedia and on the science of man. His student,

Olinde Rodrigues, had undertaken to publish a complete edition

of his works, but two installments
only appeared in 1832, in-8°.
They contain, in addition to some fragments of Memoirs written by

The author on his own life: 1° the Letters from a resident of Geneva;
2. The Parable; 3. The New Christ Christianism; 4° the Catechism of the Inindustrials; 5° Views of the property and the legislation. The publisher has some plus added a few pieces of his sometimes in the form of an introduction, sometimes in the form of notes. – Among the works of which Saint-Simon has contemporary reformers, by Mr. Louis Reybaud, whom we have spoken and who won a prize at the conscience class course

rallies of the Institute; 2° the Exhibition of his doctrine, published by one of his students; 3rd Traps and quackery of the two sects Saint-Simon and Owen, by Charles Fourier. We find in the Biography of Contemporaries-rains, by Rabbe and Boisjolin, and in The Dictionary of Conversation, apologetic notices obviously-composed by followers.

recently published in the Phalange
a biography of Saint-Simon in the same spirit and equally lacking-
a degree of truth and accuracy.
The poet Béranger dedicated a portion of his work to him.
a song he titled Les Fous, a
a passage that we feel compelled to quote:
AE

I saw Saint-Simon, the prophet,

Rich at first, then in debt,

From foundation to summit,
- Rebuilding society.

Full of his unfinished work,

He was old and would reach out his hand to her.

Surely ihk embraced the thought

Quai must save humankind.

We could be mistaken about the veri-
the meaning of these verses is clear if one does not read them.
I don't know if it's in the same volume.
obituary in praise of Saint-Simon, and if in this notice
the wish that was not expressed someone is tasked with writing a story-conscientious history of the philosopher re-

having filled it; but we do not think-sounds. not that it be in a way that to deserve the praise of the famous singer sonnier.

Fe

is

+

ARMAND

BAZAAR

: BY VILLENAVE.

(Extract from volume LVII of the Universal Biography, published in 1834.)

rs GES NE ER ner

BAZARD (AmanD), ar- man
tooth and dreamer, one of the founders of Carbonarism in France and one of the first two Supreme Fathers of the Saint-Simonian religion , not, na-quit around the year 1792, when the throne
and the altar collapsed together.
Its cradle borders that of the republic, his childhood is linked to consulate, his adolescence during the empire,
his middle age at the restoration, and the great reverie of his apostolate to the revolution of 1830. One of the ev-followers of the new religion,
Mr. Emile Barrault informs us that

Bazard and Enfantin had in Olinde Rodrigues a precursor who baptized them in the waters of Saint-Simon, who announced them to the world,

then in the shadow of their altars:
« By Saint-Simon Olinde Rodrigues
"had learned to believe in destinies"
"of humanity, and he had taught
"These destinies to our father and to "Bazard... This legacy of Saint-

"Simon, our father, RECEIVED it from

* Rodrigues. » (Latest issue of Globe, April 20, 1832.) – We do not let us not pretend to give an exposition here—

complete separation of the doctrine of the new evangelical calves who, moreover,
would need a little bit of concordance, we think, as
Mr. Léon Halevy, who, speaking of Saint-Simon said it very well:

TN was founding a school, not a church.
Therefore, we will not examine whether
Mr. Barrault was right to say that Saint-Simon did not participate in the Last Supper.
and bequeathed his work to a doctor;
that he was wrong not to call the woman to reign with him; that for

For this reason, he was only Le Mai-TRE, and left the glory to another
to be THE FATHER. The MESSIAH px DISu AND THE KING OF NATIONS. When he
this is a precursor, again my-sie, again incarnate verb, of transformation of property, of new religion, new politics
velle, it is necessary to treat grave-ment the finatière, and not to go take up offensive weapons in
the arsenal of the unbelieving detractors.
We will therefore limit ourselves to citing the works of the Father, or of his Apostles, applying this to themselves, in order to

that they have no reason to complain about their great axiom: To each
according to his works. – In the month of October–
In 1830, Bazard and Enfantin made to print, under the title of Religion
Saint-Simonian, a Letter to Mr. President of the Chamber of deputies. It begins by rapporfirst, at the session of September 29th,
Mr. Mauguin, in pointing out the existence of a semi-religious, semi-philosophical, "had represented it,
"From a very benevolent perspective,
"as a teacher the community"
"property," and that, in the session
the following day, Mr. Dupin, in par-from the same company, had repro-following his colleague's assertion,
adding that the Saint-Simonians were still asking for another com-community, that of women. Then the two pontiffs of the new religion–
they seek to justify themselves, and re_ grow as if false, but in ter-my very singular, the double as-
The two MPs' statement: "Yes,
"No doubt," they say, "the saints–"
'Simonians profess, On the future
* "of property and on the future of "Women, ideas that are 'specific, and which relate
"to very particular views as well
"and all the latest news on the reli-
"region, on politics, on the power–
"See, on freedom...; but he is..."
"These ideas are sorely lacking in many ways"
"That is, those which are attributed to them."
Bazard and Enfantin therefore declare that they reject the equal sharing of My property; that this equal sharing bewould cause great violence; but,
as they believe in natural inequality
the turmoil of men, they want that at the future, let each be placed according to his capacity and remunerated according to his/her/its work
true. Consequently, they limit themselves
So, they say, to continue the

"command that all instruments
"of work, the land and the expi-
"laux, which today form the "fragmented land of properties by-
"particular, they gathered together in one "social fund, and that this fund be "operated by association and hier-
"chicly, so that the
"each person's task is to express
"of its capacity, and its wealth, the "Measure of his works." The propri-

impure village of idleness, that is to say-
to say that of living from the work of others That's how Bazard and his buddies intended to respect the property rights, by making
all the lands and all the capitals global rate, a social fund. Sui-before this first fundamental dogma of the Saint-Simonian religion, the fathers were only stripped in their children; it's for their en-children they had raised and cared for their fortune, and they could not, at their death, to bequeath them a penny;

so that, for example, if the eu-
children of a millionaire were confessed whether they are weak, stunted, or imbecilic, they were no longer to be paid, on the social fund, where their great strength tune would have been, engulfed, that according to their capacity or according to their wishes-vres, that is to say, much less:
that. | |

1°... these childlike men

Those who arrive every year from Savoy, .

And whose hand lightly wipes
These long gifts clogged with soot.

It wasn't the agrarian law, it was

What's more, it wasn't equality.

but inequality and aristocracy in misery. And as for the mode of re-distribution of the social fund throughout the human family, consisting of of approximately eight hundred million individuals

dt

vidus distributed throughout the world, de- .

then the Cape of Good Hope all the way to Spitsbergen, from Earth-Fire to Greenland, and encompassing not only Europe, Asia, Africa, but also America Mauritius and Oceania, Messrs. Bazard and Enfantin was supposed to take care of this small tasks, the execution of which did not affect them seemed neither impossible nor difficult, notwithstanding the three thousand sixty-four languages which, according to Adelung, are spoken about across the globe, notwithstanding the considerable number of various religions, and customs, the customs and prejudices much more difficult. Many more payments are still being made. As for to women, Bazard and Enfantin declared in the Chamber of Deputies not wanting their complete emancipation passion, but without claiming to abolish the holy law of marriage, proclaimed came to perfect it,

to accomplish it, and not for the Island destroy. But how do they mean-they will know what marriage will be like from now on under their pontificate? "The religion of

"Saint-Simon, they say, is not coming:

"to put an end to this shameful trafficking,"
"thanks to this legal prostitution, which
'under the name of marriage, etc.' He here, in the doctrine, there is a certain-Your reluctance, but the terms which the envelopes open the field to broad interpretations. Razard and Childishly, they end up announcing that they are not affiliated with these companies "that have an important mission-

"the burden to be met, that of defense-

«dre in France Îla DESTRUCTION
"operated by the events of July-
"let, and to determine the movement-
"How will this DESTROY-
"tion to all of Europe: this _etèche, they say, is eRANDE, she

"is LEGITIMATE, etc." - The Chamber

MPs paid no attention to this grand manifesto of disorgani-social station. The government allowed the temples of the new to open old church in Paris, in Lyon, in to other cities as well. We ran to religiously preaching to sermons, to conferences. Bazard, Enfantin and their apostles do not They didn't call themselves republicans, they didn't They didn't believe it, they didn't want to being. Their doctrines on hierarchyrarchy, on the omnipotence of their pontificate, were found to be much more

in relation to the claims of Boniface VIII (1), that with the dogmas policies of Marat and Robes-stone. They were, moreover, very-peaceful; the holy word-
nothing should have been enough to change everything.
to turn everything upside down. All it took was one or two Supreme Fathers, some apostles, a newspaper and missionnaires, with which they said they would drag the world into what they would make all the riches

(1) Or see the article Boniface VIII,
in volume III, page 110 of the Uni- Biography Verselle, what were the claims of this pope for the supremacy of the sovereign pont-tificat over all the powers of the earth, and the dissensions that followed between Philip the Fair and the court of Rome. He is It's hard to believe that all the Saint-Simoniens had seriously had such things
ideas about the omnipotence of the supreme Father-

. me; but we do not teach that the secret

The leaders' thought was not to overthrow successively all the powers of the s0-society, in order to put themselves in their place; because without that we can say that their entire system-theme, all their efforts would not have been what a silly utopia, ridiculous demonstrations, But, thank God, they were in-core far from reaching such a level. For To achieve this, it would have been necessary to go through many revolutions and calamities. Thus, one has a strong

[Editor's Note.]

Year

– 9) –

of the land a single social fund, the-what would be unequally shared in-three eight hundred million Saint-Si-Lappish, Chinese, French Indians, Germans, Madagascans,
English, Iroquois, Italians, Arabs,
Danes, Tahitians, Cossacks, Kaffrians, Jerusalem artichokes, etc., and very strict-
each according to their ability To each according to his deeds. Oril happened, and it was in the 19th century, that this 'strange' doctrine found good number of supporters. Men enlightened, graduates of the polytechnic school

that doctors, scientists,
men of conviction, made themselves re-

cevoir apostles. Several even ven-.

declared their assets and paid in rent the entire price in the large fund of the uni- social fund
Versel, which was established on Taitbout Street.
Wouldn't one say that, if epidemics physical ravages of time in time the earth, there are also ears of corn moral demias which, at certain times
They are invading! And it is not
It is worth noting that At the same time, jointly with the Saint-Simonian vertigo, reigned Confusion in literature. Racine was declared sunk,] Ronsard put above Voltaire, the language
French culture dragged back to barbarism

sublime, verging on the grotesque, society
towards the great days of anarchy.

And several newspapers were entering.

this vast confusion! The Institute'n'été-raised only a timid voice; the gou-government, without planning, seemed Watch and wait. Infiltration uncontrolled poisons in the society and literature were being formed _ without obstacles, and when evil has shown with all its dangers, the | Moral gangrene was so before in the masses, the sick and the doctors

They have compromised themselves, and that the remedy proved almost as effective Dangerous as evil.—Dogmas religious figures of Saint-Simonianism were much less intelligible than his

'political dogmas. God was unity'

absolute of being, humanity a being collective, and humankind one great individual that it was about gold-
to organize into a universal association.
The new gospel was heralded asa reminiscence of Spinozism:

like a mystical pantheism,

like a religion without a deity.

Saint-Simonianism owed its first vogue for the love of new things and to the simultaneous weariness of doctrines political and literary figures who...

The streets, The dramatic innovators on stage, and the frenetic genre in poetry and novels. Bazard and his co-pontiff, to better to regenerate the world, they judged to propose to add to their preaching and to those of their apostles, a great publication of books that would be distributed free of charge. They made reissue first published in 1825, the Catechism of industrialists, work of Saint-Simon. They collected, the same anonymous, in one volume in-8°, the Opinions literary, philosophical and industrial-views of preachers of their doctrine; and, in the same year again, they began the drafting of the Pro-conductor, philosophical journal, etc. of which four volumes in-8° were published. The Exposition of the Saint-Simon's doctrine in an ivolume in-8°, which, reprinted in 1830, had yet a third edition; a synoptic table of the doctrine, in two sheets Jesus-Atlas, preceded (1830) the appearance of the Organisateur, weekly journal of Saint-Simonians, which was continued in 1821 and in 7 volumes in-8°. A very large number of other public-free publications appeared in 1831. The main or most unique—their titles are: Communion générale; Means of removing the impost on the salt and draft speech of the crown; Political economy that; To industrialists; Letters on Legislation; The press; Meeting general family (work continued); Letter on calm; June, to the workers; Petition of a proletarian in the chamber of deputies Reports to the Supreme Fathers Regarding the family situation: But all these books and these two newspapers (the Producer and the Organizer)

— 933 —

the world: it was necessary to search for more extensive means of advertising, because the two suppressed Fathers were not unwilling to let their light hidden away. But then, it existed
a newspaper that had taken a title

ambitious (the Globe), and like the two fathers wanted nothing less that universal regeneration, and the

a complete overhaul of all the peoples of the earth

in a single congregation, of which they would be the supreme leaders, they thought that the Globe must be

by its title the best trumpet
'of their gospel. This newspaper, of which the original dated back to 1824, was firstly, that a literary sheet, and he had achieved a success that was not argued that in its early days.
Soon young ideologues will be...
They were involved in the writing process. There were among them were talented men;
but their friends praised them in vain
long, somewhat ponderous articles,
even if a little pedantic, the rep-
tation of this sheet, which became quotation Tidian and political, weakens quite quickly; and finally she was tra-

vigil of the greatest illness
from our newspaper, the Enani, which makes people flee readers and subscribers, when the Saint-Simonians, who had already slipped into the editorial staff, seized upon it-were entirely relevant, and the Globe ap-then went to the two supreme Fathers
my. Its title, which responded so well in their view, was preserved with this Addition: Journal of Religion

Saint-Simonian, and with this dogma fundamental for epigraph: 4 cha-

each according to their calling, to each their own.
on his works. They added further in head of all the numbers these indic-tions of the new religion: Asso-Universal cation; Appeal to women
my; Peaceful organization of workers; and a notice to the public,
who: followed immediately, was conceived in these terms: "The publica-
"The Globe's tion is not a speculation"
"lation is a work of apostolate.
"Political education, closed off"

"in this newspaper, is distributed to

"same conditions as the others"
"teachings of the holy religion"
"Simonian, that is to say, gratuitous-
"lying." Thus the Globe gratis cost the two Supreme Fathers
one hundred thousand francs per year,
and it was, at the expense of I know which, printed and distributed during nearly three years. The last nude-Mero appeared on April 20, 1832. — But The scandal had already begun with the division within the sanctuary. Mr. Mi-Chel Chevalier, editor-in-chief of

"Globe, had announced by a wax-

area of major changes sur-naked in the Saint-Simo hierarchy nieune. Bazard replied on November 23rd.
1831: "The narrative (of the facts contained "in this circular) is evident-
"falsely, and for what it does not
"Don't say, know the serious causes and
"deep things that led to what happened"

"passes into the heart of the doctrine of "Saint-Simon, and also, for this.
e-qu'il sait particulier le quoi qu'il est
"affects the determinations of the per:
"sounds that have ceased to be in com-
"Communion with Childishness..." Their "energetic protests against the "doctrines that led to the crisis"
"current there are completely not-"
_ "seen in silence. As for me, I
"I never claimed to be withdrawing,
"To reflect or to abstain. After "long debates... I distanced myself-
"born from a background that I myself have-

"will have largely contributed to

"Former... Several members of "the old Saint-Simo- hierarchy
"Niennes are now intimate-
"United in the feeling that has "determined my conduct, far away
"that none of us feel his faith change-
"to conceal, to want to remain in the re-
"picking and abstaining, we will
"On the contrary, let us feel a greater faith
"more ardent than ever; all of us
"We are resolved to redouble our efforts"
"activity, etc." But this artistic faith-teeth and this activity did not serve You're welcome. If there is, in all the as-associations of innovators, of men-
my violent and pre- movements
In addition to those who have rushed, there are also less impulsive minds.
fiery in their impetuosity.
The most extreme parties have also their moderates. Bazard succombat in the debate that opened in the presence of all the Saint-Simonians. He was deposed from his quota-

part of the pontificate at the end of November

in 1831, and it is said that the female popes contributed significantly to the fog-
to examine the two popes and their doctrines.

and had been recognized as the sole Father of the Su-First on November 27, 1831.—After the schism, the new church appeared visibly lose their luster.

success, glory and the funds of the a-
The postulates lowered at the same time.
Then a new phase began:
the major meetings and the pre-
The cations ceased, the temples and the Globes were abandoned. We sougea to sell to the faithful what jus-that they had been told there: they were annouça the price of everything that remained of the doctrinaire wardrobe, sermons, newspaper, various publications his; and, a few months after having forced Supreme Father Bazard to
To withdraw and to reflect in spite of himself
the Supreme Father Enfantin declared that he was going, but of his own free will,
he said, to withdraw and reflect himself. 11 disguised what was which became a necessity under an appa-_renteinspiration (2): it seemed an-

to announce his retirement in the desert would soon be followed by that of its precursor (that's how he ap-peeled Christ), from the entrance with triumphant palms in the

Mr. "Mrs. SR 0 0

(2) The discrediting and forced retirement of Suints-Simonians "Were not only because of the hassles that their cause-
the police and the ridiculousness of which the ac-
They were wiring a few newspapers, but well
rather the poor state of their situation f-financial. Driven from the Taitbout room, they had still been responsible for five in Paris expensive rents, four rooms where they pro-

tions to the workers, and a very nice apartment-ment rue Monsigny, where the father lived Enfantiv. That's where they gave during the winter of 1832, and until after the invasion of cholera morbus, musical evenings and dance-jumps, where nothing was spared. Everything happened there-knows quite well, and the masters ceremonials were very gallant in-towards the invited ladies. Those who were af-girls affiliated with the sect wore a white ribbon suspended in a needle-like fashion, As for the brothers, they didn't yet have any costumes of a particular form; but most of them
They were wearing blue outfits. While we danced in two living rooms, and where one could read or put all the brochures in your pocket
Saint-Simonian women, spread out on a table
in another room, the library was _Greater Jerusalem of the world. Sketch-sounds quickly this revolution.

In the latest issue of Globe, Enfan-Tin bid farewell to this leaf in a speech addressed to:
At Mox»x. Kile starts with this

Protocol: ME, FATHER OF THE FAMILY

NEWS; which is reminiscent of the signing-
The lineage of the kings of Spain: I, the King. 11 continues in these terms:
"God has given me the mission to call
"the PROLETAR and the WOMAN at one

"A new destiny." Everything else:

is in the same style. After rapping-peeled his efforts to achieve the association-universal cation and to bring it into the holy human family, by means of what he calls his charter for the future;
after saying, "I am strong," he
He adds: I have spoken, I want to act.
The apostolate is established; I withdraw,
with forty of my sons, in the
the very place where my en-

Minor Paris (Ménilmontant). You
You have my word, you will soon
My actions; but I want to rest to be silent. And the Globe did not appear plus(3). At the same time, the me- room

the arena where groups of orators and dia-Lecticians expounded their principles, responding-addressed all objections, with more or Less talent, but still polite.
and moderation. However, alas! the view of mahogany cabinets, well-stocked bookshelves linked, and on whose gates sealed Isles
the signs were affixed, already announcing that the
the torch of Saint-Simonianism shone brightly with its Last glimmers of light. So much extravagance, so much of expenses to throw dust in people's eyes and
To attract followers to the sect, they had
The resources were exhausted; hence came the cessation.
da Globe, announced at the last ball on April 18th,
and the retreat to Ménilmontant, which did not take place that a month after the death of Mrs. Enfantin, to whose convoy the Saint-Si.
Raouïeus did not yet have the costume
which they took from their Carthusian monastery.

(3) It was at this time that Enfantin lost his mother. The announcement cards

tropole, rue Taitbout, and the suc-Cufsale of the Athénée, Place Sorbonne, were abandoned for free to scholars and artists for courses
public events, concerts, or exhibitions - Table settings. But, before we get into that to retire with his forty sons to Ménilamounting, the Supreme Father had instructed-killed ten apostles (4), who called themselves
his college. Three of these apostles, Messrs. Chevalier, Barrault and Duveyrier, also inserted their speeches of a-God in the latest issue of Globe. Mr. Barrault makes of the father En-Fantin the Messiah of God and the Rot DES NATIONS, in which his sons exaltent today and the earth exalts it tera one day. He also said that the
the world sees in him its Christ; and he adds: "Our Word is in the middle-

"You... The world is ours: a
"A man will rise who has a forehead of
"king and the entrails of the people,
* because he has the heart of a priest,
"And this man is OUR FATHER, etc."
After returning this to Mr. Enfantin
A magnificent testimony, the apostles treat themselves with a little less humility than the apostles of the Gospel. "And first,
"said Mr. Barrault, you should know what it is
"than an apostle. The apostle faithful to
"the sovereign orbit of the MESSIAH re-
"The light of that star flickers in the distance"
"immense (it's still Mr. En-

were thus conceived: "RELIGION Sarxr-SIMON1IENNE. Mrs. Enfantin, mother of Our SUPREME FATHER died this morning
(April 22nd); I am charged by our Pxxr
We are thrilled to announce this news.
I beg you, in his name and in that of all his children, to attend the convoy, etc.
Sign Micuer CHEKVARIER, APOSTLE.

(4) Messrs. Michel Chevalier, Charles Du-Veyrier, Fournel, Bouffard, Lambert, Bar.
rault, d'Eichtal, Stéphane Flachet, Ri.
gault, etc.

— 96 — E

"Fantin"), enlarged by its own
"rays, and he himself is the center."
"and, like the developer of which it is
"The satellite is a world unto itself. It
"touching the greats with one hand"
"the earth, and on the other hand to the masses"
"trembling; he is a prince, he is
"People. Listen; he is prophesying..."
"and here is his poetry, putting a "Honeycomb on her lips, she
"balance on burning wings."
"Now applaud the speaker,
"He moves an assembly. To him the "Desert, he is a monk! To him the cha-"
"He's a gentleman! To him the
"in the city, he is a man of celebration, of "Travel, he is a pilgrim! To him the "Danger, he's a soldier! It's up to him to..."

"Vail, he's a proletarian! He loves the

"He worships him as a Messiah, like a father."

"like a faith, he serves it as

"a master; for he bears the Messiah"

"of God and the King of Nations."

"That is the truth." That's it.

what men wrote in 1832

of conviction, which were not without talents. Mysticism aside, isn't it-

This is not the style of our playwrights days? Bazard, which was no longer there to be neither messiah, nor Supreme Father, nor master, nor king of nations, lived far from the capital, and saw ger-

thus reaped the fruits of his doctrines.

'There was still, in 1832, independence-

damment du Globe, sixteen or seventeen

free publications, including two,

entitled {a Prophecy and the Three Families had the sad honor of the fear of being pursued by the self-ridy (5). The total number of publica-

Saint-Simonian traditions, from 1825 to Pink

(5) The latest brochures published by

The Saint-Simonians, in 1832, were not in generally than extracts from the Globe; the most-parts appeared before the end of April, The father

Childish, in announcing his retirement, had

2 A

THE

1832, forms approximately sixty vehicles

has

my or brochures; and, when the apo-very had stopped writing and closed the Globe, they had inserted into the newspapers (Sept. 1832) this notice:
"After employing summonses"
"considerable for spreading our "faith, we felt that the moment
"had come where we had to sell"
to the books we gave
< to this day in abundance, etc.
They therefore set the price of their written without bombast and even with moderation; and yet the collection
The complete version was supposed to cost 284 francs.
Several of these writings have become very rare, among others: The Petition of a proletarian, the Political Party workers, and the Collection of popular sheets. – The ministry public, which had refrained from supporting follow when the sermons on the – woman and on the property were made in the established churches at Paris and the departments, were moved when the Saint-Simonians had shoemakers, tailors, farmers
cooks and chefs, in a kind of .
Chartreuse in Ménilmontant. There they they walked around, they worked in singing hymns whose verses and Music was their craft. They had taken neither the hood, nor the neither cord nor monastic sandals.
Their costume, carefully chosen, dictated by the 'Supreme Father, had something uncluttered, worldly, elegant.

sends a summons to his children for June 1st. He was supposed to go down with his disciples, dressed in the uniform of the a-peace post, with a banner where chathat party would see its true colors. This descent, delayed by bad weather, then by the events on Rue Saint-Merry, took place
finally, but did not have the success that was expected.

, masquerade, and only proved that the ranks of the Saint-Simohians had constituted drastically lightened.

er

Embroidered on the chest of Chief, that big word: FATHER. The Chartreuse had become Sunday
a pilgrimage destination for neo-plants and walking for the cu-serious. The Saint-Simonians seem-they admitted to not having been sequestered on a height only to show off better.
These small gatherings are displeasing;
The Supreme Father was invited to hold
She closed the door of her convent. But That was not how he intended to... collect: the door therefore remained open-green. The police and their archers inter-came; the seals were affixed to the Carthusian monastery, and the public was deprived the advantage of seeing the new congregants gather in song
so much. On August 27, 1832, Father su-
The first was brought before the Assize Court, with Mr. Michel Chevalier, former student of the École Polytechnique, ex-mining engineer; Émile Barrault, former teacher in Sorèze and in Paris; Charles Duveyrier, ex-lawyer cat, and Olinde Rodrigues, doctor at the Faculty of Sciences, and which already was no longer in communion with Supreme father. Bazard would have figured also in this trial: but he came to die, aged 40, in Courtry,
near Montferrineil (July 29, 1832).
The newspapers announced, at this
at that time, that a delegation from Saint-Simonians, sent by Father Su-
first, had made her way towards Courtry, to honor the funeral of the former co-pontiff, but that the pa-
The widowed and resentful press refused this tribute, and that the deputies retook the road to Ménilmontant without deceased. – We know what the result was—

state of the trial of the Saint-Simonians.
Forty witnesses, all disciples of Messiah and apostles, who came in their costume, could not be heard

because the Supreme Father to them!
split to swear an oath before God
and before men: he was not permitted to swear only before God and THE FATHER. We know that Rnfantin, what—that it was called the word and the law vi—boasts, does not shine by its eloquence sequence, and that the Supreme Father showed very little in his cane 11 was found guilty, as well as Messrs. Chevalier and Duveyrier, editors—Globe writers, "for having committed the "offense of offending public morals"
"that through the publication of writings and
"speeches delivered in places
"publics," and they were condemned to one year in prison and a fine of 100 francs
each. Rodrigues and Barrault on the run rent quits for a 50 fr. fine.

The ruling, issued on August 29, upheld the seizure of various documents and brochures

published, and ordered that the company said to be Saint-Simonian would be dis—hold (6). This stop, of which there was no
The appeal point was posted at the expense
Convicts. – Already the theater had dangerously injured by the
The new congregation is ridiculous.
before the judgment of the law takes place,
In Paris, an end to its existence.
This judgment gave the signal of a general dispersion; and, while that the Supreme Father was being held in bondage, his disciples had

Their mission was to travel the globe. They...

they began to train the people, but

h PS SES

(6) The condemned, who were awaiting their colleagues, returned in procession—lying in Ménilmourant, singing hymns and canticles, one of which is terminated by these verses:

The people are hungry.
The people are miserable.

Later, another police trial took place in the prison for the purpose of extortion and accusation of fraud; but the defendants were acquitted.

— 38 —

no, in the manner of the ancient apostles. As they made their way apostrophizing in the provinces, their costume was chased after them by women and children. There were in some shouts, in what-cities of jeers and sometimes more energetic demonstrations. The Saint-Simonians saw themselves reduced to shake off the dust from their feet, and it is often necessary that the authority, which rejected their doctrines, take great care to protect their people. Neighboring countries. See mon-were not very hospitable, and did not spare—were not willing to taste their sermons on the unified social fund Verse and promiscuity. Finally, the most fervent disciples persuaded that the East would be theirs easier to convert than the West. I don't know what prophecy they had announced that they would find the prin-

regenerative cipe of the world or the free women among the Turks; they

They set out in search of, and went forth, pilgrims.
mentally ill, looking for a wife
free, not where she could be,
but where it was impossible to seize it
and to procure it in the harems from Cairo, Baghdad, Aleppo, and in the seraglio of Sultan Mahmud. This the apostolic enterprise had its dan-Gers; the newspapers announced that the children of the Supreme Father had not were not viewed very favorably by the followers of Islamism. Pruden-
This will have curbed his zeal, and he will not pas-
It would not be that the free woman had been found-raised in countries where the Saint-Simo-Only they could have imagined that he
It would be easy to discover. As among these missionaries were talented men, several of them
They placed themselves at the service of the vice-king of Egypt, and are busy with holding (1833) less of his harem

qe deses barracks et de ses arsenals.
– The Society of Christian Morality
'had proposed, in 1832, a price of 500 francs for the best refutation
of the Saint-Simonian doctrine, considered in what it has decon-

to adhere to Christian morality: but when this prize was awarded (1833), the Saint-Simonianism could not tolerate

. to face the test of ridicule, the sarcas-

my newspapers and the mockery of the theatre, more powerful than the court

(August 1833), in the third annual meeting of the phre- society

nological, Casimir Broussais, se-

Secretary General, speaking before 60
plaster heads spread out on the desk,
examined that of Bazard, and announced that, according to the inspection of the protu-berances, this first head of the holy-Simonism had all the characteristics of a man of action, perseverance, Intelligence, self-esteem. We've seen where all these great faculties. It is right to acknowledge that if its politico-religious doctrine tended towards general upheaval,
he was, as were his disciples, prophesiedcants, dogmatically pacifist. fl
did not want to regenerate the world through violence, but also through persua-Sion; he believed that his word would

a revelation, and this revelation

a revolution without fighting and without heartbreak. But the proletariat, that the Saint-Simonians were engaging in their system on the property ct on the universal social fund, were able to finding too much delay in regenworld order in their means peaceful and dilatory (7). Bazaar and Enfantin had a church constituted-killed in Lyon. The sermons of Sn -
(7) I! It is not useless to point out that the doctrines of this sect are lawful

to be entirely new, and that one of them

new apostles had been appointed there-breuses, followed; and who could assume-

volume Re

finds many similar ones
in the history of religious sects, between other than that of the monk Dulcino, a heretic of the 12th century, which had established the community-
te of goods among his disciples, in the dio-Cesea of Vercelli, where he was arrested and burned at the stake.

His wife Marguerite, on June 1, 1307. His

The disciples were then scattered; but one claims that they would have survived for a long time yet.

to say that they had no influence
about the misfortunes of this city?

Marguerite de Trente, in Mérindoi and Cabrières and Longinus Cataueo of Bergamo, who perished in the flames in 1307, were also the leaders of a large sect, which we cannot-master the Gaszari. They admitted the communtied up in goods and that of women (see.
Muratori, Rerum ital. iscript,, tWX, and the Sto.
laughed Vercellese, by President Gregors, volume 1),

4

D
. *

The n
LS
=
:
/

' :
, ñ -
,
i
i
i
:
;
,
+
$
e
: L
v
: :
=
e ?
$4
4
:
,
U
HAS
i
"
r LA
e at 0
-
: û
= :
\
, At
:
;
. '
E
£
S

s

Fi LAST ERA

_ OF

SAINT-SIMONISM.

because OF BERGERS,)

This sect took its name from Count of Saint-Simon, who gave himself-born as the analogue of Socrates,
but who, although he called an explication of the doctrine of Christ had not renounced the Christianism. Several of his disciples acknowledged that, as an industrialist,
He had ruined himself, as a thinker he had exhausted himself taking all the forms, without ever managing to strike
the spirits; that finally, as mora-
On this list, he had committed suicide. On this last-"
To deny it, there would be many others things to say. Those who knew him
'know, indeed, how he gave

the example of this emancipation that

His disciples preached to France.
Some positive ideas presented in his writings or in his interviews were exploited after his death... Little known before the revolution of 1830, the Saint-Simonians the-They saw Ja's head immediately afterwards. All their dogmas obviously tended to replace Christianity.

main ones - were their God-touf

or universal pantheism; the Nega-tion of original sin; the Claim-

Lion to rehabilitate the flesh; the Abo-
The elimination of heredity; the suppression from any place of punishment after the death; finally the Deification of Saint-

Simonians also failed to recognize the history
history and human nature in.
their famous question of the woman,
me. They accused religion of being an- .
tick of having oppressed the woman in holding her as a slave, and reproached the Christianity for having sought it alone-

to protect it and not to emancipate it ciper, which was finally what the Saint-Simonianism, which proclaimed it free and independent... Everything that Christianity says or does for the woman tends towards only one goal, this-

him of the union with man, of the union
the most complete and the most perfect;
On the contrary, all the advice from Saint-Simonianism only tends towards the
to separate, rather than to distance it from man.
It follows from this that, if the advice and the precepts of Christianity were followed, the happiness of the woman, identified to that of man, he would be equal; on the contrary, if the teachings-elements of the new religion had

- 49 -

If it had prevailed, there would no longer have been any union.
Neither society nor happiness for the woman
me... The more independence she has, the more
His isolation would be great, even more so
His condition would be unnatural._The con-_ Seils of Saint-Simonianism, pushed
in their ultimate consequence,

would amount to nothing less than put an end to the reports of man and woman, and the end of

There are hidden absurdities in this

Saint-Simonian theory. – The iliu-

Sion was great for a moment when the new religion, as they call it-

peeled, began to develop under the almost divine influence of Bazard-Enfantin. After founding the hierarchy, they founded the ceremonial-denies that were supposed to accompany the different acts of life, that is to say Communion, marriage, death. The Saint-Simonian Communion consisted of a kind of communion of thoughts. Thus, at the pre-'First general communion, in 1831, all family members, pre-successively speaking, manifested their adherence to the revelation, coming from Saint-Simon by the channel of the Supreme Fathers, and their hopes in progressive destinies human characteristics. At the same time the first adoption of children, or their admission within of universal communion, which It constituted the baptism of equality. a Saint-Simonian marriage, at least that of Alexander of Saint-Chéron with Claire Bazard, did not announce that faith was alive in the heart of his apostles, who, not content with the Saint-Simonian consecration, made every effort to ensure that their the union was legitimized not only 'in front of the civil officer, but in front of the Catholic Church. The first ce-volta the spirits.

the burial ceremony gave to Jules Lechevalier to proclaim the bosom of God, a phase of life eternal. God is life. God is All that exists, God is love.

While the preaching of Saint-Si-
One was open to the four corners of Paris, propagated by the Organegator and by Le Globe, by voice and with the pen of a great many young talents, Dory was asking herself Marseille as a missionary of the new religion; but he closed
soon his school, disgusted, skeptical-that, neither Christian nor Saint-Simonian.
Like him, Hoart in Toulouse, Le-Monnier in Montpellier, Laurent in Rennes, Leroux in Lyon, Talabot in Brest, Bouffard in Limoges, Jules Lechevalier and Adolphe Gueroult
in Rouen, Duveyrier, in Belgium, d'Eichtal in England, etc., lived-rent d'abotd on what their doctrine had something good about it, that is to say, about what they had borrowed from Christianity.
But the Saint-Simonians had to
to fail, even less so because of their dogmas, their pantheism,

of their variations on the nature of God, because their morality re-Bazard had been constantly disagreeing with En-Fantin on the political question where he wanted to introduce the element of war

and on the moral question where he refuses-knows how to ratify the ideas of his colleague-

concerning the emancipation of the woman. Childish, starting from the prinphilosophical concept that man has right to make his own morale, argued that it was absurd

According to him, it came solely from
the man, that the woman
She finally did her own thing... Eu

Furthermore, Enfantin claimed that it was necessary

– 43 –

that the woman should be involved
of the priesthood; that it was therefore necessary to for-sea a new priesthood, which would be composed of men and women;
that these were the priestesses and pre-
very new people who were supposed to lead
and harmonize in the future the ap-young intellectuals, prepare and facilitate-to read the union of beings with affections deep, that is to say those who have-always lies to the same person,
with people with strong emotions, the-
which cannot be satisfied with a
their only love, and they need to change it.
often the object. This doctrine,
which was, in essence, nothing but a hideous promiscuity rehabilitated vice and regulated adultery: she raised oppositions. Jules Lechevalier, accusing himself first of having believed in the possibility of forming a family
and work towards the creation of a s0-society before its law was found,
admitted that he had not taken long to...
to perceive that the two Fathers were divided on politics and on morality; that he regretted having introduces into this doctrine a
a certain number of people; that one
He could rule them without law; that he would have preferred to leave them in that state
where they were previously located.
concludes that the holy religion Simonian was declared in a state of liquidation, adding that he was returning to doubt everything, and told himself of new-old philosopher. – Despite the op-positions, Enfantin disregarded the reorganization of the telecom hierarchy
that it must have been during the era of the ap-

Fantin, Supreme Father, beside his empty armchair representing woman
absent and summoned; next to Enfantin,
but a little below, OI. Rodri-guës, as chosen by the cult and the in-dustrie, specialist in charge of gold

religious organization, workers and material interests. In this quality, he made an appeal to the stock exchange
all to help feed the family
Saint-Simonian. Moreover, OI. Ro-drigues, while proclaiming the Father

) supreme, the most moral man of his time, made his reserves against he, for he stipulated that the only chan-elements to introduce into morality

The old ones consisted of admitting the divorce and to decide that no individual

Vidu could not be the husband of more of a woman at the same time. While

J. Lechevalier, *embracing the oriental-Islam and its doctrines of worship stupid and sensual Jâcheté, which.

blinded the childish islands, con-
vaint men and women sai-born of heart, mind and body to
to form a new Christianity, Bazard, also separated from Enfantia, for-mutilated the beliefs of the new "church that he intended to continue. H paid a solemn tribute to all

what Christianity had done for the moral law, but arrived at the mis-

believed he had to accept the divorce.
As for the woman, he didn't think that she was called upon to reveal nothing;
her mission was simply to
to propagate and make acciamer what
The man would have revealed it.
workers or industrialists saint-Simonians, numbering about three
a thousand, divided into visitors, aspirants and civil servants consumed without produce, despite their pro- title ducts. Voluntary donations which covered the initial expenses
as they grew weary, they resorted to a loan, as a guarantee for the-
which they owed to society
all their possessions, that OI. Rodrigues had the power to administer. As in the Stock Exchange, the latter took charge of

—

negotiating the loan, that is to say to perform an act of worship by founding Ja then-
The moral value of money. But the justice, until now quiet on the doctrines and actions of Saint-Simonian, took offense at a
a lure offered to the greed of rentiers.
The Supreme Father and Rodrigues fu— rent accused of having recruited the workers, sought to capture the heirsfages and issued annuities without possess-to provide the necessary guarantees for the payment of interest and repayment capital investment. — 11—there was
It hasn't been three months since the changes to introduce into holy morality Simonian had been fixed by OI. Rodrigues to divorce or to u-successive union of man and the woman, and already this barrier was crossed by Enfantin. 11 wanted that the priest was a composite of the man and the woman. and that Both of them use their crazy means to purify humanity and to say, the calm priestly couple-

the immoderate ardor of the intellect-digestion, or will moderate appetites
deranged senses; sometimes, at the con-Milking will awaken intelligence apathetic, or will warm the senses
numb; for he knows everything
the charm of decency and modesty,
but also all the grace of abandonment gift and voluptuousness. Duveyrier, no.
sita point to announce that we could

to find the woman who was supposed to re-.

to calve and establish morality in the middle even those who indulged in the public prostitution... Thus, instead of progress that the Saint-Simonians
they had promised humanity, they were pushing back to this state of the animal nature they attributed to him for cradle... Bazard and OI. Rodrigues, that their quality as men ina-

laughter and fathers; of a family retaining naturally in certain borders
born, protested against morality
Enfantin. Less explicit, Rodri-Gues maintained that it was necessary to limited to divorce, but he admits-the priest and the priestess ;-f} at-
it was still tending that the woman would reveal-
The trice came to proclaim the code of the modesty. Childish, who was housed at capital, and which also had
of the Globe, correspondence and:
the cash register, held firm with those who remained faithful. These acclaimed-
They return even more fervently to their Father, rejoiced that the Christian yours, represented by Bazard, and the Jewish, by Rodrigues, had separated of them, and boasted that they finally possessed a God, a faith and a father. However, the press com-fought with the weapon of reasoning
and the sarcasm of similar documents trines, published in cold blood by a faithless and almost morally bankrupt society practice, which rose up against them, the new apostles, using reprisals, they said that she applauded adultery was portrayed in the theater. novels, that she tolerated women light in her salons, which she paid and even licensed the prostitution. Here again, the debate was between Saint-Simonianism and the century; Christianity remained outside of cause. He was only accused of not having prevented or cured these disorder; but he responded with his beliefs, saying he had never argued that man was a gift and holy in himself, and that moreover, Since man is free, the sad state of the company could easily explain itself to eyes of the Christian. The attack from beyond-attacks on public morality to property and provocations to overthrow of the government pe- knows about Enfantin and about Michel Che-Valier, manager of the Globe, when the cholera came to demonstrate the effectiveness of Christianity and the void of doctrines Saint-Simonian women in the presence of the the most terrible ordeal. The Saint-Simonians knew only how to advise to create a diversion by means of major works or public celebrations. The depletion of their resources Islands condemning them to retirement, they tried- rent to mask appearances- of a free determination, and paro- recounted one of the acts of the life of Je- The Lord of Christ. Good Friday, 20 April 1832, the day the Globe ceased to Enfantin announced that a That phase of his life was complete. He had spoken, he wanted to act; but, tasked with summoning the proletariat and the... woman to a new life, he was going to dedicate the anniversary of death of the divine liberator of slaves, in smoothing over domesticity, the last trace of serfdom. Indeed, withdrawn into a country house that Enfantin owned in Ménilmontant, the Saint-

= To

The Simonians lived there without servants questions. June 6th was chosen for the capture of the new habit, under which they de-
were going to reveal themselves to the world and him Give an example of the work. – The new apostles made at Menilmon-
both the attempt at organizing the company, depending on capacity and according to the merit. Twice a week, the Wednesday and Sunday, their door
was opened to the faithful and to the cu-rieux, who considered them busy of housework, taking their meals, taking a walk in pairs
in pairs or gathered in groups, serene, radiant and with exalted eyes, or singing hymns well on a Your tone was grave and monotonous. The crowd eager to see them became so great,

that the police denied him access to the house. Before the Assize Court, where the accusation of outrages against the mo-public rallies and participation in one more unauthorized meeting
Enfantin brought twenty people,
Michel Chevalier, Duveyrier, Bar-Rault and Olinde Rodrigues, the Father
supreme appeared in the midst of his dis-
The clergy, all in costume. Although the women were not yet classified
In the sées, he had Cécile Four- on his right
nel and to his left Aglaé Saint-Hi-clear, which the magistrates refused to admit as his advice. Pen-thirty hours the new
The apostles heeded the word, and there had in several of them displays of eloquence; but only-element then, placing itself on the
on the ground of Christianity, they repro-society cherishes its incredulity
and his vices, his indifference and his Corrupt morals. On this occasion-sion Enfantin forgot that, when the Cult leaders played the inspired ones,

adorned with long hands, sort of
that they were assured that she would not

It wouldn't be lacking. So as not to have

Having taken the same precautions, he deceived not by its nullity the eager expectation of curious. A small fine was imposed.
inflicted on Olinde Rodrigues and Bar-Rault; but Enfantin, Duveyrier and

Michel Chevalier were condemned-

to be sent to prison. - The con-
the damnation of the Supreme Father accelerated the fall of Saint-Simonianism, in bri-sant tous Jes liens d'autorité. Ce Saint-Simonianism, which boasted to hierarchize the universe, ends up com-
all heresies, by default of hierarchy, each individual will-
at his own expense to become a leader and reveallateurf, The Disciples, the Influential Pines

- 46 -

having stated that they saw in the condemnation of the Father an irdicaprovidential tion of freedom, which this aligned with a need for independence

the tension they felt within themselves, Childish, to save appearances,
for his part declared that he was giving to his disciples permission to follow their own inspiration and their native printing. - However two of the main ideas lived
'still among the most fervent;
that of sanctifying the work of people by sharing their hardships, and hope in the arrival of the woman Messiah. - A number of Saint-Simonians began to par-

Magne, Belgium, England, to the effect of giving the people the example-_ple of work and of: announcing to him
the era of the rehabilitation of labor their, from the liberation of the woman and universal peace, They.

'lived off the fruits of their day-born, what they called receiving the 'baptism of wages; they supportstoically silenced the jeers and the blows from the mob, what they ap-
'were preparing to give their faith baptism
of martyrdom; memory and wretched

a parody of what had happened during

of the establishment of Christianity.
In January 1833, Barrault,
the most incomplete man without the woman, as Cécile called her Fournel began searching for the Messiah woman. He first established at Lyon, a sheet: 1833, Year
of the mother, in which he decimated
renounce the title of Saint-Simonian,
not wanting the one from Enfantnien, that of taking that of compawoman's gnons. Convinced that This Messiah was supposed to be in the East.
that it would be found in Constantinople,
and that she would be Jewish by nationality, he

He embarked in Marseille. Agents Turks, tired of his greetings to daughters of the Orient, among whom he
He was looking for a free woman, and he found her.
soon to be transported from Constant-Tinople in Smyrna. - While Barrault and some other companions-
the woman's gnons called her in Türkiye, Syria, Egypt, Cécile
Fournel and Marie Talon gave the Book of Acts for organ to the holy Simonism.- Then a brief grace

Chevalier and Duveyrier, at the neck – edition that they would no longer interfere in to catechize France, and that they would go in the distance, carry out the anxious activity of their minds. Eufantin, whose ideas had already changed, passed into

Egypt, less as an apostle than as a simple industrialist. 11 ends by losing sight of the Messiah woman that Barrault had waited in vain,
and that Cécile Fournel did not less vainly searching in the East.
Some travel companions d'Enfantin apostatized as much as the saint-simonism than christianisme, and they became Muslims, That's how that Saint-Simonianism, as

new religion or revelation of God, according to Saint-Simon and Enfantin, will take place following these countless errors which, after to have germinated in the minds of some men, makes a little noise and seduces
a few disciples, thanks to the lam-
beautiful borrowed by them from the relithe church of Jesus Christ, have eva-drowned in smoke, like all the thoughts of men separated from God.

– All that remains for us is to pre-

to sense the subsequent situation of the main leaders of the sect, who they all seem to be completely there Lambert appears to have remained in Egypt, where he embraced Islam

!

– Duveyrier, after having composed for some time pieces of theatre and serialized articles, He became a farmer of the advertisements in the newspapers. 11 is currently at Toulon, where he hopes to make a name for himself– Member of Parliament. – Michel Chevalier is joined the Council of State, then was appointed member of the Chamber of deputies; he contributes to the drafting From the Journal des Débats. – Carnot, son of the famous member of the National Convention, is from The Chamber of Deputies. – Cazeaux directed the drying process for a long time of the Landes department. – Tran– Son and Dugied returned to the breasts of Catholicism as well as Margerin, who is a professor at the University of Ca– Catholic in Belgium, and Bazard–Saint–Cheron, as well as Mw° Bazard, his stepmother.– Émile and Isaac Pereire, specially protected by Mr. de Rothschild, are attached to the administration Ver– railway administration sails, and enjoy a fortune considerable. – The Supreme Father En–

Fantin, after having traveled through Algiers

laughter, returned to France, where, by the the same favor as the previous ones, he landed a wonderful job in the Orleans railway. He finds that this phase is well worth one other. – Laurent accepted a position of judge in Privas, where he wrote last– recently a people's history of Napoleon. – Jean's son-in-law Reynaud and Pierre Leroux, pantheis– your stubborn ones, continue their pre–

early studies. – D'Eichtal, son of a

who was ennobled by the court of Bavaria, like the Roths- family child l'a été par celle de Vienne, est remained a man of the world afterwards as before. He was the most faithful and the last-

-denying the supporters of Enfantin. - 0I.

Rodrigues, after resuming his 0C-stock market investments, died of-

'for the past few years, appearing having also forgotten the saint- Simonism. We don't know of any.

only one person who practices it today.
at least ostensibly.

HISTORY
OF THE FAMILY

DE ROTHSCHILD,

OR BIOGRAPHY

DE MAYER- ANSELME ROTHSCHILD

AND OF NATHAN, HIS SON,
| FOLLOWED BY DF THAT OF THE ELECTOR
GEORGES-SU NRRRNE DE HESSE- CASSEL.

(Excerpt from OAPAE Universelle, volumes LXVII and L'XXX.)

\

2

_*

Hey, one. Louve LUEX Fage 20.

Fourquemin Lith

BIOGRAPHY

DE MAYER-ANSELME

| ROTHSCHILD.

ROTHSCHILD (MAYER-ANSELME

(1) was the founder of the house
of bank or business most rich, the most powerful one we have seen in antiquity and in the Modern times. All that one tells of merchants from Tyre and Carthage, Venice, and London,

cannot be compared to opulence,

to the enormous capital available
now a family that once possessed barely a few coins, a family which, placed last in the rank of society, in a sect then re-proven and persecuted by all the nations, counts today some princes and kings for his protectors
gés, its tributaries, and even, it is said-
ON, for its partners. The causes and the consequences of this phenomenon are little known, and yet they offer one of the most serious facts,
the most curious in history con-

B - :

(1) In the baronial diploma which was accorded by the Emperor of Austria to the family Rothschild in 1822, was found, according to custom from that country, the authorization to add to its AOM The qu wen particle. | temporary. If, in the cramped conditions of within our framework, we cannot tell you about it. to give it all the development it demands, we will at least make it con- to give birth to what is most important to him so much, and above all we will talk about it with the frankness, the independence of our opinions. We know quite well that this is neither for large services nor for glorious exploits that must be attributed such astonishing prosperities. After so many vain utopian- pies, after the charlatanism of the re- trainers, empiricists, are ve- naked the disappointments of freedom, of equality, then the prestige of the victory, conquests, ambition, the pride of despotism with all its consequences, and finally the cupi- corruption, all the pas- shameful things... That's how things go. his human beings, thus must acc- . to fulfill the destinies of nations. Ours, it must be admitted, have walked a little too fast; we have traversed space in a few years of, several centuries. We were barely- we emerged from heroic times, from illusions of glory, of the then-

2 P0.

ST

sance, that we have fallen into
The shames of the Late Roman Empire. - Mayer Rothschild was neither a scholar nor profound politics; it was all very-second-rate merchant, without study and completely illiterate, but endowed with all the finesse, all the cunning of which the Jewish nation had been long-term care, it must be said. to escape harassment, to the oppression that overwhelmed him in all countries. Born in 1743, in Frankfurt am Main, from poor. He was poor, he remained an orphan from the age of eleven. Friends from his family, seeing his shortcomings, wanted in to make a rabbi, and for that they placed them in a special school, where he received the first elements of a very common education and that his destitution did not allow him not even to finish. Forced to re- To announce his career, he entered at an Israelite merchant, who employed him in the most arduous tasks pibles; but, endowed with much With strength and courage, they submitted to it with resignation, fulfills exactly its homework, and found some more. moments to indulge in his taste for predilection for changing mon-_ naïes, old medals, and in general-

general of all gold materials and money. Later they gave the _ name of numismatic science at this zeal for a type of trafficking then exclusively abandoned in Germany gne to the Jewish nation, which could not

not to be involved in another business;

But we know well enough that he doesn't... hardly existed in this country, as in many others, than to exchange- to ger, and too often to alter, to denigrate- killing unknown values, and whose

much more to calculate the weight and the intrinsic value that explains the He was sensible at the origin. He became very adept at it. and brings together a large number of these pieces, which he began to peddle in the fairs and in all parts of Al-Lemagne. It is by leading this no-made it so that he was noticed by a ban-Quier of Hanover, named David, who, struck by his intelligence, wished-had it in his offices, and him learned the correspondence, the attire books, and especially the exchange of currencies and all materials of gold and silver, which he was in charge of more specifically. Mayer Rothschild stayed in that house for three years, and he truly became a skilled changeur, feeling then capable of o-to operate on his own account, he returned to his homeland, there made a more advantageous plan, and founded in 1780 this banking and trading house destined for such a great future. Remained long unnoticed and limited to currency and old money trafficking medals, this house obtained success-significantly a lot of growth through his relations with the landgrave of Hesse, begun in the last-last years of the previous century tooth. It was said that in 1801 this prince He appointed him his court agent. we hardly understand what it was that such a burden, but it is It is likely that she was less honorable that is lucrative. The Rothschild family: earned a lot more money dous les premiers temps de l'émigration, where so many outlaws were forced to sell at rock-bottom prices the The last vestiges of their opulence. In 1801 and 1802, she negotiated for the Danemark loans that do not amount They don't want less than twenty million.

fit on similar matters; and, in

3

_at the same time, she was doing less obvious perhaps, but of even more lucrative, with the landgrave, became the emitter of Hesse-Cassel, whose properties are quite well known strange habits (see HESSE-CASSEL, LX VII, 165). It is certain that obliged sound of hiding ignoble speculations, this prince needed lenders names, and that in this case the house Rothschild must have fulfilled his intentions. He therefore used it in several occasions; these are facts confirmed from all over Germany, and that not don't deny the best friends of the Rothschild family. 1! resulted from these reports a money account very considerable. It is understandable that in 1806, when the elector was forced to to flee before the French army, he did not didn't have time to settle his scores with the Frankfurt banker, and even less to pull from his hands the funds that were there in-pledged. He therefore left them; but He was far from bringing her any more, which would have been very imprudent, since that would have meant leaving them under the enemy hand. Occupied mainly with 'to save the treasures he possessed at Cassel, this prince took some with him first.

most of it in Denmark then in London. As for his accounts with Mayer Rothschild, he is sure that he left this banker with large fortunes rate, that all the care of this one were to shield from greed na-Poleonian, and that he knew how to make the most of it wonderfully, by using them

in all countries and particularly-closely in England, where one will see, in the following article, that Nathan acquired through this citizen a cr-said immense and who reacted on the May-his Frankfurt home, of which he remained the agent and associate. In this position,

- Mayer-Anselme needed all

his address, with all his haMileté to cover his cash register and the voter's funds. He succeeded so well to eliminate even the slightest suspicions lessons, that in 1810 the prince primate, so devoted to Napoleon's cause and who, although a Catholic prelate, pro-especially targeted the Jews and the Protestants, took him under their protection

tion and called on him to be part of a electoral college. By sparing
thus all the powers, the prudent Anselm managed to cross without too many unfortunate accidents during the time of the French occupation; and he retained

what was almost intact
remaining treasures of the elector and of his own. We also know that later

France has largely compensated its heirs to the sacrifices he had been forced to do it. IP was dead when this
The prince returned to his states, and it was rent to be settled. The affairs of the Rothschild house, through its relationships with England, were then in their greatest extent. We don't There can be no doubt that the capital of the voter were not committed to the for the most part, like those of the banquier of Frankfurt; thus it was not

, hardly the time to settle comp-

yours, and less likely to liquidate them. It has been clearly stated that the heirs of An- They had then offered to ren- to dispose of all its funds, and even to include them in to take the interest, but it is obvious- tooth that there could not be at this era between these heirs and the elect- neither liquidation nor restitution. They were partners, and the affairs of the The company had received an immense development. Here, moreover, is this- that we read about this in a notice written under the influence of these her- thirds themselves in volume twenty- twentieth of the Encyclopedia of People du Monde (2): "11 (the landgrave of "Hesse) knew the fortune of "Mayer-Anselme Rothschild had been "swallowed up in the French invasion, "and, convinced that the funds he "had recommended to his care "had suffered the same fate, he did not pa- "It wouldn't even be possible that he gave himself "the trouble of taking steps on this subject" "Information." We do not believe not. easily than a prince also miserly, as greedy as the landgrave, would have been so disdainful- protecting his interests, and that in such a way In that case, he would have been content with a walk- gation as easy as that of the en- engulfment by the French invasion çaise; but we will see in the article and its relationship with the house Rothschilds then had a destiny-

- se -

a completely different tion, and that in 1813, at the time when the coalition was
in its greatest activity, the
The prince and his bankers were not thinking
They hardly had time to settle their scores.
It should also be noted that this
It was precisely at that time that
'this house experienced extraordinary growthnaire and that these gentlemen became brokers, commission agents
of all the capital that England
had to be brought across the continent,
to pay the subsidies from the powers
sarices allied against France

—

(2) The Encyclopedia of People of the World is not,
as we know, that a translation or imitation-
tion of the German work by the bookseller Broc-khaus (see this name, LIX, 283), entitled: Dictionary of the Conversation, for which the
The famous Gentz composed several articles,
in particular the one devoted to the history-Mayer-Auselme Rothschild's story. We know quite under what influence and in what views, wrote this advisor from the Antri- cabinet
Well, this close confidant of the Prince of Metternich (roy. Gloves, LXV, 237).

(see Nathan RorusciLn, whose ar-(Article follows). As we have said, Mayer-Anselme, the creator of this house, had died in 1812, in Francstrong, surrounded by his large family (five sons and five daughters) (3). This _death had actually been that of a patriarch. He had recommended to his children must remain constantly faithful to the faith of their fathers, and especially of never to separate. They made him the promise, and all of us, we owe it to you-re, observed it religiously (4).

It is to this obedience, to this union,

so rare and so worthy of praise, of being admired, that they owed at least one part of their immense successes. Ja- but the strength and effects of a great association was not demonstrated with More clarity and happiness. Five houses established in Frankfurt, in Lon- in Vienna, Paris and Naples, from then on they had only one goal, a of the same interest, and they were directed each by one of Mayer's sons- Anselm. We will see, in the notice which following are the incredible results of this unit of power and action.

(3) No mention was made of any notice, nor in no case of the numerous publications facts about the Rothschild family, of the five daughters Mayer-Anselme 3 and there is reason to believe that these young ladies did not have much due to their father's rich inheritance, this which is perhaps in the customs and the customs of the Israelites of Germany, but bears little resemblance to what is prescribed by the laws and customs of France.

(4) Mr. James Rothschild, who holds the ma- her Parisian son, has shown herself to be so scrupulous- attached to the faith of his fathers that, towards In 1832, he filed a lawsuit against a publisher of The History of France, by President Hénault,

-who had portrayed him very poorly,

no doubt, as if ready to embrace the Catholicism. MJ Rothschild took æela for slander and, for reasons that We cannot understand, he obtained a betrayal by the timid publisher.

BIOGRAPHY

DE ROTHSCHILD.

ROTHSCHILD (NATHAN-MAYER)

the third of Anselm's sons, of whom The preceding notice is that of the five brothers who had the most share in amazing successes of this family, no
that he was neither more skillful nor more learned than the others, but because he found in favorable circumstances
ables and that he probably hadn't not born of his genius, as His flatterers said so. He took advantage of it.
However, very well, we owe him this justice, and his brothers, who were remained his associates, according to the vopaternal bond, they also benefited from it.
Nathan-Mayer was also born in Frankfurt am Main, in 1777,
at a time when his family, recently-established in this city, do not do there-hardly knows that a trade is an exchange and secondhand goods, exclusively reserved in this country to the Jewish nation.
He did not, therefore, receive as his brothers, whom a super- education official and specifically directed towards the kind of business he was involved in destined. He had scarcely reached his twentieth year, that his father, having distinguished its happy disposition-

tions, sent him to 'England, where its relations with the landgrave of Hesse forced him to form a stateestablishment. Nathan-Mayer went to-based in Manchester, where he manages for several years a mo-counter. It was only around In 1806 he went to London, to

-to make more fruitful use of it

the capital that the French invasion çaise forced the landgrave to knows that, although out of avarice as much that by political system this prince would always have treated the emi-

his hatred for France revolutionary was always excessive and that, whether in secret, or openly,
He took part in all the coalitions that... formed against her, the aidaat of his wishes and his money when he could not do it any other way, and reserving, however, for occasional mowing
sion, as one should think, of strong interest rates and substantial profits.
There can be no doubt about any of this.
that the Rothschilds did not second him
wonderfully, and that they did not lose anything from it Not their troubles. It was the time could

where the English ministry had to do spending large sums on the con-
essential for sustaining the coalition
tion that he had just formed against Napoleon, between Sweden and Prussia and Russia. Then they opened, for
to pay off the British bills of exchange,
the coffers that the Rothschild house had established on all points of Germany; then was marvel-this science was used wisely
bills of exchange, if happy=

invented by the Israelites of.

fourteenth century, forced to ca-
dear to their capital, and that those of the nineteenth, who no longer have the me-My designs, however, are so skillfully-ment perfected. In this time of the second coalition, the Rothschilds still needed all their skill to escape greed Napoleon's treasures and those of landgrave. Much has been said about the deyoument and the perils to which they they exposed themselves more than once for this,

And we believe it without difficulty. They succeeded—thus they were to decrease considerably.

for their house the charges of the in-escape, which later did not emb-Pêcha not d'en obtenir des bonnes compensation. During the war in Austria-cheating, in 1809, their operations ac-
They believed prodigiously.

it was through their hands that passed
all the subsidies sent to Vienna
by the English ministry, all the sums that helped to organize the Tugend-Bund, to create the bodies of insurgés of Schill, of the Duke of Brunswick-Œls, etc. In this sense one must recognize that they compete from then very effectively at the independent dance of Germany, that soon they should have been more useful in-core. Which proves that the treasures the fate of the Landgrave of Hesse were the soul and the main island means of all these companies, that's what the

The efforts of these insurgents were primarily directed towards the residences of this prince,
that several times they entered
its capital, and that they managed to reach it expel King Jerome, who was put in his place
by Napoleon. In such circumstances—
In these situations, Nathan's role was truly...
a matter of very high importance;
His credit became immense, and the English ministry, that its bauquiers
no longer dared to help, he welcomed her very-honorably. He was never better demonstrated than money is the
the sinews of war and politics.
This influence, this credibility, increased.
even more so in 1813, at the time of the last coalition, when he England is required to pay,
sustain all the powers of the weather in Spain and Portugal

a very large army. So His credit was truly shaken, and paper money experienced a sharp depreciation. The capitalists of this country themselves did not dare
no longer entrusting their funds to a government
government that they saw becoming involved in such great perils; and it was in It was on this occasion that Nathan replied,
with a truly an- Stucism

'tic, to those who wanted to de-

turn: If England falls,
We would be very honored.
to succumb with her. The banker Israelite was then throughout the
the strength of youth, and like its brothers in all the ardor of business and the ambition for wealth. We have given that, by paternal will, the five sons of Mayer-Anselme were They remained partners. They had not again, as they did more Later, the roles were distributed in all parts of Europe, but they already had establishments and

sm 'éTe

counters in all the squares

hence Napoleon's power did not

had not been expelled, and all these succ_ cursales resulted in and communicated-were quarreling with the London house, which became the central point of the most major operations. Bringing together in this
At this critical moment, they will use all their resources.
all their efforts, and still then-wisely helped and supported by the Landgraye, who remained their commander dictatorial and who had placed all his

these large sums of capital at the disposal of tion of the Castlereagh ministry, and soon a million soldiers were gathered in the plains of Saxony, to fight Napoleon there. We know how this terrible struggle ended.
When we had succumbed to it and that foreigners were our masters,
they gave us back generously, he
It must be acknowledged, the power of our former monarchy; which was not, however, quite the restoration of the old balance of Europe, since all the powers

sessions had greatly expanded by
of recent conquests; but of the less there was in this treaty of 1814 no onerous clauses nor humiliating conditions; we even left all the rich mo-elements of the arts and sciences
those things that victory had accumulated within our walls. Certainly the position de la France still remained strong beautiful; but it is likely that His enemies noticed and that they regretted it. The Year-England especially seemed to have se-thoughtfully considered, and perhaps that it is through these belated reflections

that we must explain the escape from the island:

of Elba, made in the presence of the com-
British Navy envoy,
who did nothing to stop it. This

What is certain is that the English benefited more than any other people in the aftermath of this disastrous escape, and that the Rothschild house
he took advantage of it even more wonderfully by-core. Nathan had come to Brussels at moment of the Battle of Waterloo,

London. The news of this victory twenty-four hours before any
The official dispatch reached them. We con-see that he did not miss one as well
a great opportunity to speculate on the Increase in public funds. With its credit, its immense capital and those of the landgrave, he was more than at-another house capable of to operate. It was said that he gained thirty millions in a single day! So the Rothschilds owed their first successes to this led to one of our biggest setbacks,
and the happy bankers collected
soon, the continuation of this setback
even more considerable profits.
One of them had come to settle in Paris in 1810; Nathan rushed there in 1815 with the armies of the coalition.
Indeed, it was from those that we could say that they were arriving in the baggage of the allies, and they did not ve-not only were they born with them and under their protection, they came to exploit France in their
aom. All these powers, all these princes of Germany and of the 1-Italy were their debtors, their debtors. The Israelite bankers had advanced and lent money
to everyone; and we understand that for such risky investments-
two good interests and broad commissions were promised to them.
When victory was assured, and that all these princes, all these powerful-

"these so long defeated and deposedsedated by Napoleon, they returned to their States, it was necessary to pay;

_ boast, we changed our minds.

did not think of doing so in 1814
to be given by France; the following year—
We have not
not forgotten, we will remember
long time of the infamous billion,

so harshly imposed by the major powers to compensate themselves wars of which we had more suffered only from wars that Ambition and Machiavellianism cabinets had caused, perpetuated

more than our disagreements, and our secretly excited revolutions, fomented by themselves. It is that there was something even more deplorable
for France, but without a doubt happier for the home Rothschild, it's that after this first billion, which was set to power at power at whose island counts has been at least as published, it was necessary to pay for it
a second to compensate the par-individuals who, for twenty years, in all the regions had suffered of our invasions. We remember also by what means and of what kind

— way the liquidation or the sharing of this enormous sum,

without control, without examination, and of which no part, no state were made public, none of which account
was neither drawn up nor submitted to the Chambers

nor to the slightest verification (1).

(1) By the treaty of 20 November 1815, the France was condemned to a war tax of 700 million, payable in six years. And meanwhile one hundred and fifty thousand gar-

had to occupy our strongholds. The sum had to be paid day by day and, at the very least-

For the delay, the interest was calculated along with the

The utmost rigor. The calculations, the plas, mo-derelicts have made this first contribution to a billion and as for the major powers
They shared it, as they did not give any.
They did nothing to address the subjects, it turned out that in all countries the individuals who had those who suffered from the war were not indemnity
nized. So it was decided, by a second treaty,

It is understandable that, in this immense
the spoils, the share of the Roth- house Schild was not the thinnest, and that if his cash register had received something reached, if the elector's treasures had actually been swallowed up in Bonaparte's invasions, they had to-rent both of them to worry about it-damage extensively, protected, ap-Puyés as they were by the most great figures, through the memories rains themselves having become their own deb-
those indebted to them, their debtors, who charge them-rent from all their recoveries and who, for this reason, gave them full powers. We've only ever known one part of the scandals of this tene-large liquidation, but the little that we
He knew it, he must make everyone understand.
which happened there. It was through there that com-
our distress began, and it is through there that were brought to their highest point to the degree the prosperity of the maihis Rothschild. When the accounts of that terrible billion were made,
or that each person's share was settled,
France did not have enough money to pay. So we resorted to loans, and the Rothschild house was still there to mingle with these emprunts; she made great profits there-
These: that's his story: that's where he comes from
This immense fortune came to him!
These are facts that history does not

Thus, after providing the money which was meant to defeat us, to us oppress; after pumping, exhausted
the blood of France, this family has eucore doubled or perhaps tenfold its capital through the agintage of our loans and our railways!

that another billion would be allocated to them; and
a commission was appointed which settled arbitrarily the sums to be paid, suns con-Trôle and without any examination whatsoever. We say that Mr. de Richelieu, then Prime Minister, Sigua, the additions... Poor France!

- 59 -

In all of this, moreover, it must be re-to know, these gentlemen did not that what they could openly and legitimately make bankers an-
They were German capitalists.
owed nothing to the French, the enemies of their country. It was not
It is not up to them to report abuses, to...
to fish out the disorders of our administration administration; on the contrary, they should have to take advantage of it; they took full advantage of it.
They take advantage of it for a long time.
Again... If it was greed, we can also say that it was patriolism. They had competed in to conquer, to subjugate the enemy com-
.mun; they shared in his spoils:
It was their right. They could have...
use with more moderation, but Moderation, when it comes to money, is not not their usual practice. Which is not No less surprising is that at this thirsting for riches they join a no less ardent desire for titles and of honors, and that on this the principals
these and the kings did not make them dis-It's wrong. In 1813 the King of Prussia was to bring the Rothschild brothers into his Private trade council; two years after the Emperor of Austria their bestowed titles of nobility and the Montmorency family had been the _ first Christian barons, but that the Rothschilds were the first

Jewish barons. At the same time

"Mayer-Anselme, the eldest of them all, the one who resides in Frankfurt, was appointed Bavarian consul in this city.

In 1820 Nathan received the same title of . the court of Vienna alongside that of London, and his son Lionel succeeded him.
ceded in these honorable functions
that Baron James fulfills in Paris,
third of the sons of Mayer-Anselm,
having become the master of our destinies,
the one who now regulates in France the Stock market prices, the one that makes by to read the writers, the orators, even the ministers, who provide for our sub-assistance, the one through whom we finally We must live or die... We cannot-would not say of us what Jugurtha

it was once said of the Romans, that he did not
All they lacked was a man who was strong enough
This man, who was rich enough to buy them,
It must be acknowledged, he found himself
for France; but it's France who paid the price for the market is with our remains that they hold us
under the oppression of finance, more:

unbearable, a thousand times more tyrannical

times that of the most cruel despotism... It is said that one of these gentlemen recently said in his

Germanic naivety: We won't have
We don't want war.
And it must be admitted, to the shame of the Europe and especially from France, that these so ridiculous, are only the consequence of a state of affairs that is too real. Similarly, one of the days-ministerial staff, who are also sometimes those of Messrs. Rothschild, said, on the occasion of Nathan, that it was a public loss, but that his house weighed in Europe

. of all the power that vast capital, summarized by its existence

the need for and desire for peace. As peace is the first best care for the people, we would accept _ for them with joy this assurance journalists on the power of the Rothschild house, if this peace does not- It wasn't bought with sacrifices ruinous, by humiliating conditions- Yours for the present and for the future!... - We will complete this notice indicating the sum of the operations that this house had built in the space of fifteen years, such as the five brothers gave it themselves, in

ss e0 =

1831, in a brochure entitled: Notes on the Rothschild house, with the biography of each of his members According to this publication, these measures gentlemen had then done business both with England and with the France, Austria, Prussia, Naples, etc., for two billion 400 millions of francs. And in that were not included, nor were the indemnities war reparations paid by France and received by Messrs. de Rothschild, nor the loans they took out, and so many other operations that we

We'll never know everything. That we'll find out.
adds the stock market games, of which they are the masters; the paths of iron that they found ready-made and in which, after adjudicawithout competition, they had to realize that blessings... 11 of us
It seems that all of this explains quite a bit and much better than skill, union, probity and all virtues whose flattery, the im-
monthly amount of the fortune of Messrs. de Roth_schild. It has been said that by an invention _ silence done before these last operations-rations, their capital amounted to to 750 million. In that case, they -must currently reach a billion, if they don't already exceed that!
Where will this engulfment of our fortune and all capital
removed from the factory, from circulation and to genuine commerce, so as not to-
to be employed only in speculation
stock market and speculation or to operations political rations that would not be pro-

e

probably never to the benefit of the France? – We recently published
For and against Messrs. Rothschild, Grand number of brochures or pamphlets
which were read with great enthusiasm haste and several times reimaward-winning, but he is not in our plan to mention, since This is the notice from Nathan Rothschild that's all we have to do. This
A prominent industrialist has died in Frankfurt.
on the Mein in July 1836, in a

. trips he frequently took

in Germany. His death caused a great sensation in this city, including 'these gentlemen are today the true-sovereign bles and where they come from

dres, where its wealth and services,

which were so useful to England,
had also surrounded him with a great consideration, though he was having died far from this city, they returned to Nathan received all funeral honors
quite unusual, especially for a foreigner-ger, for an Israelite. Parini the equip-pages that followed the convoy on remarked those of the ambassadors of Austria, Russia, Prussia and Denmark. In France, less was done.
of expenses, and there were hardly any but the ministerial journals that published on this occasion long apologies

gies for the whole family.

(2) It is said that in Paris, where they do not have-core built of palaces, they will establish a hos-
a coin for the poor, like the Necker and the Beaujons. He will be very tall if he is in the reasons for the benefits that these gentlemen have Made with France.

NOTICE

GEORGES-GUILLAUME DE HESSE-CASSEL,

! BY MR. LESOURD.

Extract from the Universal Biography, Volume I, XVIL.) (grap

Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, under the Hesse-Cassel, under the name of Guillaume I, born on June 3, 1743, succeeded on October 31, 1785 the land-Frederick II, his father, was among the grave. He entered into 1792 in the coalition against France, took part in the siege of Mainz with his troops which he increased to 12,000 men, when, on April 10, 1798, he signed with Lord Elgin, English plenipotentiary, a subsidy treaty by which he put 8,000 men at the disposal of the An-England. Prussia having signed, on the 15th April 1795, a peace treaty with the re-French public, the landgrave in concluded one also with this power on August 28 of the same year, and guarded neutrality for eleven years following. According to the dietician's decree from Regensburg, dated February 25, 1803, confirmed by the treaty of indemnities of the On April 27th of the following year, he obtained the rank of e-reader, and that's when he titled Guil-

Laume I, In 1806, the King of Prussia had begun negotiations with him, relative to the confederation which devaitassurer le repos du nord de l'Allemagne; but Napoleon, for his part, having employed all sorts of tricks to prevent its formalization, the e-Hesse's reader refused all hostile proposal against France despite the treaty signed by his minister in Berlin in the early days of August; and the more the struggle seemed The further away he appeared, the more distant he became. to yield to the pressing demands of Frederick William, who was imploring him to in the name of the common interest, both by the voices of his ministers than by his letters very friendly and confidential. Guillaume then had 25,000 men of excellent troops, animated by the estook the most belligerent and anti-French. But he believed he could, in continuing to remain neutral, save contributions; and yet he did not was preparing no less to pronounce in favor of the party that would remain victorieux; eminently false position-

this, and which was to attract him at the same time hatred of the vanquished for having re-Rescue rockets, and the revenge of winners for not having concilinked their goodwill. Also, when Napoleon would have won on October 14th

- 69 -

1806, the victory at Jena, he cited the false pretext that the Elector of Hesse had allowed passage through its states to Prussian troops (Blücher had only crossed 7 to 8 links, then
he had been demoted so as not to com(promise the elector); he had occupied Cassel, October 31st, by Marshal Mor-
third, and definitively pronounce it on the 6th November: the sequestration of the entire state who was supposed to enter the competition of the Kingdom of Westphalia for its Brother Jerome. William, forced to abandon Hesse. He took refuge in-near Landgrave Charles, his brother,
field marshal in the service of the Dane-mark, governor of Sleswig and Holstein (it is this same prince who died in 1836, aged four-twenty-two years old, and who, in 1796, gave asylum to Dumouriez (see this name, LXIII,.172). He remained there until 1813, successively living in Got-Torp, Rendsbourg and Iizehoë, In his escape he had been forced to abandon

to give his paintings and the various objects of curiosity composing his 'cabin-net, which fall into the power of French; but he had been able to save a considerable treasure, amassed from 10-gue date and by all sorts of means.
During the 18th century, the memories

Deric Li, the voter's father, were raising
They have troops in their homes to sell them.
and one could see in almost all the German wars depict con-
Hessian contingents. England in en-He even saw it in his colonies. It was an old and odious trace of feudalism Germanic duality, accustomed to tra-to be recorded in the 16th and 17th centuries
the blood of his mercenaries and his lansquenets with all powers
warlike, whatever their nature sent. Guillaume had not limited himself to his calculations of avarice; he had made himself

grain hoarder, for the vendors to be at a higher price. Its frugality
he even exercised his influence on his soldiers, badly paid, clothed, poorly fed, and who were for him a kind of puppet-clear developments whose forms his daily amusement. Finally, he had found one last and even more
a despicable way to increase one's savings
gnes. Wilhelmsbad Castle,» summer residence originally con-built for bathing, was which he converted into a furnished hotel, where he reserved for himself only a simple apartment-ment, étoilétaitloisible à tout voya-
the ability to be housed and fed at Prices are quite reasonable. Its chef even while performing the service, and SA did not did not disdain to go and find out more at his guests, if they were happy. The speculation was quite well understood at
at a time when France was in turmoil threw out of its borders a a large number of emigrants. It ver-knows his funds are in Mr.'s house.
Rothschild senior, from Frankfurt, with with whom he had already had relations tisfaisautes. The French government made several attempts to have this deposit, but without success
these, Rothschild having constantly
This exploitative enterprise was evaded.
was by the care and at the expense of the elect-
the Duke of Brunswick-Æls (see this name, LIX, 386)

taires, said the Corps-Notr. He s'also paid very actively then, with this duke and the prince of Orange, of don- to the Tugend-Bund a direction politics. Guillaume could not return in his states only in November 1813, after the Battle of Hanau. Consequently of the act of the German confederation- nique of June 8, 1815 and the change- changes that took place in the positions territorial sessions of its members changes that were not definitively stopped only by the re- general council of the commission Frankfurt, July 20, 1819, the do- mains of the princely abbey of Ful- of him were attributed, as well as the property of the Kreutznach Saltworks located on the left bank of the Nahe, provided, however, that the sou- Veracity would remain with Prussia. So his electorate found itself drawn to an area of two hundred and one square miles squares and a population of five one hundred sixty-eight thousand inhabitants. He had tried, but in vain, to Aachen, to obtain the cou- royal crown, upon returning to his sovereignty, William had put himself in possession of all the properties public acquired under the governor- Westphalian order. He wanted to do this. to create the right to look as nothing that had been done during his long absence, when he could- could result in some harm to his treasure. As a result of this system, he had published, under the date dated January 14, 1816, an ordinance by which he dispossessed without permission A restriction on all owners- res of state property and rights sold, and broke all the trans- leases miscible to heirs, as well as the buybacks of feudal dues.

- 6

Hey

The Prussian government protested against this order, as being contrary to the stipulations concerning arrivals between islands and allied powers, and this discussion was submitted to 1816 at the Diet of Frankfurt. But he the same was not true of another measure which was only of the inter-regime laughter. All military promotions the events that had taken place were annulled, and more than one general descended to the simple rank of lieutenant. In 1817, he re-established the treasury in Hanau widows and orphans, that the The prince primate had abolished in

, 1811. Upon William's death, arrived

raised on February 27, 1821, it was estimated at eight million francs in revenue of the electorate, regardless of interest derived from its capital and private areas that one did not wear not less than twelve million. Prince as bizarre as it is absolute, the height and selfishness were the dominant bases Nantes of his character. No memory-Rain in Germany no longer appeared harsh, even more ruthless than Guil-praise towards French emigrants which he wrapped up with the vagrants and the Jews in the same ordinance which proscribed them from his states. And yet William showed himself constantly the most ardent enemy of the French Revolution!

RG,
Hoprimerie d'E. DUVERGER, rue de Verneuil, a, 4&

HAS

“

LS

Born

Pl

HAS

"

pe FA L ds

—

"st:

ro,

+

| S + ste:

e \ . +

ss . : | .

—

< L

i to d:

"To — to

+ Fe

has

kS } —

| '

æ , *

Li k

;

pi:

k ' ' .

LS

"

—.

d.

has

r

: to FRE

: to

el Ca

ee

: 3
-
,
;
u , .
\
$,
ÿ
CS
! . L
æ
ï
"
\
e
.
,
_ L to our s
, \
° €
+ L 2
-> x LI
RS 4
h L 1 - "7 . -
k.
re 9°
" _... :
: e
= :
. ' 4
D. s L2 * "
has ï
5 DD
- #:
sc! .

min)

HAS -

CN 7
and DU to
The + L]

LL mn

D ie D SE No Ne: To it 4

1
has
—
THE

J"

—

There

E. DUVERGER printing works, rue de Verneuil, no. 4

LL

#

CMP EPP PE CP)

Li (A

#7 JL

D"

£ From A Digiüized by Google Los a +: LÉ Cu AREAS" LT RER EE 2: EC ORS The

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

LA 2

Digitized by Google

ah € dl

+ = + -

3 © From: | Te A ta TR RE 7 CRE to RS - PE Re of RE D =" + 4
eZ. EL" 2. . IT TEES a:

Be SEE LC ES " <= NT Se PE SE

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized
by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google Books

<https://books.google.com>

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the line.

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs
"Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to Expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from co
These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our cul too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced of the long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to fi

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them accessible. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

- + Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

- + Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the servers of Google or any other research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field of artificial intelligence. For large amounts of text, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of Google Books for works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service to you.

- + Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential to our program and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not delete the watermark. No cases.

- + Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is your responsibility. Be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that it is in the public domain in other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country. The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply posting a book on Google Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to which you are subject. The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages, Google Books Search contributes to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google Books Search service allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and publishers to promote their works.

online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

– These # Sr
* a # nt { To {3

|

118900006000 000008606 00 nc ur 00 000000000020 206 000000 0E DOTE C0

HAS H0SP0PC08E200008
+ b

LAW

(THE FSA PATHS,

OR

A curious story of street speculators Quincampoix, in 1749; to serve
* to the instruction of the speculators of
of the Stock Exchange, in 1845.

Similia, similibus curantur.
x
ATP ERES
PRICE: 50 CENTIMES.

names

PARIS,

AT THE UNITED PRINTERS' COUNTER,
| Quai Malaquais, 15,
AND AT ALL BOOKSTORES.

188.

MMM TR CM CN 00 OMS OS CMOS MD 00

SOS GER 05, SN Helpline, © Aline. MS ns

ÿ

"_

Digitized by Google

LAW

AND

RAILWAYS.

•
|
|
|
|

|
Paris.— Léaurev printing house, at St-Guillaume, 21.

AND

RAILWAYS.

Or

A CURIOUS STORY OF THE STAKEHOLDERS OF THE QUINCAMPOIX STREET, IN 1719; FOR SERVING—
VIR A L'INSTRUCTION DES AGIOTEURS
OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE, IN 1845.

Similia, similibus curantur,

| \
PARIS, :
AT THE UNITED PRINTERS' COUNTER
Quai Malaquais, 45,

AND AT ALL BOOKSTORES.

1843.

ADS QAR Se Pons D ha ne sé

" --- THE
ee arr. eq mem qu me e

Are we then forever bound to
to go through the same mistakes and the same errors
and progress, if there is any, cannot it happens only in a spiral, as Goë- said
the sublime mocker. Doesn't it seem,
Indeed, the events of each day,
with some air of novelty that they adorn themselves with,
are already old in history, and that the co-
May the new media never be anything but an old one play performed by new actors of-
in front of an ever-new audience?

"- VI -
The past, however, cannot remain without teachings; it would be far too absurd to
to reproduce to the very end the follies so dearpaid for by our fathers. Today for-so much, under the prestige of a new conquest of the industry, it manifested itself in our
a country so naturally prone to worry and to movement, an irresistible workout
towards an unknown future; to an unjust lukewarmness
"a blind enthusiasm followed, and the public plunged headlong into speculations railways. The opportunity was too good to pass up.
to be lost, bankers, stockbrokers,
Joups-cerviers, high and low-level speculators.
They eagerly threw themselves upon the rich spoils.
The best days of speculation have returned, and grand industrial orgy. The intoxication is general, and it seems that even Ja has been lost there memory. Who remembers, indeed, today— of today, of Law's system, of its success so rapid—

— VI —

pide, of its even more rapid fall? Perhaps— perhaps by reading this little book, the reader will forget more than once that we wrote a page of the history of the last century. And, in Indeed, what connections need to be made! Lesagio— The works of 1719 are just as good as those of 1845. The easily fooled are just as easy to deceive, the clever ones just as easily deceived. shameful. Only, in 1719, the history of the a— The investigation is complete, and the conclusion is in the facts; but is it so difficult to predict at— today, and the same causes should not— they do not necessarily lead to the same results tats? The illusion can still be prolonged for a while. time; but she cannot now for long to last. What will remain then of so much agitation? tion and noise? a painful crisis, a A terrible catastrophe, families ruined. a few rich crooks, a few figures Finally, to add to the list of misery and of the crime.

LAW

AND

RAILWAYS.

At the death of Louis XIV, France was fallen into the most miserable state; the enormous— tax burden, the demands of contractors, had exhausted the towns and the countryside; the public debt amounted to more than three billion, and now bankruptcy was imminent. It was then that the Scotsman Jean Law, who had had the opportunity to study, in Holland and in Angletcrre, the admirable effects of credit, pro—posed to the Regent's government to relieve the state's finances by means of a plan that we have since named Law's system, and of which he had already spread the project in almost every-

 . all the Courts of Europe. Law was, it must be said to recognize, a financier of powerful genius; through some of his designs, he knew ahead of his time, and seemed to foresee the future. nir; if he had known how to moderate this impatience of the success, which characterized his conduct; if above all, limiting himself to developing credit, he would not have introduced in France and developed at the highest level To the degree that speculation is a scourge, it might be considered today as one of the benefits-of our country.

Jean Law had led a career in her youth
 A life full of distractions and adventures. Gifted of an admirable aptitude for calculation and the he first applied the science of combinations at the game, and he managed to win in France and in -Italy, a sum of nearly two million. He had had the opportunity to meet the young Duke of Or-Léans in the gambling dens of Paris and had attracted his friendship through his inventive spirit full of resources these. The prince, having become regent, and the treasury in With France having exhausted all other options, Law hoped

-J-

He proposed to have his financial plan approved. the establishment of a national bank, responsible to collect all state and ex- revenues exploit all the monopolies he or she might want government to concede to him. A plan so new-
 The calf, and so vast, frightened the finance council presided over by the Duke of Noailles and composed of es-
 I took wise, but timid, choices. Law only obtained the permission to establish a private bank in ca six million, divided into 1,200 shares of 5,000 pounds each. SNS

bills of exchange, to handle the accounts traders and to issue banknotes to carrier.

The bank's success, justified by the be-care from a credit institution, was extraordinar; credit recovered promptly, and a strong impetus was given to trade and to industry. With a fund of six million, the
The new bank could issue up to fifty or sixty million tickets without the con-Fiance publiquefût Je moins du monde déshakelée.

th ere
ms RES

“Éohardi by uh brilliant success sf and 8i ra-

Pide, Law sotiged to resume his first plans unable to attempt their execution in he wanted to at least complete the whole thing certain parts, unless they are reunited and re-link later, when success would have justified
his designs.

A famous French traveler, the knight
de Lasalle, had just discovered a territory immense, formed by the Mississippi Valley. [I] had given it the name Louisiana and had taken possession in the name of the King of France.

first establishment, founded by a merchant

The famous man named Crozat had failed. We rap-

however, it carried wonders of its magnificence efficacy and fertility of this new con-
the abundance of its products and the
the wealth of its mines.

favorable then to distant enterprises, formed the project of a company, which would bring together at Louisiana trade, the beaver trade in Canada. The Regent authorized the creation of this company by an edict of the month of Acûs

_ born

1717, fifteen months after the first establishment-Banking. The company, under the name of the West India Company or of Oc-incident, recognized the suzerainty of France known as Louisiana; but, under this condition, In addition to holding a commercial monopoly, it all sovereign rights, roughly like this that we see him doing today at the com-English East India Company.

The capital provided by the shareholders of the The company's fortune must have been one hundred million. It was di-targeted in two hundred thousand shares of five hundred books each. These actions took the form of bearer tickets, and transferred to the Middle of a simple endorsement. To these provisions Law added a very skillful and very important one. aunt, with the dual aim of ensuring the flow of actions and raising the state's credit. All - the royal bills constituting the debt due towards the Treasury had been converted previously diment in 250 million US government bonds repayable by gift and enjoying a Four percent interest. At that time However, government bonds were still losing value. 70 or 80 percent, and the Treasury was in the im-possibility of reimbursement. Law fit. stipulate in the company's founding edict that the shareholders could make their payments one quarter in silver and the other three quarters in State-issued banknotes. Twenty-five million in cash sufficient donation: for the initial investment of the company, and seventy-five million Government bonds thus found an outlet. advantageous, which could not fail to re-singularly raise the one hundred and seventy-five continue to pay the interest of # per 100, this which amounted to three million due annually by the State to the Company. The first year, these three million were to be allocated to expenses of the first establishment; the following years they were to be distributed to the shareholders with the profits from trade.

; _p-

The shares of the Western Company did not initially arouse great enthusiasm, except for those who had government bonds to employ. The rest of the audience remained cold. despite the wonders that were recounted from country ceded to the Company; the shares are sold—were in silver below par, which. It was natural, moreover, since they were selling it off. three-quarters of them are discredited stocks. However—

They had contributed to restiré tie
A certain favor to public effects. The Bank, for his own account, bought a certain number of them
and invested his six million in shares
of the West. : |

To gain the Company's trust
From then on, Law seriously devoted himself to public life.
lay the foundations of the new colonial establishment—
nial. Ships were armed, and ships were embarked.
troops, land concessions were made,
hired farmers in France and in Germany; finally, according to custom, we collect—bed of lost girls and vagabonds for the send to the scene.

However, during the end of 1717 and throughout the course of the year 1718 the ac< tions rose slowly and remained even below par. Already, it is true, Law had to overcome numerous and powerful obstacles resistance. The finance council was jealous its growing importance; on the other hand, the Parliament, hating novelties, knowing Moreover, Law had boasted of making, by its system, the independent court of parliaments
#{ ' has

— 8 —

by providing him with the means to rem-
to stockbroker judicial offices, sought, by its stops, to hinder the operations of the new Old Bank. Finally, the Paris brothers, famous Grenoble bankers opposed the system
Law's financial operation which was named henceforth the Anti-System. Thanks to Mr.
d'Argenson, who had replaced the Duke of Noailles as president of the finance council—
These they obtained, for the annual price
of 48,500,000 pounds, the auction
large general farms, consisting of the duties to be levied on salt, the control of actions, consumption, etc., etc. They for—

* represent, for this company, a capital of 100 million, divided, like that of the Com—

pagnic of the West, in the same number of actions tions of the same shape and the same value. On estimated it at 12 or 15 million, that is to say 12

or 15 percent of the dividend to be distributed, and these interests being better guaranteed than those of the Western Company, since they had for based on the infallible perception of income from the State, the actions of the latter seemed must necessarily fall into the presence of those of the Anti-System.

—

— ner

= QE

Law, however, remained unfazed in the pre-the presence of these obstacles. He counted, for the
to overcome, using the resources of his mind and who had now given herself entirely to him. He had the parliamentary decrees overturned in a bed of justice and prepared to defeat the Anti-Sys- theme by providing its subscribers with advantages even more considerable than those that the Paris brothers could offer. He com- threatened to announce new promises of the regent, without however indicating the na- ture; and to show its full confidence in In the future, he personally committed to buying 200 shares at par and 6 months; the par being 500 pounds and the current price of 300. It was assuming they would earn 200 pounds. For To make the bet safer, he pledged to pay in advance the difference of 0 thousand pounds, if did not make the agreed purchase. That is as well as he was the first to introduce the use of premium markets.

His example encouraged many people They had gained confidence in his skill and his Ortune. The shares rose significantly. in August 1719, and approached meme of the peer: It was then that Law announced publicly the new concessions that he had been "done. The Regent attributed to the Company the exclusive privilege of trade in all the southern seas from the cape of Good - Hope. Its title was enlarged as her duties, and she took the de- nomination of the INPGS Company. He was allowed to create a new seme of ac- tions to obtain the necessary funds either to pay the debts of the companies anxquel- She succeeded them, either by going on expeditions ct to establish institutions. These actions fu- rents created in the number of fifty thousand and fixed at a par of 500 pounds, which made twenty- five million in nominal capital, but the Com The company demanded that they be paid 550 pounds. in cash, requiring 50 pounds cash and the 500 pounds remaining in twenty equal payments, month by month. In the event that payments would not be completed, the 50 pounds provided advance payments were lost to the subscriber.

- 10 -

Troyes to the company, the length of the terms granted, allowing for specialization with little funding"

culate on strong parts, measures b î-

_ es Te er

There
4

So rm ae
EE

- 1 -

them, especially because they were new, in-three others, that by which Law made decide that we could not subscribe to the news shares that yield four times as much
- old ones, which forced speculators
to hasten to acquire them in order to fulfill the condition; determined a 'rapid' movement towards the subscription: the shares rose to 750 pounds, that is to say they earned 50
for 0/0. These actions were called second-order actions.
creating the girls, to distinguish them from those of the first one.

From that time onward, in fact, with the aim of produce the rise in the com-- shares
company, Law began to put these into use
agio maneuvers so often employed-Then. His plan was to establish two cou-- rants in the opposite direction, one of the sellers interested in the decline, the other group of interested buyers pressures were rising, and it was also necessary to go master of these two movements, in order to

to direct.

Law, holding the reins of the system, having
at his disposal the necessary quantity of tickets-

NO Fund

19 =

sare to the movements, joining his party agents who themselves had other emissaries, without either of them did not want to be let in on the secret, he had the most of the twenty-five million
new shares that were then bought at every price. |

Once on this path, it was necessary that Law, to drive his operations, 'employed skillful, restless, and not overly scrupulous men Pulous about the means. Paris was then full of speculators, trained during disasters, who marked the final years of the reign of

Louis XIV, involved in all the shady dealings of commerce of paper. One of them, among others, named Le-Blanc had become famous by excelling at proto induce extraordinary movements, he had not than wanting to put all the space in comcombustion, either by having ten agents sell it exchange followed by as many of their brokers for drop the paper, either by performing a

The opposite maneuver is used to produce the increase.
He finally knew so well how to govern the thermometer of paper, which the speculators themselves
they thought they were too lucky when they could to be able to discern his emissaries and to become-

-

- 13 -

to their friends. In order to find out about all the movements he renewed each day, and as he had a reputation for enriching and to ruin whomever he wanted, people were seen flocking to He, morning and evening, a crowd of merchants, without that nevertheless none of them could penetrate his secret. He gave orders to some to ache-ter, to the others orders to sell, observe-to what he was meditating on. First, he thought, by spirit of rivalry, to fight the system; but soon recognizing the chances of winning that he He was going to lose, so he hastened to put his talents to use. in Law's service, and thus became one of its most ardent leaders.

The company wanting to reach new privileges to those she already enjoyed, became

– to award for nine years the benefit of one or redesign of previously ordered currencies the cash amounted to approximately one billion and the profit was estimated at 200 million the overhaul. The company paid fifty thousand-- thanks to this new advantage, and so that she could To obtain them, he was allowed to create more 50,000 shares, with a nominal capital of 500 books, that is to say 25 million; these shares

ss 5:

– {+ –

were sold for 1000 pounds, in order to produce the 50 million promised to the State. To ensure the success of these new actions which were called the little girls, Law resorted to the same measures he had taken, during the seeonda broadcast. Twenty months were granted for the payments, and to get one of the new ae tions, it was necessary to represent five of the years ciennes. Finally, it had been announced that the rægis– The subscription process would only be open until twenty days, after which time, the actions not under The criteria would belong to the company. The the company sought further to increase the con--« public finance, by announcing that it would pay two dividends per year, of 6 percent each cup, which represented a 12 percent revenue of the nominal capital, then amounting to 150 million Lions; a bold promise that he had not yet made, It is true, impossible to hold on, but who repo= of colonization,

But Law was already thinking about completing his project, by bringing the farms together in the company of India, and by repaying the debt
liquely: for this he imagined substituting the company to the state and to convert all the debt

public in Indian shares. The operation was happily designed and certainly practical—ble, it tended to replace the titles of state creditors through actions of a commercial industrial company; but its execution conducted uncontrolled and unpredictable conduct
In France, the most terrifying financial crisis—

The debt was fifteen to sixteen hundred thousand lions part in perpetual annuity contracts, part of it in government bonds that will soon become due,
The interest amounted to 80 million, that is to say half of France's income. According to under the new plan, the state now had to pay 8 percent to the company for the 15 or 16 hundred million that she lent him, and in addition him granting general farms whose product
The ship was worth 16 million; the company thus freed itself from the competition of the ant-system and discharged the state of an interest—annual figures of 82 or 33 million. We were supposed to count that the 15 or 1600 million of the debt remained—battered, with no immediate employment possible, come draibnt faudra se placer ehabonnement sut the company.

CARE: " = : .
and PURE

— 16 —

Consequently, in August 1749,
the lease of the large farms was withdrawn from the brothers

Paris. Reimbursement was then ordered:

4° shares of farms paid for in contracts of annuities; 2% of the government bonds that remained 175 million, losing another 60 percent; 8° of all state annuities consisting of 12 or 1500 million. The holders of all these claims were advised to go to the treasure; there, they were supposed to be given a

of their securities mentioning the liquidation value of their claim; they then had to prepare themselves sent to the company offices, which was charged with paying its value in cash or in banknotes. At the same time, Law ordered a new issue of one hundred Mike shares, with a nominal capital of 500 pounds and at the price of 5,000 pounds; which made a capital of 50 million and an influx of funds from 600 million. That was a third of the sum that the company had committed to supplying the state. The payment was to be made in ten installments. equal, month after month, the first tenth only had to be counting and could not to be settled only in state notes or in the others exclusively.

U es 7 The == .17 -

The first subscription having been covered—green in a few days, Law opened one new on September 28, of the same value and under the same conditions; the contribution of the subscribers. The cryptographers were the same, the creditors for having their receipts spent entire days—res to the treasure, there were even some who made themselves there—know how to bring food so as not to lose their turn. The state notes were also researched and had quickly reached parity. On this occasion, a Prussian named Versee, a nobleman, bank teller, having known at the advances the reimbursement edict, abuses the secret, had some speculators buy it, to whom he had partnered with a large quantity of banknotes of the state that we had at 50 or 60 percent, and employed them in subscriptions where they were — receipts at par. His subscriptions already giving of their value, we understand that this comparison

The gang of scoundrels must have made a considerable profit.

It wasn't just a matter of having proprietary receipts or tickets of E-tat, it was still necessary to reach the hotel of Nevers, where the subscriptions were issued.
The Rue Richelieu where it was located was so

CP ES

ve HR ee id TR

vs Let at er en

filled with carriages and people
The number of people maimed. We were suffocating.
'to enter the hotel', the doormen fortune by subscribing for those who do not could not reach the offices;
adventurers, taking on the guise of Law, made themselves
know how to pass for his servants and pelt
thus considerable sums. The benevolence-Jance of an under-cashier or a clerk offices of the Hôtel de Nevers, was considered as an invaluable advantage. As for the
From their superiors and from Law himself they were surrounded like the distributors of the fortune. The most brilliant nobility of France came to solicit subscriptions which were already well above par and were expected to be to raise even more. By an edict con-

the company's founding principle, ownership of the assets actions not resulting in derogation, the nobility

would therefore indulge in this new kind of Rafic without peril for his titles; also surrounded-
would she be full of courtesies and flattery?
Mr. Law, who was busy making himself supporters, kept few subscriptions for himself and gave almost everything to his friends at court.

Quincampoix Street; located between ki street

– 19 –

Saint-Denis and Saint-Martin, has been returned famous for its system; throughout history, it had been inhabited by usurers, Jews, bankers and paper merchants; as there was still neither a stock exchange nor currency exchange agents, paper traffickers had chosen it to establish their trading posts, and they sold various office papers there open. :

The broadcast has been numerous for some time now. and the favor of Law's actions multiplying the speculators, who can no longer hold on people in the offices had finally gathered together. in Quincampoix Street, and they began to gather there. There, the news was being spread. which could produce the rise or fall. Those who could not obtain activities

the Hôtel de Nevers, that is to say the creditors of the unliquidated state, and those who do not possess— They had neither government bonds nor receipts, they said. prosper from going to buy shares in the Quincampoix Street, and their eagerness made them quickly rise to 6, 7 and 8 thousand pounds,

The second subscription period opens on September 28th.

dun ces Dec Re UN 0 pre ip FRET

n
AND 2

AS; + sa, Dec
READY TO VAR °

– 20 –

the post having been covered in a few days, October 2nd, that is to say four days later,

In the first two, she had to bring in another 500 million and thus complete the sum of 1500 million needed for the company to repay the state's debt.

The eagerness of the subscribers was the even at the Treasury and the Hôtel de Nevers; a panic, that is to say, one of these movements convulsive and blind, which nothing explains, if it is not the feverish agitation of minds and the maneuvers of speculation, suddenly,

_ in Quincampoix Street, the shares fall

at 5000 and 4000 pounds; but this movement of The decline lasted only a moment and the stocks rebounded. quickly rose to 18 thousand pounds.

Meanwhile, Law was busy without—to complete its system; already the bank—that had been declared Royal Bank having Law for director; the first shareholders had been reimbursed and the King had surrendered ticket guarantor. At the end of October, he fiten-core adjudicate to the company the farm of

7—

min

- 91 -

tobaccos, for 100 million more than it loaned to the State and which were used to repay & millions of annuities mortgaged on this firm. The company only received three for percent, so there was 1 million for the State of economy; Law begged the Regent of the empire—to abolish taxes on tallow, oil, the fish and cards, which caused a great Joy to the people of Paris. On this occasion we Law's portrait was engraved and published in placing the following four lines below:

Under the august and wise Regency,

From a Prince who loved good faith,
Law, consummate in the art of governing finance,
Discover the art of enriching the subjects and the King.

They sang songs, they heaped epigrams upon him, and of jeers Mr. d'Argenson and those who were known to Law's enemies. At the same time, the fa-
The demand for shares only increased, they had reached a value of 10,000 pounds a month

= from October, 15,000 in November and it was now impossible to predict where They could stop.

CT SSD
D

>
e

bones taken

=
At that time, it no longer etherit some scattered groups that could be seen in the street
Quincampoix, which was then called the Mississippi,
It was a huge crowd busy speculating.

from morning until evening; the subscriptions di-

targeted in coupons, and made transferable
such as bearer notes by means of a simple endorsement, had singularly facilitated speculation. All classes of society had become too confused famous street, people of swords and robes, of churchmen, monks, priests, abbots, prelates, peaceful bourgeois, artisans hardworking, servants, even women

Provincials and others were soon joined.
foreigners from all over, everyone

! rushed to the common meeting of the fortune. The creditors brought their rem-stock exchanges, the owners the value of their lands: the great ladies themselves

the value of their diamonds; the adventuresses,
who had no other resources than their talents

gallantry, they wanted to try if he did not would not be possible to participate in the System gains. There were quite a few.
who were stationed in the vicinity of the Jfpsie-

es: ('our | 2

=, 992

'stpt; some managed to appropriate .
the portfolios of certain provincials who were not yet aware of everything that

The women of this Paris know how to do it sort.

Many people, not daring to play by out of shyness or ignorance, they played for their account the intrepid trained speculators under the last reign. These scoundrels had Organized, they speculated on the rise con—
standing, but most often on the variations
that they had the art of producing; their way negotiating could be compared in what—that which emerges with the ebb and flow of the sea. The signal of a bell ringing from the office of a man named Papillon, his emissaries and his clerks were asking among the crowd and in the Naked shares at any price that

t.

The public, always ready to be taken in—:
trainer, following their example,
the alarm to those who shortly before had were pressing to buy back, while the agents speculators being at the point that had been prescribed, they withdrew gently. Two hours

WHEEL, ER A 0e

– 4 –

afterwards, a whistle blew from the burezæu of Fleury, another leader of this operation, also— soon other emissaries, unknown to the first ones, arrived offered to sell at any price until the shares had gone down in the same proportion which they had mounted; of this

* the way they always sold at high prices and bought back—

were always cheap. The variations were so fast that speculators receiving shares to go and sell them and keep them only one day had time to to make enormous profits. One example is cited who tasked with selling shares, two remained days without appearing; the shares were believed to be stolen, Not at all; he faithfully rendered its value; but he had given himself time to win a a million for him. This ability that the Capital to produce so quickly had given birth to a curious trade; people lent... capital by the hour and interest was demanded of which there is no example, therefore there was no no other possible trade in Paris than that of stocks where one lives to earn up to a million a day: the high price of silver rendered all other speculation powerless of commerce or industry.

—m—

The influx of speculators is growing without The situation in Quincampoix Street had stopped; they were looking for to introduce some order and regularity into it, A commission had been appointed to judge summarily all the disputes; finally _ guards had been placed at both ends— moths in the street. All the houses had the remaining buildings were converted into offices by the merchants.

arteries, the merchants their shops.

The offices were rented in pairs, threes, and fours—three hundred pounds a month, depending on the space they occupied, so that a house of six to eight hundred pounds, divided into thirty or forty offices could bring in up to fifty: or sixty thousand pounds. Everything was used, even attics and cellars.

A cobbler, who worked under the plan—the ches leaning against the wall of a garden, began by furnishing his shop with small stools for to have the women seated there, drawn by curiosity—would do it in this place; this idea succeeding him, he abandoned his first job to supply deg pens and ink in the operations that one came to do his shopping in his little shop, when the impatience of some did not allow them

—

THE EC
| Milk
mt wa *

. To
MS We CN ARR D JA UE. nr 1.

DATE LOAN | Lis at

: .
: LE Te je vemertres Bees #1

— DG 2

— not to enter ordinary offices. His attention in its new industry combined with the payment for the saddles, earned him up to 200 pounds a day.

A certain gentleman from Lower Normandy, after having cleverly set up an office, had found a way to get a shop, but so small and so narrow, that there was no other table than the back of a little hunchback that we glued practically against the wall for the time that we wanted to use it. Many people thus made a living from serving as desks. buoyants, one could distinguish one whose width exorbitant shoulder blades were very suitable for merchants; he was a soldier in disguise who, not able to do better, he thus lent his back to those who wanted to use it, and he did so good grace that he quickly amassed an as- See good fortune.

The shops had been transformed into restaurants and cafes, also part of the Parisians hardly ever left the Mississippi district. They came there from the in the morning, they had lunch there, they had dinner there, and during-

a"

- 927 -

that the intensity of the negotiations had calmed, they they spent the afternoon playing quadrille or to the stake, and often, in these parts the The stakes for the Mississippians amounted to as much as ten thousand pounds; the cars, waiting in a line, were so congested in the streets of Saint-Martin and Saint-Denis leading to Quincam Street-pitch, which the merchants addressed to the Regent to complain about the obstacles placed in their way commerce.

As for Law, he had become the object of a true idolatry, everything that the court and the city had bigger and more distinguished refilled its antechambers. The lords and preoccupied with the desire to pay court to him;

one of his old friends introduced close to him,
He watched him perform lengthy calculations, then had lunch.
then play at being pharaohs, while a crowd of great lords waited in his anti—room. A lady overturned her car under ...its windows to force him to show himself. Law had, however, retained some modesty in his great fortune, but his wife, who was not in
The reality is that his mistress, which everyone
He pretended to ignore, concealing nothing of his

+

From you

MONS NRA A ART Du nn donors of

Ca épme me & SOU

— % —

The haughty insolence of a social climber. A feeling
A trait can give an idea of the extent of extravaelegance and baseness had mostly led to this.
part of the courtiers. Law's daughter who was barely seven or eight years old and gave a ball
at home. The most brilliant nobility sought the honor of being admitted there, the Pope's nuncio there came among the first to bow and congratulate
M, the little queen of the ball, with a graceful kiss.
There were dukes and princes who—sent word to be betrothed to this eight-year-old child years. Finally, to put an end to the honors—
neurs and to Law's fortune, they wanted to elevate him—ver to the position of financial controller. But the Protestant religion into which he was born being an obstacle, Abbot Tencin was tasked with the raising, by means of a conversion.

However, the wealthy Mississippians threatened to indulge in all sorts of extravagances—
these luxuries and all the disorder that comes with them fortunes usually acquired too suddenly—

_ slow, excessive, as the soul needs.

of the player. These newcomers, foreigners to delicate pleasures and given over to passions crude and brutal, they displayed, in their hotels The barbaric and gigantic litxe that had signaled the age of Roman corruption. Islands in-furnished their apartments with furniture of gold and silver. At their feasts where whatever-some people enjoyed being served by Half-naked women in traditional dress were lavished with food.

the rarest and most delicate. Everything that It can please the taste, sight, and smell; nothing was lacking in everything that the most vo-A pleuritic might imagine: it was a big fruits designed to deceive even the clearest eyes flashing, and so artfully crafted that during-that someone, surprised to see them in full hi-
He wanted to lay a hand on her, and it came back to haunt him.
immediately several small fountains of all kinds of spirits, which They harmed the sense of smell. A Mississippian in . pressing the foot on an imperceptible springtible made an artificial figure around the table to pour nectar
ladies in front of whom he made her stop.

Those who had become wealthy the day before were eager to enjoys their fortune; a lord who during forty-eight hours had ceased to see a
of his valets found him in a brilliant outfit-

ge, for which, the weather being bad, he hired him

4 RE

The D TOUL EUR

LL]

has

| - : CESR

NEC es EL DRE) LE EC), SU, GS EL RE LS Min Amen:

She bee

|

– 30 –

courteously to serve oneself. The changes fortunes were so sudden that it was claimed that some Mississippians had forgotten
until they inadvertently climbed up behind them:
their own carriage, in memory of their former-habits. One example is cited who, in a hurry to celebrate his new fortune with a big party-
tin, bought the entire stock of a shop

'goldsmith, his wife not knowing him well'

the use of all the objects bought, used, at center of the flatware, ornaments of the-intended for worship and religious ceremonies.

People we had known in their poverty
they lamented having only a million and.
were saying loudly that we couldn't con-
to astound as being above a small broker on Quincampoix Street, if we don't possessseduced at least ten million. The stores of Saint-Honoré Street, usually full
The rich fabrics were exhausted. The cloth of gold ÿ had become exceedingly rare, but we yoyait was carried in the streets by people of all kinds all classes. Such an enormous mass of paper capital entering into balance with the same quantity of goods, caused soon a general price increase of all things. The cloth that was worth 15 and 18 pounds in to fight over objects that might arouse some covetousness. At a rotisserie owner from Bear Street, a missi-pion outbidding a great lord for Having a ruffed grouse cost 200 pounds.

– 1 –

The customs of the people received from these events—
causing profound harm, this faculty sudden given to all classes of s'en
to get rich without the intermediary of work which makes A man worthy of fortune and more moderate in enjoying it excited an ambi-
excessive activity, a dangerous taste for luxury.
he now only saw the goal, without worrying about the means to be employed to achieve this. The a-emptiness, the fury to get rich multiplied rodigically thefts and robberies.

A corpse had been found in the river...
closed in a bag and chopped into pieces which was, however, recognized as that of the valet to a speculator. A negotiatorciant, returning from rue Quincampoix,
Between seven and eight o'clock, he was stabbed in the Quai des Augustins. One day, it was a comment provincial merchant murdered after

CE UARAU CL ERS DOUCE St

P'ÉTENS BC DEA 4 a. MON

xt

(TS LS D LS) LUE

—
received his reimbursements; another enjoys,
He was a master, his throat slit in his church by his old servant, the license had finally come x to such an extent that the coachmen were attacked in right in the street.

December was the time of the most great public enthusiasm for the system, the shares had eventually risen to 18 and 20,000 pounds, that is to say, at 36 and 40 cents—pits for one, at the rate at which they were parve—The 600,000 bare assets constituted a capital of 10 to 12 billion; that was a figure that could not—neither the guarantees offered by the company, nor even the chances of profit more exaggerated. The only way, in fact, to supporting such a dreadful fiction would have been to ensure a proportionate interest in the shares—However, the company's revenues do not rising only slightly in the first year the sum of approximately 80 million, that was all

– at most $ percent of the real capital that was rising to 1.677 billion.

Also the fatal illusion that blinded the public must have vanished the moment the fiction

= 83 = |

in comparison with F4 reality, of the D

Your more astute speculators from the Islands would consider rea:

to read their fortune either to secure it, or to

to enjoy it. This happened towards the end of December.

1719. They were seen to take possession of magnificent hotels, stately homes,

and make fortunes of 30 and 40 million.

They also seized the precious stones, of lof

and the money that was always offered with em—

Finally, they acquired values.

stronger in exchange for their paper,

This movement of filmmakers determined a

First decline in stocks, they fell—rent at 15,000 pounds, to combat this trend, Law did not hesitate at first to re—resorting to forced means. As one might expect had crowded into the bank to realize their bills.

ts, Law had it declared by edict that the tickets would still be worth 6 percent more than could no longer appear except in the payitems below 100 pounds, and those of gold

in payments under 300 pounds,
He then ordered that all creditors
of the State who would not present themselves for "convert the capital from their annuities into shares,

ERP AT, IP SE PE

ANA r

ESS OT CN EJE

— 8 a.m. —

would support the reduction to two percent,
To these initial means he wanted to add still others: he published a letter apologizing-
his system's tic, showed himself in the street Quincampoix in full ministerial attire surrounded by a large number of lords, he did spread by its agents that new benefits were going to be granted to the company and significantly increase the value of actions, finally himself, appearing from above
From a balcony, he made it rain down on the audience of gold coins.

L

All these combined means produced in part of the effect Law had hoped for.
As prices improved, it was believed that only the following had been yielded to a panic ensued and speculation resumed at the
The shares, which had fallen to 12,000 pounds, have risen.
they rose to 15,000 pounds, but this movement
their moment was only temporary; they fell back soon to reach 12,000 pounds, the inclination to realize constantly increasing; banknotes
they themselves began to lose a lot paid report to the numéraire.

Law, continuing his system of means

– 3% –

forced and wanting to put an end to the fury of
to get rid of the papicr against the goods precious, he had forbidden by edict, to wear diamonds, pearls and precious stones, proto hibernate the transport of species, to give lessons forced change to banknotes, gold-
Finally, give them money to lure them into the coffers.
from the bank, a new reduction in the value of currencies, by means of a recoinage
general. However, despite all these efforts, it was able to stop the stock market decline, and the continuous and ever-increasing discrediting of the bill-

bank notes. ë:

No longer shrinking from any violence, he made the ticket mandatory in all payitems over 100 pounds and prohibited each-that particular person keeps more than 500 pounds
of species, under penalty of confiscation and 10,000
Jivres of fine; he authorized denunciation and even encouraged it by awarding the half of the confiscated sum. This measure immorality introduced mistrust into all relationships, the friends stopped seeing each other, the
The masters trembled before their most loyal followers.
servants and a degenerate son was seen coming denouncing his own father. They defended it.

= to D Los: '
CCE ES NE CC RTE Dr ART RUE AE PL NON QT FRE at DA OMR DA RAR MORE ET memes

Mt te Mu +

,

= 10 –

in addition to manufacturing furniture and utensils gold and silver coins beyond a certain weight. Finally, by an expedient opposite to that that had been used, we noted

dear burial and bringing them back to the circulation driven by the lure of profit.

Until that moment the bank had remained largely unrelated to the system's faults tème, unfortunately in the presence of the de-Given the rapid pace of the stock market analysis, Law had the
it's wrong to want to support them by making them sit-Miller with banknotes: it was in finance
It is a gross error to claim to fix a industrial value essentially variable
by its very nature, and also by this fatal measure Law only succeeded in making ruin com

common, to shares and banknotes.

By a famous edict, dated #-March

| 'In 1720, the bank was merged with the company,

the share price irrevocably fixed at 9,000 books and an open office at the bank for exchange at will one share for 9,000
Ms tickets or 9,000 pounds tickets against one action.

Ro

We saw that the company had to
to be received in successive payments The 1500 million
lions intended to repay the public debt;
However, she had only received 500 million:
lions, so he still had 900 million left to collect. Payments are no longer being made.
or injuring himself, Law ordered that a meeting be held
It involved several actions, including payment.
was only just beginning to form a single
The action was paid for. The company was responsible for one hundred thousand shares representing 900 million,
that it was thus removing from circulation; finally,
from then on, we began to return to the system of the old annuities, on the claims of creditors necessarily repaid who do not want-
They do not buy stocks that lose credibility.
were increasing every day, and could not-- were going to take over buildings because of

The conversion can now be done at open office, all actions wanted to
to achieve at the same time; also their depreciation caused-
It has made frightening progress. The system is un-increasingly considered; the directors ac-
they covered all the goods and all the markets
goods, they had at the same time recourse

- 38 - |
to all the tricks to make the digital pass-
to flee abroad, thus escaping the defenses

Law and ensure rich resources for the future.

"Speculators always meet on the street"
Quincampoix, Law ordered all gatherings to be forbidden
lying, under the pretext that the share price Having now been fixed, it could no longer be - the object of no trade. The crowd, however persisted in meeting there, but as he mingled there-milk a large number of people without confession and of professional crooks who committed daily-element of thefts and robberies, we have voya, under the pretext of putting an end to these dis-
.Sordres, a company of archers tasked with disperse the speculators; the soldiers took advantage
taking advantage of the opportunity and abusing their authority, they...
rent pay large sums by stopping
-speculators whom they then released.

Then came a universal uproar.
against Law. The wealthy Mississippians were
- the first to unleash their anger against him-
-taken and their hatred; we saw some affected to light
-with banknotes the stoves which

- 39 -

covered their tables. In the middle of the de-read of greed qni had seized everything around the world, it was said that a group of young sei-
the teachers had formed the plot to kidnap the speculators gathered in Quincam-pitch. A terrible crime committed having the execution of the plot made it impossible;

the young Count of Horn associated with two others young lords, ordinary companions of its disordered state seized the person of a
A wealthy speculator took him to a cabaret
under the pretext of a paper market, and there, Having not murdered him, he stripped him of his... chess. We wanted to make an example of one at a time when everyone had their fortune in wallet, "and despite the powerful solicitationstions of all the nobility, the Count of Horn

was broken on the wheel alive in the Place de Grève.

All that remained was to consume a sacrifice
A painful but now necessary task;
The nominal value of the share had to be reduced.
and the ticket. This fatal act was carried out under the influence of Mr. d'Argenson, and despite the Law's party faced the most vehement opposition. The edict of May 21, 1721, which has remained famous in history

&

M, \ P0 SERA S Dr: Eipe D0 ape to

29760 FAR USENET NT:

| Ver

of the system, announced the gradual reduction shares and tickets. She was supposed to startcer on the very day of the publication of the edict and continue month by month until the 1st of December-December. At that time the action was not due worth more than 5,000 pounds, the 100-pound note

vres no longer worth more than 50, that of 1,000
500. The publication of this edict changed everything Paris. A cry of universal indignation arose.
against Law; this reduction was called a to tear it to pieces himself. Parliament

They then gathered to demand the revocation of the edict. The Regent had to yield, and to give to satisfy public opinion, he removed from Law, the general control of finances. It is true. however, he retained all his favor for her personal, and that he even gave her some public brands. He would soon have an opportunity to realize that the remedy embent was worse than himself, for, badly-

despite the restoration of the legal value of shares and banknotes, the movement towards the The decline did not continue with less rapidity-dity. |

From then on, people began to enjoy themselves at the...

|

- 4 -

The thoughts of the overturned Mississippians. They were made to their subject of songs and epigrams. In a vaudeville of the time, we used to sing the verse following :

On Monday I bought some shares,

On Tuesday I won millions.

On Wednesday I tidied up my housework,

On Thursday I hired a crew,

On Friday I went to the ball,

And on Saturday at the hospital.

to the demolition of the system, and it was again

Law, who, without appearing, was charged with presiding to this operation. On June 1st, the prohibition against keeping more than 500 pounds in digital format raire. On June 3, 400,000 shares, belonging to the company and the State, were abolished; -the The lease of the farms was withdrawn from the company and its _- product was intended for use in new ren- these were the things that were going to be created. Indeed, it was established *25 million on the City Hall in capital of one billion, that is to say 2 1/2 percent. On the other hand, ticket holders, com- Merchants were allowed to supply tickets

LS

TT DAT er de = to current account funds whose capital the general amount should not exceed 600 million. by means of which the B

made their liquidations by bank transfers from ties.

No one showed any more eagerness to to subscribe to annuities, than to have opened accounts current accounts, and the fall in banknotes and Actions were becoming increasingly rapid. shares were now worth only 6,000 pounds bill- lets, which was barely 2,500 pounds es- coins. The bank, however, employed all- all the tricks to conceal the exhaustion of her coffers; she opened late and closed early her offices. Already authorizing themselves by the edict which forbids- made any cash payment above 406 pounds, she had avoided paying her 10,000 and 1,000 Hvr notes; but the 100 euro notes still appearing in excess large numbers, it was finally necessary to allow him not to Pay him only for 10 kvtes tickets. This

Sion, published on the morning of the 17th, caused an es-

Ja Banque to realize îles bikets de 101., crai-It's exciting to see them sharing tickets soon of 1001. Three people were suffocated densely nque was in charge of.

3
lafotie, and Lérw, forced to take refuge in Pulais-
Royal for ehereher uh asylum near the Regent.
The next day, to avoid similar scenes...
Money changers were distributed on the springs.
the main public squares of the city, and we charged with withdrawing the 40-unit notes.

A minor effort should be made to raise-to the company's edict. An edict was issued to him-ceded in perpetuity certain privileges which had not-had initially been granted, some only for nine years, the others for fifty. We created, to bring in the 600 million with which the company paid for these benefits, fifty a thousand new actions. But already one was 'driven by an overly reactionary movement
quick to be defeated; measure, although it
It was skillful, but produced no effect. Finally,
'as we were determined to put a torrhe de _final to the circulation of paper it was ordered _ that the 40,000 and 1,0001 banknotes, which on November 1st would not have been employed in newly created annuities, would become necessarily rentier shares of the company with a fixed and unchanging income of that one hundred. All these measures were useless.
as if precipitating a catastrophe had already begun

TARA IUY

TI az Lgmsmre st Me ses ax

qu Or 2 a 008 mayor ee OU Gien bte mx © EE Rem Sr cÿ ei 2
LI

now inevitable. In November 1720
shares which, in October 1719, were worth 18,000 L., were now worth only 2,000 l. bil-
Jets, that is to say barely 200 species.

We saw Law being chased away by soldiers, speculators of Quincampoix street;
-but their army, routed, rallied soon; the brokers, not wanting to give up their winnings, gathered in cafes and the crossroads near the Hôtel de Nevers. We then decided to allow them to meet from New Place Vendôme. The hotels in this area:
places not being intended, nor suitable for the establishment of offices, the traders.
were forced to camp, and the large cha-their July dates served as a pretext for have several tents erected. These will be

-were going to places of refreshment, those-

there at games of quadrilles that we played in the intervals of the movements that we gave to the paper. In most cases, they sold actions against tickets and tickets against species or goods that are app-

carried from all sides in prodigious quantities
and which consisted of silverware, fabrics, furniture

valuables, precious effects, etc., spoils of the mis- -

- 45 -

Sissipus ruined. The Place Vendôme, to which one
It was then named the Mississippi River (Mississippi Upside Down).
had become a veritable fair. People were donating there-born under the tents of celebrations and meals, and women of all classes having done so
a meeting place, lotteries were drawn there of diamonds and jewels. A little later we transported the paper market" into the jars-speculators built a sort of small town composed of wooden shacks, with its streets paved roads, fountains, etc. But that was the tomb of the System, the paper market was definitively closed, sixty were instituted stockbrokers to act as intermediaries 'purchases and sales, and all were forbidden meeting of speculators in the public squares ques. .

ss

=

On the other hand, starting in October, had begun against the Mississippians in-richis, the odious rigors very much in use among the governments of that era and known under the names of burning chambers and devisas. An extraordinary commission was created for this purpose. drew up the roles of all those who had possessed sede of the shares, she arbitrarily registered them

PRE Se RO 68e JR 7 DAT FAR e

"This

year

RE at he à sl Ur le Ve

2

#6-

all ceax that pablical notoriety designated as enriched in the paper trade. 'They were forced to deposit a certain number of shares in the company's offices and to buy back the necessary number if he 'had sold. To prevent the leak to foreigners were forbidden under penalty of death from

The terror inspired by these measures—further highlighted the decline in stocks; when the required deposits were made, an order was given a visa intended to review the
the entire mass of the paper and cancel the part which belonged to wealthy speculators. Law anticipating the new futures that al—

'Jl'aient inspirer le visa, left Paris soon after France, and took refuge in Brussels, not taking—as much as 800 louis. After his departure, his possessions amounting to approximately 10 million were seques—
very much under the pretext of settling scores—

_sonnels with the company he was rather creditor than debtor. The Paris brothers were visa officers and 500 million shares ap—

*'belonging to the newly rich were an—voided. The state debt was thus altered.

Partly in annuities, partly in shares, the capital

| — "WT —

remained almost the same as before the system
theme, but interest was diminished and the State
* had barely 37 million left instead of 80 to pay. But also a host of creditors.
were ruined, credit was also in jeopardy
poor condition than in 1716 and public morality—
that had received the most disastrous shock.
Soon after, the bank was abolished, and the com—
. private company of farms of general revenues—ralles and all state revenues, were found limited to trade and continued to exist under the name of the East India Company. That was all what remained of the vast machine imagined by Law. This man, who had filled Europe of his name and his system, after having pro—
led his royalty for a time in Europe fallen from grace, she finally settled in Venice, where despite the fortune he had brought and left behind
In France, he died in 1719, poor and unfortunate.
forgotten.

We still need to make some connections.
TO DO.

Law had clearly understood the importance of the credit, this precious ability to exchange

Ed

SP EN ST ST LUS DES LL RE LES TS SSS

it
D

+

CR us is en ge Ah de Lg Er PR rep © à
has "

EE

_Nÿ

against current values the expectation of be-future benefits. But to exaggerate, without meaning-Sure, this resource is too convenient for...
not to be dangerous; by putting out of all proportion the pledge and the guaranteed things, it made inevitable the terrible catastrophe which

We have just outlined the story.

"At the beginning of his venture, they relied on solid foundations; commercial monopolies commercials and the operation of large farms
the State. An unthinking enthusiasm for the-distant ventures, cleverly crafted intrigues conduct and tending to produce an increase constant on the actions, promptly raised-
The value is estimated at over 10 billion. There is no capital, so enormous, and the system had nothing left to do but to fall from a terrifying height.

Today, the railways are in favor,

based on the unknown future of an industry

new and monopolistic by its nature, for-

This could well be justified within certain limits.

But who doesn't also see that this future has been born? constantly limited by a production which is not, undoubtedly, intended to follow the new advances in locomotion; that there are so madness in setting no limits to the pro-future developments of the transport industry, singular- It has been significantly enlarged, it must be admitted. Isn't it Not true, by the way, what are science's predictions? and the experiences made in neighboring countries and in ours no longer justify the figures that we are surpassing today?

- [49

Law, by maintaining the shares of India to some extent, by renouncing the fu- These lies of speculation, perhaps enriched the state by reducing its debt, and served individuals by providing an investment advantageous to their capital. ; |

The railways, located outside the Stock market games could have served both the capitalists by giving their money a job lucrative, and the public by creating establishments- elements of undeniable usefulness; but which do not it is now known that bankers and administrators- the builders no longer concern themselves with the construction and the operation of the roads, which is only to collect the bonuses, and that placed on this

AA dé rt

| : Tag #7 PR RE Via a Ph LE 0 ar LE rt deu ve TR Rp Sr ee res

Be

ge 2 5
= —

– 50 –

on the ground, they are ready to accept all the clauses–
its concessions; that there is no longer any guarantee–

ties for serious shareholders who give their money, and that in the meantime the first fruits realize the majority of the profits on their own and

. perhaps even the only possible benefits–

wounds?

Law to curry favor with the court,
lavishly distributes subscriptions to the great lords and to the grand ladies. The big bankers of today, to create protectors for themselves.

powerful, widely spread their promises–
his actions on people in power, his peers,
the MPs, the journalists for sale, and the Well-protected girls. But nevertheless, less selfless as Law, they keep for themselves
own account the best shares.

In 1719, on Quincampoix Street, there resorting to all means with impunity

"and to all kinds of fraud. False information is being spread"

news; the big players are joining forces, the Well-informed crooks deceive the players
Overconfident, fortunes are made overnight, Ruins are even faster. – Aren't they
Not the story of the Stock Exchange in 1845?

neither

In both periods, trade and industry
sorted, deprived of the capital that sustains them,
fall into distress and seem struck by death. An entire population arra-devoted to serious and useful work, and transformed, in a way, into a society of players, rush to risk in a game of-loyal to precious savings, the fruits of long and honorable labors. The passion for gain without penetrating and demoralizing work all the classes, there comes to inoculate the germ of everything
These are social diseases.

This will probably be for the Orléans family:
a sad honor, to have marked his presence
. in power through such scandals and such ruins. We do not want to exaggerate the share government responsibility in public misfortunes of this nature. Who for-
It would be unfair to deny, however, that the Regent and the governors-current rulers have not, through complai-culpable actions, singularly facilitated the actions of powerful speculators. But to de-requires the powerful intervention of the leaders of the state, hopefully the public will not let
I struggled to reach its final stage.
Moreover, a reaction already seems to be on the horizon;

Ro, Mn ne LES Se

d4

even his excesses; attacked from all sides, he
He was unable to defend himself, he will soon be gone

more to the common sense of the country than to make it good justice.

RB of L.

L

nn."
#1 2
: _#Æ h,
Dr. Dam at

FC

35
"HZ Mig 00ocle
#

GROUND FLOOR

- +

AND Ab is. 0-ur

PACS

-

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized
by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google Books #

<https://books.google.com>

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves with the precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the world's hidden treasure. This book is now in the public domain in the United States of America. It is now in the public domain in many other countries as well. It is now in the public domain in many other countries as well. It is now in the public domain in many other countries as well.

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs to the public domain. "Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to copyright. Expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced in this digital edition. The long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to the internet is a testament to the power of the public domain.

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them available. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

+ Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

+ Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the Google Books Search program. For research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of Google Books for works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service to you.

+ Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not do No cases.

+ Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is y Be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply pos Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to wh The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages contribute to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

HISTORY
EDIFYING AND CURIOUS

OF

ROTHSCHILD KE,

KING OF THE JEWS.

HISTORY

EDIFYING AND CURIOUS

ROTHSCHILD KE",
RO DES JUS,

Followed by a detailed and faithful account of the disaster of July 8th,

BY AN EYEWITNESS.

PRICE: 35 CENTIMES.

1846

EXTRACT FROM THE SUMMARY.

Rothschild royalty. – The Jewish dynasties. – Fuld I and his dynasty.
– Founder of the Rothschild house. – He begins with rieu ct Capitalizes millions.– The Margrave of Hesse. – The illustrious offspring.
– Influence of 1815 and Waterloo on the fortune of Jewish bankers.
– The biographers. – Rothschild's audacity. – Always 1815 and the Rot-Rothschild–135 million in premiums. –The Rothschild loans save the coalition of England. – The Rothschilds, ushers of kings. – The em-Prunt of 1832. – Cross and honors. – Motto of the dynasty. – 1830
by Nathan on Satan. Loan scandals of 1844. – Anecdotes.–
Northern Railway. – Fraud. – Scandal. – Disgrace. – Ova-
The Rothschilds' affair. – Revelations. – The July 8th catastrophe. – What will do the Rothschilds,

ROTHSCHILD IF,
OF

The Rothschild I monarchy is now official.
recognized. It would be as difficult to deny it as to to deny the nobility of a Montmorency, a Bourbon, a
of Orleans or a Coburg.

Before becoming king, Rothschild was the first baron
A European Jew; before becoming a baron, he was a nobleman.
Austria and a member of the famous Roth- dynasty
schild, founded in 1743, at the time of Meinherr's birth
Mayer-Anselme, citizen of Frankfurt.

There are three major Jewish dynasties in Europe, that the Cohen family, the Fould family, and the Rothschild family.

The Cohen dynasty faded before the rising star.
splendid Rothschilds.

NOT

horns of Moses. The chief of Fould even claims to the royalty, but less ambitious than James Rothschild I. He only aims for the French crown; it's a matter to be arranged between the Orléans dynasty and his own. In Meanwhile, he took the title of Fould 1st.

Napoleon was initially a sub-lieutenant of artillery under the reign of Louis XVI and under the Republic.

Fould I agreed to be a deputy during the reign of Louis-Philippe, the voters were of a different opinion, and Fould I was prosaically ousted, after having long and silently stolen for his future mini-Very. Fould 1st is called James. But Benoit is not the head of the dynasty.

This honor belongs to Father Fould, who after After a series of misfortunes, he made his fortune and abdicated. Father Fould He left three sons: Benoît, Louis and Achille.

Benoit was a member of parliament and his cashier can attest to the votes those given to him were most certainly his own. Carilles paid a high enough price for that. An electoral failure. deprived him of the deputation., Fould 1st wandered from college to college colleges, still as Benoît as ever; finally, a district was biting into the electoral windfall, composed of places in all railway administrations known iron. Fould 1st spared nothing, his cashier could He even had (not the cashier, the suitor) sought the support of the clergy, (it was wrong for a son of Abra- (ham.) Benoît Fould had considered having the parish bell tower. 11 had given to the church of these beautiful red, blue and yellow paintings that are made in Paris {ing the fathom, and who {ing, whether well or badly, have the pretension of to pass for portraits of saints. This conduct was worthy of Machiavelli. Alas! Alas! Alas! Why has not- Didn't she succeed?... It's because the illustrious pretender hadn't not counting on the candidacy of an abbot. Now, between a

7th

/

an abbot and a Jew, the clergy's choice could not be doubted. to console himself, Mr. Benoît received thanks factory operations (1). As for the other voters, They still receive from Mr. Fould I, but they vote For Mr. Floret, who is a more serious representative and whose name carries more weight than that of Mr. Fould, badly-that there is the world's largest banker. He is the one who runs The Jewish shop is the one that organizes the bonuses. reports, commissions, discounts, and checks Mins de fer left bank, north, center or south. Mr. Benoît is the speculator of the dynasty.

Louis (the King's brother) is a good-natured Fould, admirer of the rats of rue Lepelletier, lifelong smoker, a reluctant banker, a good man and a speculator without the know.

Too far removed from the throne, Mr. Achille Fould represents his dynasty in Parisian fashion; young prince of Sang Fould, he perfectly embodies the weary and worn-out genre suffering; he is known behind the scenes of the principals paux theatres of Paris and his name is inscribed in the The Lorettes' guestbook. He happily devotes himself to the student horses and queens of Mabilles, he also makes boudoir politics and protection... of future ministers. The Rothschild dynasty would gladly abandon whatever-some of its millions to possess within its ranks this elegant gentleman. As for the feminine part of We won't talk much about the Fould house. Recently, a daughter of this royal house was to be allied with the marquis de Béthisy, deserter from the Saint-Germain suburb and of many other things. However, she only married one Count of Breteuil: that's a breach of duty.

Now let's get back to our Rothschilds! We would have

(1) Church Council.

Well, perhaps one more word to say on several dynasties, which, without being Jewish, are nonetheless fond of gold, positions and dignities, but that would be a an appetizer, a pointless digression, and we have horror of anything useless. Let us note, however at least one singular fact: as soon as a family changes In a dynasty, it proliferates, branches out, forms alliances, and grows. according to the methods used to raise the rabbits and make 5,000 francs in income. Just look at the dynasties Terneaux, Descazes, Laplagne, Perrier, Deles-Sert, Waïilly, Passy, Portalis and Dupin. We're forgetting some. and the best ones.

The Rothschild dynasty is, after the Co- family town, the most populous in Europe. Its founder was Mr. Mayer-Anselme Rotheshild, born in Frankfurt am Main, in 1743. Orphaned at eleven, he was placed, out of charity, in bleeding, but his racial instincts having triumphed,

He studied the different branches with great success
of commerce.

Poor peddler, he had his sack behind his back and his staff in hand in Hanover; having found to
He placed his money with a banker, stayed there for a few years, and then...
He then retired to Frankfurt, where he married, and began to take care of a few small things.

Anselm Rothschild was full of activity and knew how to... precisely because if one and one make two, then two and two make four. He knew so well how to multiply, that his fortune grew-Said perfectly.

After a few years, he became a millionaire.
and also a friend of the Margrave of Hesse, a little prince German, the knowledge of which proved very useful to him. The ar-
The French raid in 1806 almost cut short its prosperity; the margrave had taken flight and Mr. Roth-Schild could no longer find anything to borrow from at 4 and lend to at 5,

= M

which temporarily prevented him from winning the 200 pc on his small businesses (1).

The Rothschilds have always held a bit of a grudge against the Fran-those who halted the growth of their father's fortune.
The Elector of Hesse, having bravely fled,
He could not, like a cup-and-ball game, save the cash register, but he
He entrusted it to his friend Anselm. The latter speculated with the Margrave's funds and six years later, he found himself richer than ever. His greatest despair was of not seeing the courageous Hessian again. He thought about it constantly.
core in 1812, when he died, leaving about ten millions and as many children.

History has left us only the names of five sons of the Frankfurt banker. As for the five daughters, she
He didn't breathe a word about it. That's rather ungallant of history;
But that's the way it is. In the absence of the Rothschild girls
Let us therefore name their kind brothers:

1° Mr. Anselm Rothschild, born in Frankfurt am Main, on June 12, 1775.

20. Mr. Salomon Rothschild, born in Frankfurt am Main,
September 9, 1774.

8° Mr. Nathan Rothschild, born on September 16, 1777, died in Frankfurt in 1836, after having founded two May-sounds, that of Manchester and that of London.

4° Mr. Charles Rothschild, born on April 24, 1788, director the houses of Naples and Frankfurt.

5o Mr. James Rothschild, born May 15, 1792.

Upon Mayer-Anselme's death, the Rothschilds formed a large association and founded various houses in all the capitals of Europe.

(1) The author seems to us to be mistaken. Mr. Rothschild had started with nothing and became a millionaire in a short time years, with zero share capital, it is necessary to lend to a A rate slightly higher than the legal rate. (A banker).

res

Following the example of the famous Jesuit order, the Rothschilds had a general who resided in Frankfurt and provincial leaders.

James the Great was, from 1819, the provincial of Parthia.

11. There she prospered, there her fortune grew, and there she married her niece, Mademoiselle Rothschild, daughter of his brother Salomon.

The year 1815 was the year of grace for the Rothschilds, who from-

Then, imitating the Montmorency and Noville families, they had it done their glorious biographies under the pompous title of:

ROTHSCHILD HOUSE!

The various literary and famished scorpions that have had the glory of encountering the world with the heroic story of the Rothschild family focused on this remarkable fact quable!

The Landgrave of Hesse having returned to his states, gentlemen of the Rothschild family offered him return the funds he had entrusted to their father and even, since these funds had been used to build their fortune, they They offered to pay the interest!!!

After that, tell us, if you dare, about disinterestedness. Turenne's or Regulus's fidelity to his commitments? Find, if you can, a similar one a feature in the history of all peoples, that of the Hebrews Understood? Don't bother looking; you don't You won't find it.

The Margrave of Hesse had entrusted his millions, they returned it to him, and, adds the scorpion of letters to which we –

We owe the revelation of this memorable fact: the voter was astonished (1). Since 1812, the Rothschild house had been for sale

(1) This is a singularly well-placed astonishment, that in say the Jews,

5

. generously to the aid of the imperial houses of Russia and Austria and the royal houses of England el of Prussia.

Large houses must support one another. The thousand– The Rothschild brothers' lions paid in 1814, and in 1815, many betrayals. And so it is only out of modesty that the Rothschilds do not dispute with Blücher or with Wellington's glory in having overthrown the Imperial Colossus rial.

Corruption breeds worms.

Corpses attract vultures.

Major disasters keep speculators in business.

After March 20th, Napoleon had placed himself at the head of the Military France. The destinies of Europe were about to be decided at Mont-Saint-Jean. The vulture had followed the Eagle's trail, Nathan Rothschild was in Belgium his eyes fixed on Waterloo. He had organized in advance relay to Ostend, when he saw her fall struck by lightning this imperial guard, which was dying and would not surrender, He set off on his own, at full speed. Having arrived in Ostend, he Seeing the storm roar, the sailors declared the tra- impossible payment; but is there anything impos- Susceptible to greed? By dint of 'gold,' Rothschild determined a few men left with him in a boat, Like Caesar. Nathan Meinherr risked his fortune. The Success crowned his audacity: he arrived in London, 24 hours before the news arrived; he won by a a single blow of twenty million, while his other brothers secondly, the total profit made in this fateful year amounted to 155 million!

Before 1815, the Rothschilds were very wealthy bankers; after 1815, they were the masters of the bank. They had rendered a service to the kings through loans which the people paid the interest: while France was impoverished and defeated, they triumphed!....

o

Fu

Their royalty of agiolage and stock exchange dates from 1815 and of Waterloo.

Gentlemen scribes of the Guizot ministry, sharpen your pens! In honor of the Rothschilds, they enriched themselves with our impoverishment and our disasters; they have put their or in the service of the coalition of kings; if they remained In our country, they stayed there like a leech stays on Ja vein de la homme!

The victors of 1815 showed their gratitude against the custom of kings. The Emperor of Austria has ennobled the Rothschild family en masse, and in 1829, he granted the title of Baron to the head of the family. The king Prussia appointed them as close advisors on trade. and all the kings lavished upon them the crosses of all the orders.

Let us find a curious sentence to read (1), here it is: "James
"Rothschild settled in Paris, where, later, he "was to play such a brilliant role, and amaze us with the "unprecedented spectacle of this kind of individual royalty;
"giving a hand, nay, imposing laws on these
"official royalty which formerly claimed not

(1) In Paris, we know of a breed of so-called writers who speculate on the pride of men in plain sight. These speculators founded various collections devoted specifically to Lies to those who want to pay for their glory. The Biographer makes biographies at all costs, leaving it to the biographies the right to correct proofs. Collections made under
The only influence, that of money, is: Fame,
The Universal Biography, the Notables, and the Annals contemporary. Rothschild's biographies have been published in all these collections. They corrected them themselves proofs and paid in copies for the composition and writing-tion, – Which means that they are responsible for it.

– 15 –

"to raise up that of God or of the people, or of their sword, and
"that we see bowing down today before the all-
"The power of fortune." The admission is naïve; he wants Furthermore, it should be said that the official kings do not solely-
the people's or their sword, but also the house Rothschild! Isn't that insolent enough, and Meinherr James Could he have allowed such a sentence to remain without blushing?
in a biography to which he subscribed for a large number of copies (1).

After the signing of the odious treaties of 1815, the Rothschilds were tasked by the English government and by the greater part of the allied princes of the reconvrement of their claims against the French government.
This job as a bailiff brought them considerable income. Jus-that in 1895, the Rothschilds did not deal with the government
French government; at that time, they took out a loan 414 million, they also negotiated the Prussian loan of 125 million. The various loans they negotiated.
today amount to more than eight billion, in
of which England is contributing over two billion.
The Rothschilds thus found a way to be useful to the kings by making the people pay dearly for it.

The kings adorned them with crosses, ennobled them, Islands they made baronies of them, appointed them as trade advisors, or vampires of commerce and scourges of nations.

The Rothschild dynasty adopted the motto: Concordia, industria, et integritate.

(1) The composition, printing and paper of the biography—Rothschild's philosophy was unable, in any collection, to surpass 100 francs, or 200, 300 or 600 francs of copies, Mr. Rothschild was therefore paying a little for his fame. Dear, illustrious biographies would blush to pay a biographer, but subscribing is something else entirely.

0

Harmony continued to reign between them, but the Wolves also live very well in family groups. As for industry This is the Rothschilds' strong point; integrity belongs to them. if it only consists of paying for tickets and doing in the face of his commitments. But integrity defends the games scandalous stock market schemes in which one plays with certainty, in which the profit is counted before depositing the cards. We do not understand integrity otherwise. :

On November 15, 1893, Mr. Rothschild, bidder of the French loan, received the Knight's Cross of the Legion of Honour; since then, every million he has earned This earned him a new rank. Today, he is a commander. member of the Order.

Rothschild's biography, which we have between the hands, and which Mr. Rothschild owns as we do, at one hundred or two hundred copies, he said:

"Peaceful conquerors, marching more surely to the "Conquest of the world by Caesar, with this terrible sword"
"having become the scepter of universal domination, and
"which was destined to break so quickly, they divided Europe between them"
"Like a heritage."

Can arrogance go any further? A Rothschild
To place him above Caesar would provoke outrage.
if it didn't inspire disgust and pity.

Whether they are knights of all orders of the Europe,
We don't care about that, and it only harms the orders.
of Europe.

compromised, but it soon strengthened, and the mem-
The dynasty's heirs saw their credit double on the governments of Europe. They imposed peace on French government. They imposed it everywhere, and by their capital, and through a diplomacy as skillful as it was-Tucicuse, the kings are only their seconds; they do not admit-

17 -

They didn't just divide Europe up like a heritage ?

In 1850, they negotiated a loan of 80,000 million
at a very high rate; they contributed, in 1831, to the em-
a loan of 120 million, and of 150 million in 1839, of 200 million, in 1844. This last loan was a subject of scandal for France and the Minister of Finance was accused of sacrificing the country's interests to these German Jews commands, which, since 1815, have descended upon us like on prey.

Nathan Rothschild, however, served a useful purpose.
country, England! In 1815, Napoleon's genius had ruined the credit of this power. By hatred of France.
Nathan lent the English government 78 million pounds sterling, more than two billion. It's the gold from this
It was because France then suffered its disasters that it was Jewish, as is the case with.
her brother's gold, which she owed, in 1845, her shameful speculation and in 1846, the death of travelers on the road Northern iron.

The expulsion of the Jesuits was demanded. The Rothschilds are more to be feared than they are.

The London house has experienced some very-strong tremors. Lord Barclay's loan or foundation Chess vouchers caused him to lose 500,000 pounds sterling.

The Spanish Civil War in 18923 caused a crisis very serious for the Israelite dynasty. The conversion of Mr. de Villèle's annuities might have ruined this house
if she had passed to the Chamber of Peers, where she was not rejected by a majority of only one vote. The Poli- loan Gnac could have been very bad for Mr. Rothschild, Inais, warned in time, he knew how to get himself into a pretty good position.
covered and left to his associates the full weight of this affair.

2.

18 –

we must say that the Rothschild house is less remarkable because of our small bankers, but that {related to his names- numerous relationships and the immensity of its capital.

Mr. Nathan Rothschild had married, in London, a daughter of Mr. Cohen. At his death in 1856, he left three sons who took over from his banking firm.

Since 1836, the sceptre has belonged to James Rothschild I rot of Europe, Asia, Africa, America, of Oceania and other places, and above all king of the Jews!

This powerful monarch established his residence in Paris, on rue Laffitte, 40, turn the knob, please. 11 goes without saying. that according to his biographers and poets (Mr. James has one and the other) Mr. James has all the royal virtues, the genius He came with his first teeth. SM Rothschild he often puts his name on some subscriptions, he gives a few snippets here and there, but then the newspapers are the banker's confidants, and his right hand knows always what the left hand can give. With a With a fortune like his, Mr. Rothschild cannot help but... It's expensive to give. Besides, it's a well-placed advertisement.

SM Rothschild participated in all of the companies Railways, he did in his name the

NORTHERN RAILWAY!

In the interest of the country, the Chamber of Deputies had wanted the railways to be built by the companies companies. Mr. Dumon, Minister of Public Works, planted the first stone of the agiotage by pronouncing the award fraudulent cation of the Northern Railway.

State monopoly was dangerous for freedom.
Direct concessions could facilitate corruption and... electoral fraud. Free and serious competition pa-would bring together all the guarantees for freedom and the
The country's well-being, but what has become of the competition?

in the face of these scandalous mergers that took place on the eve of the auction, while no new comparisons had been made. The engineering system could not have had time to form.

Faced with such a blatant violation of the law, the minister should abstain and not yield to the influence of A NAME and to the coalition financial coalition. The direct concession was then a thousand times preferable, in that it allowed the minister to debate the interests of the country and the state.

"Competition without competitors becomes possible with the help of a illusory discount, usurpation of the most sacred interests.

"For the Northern line, the Rothschild family has..." presented on its own, and with the help of a few days of discounts, has gained immense advantages. Judging herself, The Northern Company had condemned itself; the culprit He comes alone to bribe his judge.

Members of both chambers received magnificent... frique banker more than fifteen thousand shares; the journals-Influential lists have received some, some seventy-five, some one hundred, even more so. These prodigal gifts were addressed to judges.

Is that clear? Let's continue... |

The God of the Northern Railway having seen the the premium on his shares of 500 francs, rising to 348 francs, he believed must be notified immediately upon the removal of the bonuses, which means that the god no longer has anything in common with Îa Northern line, but it benefited from 140 million to approximately, and this gain compensates quite adequately for a A recent gem worth around fifteen million. What does he care? After that, the curses of the Stock Exchange, the rich son Israel remembers that its fathers worshipped the Golden Calf.

Regarding the loan of 200 million in 1844, of which As we mentioned earlier, the National denounced with energy a financial operation carried out at the expense of country in the interest of one man. The vigorous ar-The National article caused subscribers to flock to

– 99 –

Mr. James, who exclaimed with his booming merchant's laughter:
– I want the National to have as much patriotism

twenty-four hours.

It would take volumes to tell (all the scandals of the operation of the northern line, the swindling Englishmen who, after receiving shares at par, sold them in Paris with a premium, which Mr. James was warned by the London house, and which caused that instead of losing, like other capitalists, he won. The fact remains, the Rothschilds have only ever won in our disasters. When France was winning the house of Rothschild was losing. This house is our evil genius. Its splendor dates back to our first misfortunes: it bears within her a sign of repulsion that nothing will be able to erase. This sign, let us say it again, is 1815.

Let us point out an infamous maneuver by Rothschild.

When Rothschild created the railway company Northern iron, the number of shares at 500 francs was fixed at 300,009, but the premium having shown itself in beautiful appearances, Mr. Rothschild had the idea of creating 100,000 additional actions. They were, he said, indispensable; 15 million were needed for the membrane-Fampoux. Now, 50,000 shares; that with Creil valued at 35 million, the creation of 70,000 shares were most needed. Fampoux was awarded to the company. O'Neil and Creil was only awarded Much later, by another company. Opposite These two facts led Mr. Rothschild to reduce his supplementary shares. comments from 500 francs to 120 francs; but the council of state required the preservation of the first number of shares and the elimination of supplements. Rothschild, the king of bankers Quiers, submitted. He will not make a fundraising appeal, he will reimburse, on the contrary, but thanks to this small supplement-The trick, so cleverly devised, brought in 50 million.

- 91 -

in his cash register. Does he still keep "infegritate" in his motto?

The scandal of the stock market trading was nothing Again, the issue of censorship comes next. The sub-The traders trafficked in the labor and materials. The collapse of the Barentin viaduct drew attention to them. of public opinion. If the works were to collapse in this way before they are completed, what would happen as soon as they are delivered to the public?

In April, the Rothschilds threatened the industry

Mr. Hamoir and others paid 6 million, which was operated with a capital of 5,500,000 francs. But their immense capital making any competition impossible. If possible, the public will have to compensate the bankers sooner or later.

interested in the Speletta and Peireire companies, the Rothschild family made immense profits, despite the public imprecations and the courageously revealed facts election to the Chamber of Deputies. When all the bodies of the state had been partly bought, the truth had to find deaf people on the benches of both chambers.

On June 15, 1846, it was announced that it was to be the time of the coronation of Rothschild I and the inauguration-Northern Railway station. The editors of The Era, Debates, the Press and the Century the historical figures made the ovation of the first Jewish baron.

The chambers, the princes, the press, the judiciary, Industry, the military, and the bar had been invited to this inaugural which, through criminal haste, could-France was going to be covered in mourning. Meinherr Rothschild had announced that he wanted to generously do the honors drivers of his railway to two thousand spectators: Curiosity had been great, and it led to a mystical-tion. Apart from a few privileged guests, the guests had been crammed into second-class carriages without blinds no curtains; the sun sought its rays there, the dust It was blinding and it was impossible to see ten paces ahead. self. The promise of a splendid lunch in Amiens made-However, they know how to be patient. Having arrived in Amiens, the... unfortunate guests found barely fifty of brioches and a few rare carafes of lemonade; the employees or agents of the famous German Jew apologized on the first convoy, which, they said, had everything devoured. Now, a similar fate had befallen the first convoy. Later, the agents invented another fable. His Majesty Rothschild I had wanted to offer a luncheon to Amiens, but the Jewish city had contested this honor, and It was none of his business if the city had filled the duties of hospitality, Unfortunately, Mr. Mayor d'Amiens denied this news and the first Baron The Jew was indeed and duly convicted of stinginess at first chief. The view from Amiens station was A curious moment: the highest-ranking men they were fiercely arguing there, a scalded one or a brioche, a glass of lemonade or a simple mor-bucket of bread. But the signal is given, the victims

They received Lille. It was time for the banquet! But the great
The lords were not ready, and the guests had to wait.
Two more hours crammed together in a dark corridor.
However, the English, the panegyrists of the powerful
The baron and some friends entered the banquet hall.
while the common martyrs died of starvation.
Finally, the Duke of Nemours arrives, the order is lifted.
Everyone is rushing in, the tables are being served more or less, depending on the guests. At the table of the Duke of Nemours and the princes are seated, Mr. Rothschild and Mr. Pereire, as well as the principal administrators of the railway. While the rich Jew has the honor to be seated near a royal prince, generals and

– 935 –

marshals (find with difficulty a small corner of table.
Amphitryon Rothschild calls this paying homage.
from his railway, he makes toasts, he shines with arro-
He was elegant and seemed to honor the princes with his presence.
The speculator monarch of the northern path no longer has enough of countless millions that he earned from French families
This speculator is, for his flatterers, the greatest
A genius of his time. (Read about the era.)

Contemporary literature dishonors itself by prospouting stupid tributes. Who is this man?
A capitalist who gets richer and richer while fathers families lose even their last piece of food bread.

After the banquet, a ball was held; it did honor to the city of Lille. After this ball, Mr. Roth's agents-Schild seized their guests again and threw them in Belgium, with a rudeness and methods worthy of their boss.

However, there was no shortage of grotesque praise.
to the king of financiers. Turcaret found more collars or less filthy ones who praised his politeness and didn't say Not a word about all the depravities of his agents. The day of the inauguration the agents of the Jew of Frankfurt per-they began to address the travelers informally, to jump at their throats, to threaten them with custody and to suffocate them in waiting rooms. Perhaps it was just punishment for the baseness of some guests who mingled the cries of:
Long live the King! Long live the princes! to the cry of "Long live Rothschild!" Upon hearing such a cry, Paul-Louis Courier would have was right to say: "France is a people of

Just a few days after this inauguration which had served as a crowning glory to the golden waters of Israel, the travelers who, unfortunately, had entrusted themselves to Mr. Rothschild's administration overwhelmed the journalists

= 94

the details of their complaints, regarding the brutality, the negligence and the insolence of the people of the high and powerful baron so recently past king in partibus.

The ministerial newspapers were unanimous in their support of...
to shower this man with bland praise and insipid accolades.
They were unanimous in saying that the Railway of
The North was his creation; he was its creative genius.
and that the glory belonged to him alone. Those fools praise overwhelms him today, as it once exalted him Yesterday his pride. He found his Capitol, may he find his Tarpeian rock at the foot of the courts.

He had the glory, you say? Well then! Let him have it Today, shame and responsibility.

NARRATIVE

OF THE CATASTROPHE

FROM JULY 8

BY AN EYEWITNESS.

The swamp has yielded 39 corpses! I saw them! Will she dare—
Can someone contradict me?

The convoy had left Paris at 7 a.m.; it consisted of 29 cars pulled by two locomotives
tives; around two o'clock in the afternoon, a driver who arrived with the convoy from Belgium fell from the locomotive on the tracks, near the Fives station;
He was taken to Saint-Sauveur Hospital and died there.
evening. This unfortunate event was just a sad

Prelude. At three five minutes, the convoy arrived facing Fampoux; he was then traveling twelve leagues an hour; For some time now, there had been some rather violent jolts. already alarmed the travelers. Suddenly, at the moment when we crossed a curve established on an embankment that bathes a deep lake that stretches across a soil of tower-beer, the rails being found to be sagging, broken or disjointed, left a discontinuity that the first The first locomotive managed to cross, the second made a breakthrough. in the sandy embankment and became embedded in the ground without to derail completely. The violence of the impact was such that in the fourth wagon, the chains broke as glass; the cars, propelled by their own momentum rushed towards the marsh; rolled down the embankment and disappeared. It was a dreadful sight! Thirteen wagons had been swallowed up one on top of the other; one Three others had been literally crushed. after turning around for a moment were submerged. The entire convoy came crashing down upon them; a thousand Cries of despair were heard! The travelers from the least damaged wagons seek to break the windows; they emerge covered in blood, fall back into the marsh, its collection by dredgers or disappearance Mr. Lestiboudois, Member of Parliament, was forever buried in the peat bog. from Lille, pulled from the water just as his strength was failing him gave, returns with wear and tear the proof of devotion that he just received. JJ1 was locked up with six people in the second submerged carriage, a horrible struggle had become involved with these unfortunate prisoners. By During the debate, Mr. Lestiboudois broke a mirror, seeing that It was the only way to save himself; he shattered the rest with his He grabbed his hands and climbed out the door; a moment later he was saved him and with him his unfortunate companions of captivity speed. Pain and despair were visible on all sides, and a sublime devotion: a poor greaser, named

Carré saved five people. Mr. Hovell and a few Other employees distinguished themselves by their courage. We saw an Englishman with his arm broken in two places, wanted to hide his injury from his wife and oc-cupped with the most touching solicitude of some minor bruises she had received. Nearby, a The unfortunate mother searched in vain for her two children;

to revive his mother's corpse.

For more than two hours the injured, numbering
From fifty-six to sixty, remained without assistance.
if not for those that Mr. Les- could lavish upon them
Tiboudois, who, in his capacity as a doctor, although wounded
He himself had not wanted to leave the site of the disaster.
stanza; finally, a first convoy came from Douai, it was in charge of doctors, nuns, and priests and generous citizens, he removed the wounded and the
They were transported to Douai, where they were received and cared for.
as brothers.

The cars which, by a providential stroke of luck, have not trained, contained: Princess of Ligne, Marshal Lauriston, General Oudinot and his woman; Mr. Oudinot's aide-de-camp, was wounded in a horrible way.

It was awful to see! Those pieces of clothing, those sails, those hats, those wrecked cars floating on the surface
The side of the scattered limbs and bloody entrails. The
The lake has an immense depth; we tried in vain
formerly to fill it, its bottom of quicksand did not
It may be more dangerous, we don't estimate it at less 40 feet is its true depth.

The railway administration continues its system-
The theme of lies. She denied, from the very first day, that he There would have been a catastrophe. Today she hides the number of deaths. We therefore affirm today that

- 98 -

This number is not 14, but 39.

On Friday, July 10, despite all precautions, a
The convoy from Belgium arrived without the signals had been done. Fortunately, the man named Réboul, con-the stagecoach driver had had time to glimpse the congestion caused by the rescue goats. It demanded that the speed be reduced; thanks to the energetic
In response to passenger complaints, the employees gave in; but They overwhelmed Réboul with threats and especially with ven-
Mr. Rothschild's anger and anger!

Upon arrival at the scene of the disaster, the convoy was still In the middle of the movement, he broke the goats and threw them.
on the soldiers; four of these unfortunate men had the

ses. If, unfortunately, the goats had been thrown onto the rails, a second catastrophe would have covered with Hundreds of families are grieving.

Like the road to Versailles, the northern one had his baptism of blood; from the very first day, July 8th, The administrators and others have learned of the news; They used it to sell off shares, to swindle money Dupes. Let the courts sentence them to two hundred a thousand francs in damages, the complacency ministerial office which, for forty-eight hours, hid The news made them millions. When we One can speculate on the corpses of Waterloo. on those of the victims of the Northern Road!

On the 8th, Mr. Dumon received a telegram and he remained silent, and he allowed exploiters to play their part for sure. On the 9th, he received a report from the prefect, and he remained silent again, and the Mr. James Rothschild's agents dared to claim that the The alarming rumors were false; they were being spread by the malice, while the official world lied, or remained silent, or went to the Stock Exchange. Mr. Rothschild knew well what he was doing when he gave to the peer {ant d'actions, when a great personage received a thousand For his part, the author of War on the Rogues said, he Eight months ago: "These lavish gifts were directed at..." Judges." Was he right? Mr. Rothschild's exploitation It begins with corpses. Didn't this man have enough Will we give him even our blood, our gold? Will the courts remain silent before this Austrian consul? The impunity for so many murders would eventually become tiresome. public opinion.

– 99 –

"This Northern Railway," says the National, "has already caused in the financial world as in the world moral, the most serious disorders. He was one of the instructors the most scandalous conversions in the House. Wasn't it enough to corrupt those he attracted? Must—that in the first days of his existence he killed those who Do they trust him?

The Government and the Company are both covered up. The company is liable for its lack of oversight and the poor organization of his department, the Government due to the poor construction of the track (June 21st, The engineer of the Northern Railway has been decorated!!!

They made a despicable investment! The rails are too narrow and too thin, the thickness of the masonry was boldly diminished: and the law does not punish with death the man who, for a little gold, thus gambles with the life of a hundred dozens of people?.....

The genius had warned the government that the step—
The railway line through Fampoux and Rœux was dangerous. Self-interest stifled this opinion: from the
In the first few days, the engineers on the islands proclaimed the few
The viability of the works, but Mr. Rothschild was deprived of to enjoy his journey. To reinforce the embankment, he would have
It was necessary to spend a few hundred thousand francs more:

D.

= 0

Men's lives are not worth that, surely. The prudence prescribed the construction of guardrails, but
The economy held a contrary opinion. Life doesn't matter.
travelers to men who, before exploitation,
have gained in a few months more than the road will yield Never!

The incredible negligence of July 10th proves the impredious clairvoyance of the Jewish agents of the Rothschild Jews and Pereire. Let us not, however, burden all the Mistakes made against unfortunate employees; the culprits are the heads of the administration. Honor to the independent press.
Pending, she loyally demanded justice for the victims. As for the venal and corrupt press that lives of announcements and serials, what does his cry matter to us?
Minel silence, she is judged in the eyes of the country: she is
As an accomplice, she received the thirty pieces of silver; she is determined to do its market. Let us therefore unite in the loyal cry of the newspaper From Lille: "All of this is horrible and demands justice."
Let an investigation take place, let these bodies be avenged,
If there is recklessness, let these families be devastated and ruined.
be compensated by those who exploit the wealth
public. We demand a thorough investigation, a judge—a lie that will prove to everyone that there is in France courts where the coachman is tried at the same time as the coachman cautious who injures a passerby, and the Roth— company Schild, who left 40 victims in a precipice. Justice!
"Justice must be done!"

Perhaps tomorrow, to stifle this immense voice of the a people who condemn them, these men who have made themselves a

through public misfortune, these men who, at the last hour, these men speculated on the bloodstained obol who have earned millions, will perhaps throw themselves at the victims times one hundred thousand, two hundred thousand francs, and the crowd of The panegyrists will cry out: Glory to them! and the courtiers will celebrate

– 31 –

highlighting the generosity and humanity of the Roth company schild; and people will cry out more than ever:

Long live Rothschild I, King of the Jews!

Far be it from us to engage in unworthy clamor: we appeal to justice against these men who sacrifice human blood to the Golden Calf, against those men who have sold everything and who want in vain to stifle the feelings of the heart under the gilded disgrace of selfish and material self-interest.

NOTE.

Mr. Rothschild, who entertains princes at his table, and who has enough power to obtain delivery of a path unfinished; Mr. Rothschild, who will remain unpunished and whose Generosity took so little initiative; Mr. Rothschild was far away to enjoy such great power with the Duke of Orléans; this prince, so affable to all, always refused to receive the Jewish baron at his table. It was in vain that the a wealthy Jewish man expressed a desire to attend, in 1842, the At the Chantilly festivities, the Duke of Orléans refused to be his host. Mr. de Nemours, who is said to be so proud, however shown to be more accommodating. It is true that in 1842, the king of The Jews gave a party for the Legitimists and the castle cut fear of seeing a treaty of alliance signed between Meinherr James brothers and the Prince of Chambord. Since this desire to open From this position, James faces no obstacle. Mr. Laplagne... shows his devoted servant and Mr. Dumon has everything for him kinds of indulgences. What does it matter if these indulgences endanger the lives of travelers.

Thus, Mr. Oufroy de Bréville having formally refused to sign the act that put the Northern Railway at the

The disposition of the King of the Jews was ignored. The marshes of Rœux presented a danger that had been pointed out by the military engineers, one ignored it. Mr. Oufroy de Bréville had declared that the the path would present certain dangers if it were left to the circulation before October, but the industrial shares trielles could lower and everyone knows that they have strong It doesn't bring in much.

The country's interests, the engineers' opinions, the lives of the men—My, everything was sacrificed to Samuel Rothschild. Today a report by Mr. Fessard or Frisard, grants a bill of in-compensation to the King of the Jews; moreover, his friend, Mr. Isaac Pe-reire, is putting himself forward for the parliamentary seat. Mr. Isaac has Headlines: First, he's Jewish, then he won 3 million in stock market and railway manipulations; moreover, he is Mr. Rothschild's accomplice: yet another title!

And now, just one word, it's not about the belief of This pamphlet is addressed to the Jews, but to their harshness, to their insolence of yesterday's slaves, today's freedmen and enriched today, to their thirst for gold and their unquenchable need this Wealth and power! They still consent to it today. to be protected, tomorrow they will be jiro-detectors and masters. and despotism exercised by freedmen is the most condemned—sant ct the most odious of despotisms.

PET LT

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google Books

<https://books.google.com>

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the line.

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs to the public domain. "Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to copyright and therefore is not subject to expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our knowledge, too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced in this edition. The long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to find its way back to the public is a testament to the importance of preserving our cultural heritage.

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them available. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular by implementing technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

+ Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

+ Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the servers of Google or to the servers of the libraries. For research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field of research, please contact us. For large amounts of text, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of these works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service to you.

+ Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential to inform you of the source of the work and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not delete the watermark. No cases.

+ Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is your responsibility to be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that it is in the public domain in other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country. The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply posting a work on Google Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to which you are subject. The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages, Google Books Search contributes to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google Books Search allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and

online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

EEC ROTHSCHILD F*,
|
|
|

HIS SERVANTS

And his people,
BY G. DAIRNVÆLL,

Author of The Edifying and Curious History
of the King of the Jews.

Financiers support the State 5
As the rope supports the hanged man

MONTESQUIEU |
|
|

RESPONSE TO ALLEGED ANSWERS
AND NEW FACTS,
AGAINST SM ROTHSCHILD, MM. FOULD, CH. LAFFITTE, ETC.

Third Edition.

Price: 90 cents.
PARIS

AT THE PUBLISHER'S, RUE COLBERT, N° 4.
| views

Digitized by Google

ROTHSCHILD I",

BONES SERVANTS AND NOT PEOPLE

a The pr

Office printing shop, 23 rue Coquillière,

——— "#76

ROTHSCHILD F

SERVANTS AND HIS PEOPLE,

BY G. DAIRNVÆLL,

Author of the edifying and curious history of the king of LL ve Jews. _—

The financiers are the state's heirs.
like the rope supports the pefdu, MONTESOUTEU.

A RESPONSE TO ALLEGED ANSWERS, AND NEW FARTS AGAINST SM ROTASERILP, MM. FOULD, C. LARFIÏTTE.

Pix 1 80 CEtttimes.

PARIS.

. AT THE PUBLISHER'S, 4 RUE COLBERT.
1846.

SUMMARY.

The servants. – To a slander. – To MP de R. – The Newspapers that no one reads. – The cost of bad

Prose – What is my goal? – Usurious feudalism.

1815, the Jews, marabouts in braided clothes.–Where are the

60 million! – Fraudulent sale of shares. – We live
– of shame. – 60 million yielding 800 million in interest.

– State monopoly, – By whom the companies have were sold, – Power of the bankers; what it brings– door. – A former candle merchant representing the people.– 250,000 shares sold in a quarter of an hour.
– Order to merge with the Rothschilds. – The bags of coal, from which Mr. Pereire emerged very white. – The je-signs of presence. – Unrecognized predictions. – The em-Neapolitan prunt, – The Jewish monopoly. – Some inte-Material loans, – The spider and the banker. – Thefts gaux. – Mr. Locke. – The road to Le Havre and the line of Versailles. – Fashionable probity. – The neo-Jews. – The people. – Usury. – Messrs. Rothschild and Lafhitte. – No-loan injury. – A great disinterested administrator
to the Israelites, |

ROTHSCHILD I",

HIS SERVANTS AND HIS PEOPLE.

Let's start with the servants; the master won't lose anything by doing so.

The first, a gentleman who does not sign, asserts that I asked Mr. Rothschild for a thousand franc note for to praise him, and that, my request having been rejected, I I took my revenge with a pamphlet. To this gentleman, I give A FORMAL DENIAL: That would be enough for him, if he understood it.
the value and the consequences. Furthermore, as he says he has
I warn him that if he doesn't provide evidence for his claims, he will not provide it.
I won't publish anything within the next two weeks; I'll know what I have left to do.
to do. To make it easier for him, I declare that, if he gives me proof that I offered my pen, no not only to Mr. Rothschild, but to anyone, I I will deposit the sum that he will please to impose on me, and I will declare myself a FAMOUS! Otherwise, Mr. Félix Malteste will have to answer for the friendly warning that Jui was given by my publisher

and by myself:

To Mr. P, deR.

AUTHOR OF A NEW RESPONSE FROM THE PRINCE OF ISRAELITES.

Sir, when there is any danger whatsoever, I do not
never hides behind a pseudonym, nor behind two ini-Tiales, like you, MP de R., my name is GEORGES DAIRNVÆLL: I signed a two-year contract with this man, the Corsuire of the South, which I edited in Marseille; I signed
The first volume of the History of the Jacobins was named after this name.
Remonstratives to Citizen Timon, the late Timon, War
To the Scoundrels! and several other pamphlets which I believed
The publication is useful. I never make insinuations.
Hateful, I'll get straight to the point. I'll say what I mean.
I sign you in full with my name, which has never been Key
and will never be a pseudonym,

TO A FEW SMALL NEWSPAPERS.

I know, Lrop, where these insults come from in order to respond to them.
dre; one does not respond to an industrial Paris, of the in vois with a pen, when you want to avoid using gibberish.

has"

Now that these gentlemen are no longer waiting in the year-Tichambre, a word to the audience. For over ten years, I fights for the people's cause, this cause not before greater enemies than speculators and traitors: I fighting with all my strength and by all means loyal and possible. The people are used to seeing all their in hemis in The government, that's a mistake. The enne-

> “| –

The people's interests are dominated by the financial barons, the Rothschilds.
the Ch. Lafitte, the Blunt, the Fould, etc.

No one has answered. Qirest, therefore, Mr. Rothschild, to have Such selfless defenders? Mr. Rothschild is a king very rich Jews, a king whose people pay K Hste civil, a king who reigns by His shields like his others reign by right of birth or genius. Although So, although I defend it a lot, we don't give it to you.
during not for his sergeant,

Mr. Baron, we will only wave your account if you Pay the style of your panegyrists, MT weight.

|
ROTHSCHILD 1",
AND HIS PEOPLE.

The goal I set for myself, in my winter works,
is to excessively co-opt the new financial feudalism.
France, which was shaking off the yoke of the great vassals, from the 14th century, he hated his masters, but was not ashamed of it-
I don't know; the people were calling for an end to the violence and injustices of the great. Louis XF and Richelien struck the no-wounded to the benefit of the bourgeoisie, the people were not in-core constituted. Today, H France is pushing back against all Its strengths, this novel aristocracy, reborn in scandals of the Stock Exchange, and dominating everything through usury, speculation and more mfame traffic.

The France of our fathers was too fraternal to obey the sword.
From Montmorency, the Condés, the Dukes of Brittany, etc. #"

=

Burgundy. Will it be so forgetful today of its honor and dignity to suffer the yoke of speculators and:
Jews.

There is still a significant place to be filled in our history.
The people, declared sovereign in 1789 and 1830, need only of an ally: King Louis-Philippe must become one. The destruction-
The restoration of the new feudal system must be his work, and this
The work alone is enough to make one forget many mistakes.
and to illustrate a reign,

Let there be no mistake, I have never attacked Mr. de Rothschild as an individual, I attacked him as king of sensing material interests, like a party flag esoteric, of a soulless and heartless party, which tends to amoin-

to corrupt France, to entangle her in the bonds of infidelity schemes of corruption, and to bring it down into a state of disa gradation from which a people never recovers. Therefore, it is necessary that I make Mr. de Rothschild known: the success of my
The previous brochure makes it my duty, and whatever
I will not back down from the dangers that threaten me.

The insolent fortune of the Jewish banker, dates back, as I have as already mentioned. of 1815. The Rothschilds were, in that fateful year-born, the leaders of this flock of crows that descended upon the battlefields, providing gold to the officers of Ja Sainte-Alliance, and buying at a low price, the epaulettes, the swords and the blood-stained clothes of our soldiers.

Everyone knows that in 1845 the princes of the confederacy-
Germanic rations had to be built against France several important fortresses. A sum of fifty was it given to sixty million intended for this purpose?
Mr. Rothschild, the company's banker? The German princesmands nw'avant pu s'entente, est-il reste entre les hands of the King of the Jews? And since it is a deposit, is it It's true that the noble, the great and illustrious banker doesn't pay for it.
Not interested? Is it still true that some great pereach year, several hundred people are affected.
A thousand francs, as a gift? - If all this is true, this ca-

+ -

Isn't this an act of... on the part of SM Rothschild?
Pure generosity?

The Rothschild family has been at the head of all since 1815 monopolies; everywhere she set foot, the little in-Industry and trade suffered. In Sicily, it seized the sulfur monopoly; in Spain, mines of Mercury; in England, of the iron industry; in America, diamond mines; in Vienna, Austria, of the supply of meat; in Sweden and Norway of almost all mines; in France, of all the indussorting: canals, loans, railways, factories, everything is had become his prey.

Between the interests of the King of the French and the interests of the head of The Rothschild house, the Journal des Débats weighs in-would do it without hesitation. For the King of the Jews. A mid-level newspaper Nisterial, whoever it may be, "has orders to decide if there is

The railway tenders resulted in Unprecedented scandals. Here's how an honest man... revealed: – "The law prohibits the sale of promises of acquisition"
"tions before the auction; this law has been violated; these pro-
"Action masses that cannot be sold to the prosecutor's office"
"The Ministry of Exchange Agents, they were sold in the "behind the scenes through shady brokers. The bankers were-
"were holding fictitious courses, and in a very simple way"
"ple. A broker was told to sell promises of ac"tions at such a rate; to another, to buy them at that rate. Some
"Then real buyers would show up, who would operate on € this price. After the auction, the obligation to take li-
"Vraison should have changed these prices; but here is what they have "€ made the bankers. They agreed to grant the buyers
"the deadlines for taking delivery, to hand them over"
"Liquidation after liquidation, every two weeks. Then,

(1) These facts are affirmed by an excellent writer, Mr. Toussenel, who fought for the government for a long time, and who today admits nobly acknowledge his mistakes.

when causes of decline arose, such as
"crisis in England, rising interest rates in that country,
"the fear of war with England and the United States;
"Then, all of a sudden, the bankers overwhelmed their "buyers to take delivery, and these not having
"funds, which were forced to sell at a loss; the decline has had
"place. Bankers derived three advantages from it: the pre-
"The first step was to buy back the underhanded, lower-priced items"
"shares they had sold; the second, to frighten the "companies that wanted to compete with them for
"other auctions; the third, finally, to engage by
"This decrease means the government will have to restrict the duration less"
"from there enjoyment in these other adjudications of which they
"had kept the competitors away,"

These lines were not written by a pamphleteer;
This is neither defamation nor slander; it is truth.
A rite spoken by a man of heart is the proclaimed truth.
from the podium by one of our most honorable members of parliament,
Mr. Lherbette. What was their response to these damning facts?
The bankers and their accomplices? – Nothing. However Three hundred members of parliament had received shares at par. They
They were accused in the press and had a full House hearing. They did not
They did not defend themselves. But when M. Lherbette told them, he did it.

to laugh, and deserved this bloody apostrophe: "Today-
"Today, we no longer die of shame, we live off it."

Ever since the idea of building a railway from North, it was intended for Mr. de Rothschild. He had been made The deal was quite good: the State had to build Ki via its expenses, that is to say, spending around ten million; then, such as laying the tracks, locomotives, wagons, etc. estimated at 60 million, the railway was delivered to Mr. de Rothschild for forty years. The profits amounting to more than 45 million per year, Mr. de Rothschild ren- trait in its sixty million at the end of four years, and for the benefit of the sleeper and his small profit, he enjoyed Jde still ran the operation for 36 years, meaning that the state wanted to pay 45 million per year in interest which can amount to more than 2,400,000 francs.

The Chamber of Deputies was very harsh on the king of Jews, she left him, it is true, the exploitation while qua- for thirty years; she gave him the ready-made line, but she extgea the loss of the sixty million spent by Mr. Rothschild, that is to say, the free return of the path to the State after qua- ranfe ans de jouira. Le Journal des Débats deplora bitterly resented these demands and cried out with sobs: "That Mr. de Rothschild was visibly soliciting the privilege of ruining oneself (4).

Let's examine: the State spends 109 million on the track.
{[interest of 100 million on the 4th for 0j9 |

for forty years 160 »
Line revenue of 15 million per year, 600

RRSRRETe REASON SOEPEDENRS CRRSRE

Total: 860

That is to say, the State borrowed 60 million for 40 years with 809 million in interest.

What would we do to a wasteful person if they borrowed from a similar one? rate, would the First President not pronounce his in- Prohibition? But all this is nothing yet, SM Roths -

He killed with the merging companies, he reserved 70,000 shares. At the general meeting in February Lastly, Mr. de Rothschild deposited 34,000 shares; iken had sold 56,000, meaning he had achieved a to deprive Benefice of 15 million, Now, Mr. de Roths- Chijd was able to sell the other 54,000 at a lower price (to £265). bonus); that would then only amount to 9 million which, added to the The first 45 would produce a small sum of 24 million before the construction of the railway. These same actions ra- Purchased in a timely manner, they can also be returned.

{4) Teatnel, JOURNAL DES Débats, July 16434

42

due to the increase and then within 6 months Mr. Roths- child happens to have a railway that doesn't cost him nothing. – But do we know what it costs the people and the com- . French commerce, see for this the table of bankruptcies and Consult the archives of the commercial court? Thanks to the merger, Mr. Rothschild gained access to Northern iron for a negligible discount, opposite a con- . currence; he offered a discount for the Fampoux road . of 58 years and for the one in St-Quentin a discount of 50, and This is because, even with this immense decrease in The enjoyment the road to Saint-Quentin still offers, and that according to the shadow of Mr. Rothschild, Isaac-Péireire, an income clear of 8.010. If there had been competition on the way From the North, the State would have gained at least 15 years and the case was still disastrous for France – the power did not He wasn't free; he wasn't strong enough to dictate laws to The usurious feudal system, 11, was subject to the yoke of the companies, because France abhors state monopolies. parks that the people are imbued with a stupid prejudice which . makes one prefer societies composed of ruined dukes, of usu- riers, princes, marquises, brokers, manufacturers of candles, from peers and grocers, with a powerful monopoly exercised by the State. If the State were the owner, the price of seats on the railways would be reduced by more than half, because deep down the State needs money, it is True – but he's not Jewish.

The people must form an alliance with the government. against the bankers; it is necessary, if it is not already too late. The law must not be constantly violated. Do not... don't we just come across two houses, the Hottinguer houses and Rothschild submitted a bid without opening a subscription period. However, according to the law, all actions must be delivered to the civil engineer and editor of a well-known special publication by his independence, Mr. Alexandre Corréard, director of The Civil Engineering Journal states the following: According to him, Mr. Dumon desired the adjudication with Competition; the Gaumont-Laforce company having pre-

mn ŸZ us

Sentée, Mr. Dumon encouraged him; this company had, from remains, delivered all his shares and collected 12,546,000 francs. According to Mr. Corréard, it is not fair to say that Mr. Du- My husband didn't want any competition; he was overwhelmed by the... miserable business manipulators, stock sellers, "The company salespeople who delivered them shamefully to the merger partners, for a fixed number of definitive shares, And a lot for cash. All those dirty matters. Mr. Corréard continues, are not a mystery to no one; we know that there are administrators who have re- That, in addition to the shares to which they were entitled by their Initial subscriptions: 500, 1,000, 1,500, up to 2,000 definitive actions, without them having been obliged to pay a a cent in advance. Others received 100, 150, 200. 250, up to 500,000 fr. in cash (1). »

This is what the bankers report. We have said that their name prevented a matter from being bad; one He was mistaken. If the deal is bad, they take care to get out of it. unloading on modern-day gullible people. The names of Messrs. de Rothschild, Ch. Lafitte, Hardoin, Bartholony, Pillet-Will, Did Carrette and Minguet, Kæclin, Fould and others em-fished the shares of the Andrezieux to Roan railways-street, from Versailles, from Paris to Orléans, from Montereau to Troyes, from Dieppe to Fécamp, etc., to decrease by 500 francs to 4130, 150, 200, 550 and 400 below even?

No one believes in the power of bankers anymore. supporting bad business, but we know their know-to do when it comes to receiving a bonus. – "Example: (says M. Corréard, Journal du Génie civil, volume xn, page 120.) "the famous banker Ganneron, who became "an administrative, military, political and fi- illustration "financial, when he opened the subscription for the road to "The Paris to Strasbourg railway line was announced at the same time,"

(4) I would be curious to know the reports that the Prefect of Police must have received from his agents, for all these cautious matters. (Note by Mr. CORRÉARD.)

TVu-

that this Lt would be open at nine o'clock
Tatin. The author of this note is the founder of the com-Ganneron company. He went to the offices of the latter-deny, at precisely nine quarter past nine, shows in hand, to subscribe himself, both in his own name and in that of some of his friends, he was told that the SUBSCRIPTION WAS CLOSED (a quarter of an hour after opening) virtue!) and that all necessary actions had been taken.
But... but... but. - They replied: Sir, he
There are more shares. So he insisted, he demanded; he said that he was the founder, that he had reserved the right, with his their partners, to subscribe to 20,000 shares. To all this and to many other things, no answer was given; he was returned sent to Mr. Ganneron, and, to have 400 shares against his money, he had to plead. It even seems that, badly-Despite the transaction that took place, he will not have them, nor even the 80 shares reduced as a result of the merger.

Do you now believe that in a quarter of an hour, we have
"How could they have delivered 250,000 shares to the public?"

Mr. Gaaneron, speaking yesterday to his constituents about his shop,
Did he boast about this? We highly doubt it.

RARRRRARRRRARARARARARSR

Mr. Corréard adds: "that although Messrs. Ganneron and de Eespée were able to subscribe for 12 million themselves, there were still 220,000 shares left to be placed at the time when Messrs. Ganneron and de Lespée shamelessly responded the fact that the subscription was closed and that everything was taken What happened to these shares? In whose hands are they now?
past?

Mr. Bourgoïn (1), one of the leading brokers on the Stock Exchange, You'll be able to tell it better than I can, "since he sold them all"
on behalf of Mr. X, at a premium of 20 francs per Average stock. Which represents a decent profit of 4,520,000 francs. The history of the Ganneron company, of

(4) Son of the famous actress of that name,

Tire

Lespée et C^o is the story of all the Companies; it is at "That's how good bankers are."

There is a commission that the press has not yet ' deemed it best to keep busy, preferring to have all the weight borne Mr. Dumon was blamed. This commission, composed of Mr. Dumon, Minister of Public Works; Mr. Legrand, sub-Secretary of State D'ARGOUT, Peer of France, Governor of the Bank; VERNES, Deputy Governor; AUBÉ, President of the chamber of commerce; EBOBE, member of the chamber-trade; MONTANIER, director at the Ministry of finances; FÈVRE and KERMAINGANT, inspectors of bridges-el-Chaussées; MIGNERON, mining inspector; de Bou-REUILLE, railway inspector; his mission is to Check the list and value of each company. The opinion The public found this commission powerless, and the nominees Some of its members have suggested that she leaned towards high finance.

Haven't some of these gentlemen been unofficially... advised companies with a strong presence of to merge as quickly as possible with the Rothschild company, under they risked being turned away if they persisted in showing up at the auction. |

After such an event, will anyone still doubt the power of the King of the Jews? Will it be explained how the Cau- company Mount Laforce, after refusing 30,000 shares, sold itself the following day at the Rothschild merger for 12,500.

After the northern route, Mr. de Rothschild aspired that of Creil in Saint-Quentin. A merger gave it to him and A company was formed with the following names: ROTHSCHILD brothers, HOTTINGUER and Co., CH. LAFITTE-BLUNT and Co., A. Gouin, Duke of GaLLrerA, of Eichthal et C^o, THURNEYSEN, MALLET brothers, Emiie Pereire. ;

How is it that Mr. Gouin's name appears on This list? We seem to recall that the Puritan A. Gouin publicly stated a year ago that he would foreign to any company and to any shareholding... So believe the bankers. Since the founding of the North Road, S, M. Rothschild presided several times

what he calls a shareholders' meeting; but we don't
It can be admitted that, as a holder of 40 shares, Mr. de Rothschild therefore composes the council as he sees fit, and on three of the hundred Psesian shareholders, he has two hundred devoted to him.
This means that the assemblies do not have the power to exercise
This presents a serious contrast. The two Pereires, Isaac and Emile, are part of the management and supervisory board: "Who Could anyone doubt the genius of these Israelites? we read in (e Cénie civil, tome xxx, p. 329), 'do we not remember the regularity with which the Cook was consumed made for the Saint-Germain line (1)? Don't we know that thousands of bags had blown away like holes Crow skins.

The last meeting of the Rothschild company was signaled by requests to purchase land located at-near the train stations, and which are meant to swallow up the money of shareholders. We also asked for 40 franc tokens.
"Gentlemen administrators," exclaimed Mr. Gouin, "These gentlemen, are too generous to receive a salary, but Tokens are something else entirely. Indeed, the administrators ordinary people will receive only 1,000 francs per year to prepare themselves to visit the administration twice a month. As for the
As managing directors, they will fulfill functions in-free third parties, but they will receive a measly ten of a thousand francs per year in attendance fees. In total, the the selfless dedication of the administrators will cost no more than one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand francs Divine RoTaschIlp fools. The divine Jew himself receives his 40 franc token, but only out of respect for the statutes of the society. The peers of France are very
They are fond of free administrator positions. It's true.
that these free positions give rise to salaries
indirect, which range from 10 to 12,000 francs per year.

Mr. the Duke of Mouchy, administrator of the Northern Road, and some others no doubt, presides at a rate of 20,000 francs.
fixed, the board of directors of the Bordeaux road.
Mr. de la Pinsonnière is the hero of the genre. It is true that These noble peers turn their coats of arms into banners of shops.

The Journal of Civil Engineering is merciless towards the traitors: a few months before the Barentin disaster, he predicted; a few days before the one in Fampoux, he said what the causes were. Mr. Frisart, so lenient towards The companies should sometimes put the lights on. Mr. Corréard's nets. Thus, Mr. Corréard has said a thousand times that the rails were bound to weaken, because there wasn't a sufficient number of sleepers. He said that the locomotives—Mr. Rothschild's monstrous creations were too heavy, and that they could "easily derail, especially in "short-radius curves." That's what happened to Fam-Lice, and what Mr. Frissart has not yet noticed. Thing Extraordinarily, the same newspaper predicted the reshuffling of the path that is being taken today. It is therefore beyond doubt that the state engineers had delivered a fairly good railway suitable, but for locomotives weighing eight to ten tonnes, and not for locomotives weighing twenty-five (1).

Messrs. de Rothschild and Pereire, masters of part of The commercial press sought to suppress the truth. Mr. de Rothschild, who for the past two years has been constantly telling me my path of iron, my agents, my locomotives, my rails, my wa—Mr. Rothschild feigned innocence and indignation when We told him: You wanted to have the glory, have Therefore, shame and responsibility. Which has the most cha—The Jewish monarch, that's what we believed for a moment. that out of modesty he would at least throw to the victims of Fam— or compensation commensurate with his fortune. This attack against Mr. de Rothschild's scholarship has not been forgiven us; On all sides, the Jews began to push violent shouts.

. 43) AL Isaac Perçire ça Gtait alors s0ur direciçute

— 18 —

To give two hundred thousand francs to the victims and their families
A thousand, for whom did we take the king of the Jews?
Had we forgotten who we were dealing with? The mo—
The universal no-polisher, in fact, knows no good deeds.
than those who have a bonus.

King Rothschild's lawyers claim that we have—vons offended. Well then! So be it, only the truth offends.

So, among a thousand, an episode of the Naples rent.

The old Falconnet house had long been burdened time of payment of Neapolitan annuities; the divine Rothschild asked the Falconnet company to release this payment to him. Could one refuse this divine golden calf? The Falcon house-net didn't think so. Everything was very good at first; but the year lastly, Rothschild issued a proclamation to announce—cer que Ha rente neapolitane devant être converti de 5 à 4050; consequently, he announced that he would return 27.50 francs. for each document or certificate, and 22 francs for a title at bearer. The annuity of 110 francs was therefore reduced to 88 francs. and the difference must first and foremost be made to Mr. the baron, this without prejudice to the 3 francs that the noble Jewish island took formerly for each retirement certificate, to excuse all these years of detentions, they used the pretext of the danger that he It was necessary to die to come from Naples to Paris. Is this correct? Serious in 1546?

When the 27.50 or 22 francs were deposited for the conservation sion, the Baron issued receipts or provisional certificates evenings that were immediately linked to the Stock Exchange, without consent from the Ministry of Finance. These are pe—all the formalities that can be avoided by combining in the behind the scenes. However, it is not yet known if the conversion Napolilume rent will have... In case of doubt, Ka house Rothschild was careful not to abstain. AY avut, lan Lastly, for 40 million in annuities on the Paris stock exchange. The a quarter was taken by Mr. Rothscludd for the change of Others and the reduction 4 0[0]. .. -- —

— 49 —

We are assured that, on the other hand, Mr. Rothschild has withdrawn nearly a third of the annual annuity. It got to such an extent that to pay the Rothschild tax, many there renliers have seen their annuities decrease. And it is likely that The baron lost nothing. At the Stock Exchange, these are called manipulations of skill; in the honorable world they are gives a more severe name.

The King of the Jews is increasingly inclined to invade everything. He has besides its northern route, that of Saint-Quentin, that from Avignon to Marseille, — Alais to Nîmes, — Versailles, river right, — Saint-Germain, — Orléans to Vierzon and well Others! Letting a single house seize our great businesses are a danger to the country, it's a disaster for His hatred for France has always put his capital into service to our enemies. May France be at war tomorrow. with Europe and the Austrian Jxif Rothschild will make use of our gold to help the coalition. Are you unaware that the Austrian Jewish house possesses a fortune equal to a quarter of France's monetary wealth. Calculate the millions that speculation has taken from our families, you happen- rez to an incredible, fabulous figure! Now, say: All of this? France, the small merchant, and the tra- valor.

The government should have the courage to impose laws to what is called high finance; but those who had the cowardice to pay the apothecary's compensation Pritchard, are too low to rise to the height of a pa- real role. Don't the elections come from us prou- ver that it is today the cynicism of corruption and the the force of material interests; these interests to which our elect- They will sacrifice their honor and their probity. They will perish Tomorrow perhaps opening a vast field of despair and to misery. France suffered under the yoke of a customary feudalism. behind; it must fall where France is lost. Between There are two powers, there is no question: that of the government is preferable. In 1812, the infamous coalition of bankers caused the disasters in Moscow. In 18143, the House of Roths- child trafficked, peddled, paid for our defeats; feudalism fi- financially, we are being dragged today into the rut of peace at at any cost. She opposed the reunification of Belgium by- This conflicted with his business interests. Mr. Tousse- nel paints the banker thus: (1) "It's mostly the spider, this admirable and elusive emblem of the banker; a hideous insect, all claws, all eyes, all belly, but which has no chest, that is to say, no room for the heart! The spider spins its web like a trafficker sets up his shop. in all places, in all passages where there are Flies where barges to catch. She withdraws into a kind of dark den dug deep within its network and from where She sees everything that happens outside, like the trafficker in his back room behind his peephole (a Jewish name). - She constructs her nee in such a way that she is warned from the slightest visit by the general upheaval of its canvas, like the shopkeeper with the doorbells on all his doors and its windows are lined. The spider does not reject the cada- v of his victim only after sucking all of his blood, to like the merchant (or banker) who does not return his

- 20

– There are venomous spiders, just as there are debris so much wine and tea that poisons their merchandise, Finally, in this species, the big ones eat the little ones! (My– (sageries, railways, anarchic competition.)

The Jews and the English are devouring us, everything has been handed to them. True. We have English manufacturers, machinists English, English engineers, English workers, ca– English catastrophists and especially Jewish capitalists, path of

4

(4) We recommend that our readers read issues 55, 34, 35, 36 Pages 37, 38 and 39 of the JOURNAL OF CIVIL ENGINEERING. They will see the complete story The story of speculation and waste on the northern route, = The The office of the Civil Engineering Department is on rue de Choiseul, G.

e.

– HAS –

Iron from Rouen, Jews and English, the English Le Havre. The universal Mr. Loque or Locke, the famous engineer of the Ba– viaduct Rentin. Mr. Locke, who studied with a merchant of Drap is the chief engineer of the English; it is for him that the traders have diminished the merit of the French engineers Mr. Locke is an engineer who does such solid work A handful of sand is enough to destroy them. It's at

It is to men like these that we entrust the safety and lives of travelers. But Mr. Loque is a man of the companies. He Mr. Ch. Laflitte, this banker who is so..., understands perfectly. blieux, named after him. He also includes Mr. Fould, the Benoit, deputy, whose money has triumphed over the merit of Mr. Flo– Mr. Corréard would have been less accommodating. When Messrs. Fould and Léo wanted to put him in charge of the management of works on the Versailles railway; they offered him first to increase the indemnity of 40,000 francs to 100,000 francs. which had been allocated to him, in addition, they offered him 40,000 francs. per year for the entire duration of the works. Although a pa– While the price may be very ordinary in England, it is very high. in France, Mr. Corréard could not help but re– To answer: "Under what conditions are you offering me this?" – It– was on the condition of being the man of Messrs. Fould, Léo and C*. Mr. Corréard refused. Mr. Fould could tell us why...

What is known as high finance is today found today at the head of speculation. Small businesses seeing chathat day its profits would decrease, he also wanted to speculate.
Some found wealth there, all the others...
ruin and dishonor. Today, the man who is twenty
A thousand francs made for sixty thousand francs of business. He plays
The rise and fall in both food and other commodities.
tions, on foreign funds as well as on annuities. That he No matter, he'll get away with going bankrupt! And he'll be re-kept like a very scrupulous man, if he returns to his Creditors, fifteen percent. The trade offers chances of loss and gain, but any man who does not Don't calculate, and who constantly plays everything for the tone, this man is funny {ripon,5 whether he wins or loses.f We

| | 2- .

We could name names, they are there, and we have the evidence.
We could make many foreheads blush. We don't do it-
We won't. We're not seeking scandal, we want the public good. We want to draw the people's attention and The government's position: both need to know their enemies; they must be warned. We will therefore say to the government: It's a disgrace for you to hand over the France becoming like the English under Charles VII is a disgrace.
for you to hand over our finances to Jews who are more odious and more greedy than the tax farmers of the year-old monarchy.

,

The people are suffering, and our financial barons are laughing at them.
pains. It seems that, for them, the honor of the daughters of The people exist only so that they can denigrate them. In An-
In England, English workers complain that their bosses workshops steal from them, and their daughters and wives are forced into prostitution for demanding masters. In France, the ironworkers of Lyon and the Lille ironworks make their voices heard to make the same complaints. Young girls were forced to prostituting oneself to a foreman or a clerk in order to have the bone of earning a little bread in exchange for their work.

If you don't take drastic measures, the problem will only worsen; and Financial feudalism will leave us, after its brutal domination—
tion, shame, dishonour and misery,

Allow us one last return to the question
railways. When the state had this magnificent idea,
He could achieve this by calling on all the capitalists to join him.
of France. The State, confusing its interests with those of people, would have formed a strong and powerful alliance: he did not Nothing happened; the high barons asked and they got involved.
eager to obey. Like the nobles of the Middle Ages, they have

– 23 –

wanted to also have their toll rights on the roads, the
bridges and rivers (4). | e

SM Rothschild, this neo-Jew who closes #08 credit and Israelites, who refuse to submit to the barbaric custom of the civic genocide, asks Saint-Germain for his part and Versailles. Mr. Fould, of the tribe of Levi or of Benjamin, is content with a left bank line, in the laudable intention—tion to create disastrous competition for the Jewish baron or to its shareholders. Wasn't the State supposed to pay?
THE costs of war. One day, a sinister event occurred.
came to frighten Paris: one hundred people perished in the flames
my; the sons of the petitioners appealed to justice, and the justice, which condemns an imprudent cab driver, has condemned the victims to pay costs. That's roughly what has happened for St. Etienne, for Rouen, and what will happen, Don't doubt it, for Fampoux.

The ministry of April 45th had the commendable idea of the mo-popole by the State; the Journal des Débats had published excellent articles in this sense, but, the day after the presentation of the project, Mr. Michel Chevalier, author of the pre-first articles, wrote one in the opposite direction, calculated that three billion would be needed for the expense, and exclaimed: –
"€ Four billion! Where would we find them?" The press in-Tiere repeated this refrain, and the project was killed.

The government has retained only one right, the right to do the lines and then to concede them to the Jews, As for the few-

(1) This reminds us of the company of the three bridges on the Seine, which, although pes due. Oh! Parisians!!! A man who stole a penny would get three months of prison. How many months does this account allocate to the members of the companies that make a few hundred thousand francs in profit per year. We would be delighted to know the current status of Mr. Hingray's complaint. compared

ne D
= 94 -

He was completely excluded, the court corrected
The tional of Mantes has decided that the administrations of Railways are not required to have carriages
for the people. L |

For thirty years, our ministers have tried in vain to to pass the law on the conversion of annuities, that is to say They had to give up on the fair taxation of capital. The law is such that the State is obliged to make people pay, not
He who possesses, but he who does not possess. Turgot is Robert was sent to the ministry for thinking this out loud.
Peel fell for having done it in England in the quesgrain production. Mr. Guizot is completely incapable of
To do it: the king alone has enough strength and energy for that.
Therefore, our financiers fear him more than they love him;
and this has been the case from Mr. Ganneron to Mr. Jacques Lefebvre, from King Rothschild to the last of the Saint-Simoniens.

Usury is devouring France in all its forms. According to Mr. Michel Chevalier, the budget should be estimated at 2 billion that usury levies on social transactions, without comp-determine the cost to the country of protecting those who claim to be large industries.

We are forced to stop, but we
We propose to publish as soon as our documents are complete.
a third brochure, full of new facts, of new-
the studies and a conclusion.

YET HER MAJESTY ROTH&C'IILD Iern

We don't understand why we have so little respect for each other.
to sing the praises of a man whom public opinion blamed for all our misfortunes, we cannot conceive that one deteriorates to the point of writing for or against for a few Underneath, they dared to compare Mr. Rothschild to Mr. Laflitte. There is Indeed, there are many points of resemblance. In 1815, Mr. Na-

— JS me

than speculated within the family about the Waterloo disaster;
4815, Mr. Laffitte gave bread to the soldiers of the Loire (4).
In 1815, Messrs. Rothschild, bailiffs to the kings, requested the war contribution imposed on France; Mr. Laffitte proposed to fill it using a national subscription.
A Margrave of Hesse entrusts his wealth to Mr. Anselm who uses it to increase his fortune; Napoleon hands over 5 million lions to Mr. Laffitte who kept the deposit in its entirety.

Against his own interests, Mr. Laffitte supported the conversion of annuities. Mr. de Rothschild gives shares to three hundred deputes to make them defend his interests.

Mr. Laffitte founded the discount house, this noble
A company so useful to small businesses. SM Rothschild has stock speculation has been a cause of ruin.
and resold on the Stock Exchange.

Mr. Laflitte was using the bank as an instrument of powersance and charity. For what purpose does Mr. Roths-Child? What did he do? – Railways. We believe having proven that this will bring him little glory in lava-
Nir. One cannot have both glory and money.

A member of parliament from R. calls Mr. Rothschild one of the greatest citizens of France, this is not very flattering for her, because
Mr. Rothschild would be Austrian, if he were not Jewish and cos-Mopolite; the same gentleman says that his German nobility is worth its weight in gold compared to the French nobility, perhaps that of yesterday, th never again. He continues in an abracadabra style; to to say that the noble Jew is the guardian angel of France,
Far from winning ours, he spreads his own with both hands.

He gives food to the smallest humans.

And his goodness extends over all of nature,

(4) Two million,

– 96 –

This Rothschild Ra is a true Providence, as is the author
He doesn't think he's doing too much by exclaiming:

Nothing is beautiful, nothing is great in the century we live in:
The truth displeases, and lies are everything.

The envious are obsessed with the deeds of GREAT MEN!
And its awful poison is found everywhere.

When you think that such platitudes are addressed to
Mr. James, one feels sorry for a servant who even soils his livery.

One point of comparison that has been overlooked is that which exists between Mr. Laffitte making a king and rejecting him far from him honors and titles, and a banker who, through sheer force of Lending to kings grants titles of nobility which are genuine securities. Loan securities.

We will not talk about the abuse that has been made of the paro-
Mr. Lamennais's, the great writer, did not preach the a selfish, one-family community; he preached fra-
the eternity of peoples, the union of all for the good of all.
This is Mr. Lamennais's thought, and it is also ours. We Let's not make a crime against Mr. de Rothschild of poverty from his father. Mr. Laffitte was poor, but if the latter were Mr. de Rothschild remembered it all his life, he had too often... bfié. When one is the product of one's own work, one has the right to...
to be proud. But Mr. James only had the trouble of being born. You have a unbearable pride that has made him retain it for 16 years the name of Artois Street on his addresses: Mr. James did not wanted to recognize the name of Laffitte Street. This smallness makes to know what a great man we are dealing with.

What makes me even more well-known is the scandal.
which he let happen before paying for his daughter's shopping basket. The
The agreed price was 30,000 francs, but the Baron refused.
to pay only 24,000 francs, and dared to let himself be condemned by a Commercial court.
The same king of the Jews had prayed to M, Jehener of Jui

- 97 -

buy various rare manuscripts at a sale; then, when Island bookseller had bought, SM ft in choice and paid for it foft {adre-
Mr. Techener, not being bothered by the manuscripts, he did not bring the Jewish baron to trial, but he regretted having dealt with him.

In the country house at Ferrières, 5. Mr. receives seph; but SM sells his game to Chevet, which makes qæ Rothschild's friends can kill anything that is... sent at the end of their rifles, but they could carry nothing away

ter. One day, a guest wanted to evade the instruction; he hid a pheasant and hung it in the fireplace that evening.
his room, but the guard had warned his host; the len-tomorrow morning Mr. Rothschild, wishing to find the pheasant Lost, the 8th book led to useless investigations; finally, he enters at his friend's house, dressed in hunting attire and accompanied by his dog.
Suddenly, the dog stopped dead in its tracks in front of the fireplace.

"There's something here," exclaimed SM.
He watched the demonstrations of his dog, the king of the Jews.
he passed the stick of his rifle through the sniper's tail and in fact to fall, a beautiful pheasant.

"My little one is chasing you away," he said, and he goes out with the pheasant.

"Excuse me," said his friend, "he takes the pheasant, makes him a..."
he marked his paw with his knife, saying, don't Please note, this is so you can recognize it tomorrow at Chevet's.

NOTE 1.

MR. DK THE PINSONNIÈRE.

Mr. de la Pinsonnière is a Peer of France; Mr. de la Pinson-
M. de la Pinsonnière is a count; M. de la Pinsonnière is the director of a banking house, president of three railway companies

- 28 -

e iron and administrator of six others, which makes a small
A total of ten jobs: we can see that there is no need to be
A government employee to hold multiple jobs. Well, you might say,
Look at the shareholders. But no, because the directors,
The directors and presidents of the companies are named themselves. Ask that good gentleman from the Pin-
But, one might say, these jobs are still honorary.

What?

In the century we live in,
Honor is an empty word in the eyes of our great men.

Mr. de la Pinsonnière knows this very well; so what does he ask-
t-11? Not much; attendance tokens when he is administer and some 10,000 francs per year when he is president.
Can we deny this to a man who surpasses Napoleon and Caesar, and who dictates to nine secretaries at once? That would be having a very hard soul.

Moreover, Mr. de la Pinsonnière is in no way a function-public sector, it's an independent with a hundred thousand francs' worth of income.
DRE per year. Independence is very expensive today.

ui:

THE 1,574
NOTE 2. +

This is from yesterday.

{It is worth remembering that the O'Neill company formed, in 1845,
a company whose purpose is to undertake construction of the Dijon to Mulhouse railway (1); the prospectuses said that this company presented superbes. Moreover, to reassure and embrace the shareholder, we pro-put, art. 17:

"The payments made before obtaining the con-transfer, enjoy an interest rate of 3,010 per year, one month after the collection.

Act passed before Me Ducloux, notary, 8 April and 9 May 1845.

- 99 -

"In the event of no concession being granted, the funds paid will be refunded" grants awarded to eligible beneficiaries, without any deduction and increase-
"The interest rates specified below."

Based on these promises, subscribers flocked to... and made their payments. But the operation, which appeared-
She knew how beautiful she was in 1845, but appeared detestable on July 6th (thirteenth).
months later). Consequently, subscribers were asked to come and withdraw their funds from Mr. O'Neill, the banker of the company, July 25th.

The shareholders therefore presented themselves, requesting the re-their investment, plus the promised 3,010. But nothing came of it.
request. The board of directors, "after having long-"Deliberately and very deliberately," he had decided not to pay a penny of interest,

To console the shareholders, Mr. O'Neill made them to say that it was with the deepest regret that he participated to this carelessness on the part of the administrators; that he would have "desired"
not to be responsible for the distribution of funds," but that there was obliged as the company's banker.

The shareholders then went to 'the home of Mr. the Count of LA PINSONNIÈRE, Chairman of the Board of Directors, peer of France, etc. The noble peer was in Normandy, and his
The concierge was unable to precisely state the location of his residence.
'cile, Consequently, the case was brought before the court of commerce, and Messrs. de la Pinsonnière, de Freulleville, Félix O'Neill, banker; Saint-Laurent, banker; Antoine Lu-Zarche, railway administrator; Gabrie! Heun;
Girard and Bonnet will have to answer for this proof of practice.
industrial bité.

NOTE 3.

The authorization to acquire land in the vicinity of Main railway stations is a worthy invention of the Rothschild trader and his lieutenant, Mr. Pereire; that is

tem 30 LEA f 4

the most elastic formula for leading to ruin com-
complete shareholders, under the guise of making them profitable,
in an operation completely outside that of the path of iron, all the crazy and extravagant expenses that these skilled contractors work on part of the road construction.
iron which remains the responsibility of the company; works of which exaggeration, in everything related to form and weight
and its qualities are pushed to their extreme limits.
emails in the opposite direction to what should be; so that These combined follies naturally lead to expenses almost double what should be done. These are these misfortunes and these false measures that we are going to unfold-read successively in these notes.

Let's return to the issue of land, including the acquisition is nothing more than a fraudulent operation, grafted onto the operation of the railway, authorized by law.

Eu eflet, read this law, what does it say? that all land necessary for the construction of the railway and stations those dependent on it will be delivered to the company by the State. Now, what exactly are the lands you want to buy? ter in the vicinity of train stations? Doesn't that constitute 11 an operation completely unrelated to that of the cheminide iron, and therefore, do not constrain the shareholders, by a cunning and subtle means, to participate in an entre- a take that can only be uncertain and disastrous for them? because even if it were certainly good, you wouldn't be enough clumsy to come and offer it to them to share; it edifies you- laugh on these grounds a beautiful and good company in cum- inandite and you would create new assignats that you would sell at the highest possible price on the Stock Exchange, using your fair- seurs de teurs de sobelelets.

SL, if you don't behave like that, it's obviously because Acquiring your land is a bad deal; but it serves as a pretext for you to make a contribution that you

Grow in your own way, and make them pay well dear to the unfortunate shareholders of the railway; it serves you as yet another pretext to justify the exorbitant tax levy.

ex -

a capital injection of 200 million for the railway company of the North, of which 150 were to be sufficient for all the work at your expense. Then, tell us under the which article of your statutes, your general assembly, to received sufficient power so that May, and so many thousands other shareholders, may we consent and endorse by our silence, what is illegal, ubiquitous and exorbitant both in the powers that a few centai- A group of clerks gathered in assembly under your command? All is therefore unlawful, fraudulent, and cannot be sanctioned by the justice system, as soon as it is seized of the matter, let us hope that it will not turdera pus à l'être, JOURNAL OF CIVIL ENGINEERING (July).

NOTE 4.

1} It seems that I was right in my attacks against Mr. Rothschild, because all his friends are very angry, and each One day I see their fury erupt, either in an anonymous letter-nyme, either in a pamphlet courageously signed by... initials or a false name.

1} First there was an alleged response from Rothschild 1°. To Sutun the last, king of the Impostors. All that The trivial insult can give rise to what has been displayed there, and I forgive it. would gladly have praised the author if he hadn't begun with a slander-infamous denial, for which I am determined to seek justice, as soon as The task I set will be finished.

I won't say anything about the new answer; I've already skimmed it. and rejected with disgust.

I cannot say the same for the pamphlet entitled A Jew to the French people. I will even quote a few fragments-mens to make known the style of Mr. Roths-'s friends ch11 (1).

TO MR. GEORGES DAIRNVELL, kb! What, another insult?
What dare they do to our worship!

(1) For sale, passage du Granud-Cerf, 22.

0

And, no doubt, it's just spite

Who brought forth this cursed writer, _ . :-:

A pamphleteer, a fanatic,

Who believed, pushing the criticism
To the point of baseness, to the point of contempt for the law,
To make a name for oneself through one's sad exploits...
No, the people are now enlightened.
11 knows that THE CHILD OF ISRAEL IS CIVILIZED;

Would the Jew doubt it?

I just want to say one word to you,
And to prove to you that you're just a fool.

But what can be done against an unfortunate
Deprived of reason, who believes himself to be happy
When he defamed an entire race,
For the sole purpose of filling his bag;
Because it was also self-interest that guided your hand,
When you wrote without thinking about tomorrow.

But, like us, Rothschild shows kindness,
And only with his contempt does he "feed".

Yes, our people of Israel are too great
To stoop down to you, who are crawling away.
Also, without a film, without any other idea than reason,
I want to teach you this lesson.

Professor, I suppose you would have somewhat need, beforehand, to study French and prosody.

Return to a more positive attitude in this regard.
'And looking back on sixteen years, casts a single glance,
And so, setting aside all slavery,
You'll see that freedom is our prerogative.
All together, and of the same nation,
Let us therefore forge only one religion:
By gathering around the tricolour flag,
"May July 1830 re-emerge,

PRE LI

And now for the sole purpose,
To forever all be good Frenchmen,

Signed: EUGÈNE GOUDCHAUX.

These gentlemen's prose is worth their poetry. Therefore, judge for yourselves.
In fact, their prose is less amusing. I don't ex-does not accept that of Mr. Lesalopier (1), author of a hoax Title: Ten Days of the Reign of Rothschild I, King of Jews. Only, I am committing a crime against Mr. LESALOPIER by soto sign one's name to a depravity of which one is the author, even when we go and spread it, promising, to the one who will want to reissue it, A BONUS from Mr. Rothschild.

I will not address here the insults and defamation of these Gentlemen. Some deserve only contempt, others pity, and one of them the punishment that awaits the slanderer.

At the time of going to press, we were informed a new brochure which, in style, departs in every way the supposed answers that were given to us. MAD., author of The Truth about the Rothschilds, is a man serious, although he is opposed to us by ideas and by the Our sympathies. We are pleased to do him justice, while deploring the blindness that keeps him in the camp of Rothschild (1). We will respond to MAD... in a... a more extensive work which will be published in about two months.

NOTE 5.

We wholeheartedly support the ideas expressed.
by Peaceful Democracy in an excellent article which Here is an excerpt:

"What should true patriots, who do not want to do, do?"
To bend the knee before the Golden Calf and its impure pontiffs?

(1) Probably a relative of the famous voter of that name.

(2) WAR ON THE JEWS, or the TRUTH ABOUT MM, DK ROTHSCHILD, = Ches Martinon. pr ann Vs 1 to Le

es –

"Organize resistance to the new throughout the country"
feudalism, to reveal without restraint its atteptates against the freedom and general prosperity, his odious speculations
The idea of monopoly, speculation, hoarding, and usury, its corrupt maneuvers to buy off the power at bargain prices
see public and electoral colleges, And if on the board of all feudal iniquities, if at the memory of two great revolutions made to inaugurate the reign in the world
We see stirrings of equality and fraternity in people's hearts.
We must not rush to address the torrents of hatred and contempt.
to calm these righteous angers. No one is inevitably con– frages, to crush the weak, to establish in the world the venality, fraud, the debasement of souls. The cons-public science is right in not separating in its severity criminals and crimes; it is also good that for want of nobler sentiments there are in the souls of traffickers at least have the feeling of fear, the only one that could contain them. They would laugh too easily at the displeasurelords of the people who would never threaten to burst into love at first sight.

No, we must admit it, the new monarchy at
The safe is preparing cruel expiations. Sooner or later,
The minority of unarmed slaves counted themselves and took revenge.
And history tells us what those acts of revenge were. The same ending is at the end of the same iniquities in all eras, because that God does not allow peace and happiness to dwell Long endured oppression. Free to the new lords.
to take the chance by exploiting the tra- populations vagrants whom misery delivers to their sultanic whims and of tyrants, but they should expect reactions that are the sign and providential punishment of evil.

"The dynastic monarchy may believe itself to be selfless"
in this battle of subjects. She is mistaken. We we warn him with a sincere sense of condo-
a spree for undeserved misfortunes. In the eyes of the people,
She bears the responsibility for all the grievances. If feudalism

55 -

The people believe that the dynasty reigns because it governs.
The consequence is obvious, and the recent manifestation of the jardin des Tuileries la révète an besoin. Toute victime des industrial crises and commercial anarchy will want to do like Joseph Henry, a spectacular death, Lé dus will completely lose its political character; - since Alibaud has already lost him; - this will become a phenomenon social and industrial; and Mg Le examples, surrounded by pulicitness and crowned with immortality, will perhaps suffice for
to make it an epidemic, like fire in certain erasquestions. A reason weakened by sophistry, embittered by the Matheur, doesn't have much to do to convince himself that he victims of fatal knife wounds are permitted to wear
a fatal blow to those she regards as the sacrifices-
"

[TO THE ISRAELITES]

I bear no ill will whatsoever towards the Jews, whom I regard as my brothers. Every religion seems respectable to me, and religious Jewish community, by virtue of its antiquity and admirable history, has right to our veneration and respect; but I want to those who are called Jews, that is to say, according to the meaning-popular fiction, sellers or dealers of silver. I deliberately use the word "Jewish," firstly because it renders my thought; then, because I would like the Jews not to re-They would no longer keep that name as an insult, and that will happen. as soon as some of them cease to deserve it. The few-The Jewish people hold a glorious place in the history of nations; No race has been more fertile in brilliant individuals. Unfortunately, they believed that God had granted them the monopoly of exploitation, and they brought a kind of Fanaticism in the art of extorting humankind. The

ME 56 -

Jews, as they are in part, are no longer of their time; They remained the Jews of the Middle Ages, instead of showing themselves worthy of the public rights granted to them. I am not saying That's only for part of it. The part that inspires repulsion in me. justinctive, As for the Jewish merchants or others, who have earned a reputation for integrity and selflessness, I value them as much as, and even more than, some Christians. I com-I take it, and I love equality too much to incite hatred. Jews. I use that word as a deserved punishment. by a few. The noble character of some Israelites gives me hope that in the not-too- distant future my accusations today's tions cannot be reproduced without in-justice.

It was necessary that the mass of Jews themselves drive out the ven-deers of the teiple, saying to them, "My father's house "is a house of prayer, and you have made it a ca-"A set of values."

GEORGES DAIRNVÆLL.

EXTRACT FROM THE SUMMARY.

The servants. - To a slander. - To MPR - The newspapers that one does not Doesn't read. - The cost of bad prose. - What is my goal? - The Usurious feudalism. - 1815, the Jews, merchants of old clothes. - Where's the 60 million?! - Fraudulent sale of shares - We live of shame. - 60 million yielding 800 million in interest. - From the mono-

bankers, what it brings in. – A former candle seller, re-representing the people.– 250,009 shares sold in a quarter of an hour.

– Order to merge with the Rothschilds. – The bags of coal, of which
Mr. Isaac Pereire came out very pale. – The attendance tokens. – the re-Little-known sayings. – The Neapolitan loan. – Jewish monopolies.
– Material interests. – The spider and the banker. – Legal thefts.
– Mr. Locke. – The road to Le Havre and the Versailles line. Profashionable biting. –The neo-Jews. –The people. –Usury. –Messrs. Rothchild and Laffitte. – Borrowed nobility. – A great administrator de-interested. – To the Israelites.

AVAILABLE FROM THE SAME PUBLISHER:
The 15th edition of

ROTHSCHILD. I",
KING OF THE JEWS.

BY GEORGES DAIRNVÆLL.
Price: 50 cents.

Rothschild Reyauté – The Jewish dynasties – Fuld I and his dynas-tie. – Founder of the Rothschild family. – He started with nothing and capitalizes millions. – The Margrave of Hesse. – The illustrious re-tons. – Influence of 48145 and Waterloo on the fortunes of bankers Jews. – The Biographers. – Audacity of Mr. James. – Sublime trait which consists of returning a deposit. – Still 14815 and the Rothschilds. – 135 million in bonuses. – Rothschild loans save the coalition.
Gift and England. – The Rothschilds, bailiffs to kings. – The loan of 1825. – Cross and honors. – Motto of the dynasty. – 41830. – Na.
than or Satan. – Loan scandals of 1844. – Anecdotes. – Che-Northern iron ore mine. – Fraud. – Scandal. – Disgrace. – WAR
TO THE ROBBERS.–Ovation of the Rothschilds, – Revelations. – Catastrophe
July 8th. – What the Rothchilds will do.

OFFICE PRINTING, 22 COQUILLÈRE STREET.

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves
precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs to the public domain. "Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to copyright and therefore is not subject to expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our knowledge, too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced in this edition. The long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to find its way back to the public is a testament to the value of books and the importance of making them accessible to all.

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them available. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

- + Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

- + Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the servers of Google or any other research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field of artificial intelligence. For large amounts of text, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of Google Books for works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service to you.

- + Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential to inform the user of the source of the document and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not delete the watermark. No cases.

- + Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is your responsibility to be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that it is in the public domain in other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country. The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply posting a book on Google Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to which you are subject. The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages, Google Books Search contributes to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google Books Search allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and publishers to reach a wider audience.

online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

ER,

LAS.

Last
D, 5 t

CE CE

tt , .
RANATIIET
2.1. LA: «

+

pa
The. 2!

EX

HAS,

Oh
There

shoot rares

"s.
CAR |
D |

born
L

FE

LPS
re rtlit y
CPE NT"

.,
ARS

Lr

d'u PSS fi EC:

CCLEIIAR
.

r re #7,

HAS
nn.

L

PPS MAT IT
AE BATH
The "At

CN
4 +

HAS"

CAFTNAEY "+
LPC S

Nrrtrar dd;
of

Li
Aus
+

–
THERE

pe.

1°

L

e
s4
r 4
#,
L |

•
everr! PL
SAALILEN LT: >

AAA ALT" by rJ

(fe) Er 7.7 y

ff} Pr F ve

CEA – Pr Ld +

EC 4 To fs! fs . / " y A:

ARENA VIS ST at ÿ
or

LIAI TAN f

RSI AC er

AIAX
LAN 2,

SEATED AECLES
re trfrr Nr

ls 4
,
RS: "A,
y

ds dot

AA Su 6 / J'ént de f Fe ;
! m L LA ? s - TZ p FE" r [#2 PA A Ep | sr
y PACA NALS PRE CR / REIN LES
"ALP LPS: ASP
HAS , '
Fr * 242 v

AG
rr 1} a YOUR T,

r

LS
THE

ln,

us

Li

[3 DS 2

r [rare

has. "

r - - "

#7 ef hs 2r to" +

J #1" f rÆ COL Te , - PL 2 Di er Le

V4 me of a | Fe Nr ANA L Sd" pi CERATT CA +.

PUY ALLER A. v 4 LA É > Es: 4 ERP M4 t} A, + + - : LS » A,

"£ CET ACEErE as.

" _

ve

of", -. =

+

s

LE AS s'ettle Li

PS

L

4

J ve 2 .

TRS

high at

an Dee A, Lee "

Li CVS NOIRS

r

... +

27th,

Dr.

21

CRAN LE

AE

rL,

f- #
"SHOUT Z"

'hit this
ALAN EIT T4
RANEPALLIT

A 4

tr.
|

CLS
Cr
#d: THE TO r,

6.28.

4
|

*

av rr

REA
5

ALES
E
L4

2
LL

R0D

Ke

a Le

>

=

se

»

—

=

+

' to _ æ , 4" L
Ji 4
_ - . LL. va 5 - + w:
ne cat à AN LL, APT 11» vrs Pre | _ vel _ ... "" «)
FI + LR LAN LUS. FT The:
» L » < »

re A% PR? Qi Pen
Q +

4 WTA ee » pc 7 Mons

4 The

ie 7% “+, LE , +, SA
LM

F FR + ED + fs to ls ns 10th Te EN ed

dice: AE han dre Pt + PS TO SES + LS 4 Ds to LR + 4% & 4%

SNS AR NON + DE + ME + MEL Ne M 4 DR 4 NE à ui we de tre tte 18e + A 4

SA + POEN Le He + OM $ PR & ee # A to re To N.: “S LEE AN ” AK * 4N $ PE + From + PE + par
Late, 26. PP " } 4 +ês + + “fe ge + 2 “ es + s Ds es Rs $ PA & PE 4 PEN ds \ À » R À” à +:

MEET IE ITA ES 6 ME + ME to ME to Mn Bu to ne de dr 9 + 188 + A8 to 48 to 38

de: 4 » & +&s: 2 “4; LES N # pe e 2: à # PE Fe LE + %: ; La EE + ie <f- Xe “à. pe RSS NZ 4

s ONE: ; + + 6 + ES 4 US to ne | dr ia 7e sn he er ie AN AN FAR DR TO AR

7 nie <> ° AA ; The La FORT Qip D EL to es he Len to AD , in

' | + I: states e Se een ne SU to to

'e) + ne » db, 2 » LS Se Las 3 z va 2 5 de D +7 + É “+ 7: + De sa De % NZ ; 2 :

ST TRANSS fu +58 HS + 4 Se + D + + 4 +5 + 8e & Pet HT.

this | é x dd , LÉ PNY JE Cv LP CT Von À LD E 4 à c

UN UR Men ne mate re à Mo

Ne + 4 to to + + 2 | FRS NE AN AN AN DR TO AN AR + ES + DE

UE D VE PE DU

he: ' "> *&> : AN ê ES

ù + + +&s + + + ss # FN The of “ke Pc + ES & x 4. US,

LAN NN + ME to JE to ME + JE 4 JU to ag One in

PS7 NP ES RUN AN D AR DR + DE + JE

A SR GR RU LE LE SS + to of to

Æ + DR FO to JU to NU: NE T'en E

js Le. at 4 LE 2nd Z 4th pue +5 “$- ER + Z “4

D Frs *

THERE

ES

“fe

+

+

AND a

+:

&

PR “–
7

L4

+

L)
AR

”

D:

#

3 Er OR
>
be +–

ee, /

Es +
+

gold

L PL

F Er À
<
9?
>

&

&

L4

D: - 485.4

é « < > + to
SRE LE IT IT ICE

LD 9 ME 8 + of + 6 to to ds to RIM
#

bone

©: "4, +
Fr 6 to GP
+ 0 E 0
A x SAR OS
: 7 + M to
LI
* " « The 'sus:
dk N
The: " x XX x ': » 2 « $ < « * " »
Rx RE ee L] . ; : + F0

#1 YEARS ec" PC ne The , . . . fl

AS FU ER s NA a SA at 1% + +
to "4" ds x ° ste" MECS xx . te re È x L]
Re: È PS x ' . '." AM " CRC Ce S0 x Se » : x " D "£

. ' « : \ " The. to : "
4 2 F. 1 2 street ./ (2 +: OT » « }n | h: °: EL: -. Lt #
*, L # . L XX Dee de Ue 2" "108 CS en de eat 00 .« a,: À . ":\
", THE REST COM, din 27 * To ae do RIT ROC! This * AC "

? AA 4 " « _ En",! . N2TA. Dry." s MON Y PACA Friday of
: ? »@"R CL AT T LI o L k L 4, C Le Lré LD rELER n vu L » Car 0e DD « ere :

ET. AXE" Ne #, " Me - VATE sat x ù + LA VAUC
Ps - MO on, +. LA x: 4th Fe.'

LR e ss" DCR A je, © dé see re û Des PLU PL Ne 42 k :
ee LL. : " : :

. » – THE 4
. 0" % 0r L ev RAR CNE" Re.
» (
LA?7t4! } ,
) Car De 7
L

N'% LAaALX
L ,

Manon
EN" È
DAS L'ART Le EC
FT AP ON" d eu AL 00 « RAC ECS NO AR EC
D MAL Y Ver? Cate Re LAT T NN +) RS + UN: 2:
PA AR AL A Me Ra TN PNA ANT ANT DR T
0 PC Cr OP: KENYA
.. THERE

2 1 ... 2,."
+ : The De
10 v LT æ L

,
fen
e,"

I C4
? : : Ar eu" 1e" L en

the L4 mn i. » M". | M | _ . LA] 7: i: This

OF ART | ' -* ee An, «\) : * : : Æ | : €
CR, 4 VA, 1.0"

DORA TON TO GOLD, THE AR " CCRS AND c R
VD OA TN TO ME LR TO SAN PU
p} NN POP PS DO LL ONE, TO RSS + ON THIS ES TO A ue AUS ne de aa PP AN AN AN AR SR
pe A QU AUX AN ne DU à 1 de 7 en Pia ENS EN EN P
NOR 0 RM. NN. RON PE PS A LE RC CR CT PT: NP RS MERS TRE" PL ONE LE to bn ON 4h AUS AE AMEN of in AS ne of UP NT Ne QD 1 OR ls AN, AUX D bitter
ON UP Nb NT Nr OU EC

EN. ARLES |) LL RL. LR
CARMEN Green A
SN at 4 te

LA N 2"
Len
HAS

To the EN
R0 CC LCR CU SUUES
DD COR CC LR OR C7) M0
DL |, ARR ARR I. AR the A
NL" BODY 'to LOL
7.
RER L''Lte.

. “:
L"J tés

[} 24,752
Fr 117

11 Es es.
} . se {
dd

4,
? , ; {
PR / {; 40

FREEMASONRY |
fe ge Buauteurss vu fhelbr test |
born

H0UC IOUQ YOU DDNIDDOQ YOU DO 2700110. – IMPRIMERIE DB BOURSY.
D DO DAC DD NO DDOGDDAGÈDO

ADEEe–

LS
°° n <
to L: v nt
to
, *
\ 0r C2 =,
e \

There

BORN

Digitized by Google

L
|
|
|

Digitized by Google

?

© PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

OF THE

FREEMASONRY

ITS PRINCIPLES, ITS ACTIONS AND ITS TENDENCIES,

arm Qa7 l

f {f | i
auffmann and Cherpín.
£ 4x *

ss __- . 7
__ r
EE
- nm A .
=
: " : ù -
3
4 ur ; re LD
MER = 4 ra t-
L Va: = 24 * :
'M \ : F " Ve CELA
' z "à » x X),, MM &° =
v'... = ra + 2 C + + rer 2
D. AI 5
- to î". # ex >, SAT ul
s RON ET APE LS
D TON . L: / The [1 year
> « 74 DE ei He, SEA PPT
"2 tW ae N° AC Aer
AE » y Ne
ti Lh" PARTS:
12 3 rs AS of
e. v 4. #} 3: "This mi to \z
Fr 4 _ to ST = ER , es: F = - of
4 Cl ds" | DATA ie tal à anse EE:
+ E-- < r 2 + 2 [y F =
+ . = » ; Fr
kr = = _ . 7 ct e - a = D = _
n
.
|
D ao
has -

LYON.
I CHE PIN, Er

t
t TS <r DEAN LI to a FPE D of ) : { TE {
0 'af JS Pan Di + Ve Jus JL JUS

1850.

Many writers have,

Freemasonry; this institution
was attacked with a viva-extreme city by men who had an interest in the de-
to stun, to destroy; she has
was defended with energy
skillfully, by insiders.
In this line of thought, the struggle is interesting because she has a but which is not without great-
; deur; it is, for an order to which a huge number of people are affiliated.
to continue his work, to move towards the realization of his views, to the application of his principles, or to succeed-

ee

to descend under the hatred or ridicule inspired by the men-dream. The books written for or against have therefore a genuine interest, because they cooperate in a work important; dictated by a desire for destruction or conservation, they work towards the triumph of an idea, and
In this respect, they deserve attention.

Dissidence has arisen within Freemasonry.
nonsense; a human institution, like all others, without with the exception of those who have exerted some influence on society, She submitted to the law of humanity. No real schism was possible in Freemasonry, since its principle is simple and clear-sighted; but such is the weakness of men,
Such are their passions, their vanity, their errors,
that schisms have broken out, not over dogma, -
This was impossible, we repeat, - but on the nature of the ruling power, on its possession, on its acts. Schisms erupt in religions, they divide profoundly affects men; the negation of a doctrine obscure, doubt surrounding an incomprehensible mystery,
arm populations against each other; the blood
As humanity sinks, it groans from the cruelties committed in the name of
of God, and a few years later the bloodiest victories, when the sword believes it has had its last word, When extermination thinks it has destroyed everything, the peoples find themselves face to face with the same believers
these, more rooted than ever, demanding freedom
for their worship.

Happier, Freemasonry has not had bloody schism, and never, in this respect, nor the Neither misfortune that leads astray, nor fortune that dazzles, have fit

commits a crime against humanity. However,
the spirit of domination, inherent in human nature, has divided the followers; their vanity created distinctions, and
The spirit of contention manifested itself when the persecution
the response against them was less violent.

We wrote long essays, we passionately engaged a lodge, sometimes an entire Orient, for reasons secondary; external quarrels, which served so well, the enemies, whom they seemed to incite, stopped the Freemasonry movement, the development of his great thought. The unnamed volumes-brables born in these inglorious struggles seem to us
more harmful than the most ardent attacks.

These two causes inspired the writers of the Freemasonry has joined another cause which has none of the grandeur of the first, which does not have,
like the second, the excuse of a struggle, fatal it is true, but finally of a struggle which drives, which stirs;
That's speculation.

Between the ardent attacks, the conscientious defenses its, the public, unable to understand the nature of the inhis institution, had remained undecided; his curiosity was piqued by retracing the temple ceremonies, describing the
The challenges that await newcomers, by printing the words one needs to know to penetrate the interior lodges. Curiosity answered the call and made the success.

By publishing a book on Freemasonry, we do not Let us not come to defend the order that we do not attack.

France, nor take sides with either of the two major powers
see those who lead Freemasonry – if they walk

0 mm mm

—.

Den es ni et ua

es 0 ue te

To the same end, we do not look at the banner, — nor reveal what was meant to remain a mystery. We have just to trace the philosophical history of Freemasonry, that is to say, to consider it from a point of view that we believe in something new. Specially written for the French—

Masons, our work aims to teach the true doctrines of order, — doctrines sometimes mis-known, — to explain the true meaning of the ceremonies, of
to popularize the philosophy of our school, to finally pose Clearly, that is frankly the goal of Freemasonry.
The thought that guides us is that the sustained struggle
by our order for so many centuries is not close to to end, and that Freemasonry is eternal. We We will explain the causes of this duration; we will write its history by taking it from its appearance in societies
ancient times, by making it cross centuries in India,
in Egypt, Greece, and Rome; we will show it,
after Christianity, in England, in France, in Italy, Spain, Germany, America; we
we will see how things will change depending on the laws, customs,
the needs of the sectarian peoples were transforming, explaining its symbols and the links that connect one century to another;
Finally, we will mention his perpetual struggles, the proscribers
the events that struck her, her triumphs, her faults, in order to
that the lessons of the past serve the future.

We are not mistaken about the importance and the difficulty of the task we undertake by coming to trace the philosophical history of a little-known order
despite the numerous volumes published about him, let's say everything, of a little-known nature despite the multitude of followers who throng the columns of our temples. Crowd light, fickle crowd, always swirling, which She exalts what she begins to understand, only to forget it.

tomorrow, which will not be presented two years in a row

immediately with the same thought, with the same desire;
a dizzy crowd, rushing forward with fervor and...
simply remained indifferent, before understanding completely fulfilling his high mission, or who recoils in astonishment faced with the duty to fulfill it.

If a dogma, a faith, a religion were to be shelter from this fatal scourge of indifference which does more it was wrong that all the persecutors together did not accuse him of it.
This dogma, imposed upon the heads of men, was to be the norm.
the Masonic faith and religion.

Freemasonry, in fact, does not impose a cult of the en-France; she doesn't tell the child, like the Catholic, like the Protestant, like the Israelite: I will take you at
From your birth, I will raise you in my worship, you will have no no other, and you won't be able to leave him without shame.
without deserving the damning name of renegade. She did not-only addresses grown men; if she asks them to What religion they belong to, it's not for their Advising them to change it is a way of preaching tolerance to them.
rancidity towards those who do not share their faith; it is to make them understand that all religions have a common link, the moral law; it is to teach them
that God is in such a high sphere above humanity
manité that he should not worry about how one
He adores him; it is to finally tell them that idolaters this Christian Look, Israelites and Muslims, civilized and savage,
Rich and poor, all men are brothers.

ee

oo – nn

Thus, from the very first day, from the moment of entering the temple,
not only are Masonic doctrines revealed,
but the purpose of Freemasonry is shown to man that we admit it. Freemasonry would be nothing but a vain
In short, if she were to limit herself to setting a goal without moving forward... its realization. Here the struggle begins; ideas from the outside, so different from those of the temple, they react; the passions,
the specific needs and expectations of these men still belonging to the society so often agitated by Revolutions regain their power; thoughts political, so ardent, so active, come to obscure the
the purpose of Freemasonry; the members find themselves facing face to face, as in the world, with their opposing views, their opposing wishes, their enemy policies. So glimpsing what they hadn't understood at first, or resisting a trend they do not want to support because they do not share it, or are satisfied with their position, social situation and fearful of future prospects, the Masons, we say, fall into the calm of this indifference that is destroying today the forces of the past so powerful of Freemasonry.

Fortunately, indifference does not affect everyone. men; great institutions do not die without having fulfilled the destiny for which they were created; the Masonic faith has remained in many hearts. It is for you who have remained faithful to him, for you who are not satisfied with empty words, who do not limit their action to small alms, for you who see its goal and want to walk towards it, that we are writing the history of Freemasonry, that that the goal of his philosophy, and, in our thinking, no philosophy is real, great, or complete. complete, that on the condition of rising to God, of embracing laws, human institutions.

KAUFFMANN. CHERPIN.

Lyon, July 1, 1846.

| we come to remind you of its dogmas, its tendencies, indi-

this a little

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

FREEMASONRY.

PART ONE.

CHAPTER ONE.

"

Its method of operation; the objects to which it limits its examination. – Freemasonry considered as a religious school, – It does not call itself a daughter of revelation; it does not permit a man; she is tolerant; consequences. – The circumstances in which they appeared Loreto, Moses, Jesus Christ, Muhammad, are different from those in which the Frankish people of Freemasonry. – Origin of societies; migration of peoples; selection of leaders; birth of the Masonic; its god; its flag.

At the Masonic 'SCHOOL', it must be admitted
07. It's best to explain it from the beginning, isn't it?
J- ee not counted in the history of the 4 9x 4 ce

RE ORPRR D Co

= - #

I L

4 to 4 human, of civilization, among 1 \1 88 a Re 24 #1 to those who have had an influence on ei ze + = + companies; however, it is Æ Le. ay Al j peu qui aicntexercercent une action

{ more direct, more real. It is

It's easy to understand this kind of thing.
of absurdity in which Freemasonry has remained as philosophical school; for it, no advertising, no portico.
no high school where crowds can flock to hear the lessons from the master, to be nourished by his word. From the very beginning, in struggle against established powers, against all those who live off them.

14. Development of intelligence

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the weaknesses and mistakes of others, carefully cultivated, the Freemasonry shrouds itself in mystery, imposing on those who demand the initiation of terrible trials, outdated today-of today, misunderstood when they are no longer needed, but necessary

but it would be ungenerous to ridicule it, because of serious men like the early Freemasons had
There are better things to do than create pointless or useless ceremonies.

The Masonic school does not stay long in the regions elevated, but obscure, where God, his essence, his action, discussions in which all schools have become passionate men; she acknowledges and proclaims without emphasis the existence from a Dicu who created everything; she doesn't get lost in abstractions to search for the origin of good and evil; it observes their existence, and his initiation into the rank of master, perpetuated since thousands of years up to the present day, without alteration in meaning, and almost with the same forms, is in this respect the most important lesson simple, the clearest and at the same time the highest that has never been given to men, and that in our particular we have we ever found in the history of the various philosophical schools phiques that have shone some light on the world.

The study of heaven and the study of earth, that is to say, God and Man, and through him societies, these are the two terms of all philosophy, the two objects to which they are attached, and indeed They embrace everything. The Masonic school does not look far— Time on God, the solution to unsolvable problems; it revolves around God; it turns promptly turned her gaze towards humanity; it was to humanity that she turned her attention; task; it is to give him good institutions, a larger sum great happiness, these two points inseparable from all civilization

tion, which it applies specifically, by proclaiming principles of an eternal fairness that nothing can henceforth obscure, nor neither fraud, nor lies, nor weakness, nor tyranny, and who will so often put her in conflict with the oppressors of social. | |

Philosophy that is, in a way, earthly, that is to say, seeking more the destinies of man on earth than the essence of God, she speaks through emblems, instructed by them as much as by the dissertations, and the speeches of its orators, free in the — thought, free in form, will have as its object the deduction of consequences of the invariable principles of which these emblems are the representation.

OF FREEMASONRY, of

This idea of educating, of popularizing principles by speaking to the eyes, was the happiest conception. The senses and the intellect— agency were struck at the same time, and this one was developing instruction, so well suited to the time in which it was put into

This practice, still so useful today, was immensely successful and which We must thank those who conceived it, for it will be one of their titles of glory, it will be the honor of Freemasonry to Throughout the ages, this result, we will explain it, but we will not we would not want people to think they would find anything in our words that could to be considered a condemnation or a bad-monitoring of schools that have adopted a differentiated instruction system rent from that of Freemasonry; we would reject all
a similar interpretation of our thinking.
Is it we who would want to rise up against you, philosophers?
from antiquity, the Middle Ages, and our time, you who have enlightened the world by passing it on from age to age, from hand to hand hand, the torch carried from one century to the next, which made res-to shine so brightly! It is through your discussions, through the method created by you, that the spirit of examination and criticism may be born;
You are preparing for the liberation of the es by enlarging the domain of human reason.
Whatever system you adopt, the result you will achieve conduct the study of the universe, whether you arrive at negation or at the affirmation of the existence of God, of the immortality of the soul, the results of your work, the consequences drawn from your principles will, in both scenarios, be favorable to the development of civilization, useful to humanity. We do not have here to proto declare between you, materialists and spiritualists, who have established the great philosophical division, but only to note what has resulted from your efforts; if you deny God and the immortal soul, Society will have to focus specifically on the happiness of men.
regulate their relations in the interest of all; if you proclaim

4. PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

--

God and the immortal soul, men must strive to remto fulfill the purpose of creation, which is the development of civilization-tion, in short, the improvement of everyone's lot. On both sides you arrive at the culture of intelligence, at the establishment of the well-being, to the foundation of institutions that protect rights and
'the interests of all.

On another note, through you the worlds are discovered
green, the laws that govern them clearly deduced; the march
The existence of the stars ceases to be a mystery; their distance from Earth that which glitters around them will not stop the human gaze. The Heat, the weight of bodies, and attraction are revealed; phenomena of the universe unfold, now understood. Our organs, our senses are analyzed; the functions of the mind are examined. complicated; man finally reveals himself slowly to himself, con- He seeks a new existence through this self-knowledge, the deeper, the most wonderful of all.

This is what you have done for the earth, which owes you one eternal gratitude; but—and it is in this that there exists a The difference between you and the Masonic school lies in this: The school achieved a result that is important to note, because it is one of the glories of Freemasonry – your philosophy, addressing itself specifically to the mind, presupposed, let's say micux, exi-

, &eait, to be understood, required an intelligence developed through study letters, through preliminary notions; his language has for- special mules that are not within everyone's reach; wandering at through the labyrinth of the heavens, it is not always accessible to simple children of the earth; among the crowded audience Despite your lessons, not everyone was able to follow your bold and strong thinking. its flight towards the sky; the eagle often disappeared into the clouds at glances from the crowd.

Today, in the very heart of Europe, in this France who proclaimed the sovereignty of intelligence, to which one de- demands the sanction of any discovery, of any idea that is not there not yet hatched, in which all science shines or is reflected, heaven or mirror for every sun, for every star, at the gate of palaces where The kingship of thought reigns supreme, and open to the masses, there remains still an immense number of men incapable of understanding the great truths of philosophy. In the countryside, in the cited, while efforts were made to scatter the light, of the parta- ger among all the children of the nation, alongside the representatives the highest levels of intelligence, at the foot of the pulpits from which fall The highest lessons of reason and knowledge are embodied by living beings. plunged into the most absolute intellectual blindness; fetishism rubs shoulders with religion, the most senseless beliefs, the most ab- surdes, those most opposed to the order of nature, are admitted without reflection, without examination, as truths about which one does not Don't argue.

FREEMASONRY, a)

— ——— —

Sitel is still the state of humanity in countries where the scientists previous ones, in antiquity, where it did not yet have the means of dissemination than speech and writing, where it lacked the most

The most powerful lever ever given to civilization, the press, penetrating everywhere, seeping in everywhere, silently, like water beneficial through the layers of soil that it will fertilize?

From both an intellectual and a political standpoint, the Societies were divided into several classes, and he didn't...

It has been given, philosophers, despite your efforts, to bring down the light in all the depths, no more than to make it retain—to the echo of your words.

What you have done for men enlightened by instruction—high tition, class unfortunately still restricted in the societies where only wealth allows for rigorous and lengthy studies, the Freemasonry did it for the people; you spoke to the head of society, she spoke to the body, and her teaching had this effect. In particular, she had the good fortune of being a true eman—the formation of a large number of intelligences that would never arrived without her at the knowledge of the truth. It is therefore for the people that Freemasonry, as a philosophical school, has probed the mysterious arcana in the depths of which thought Humanity has gone astray so many times; it is for him that she stops. a short time in the high regions of the sky, where everything is still darkness, where everything will remain a mystery for a long time; for him, that from heaven whom she admires without understanding, she is quickly redescended descended upon the earth, acknowledging the great creator in his works worlds, proclaiming their veneration for him, and thinking they would accomplish to fulfill his eternal vision: — by dedicating himself to the improvement of men that he did for good,°this word taken in the most absolute sense.

In this slow but perpetual action of improvement, there is no It had no elements of brilliance, noise, or renown; there was no than a continuous benefit; that would sufficiently explain the species of the obscurity in which the Masonic school has remained, if there was no other cause for this darkness, which dominated all the others, inherent to the very nature of the school.

The philosophers, when the deduction of their principles leads them to touch, in some way, upon the institutions of their country. They shroud themselves in reticence regarding the established cult; they profess everything a deep respect for the form they would like to see revealed to destroy, which they will try to undermine; their strongest arguments sometimes seem to arrive by chance, like an objection that they they form their own doubts, like a doubt expressed by another. This Their circumspection is dictated by their interest, which is that

They are waiting, and we must forgive them for surrounding it with some veil. their bold thinking; but rest on them; the light they they want to throw will sparkle, slowly, by degrees, but it will shine. The Masonic school could not act in this way; its principles were so clear, his thought so obvious, that there was no In times of hesitation, no transaction is possible; in times of tyranny, and this one is of all the powers that have governed societies the one who reigned the longest, one had to either succumb to In broad daylight, or to work in silence; it is the latter option that she took.

We do not need to discuss today whether masonry, in By choosing this role that condemned her to obscurity, she understood everything. the importance of his mission; we are poorly placed to appreciate- acknowledge this fact; we urge those who might be tempted to acknowledge it to... Damn, those who regret the brilliance of a school, to refer to the the time when she was born, remembering what struggles she had to endure, from which her obscurity did not save her, to what persecutions Even more terrible she would have been subjected to if, instead of acting in

6 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

—

OF FREEMASONRY,

In the shadows, she would have made the public square resound with her doctrines, which were the negation of the existing order of things at the time. This fact If it is so serious, so important, it will be clearly explained throughout. the hour; that all judgment be suspended until then. The thought that led Freemasonry to shift its focus away from God, to whom she first rose, to the man who remained the object of his affections, whose fate has always exclusively concerned, explains why we still find her in darkness as a religious school, why it doesn't seem to have, in this respect, exerted a very powerful influence on the Society, or rather why this action, which will soon be revealed, is remained unknown to most men who judge only on the external factors. However, other causes, different from those which prevented Freemasonry from flourishing as a philosophical school phique, still independent of his situation in the State, does not give him have not allowed it to have a global impact as a religious school. as a religion. These causes are as follows:

Freemasonry does not claim to be the offspring of revelation.

She is not personified in a man.

Taking tolerance to the highest degree, it allows its advocates to... yours to worship God as they see fit, without worrying about the a form that will have such a great influence, whose transformations will be written in letters of blood in the religious history of the world.

Thus, from the outset, she disdains the three elements that... would give her a shine she doesn't seek. A few words will make clear the situation in which she places herself from the outset. gine. It is found everywhere in men, manifested in each not in ancient societies, barely weakened by education In modern societies, there is a pronounced tendency towards love of marvelous. Should we see in this love of men for what is mysterious, for what is not perceived by intelligence, for something that reason cannot admit, an inherent weakness in their nature, the manifestation of that pride which places man so high in the hierarchy of beings, the intervention of heaven is always essential to give him the laws under which will regulated not only his relationship with the divine, but also his actions, his relationships with his fellow human beings? Or this love?

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Is the marvelous the development of a poetic feeling? innate – which seeks sustenance and delights in wandering in fantastic regions, inhabited by beings of a superior nature, including the winds seem to bring him his voice, the thunder to manifest the Anger or presence? We will not decide, we will limit ourselves to... we will observe; the crowd accepts, without understanding, what is being done to them said to be supernatural; in vain reason submits to examination, doubt or No, the reason in this is not the lot of the multitude.

Those people understood the influence of the intervention of the mer- those who, preaching a new religion, brought him down of the revelation, presented her as daughter of heaven; plagiarists destined to copy each other eternally, to give the world the spectacle- perpetual key to the same lie, always repeated, for lack of anything better. Once the revelation is admitted, what sanction does it not impose on the laws? civil and religious legislators! What strength, what character Doesn't this imprint a sense of fixity on them by presenting them as the work? of God! Also, ever since humanity has remembered his deeds, preserves its records; those who created religions have never failed to use this means as an element of success.

Freemasonry did not employ this deception;
Such means were not of: his presence. Immediate daughter of the priests abusing the sacred character they attributed to themselves, and that the ignorant masses were willing to acknowledge them, forced to always fight, modifying one's means of aggression according to the nature of things that it wanted or prevented from taking root or To undermine, she spoke only in the name of intelligence, which is indeed a emanation of God, but which is not God, which is a ray of this great light, but is not that light itself.

From its very beginning, from the very first day until today, and it will be as long as it lasts, the truth fighting against lies, fighting with sincerity; she could not not to call herself the daughter of the revelation by eclat even though she was the truth.

The religions that share the earth have generally personified themselves fixed in a man, in a reformulation coming to summarize the maxims that were beginning to spread, synthesizing ideas which were germinating, which already had some power; for it is necessary note that these so-called revealed religions do not occur not all in one piece, do not fall from the sky like a meteorite An idea appears on the horizon of the mind; it grows, vague and cloudy at first; it clears and casts some light; its consequences appear; it expands, it is shared, and the diffusion The sion increases its strength. Its realization would modify the condition of the companies; this being understood, this achievement becomes a need, we Passionate about her, religions are born; the star has become sun. Religions take the name of a man, but they re- they saturate the hopes, desires, sometimes the passions of a great number.

OF FREEMASONRY. 9

Zoroaster, Moses, Jesus Christ, Muhammad, whose names are attached to four major religions, were not the only ones who preached doctrines, we will not say new | but great and wise, deserving of the attention of the people, tracing for companies a better way, presenting them with a set principles whose adoption could have a powerful influence on their destinies; thousands of men have emerged, aspiring to role of reformers, capable of fulfilling it, and who have passed, not not unnoticed, but without leaving a trace, including the names and the Most of these acts are forgotten because they did not come at an opportune moment.

It is not enough, in fact, to simply provide or summarize ideas which Practice would improve the lot of men; one must arrive on time. while the men, tired of the religious and governmental system the mind to which they submit, or which is endangered by it, glimpse to arrive on time, to attach his name to a transformation. He

It is important to understand each other clearly: once the idea is formulated never dies; sometimes long centuries after its manifestation Strange, unexpected events suddenly arise, which... inexplicable events if there were no ideas as there were for the seeds deposited in the earth a slow and mysterious germination mination that suddenly causes a thought to burst forth in the middle of a society, like making a tree spring up in the middle of a forest.

Moses and Jesus Christ were due to their time and circumstances.

born

10 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

in which they appeared, to find themselves in admirable situations successful editions.

The Hebrew people are oppressed, captive in Egypt, forced to give-publicly display signs of respect for gods he despises taken in secret; his political life has ceased, his moral life is stifled under constant persecution; the annihilation of the race, and to achieve this more quickly, children are slaughtered at cradle; for some time yet, nothing will remain of this little-Plea, that memory. Moses appears; he was or was not saved Water matters very little today, but then this Faith fixes its gaze on him: God has saved him from death to accomplish his purposes. He gathers the Hebrew people; he speaks to his imagination by presenting him with natural disasters such as signs manifested of heaven's wrath against the oppressors; it appeals to his reason by giving him hope for freedom; he awakens his material interests by promising him well-being in a land fertile land that he will conquer. The war cry resounds; the Hebrews
They move away, armed for defense and attack, because it will be necessary perhaps they dispute the route they will take; they punish on the newborn Egyptians, the death of their children; they carry-they satisfied the rich gold and silver vases they had borrowed, satisfi-thus, from the outset, a twofold desire for revenge. Moses... leads to the time of the ebb tide through the bed of the Red Sea, where the flood engulfed the Egyptian army a few hours later sent in pursuit; the imagination and ignorance of the multi-
The people see a miracle in a natural event. The people have thirsty, the old shepherd, who knows where the flocks find water to quench their thirst
"Térrer" designates the place where the pickaxe must dig; the water flows for to quench the thirst of the camp; it was Moses who struck the rock with his rod and made a miraculous spring gush forth! Moses climbed the mountain tagne where he goes, he says, to receive orders from the Dicu of the Hebrews; he

He descends in the midst of a storm, preceded by lightning, escorted
From the lightning; he brings the law that God dictated to him! What more can be done?
more to act vividly on the imaginations, in a multitude who escapes slavery, persecution, death, who saves
his children of the sword P

For Jesus, the circumstances were not the same. Rome had ee ee en ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 11

He conquered the world, but the hand of an emperor is too small.
to contain it. The subjugated peoples are growing impatient with the yoke, and already one can hear the distant stirrings of the men of the North, which will lend the edge of their frame to a new faith, who will carry it on the backs of their shields. Yes, Rome has con-who the world, and in the political order slavery is established as a fundamental principle of society; in the moral order Prostituted religion has fallen into public contempt; the apotheosis monsters clothed in purple, and whose corpses will Rotting in the sewers makes one doubt even the gods!

Beast fights are no longer enough for a greedy people.
of bloody emotions; it forces men to tear each other apart under His eyes, to give her a moment of excruciating pleasure. Morals have reached this state of degradation that man no longer has sex; Rome adopted all the vices of the subjugated nations; there, softness has penetrated to the very core of this body; society is decrepit, Gangrene is everywhere. What better time for preaching?
tion and the adoption of the morality of the Essenes personified in Jesus Christ |

In this famous land of Arabia, the cradle of the three great religions that have divided the world united in the belief in unity of God, in this desert where the three great lawgivers wandered solitary, face to face with their thoughts, before being followed by the crowd, Muhammad emerged, six centuries after Jesus, in Different circumstances, but no less favorable. Faith Christian faith, wavering among the newly converted Arabs, had been deeply shaken by these endless heresies which for three For centuries, the churches of Africa and Asia were agitated. The Arabs, so willing-bound by their character, by their customs, to bow to the voice of God, to accept from him the dogma of fatalism, that is to say, to look-everything that affects him, everything that relates to him, like sacred, as immutable, had seen the same doctrines in turn

Their spirit, so poetic in form, so positive in substance, understood nothing of these unpoetic subtleties, these discussions baseless, children of diseased minds, fruits of pride and They needed noise. Disenchanted, they returned to idolatry; the

Mr. Om PP

not
ee de Eh ee SR m0 0 roma mm A0 eg AR 0 NO An z

L usmossss sem mm oh ee me rom eu.

_ Dre un ent in 0 er DR mn me
»

me. eme. ee

-mi um +

12 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

altars of paganism were reclaiming the place they had ceded to | altars of Jesus; Christian thought was about to succumb in the East, Muhammad stood up to prevent him from dying, and he succeeded. But he it was necessary to adapt it to the needs, the spirit, the passions of the Arabs;

He did it.

Jesus had condemned the sword, but in the blood of the Arabs.
too much fire was bubbling over; they had too much ardor, too much energy, so that it would be possible to chain their arms. And then, listen, listen to this terrible noise that is passing over three parts of the world;
These are the armies that come from the North to descend upon the South;
Italy is in the hands of the barbarians; a Lombard king has sat down to the throne of Numa, which had already been over by a king of the Ostrogoths;
that distant sound, it is the death knell of the Late Roman Empire tolling, and Maho-Met invites the Arab warriors to share the spoils of the giant
He has fallen. His successors will not fail to do so.

Was another motive needed for the triumph of this new religion?
The old woman who made strength her most powerful ally?
Here's the thing: Jesus preached social reform, Muhammad was going to...

had said that all men are brothers, Muhammad breaks the castes, an eternal obstacle to equality, and in reality made brothers of all his soldiers. Jesus condemned slavery; Muhammad did more. Slaves who embrace his faith become the equals of their masters; whether they display courage or talent, they will be one day their leaders!

Muhammad, too, knew all too well what power, what force he would find in the intervention of the divinity; he shuts himself in the solitude, and there, he says, he is visited by God; he gives the Arabs his poetic gospel, page by page, and the Quran is, he says, written by God, brought by an angel, in the night. This miracle lasts twenty-three years; God sends the Quran verse by verse, following the needs of the Arabs, or rather according to the needs of the prophet-legislator.

This is the context in which the three major religions that still reign in the civilized world; here they are

| all three personifying themselves in a man, all three doing
The divine intervention, Your revelation. We will explain everything-tone mn a mes PP ee

ee te + de ee ne A nee ee ee me

OF FREEMASONRY. 13

the time of the origin of Freemasonry, and we will understand elai-

why she didn't seek success and instead...

Wait, why doesn't she have a boss, why does she belong to men and not to one man, why, still active always fruitful, always moving towards the fulfillment of her an eternal work of improvement, she could not, she should not not to be what Judaism, Christianity, and Islamism have been. Freemasonry, throughout the ages, has a character that is in particular, a character of initiative and movement that is not not that of these religions, although it was in the minds of those who founded them.

Moses speaks to the Hebrews, he establishes the tablets of the law, he overturns the statue of the golden calf; Jesus discusses in the temple with the doctors to his disciples, he preaches his doctrine in the public squares; His apostles imitate him; he drives the money changers from the temple; Muhammad follows the same process and gives his voice the auxiliary of the sword;

However, throughout these three religions, men are public-called upon to come and hear what they teach; the frank-Freemasonry, on the contrary, does not call to itself, but receives within its fold those who have not found the truth in others cults; it does not provoke, far from it, it imposes trials to those who seek the destruction of its temples.

Another important difference: religions preach doctrines prescribe rules, establish dogmas, and proclaim themselves eternal, without wanting to understand that everything works and sc transforms around them; they impose on thought the bed of

Procrustes so as not to be overtaken by it; the laws, the inst-

Instruction, science, it makes everything bend, it stops everything to link everything to them when the movement of human progress hand always leads the world to new discoveries which expand the field of science.

This claim by various religions to an immutable im-What is possible is precisely what separates them from Freemasonry. which makes her not their opponent, but the opponent of their priests as soon as they go astray, as soon as they put error to the place of truth, that they disregard the needs of the people.

14 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

We hope to prove beyond any doubt the pro-the position we have just put forward; if we succeed in it, we will have established that Freemasonry works in the cons-aunt of the progress of humanity, almost always preceding it, pointing them out often, never staying behind them when She did not report them, and always went escorted by the rationa-the most complete list, we will go back a little further, but we we will not linger long in these dark times; we we look forward to getting to the facts supported by historical documents risks. |

The state of the first societies, the conditions that govern the relationships between individuals, such as the time of their formation societies will forever remain an unexplained enigma; a veil mysterious covers both the origin of the world and the cradle of man. When the first society appears to us, that is to say when humanity, like a child whose memory unfolds As he grows up, Loppe is intelligent enough to preserving its annals, we find it limited to a small number of individuals without arts, obeying a few ideas generally

even the name; she lives by fishing and hunting, shapes herself in These exercises are in preparation for the war that will soon break out between the island various aggregations, as if time were not strong enough to destroy and needed the hand of men, as if love that united a family, the attachment that bound a tribe, not
They should not extend to all families, to all tribes!

Societies are slowly transitioning from this semi-wild state to the state of pastoral peoples, then to that of agricultural peoples who followed quite naturally from the previous one, Let's not stop too long a period of time on these transformations, not that their study either useless or uninteresting, but because a greater interest
Our immediate task will be to focus on observing one of these large phases that begin with small proportions for then exert on humanity the fastest and most extensive influence. 11 This refers to the migrations of peoples, tribes, and peoples.

The need to provide for one's subsistence created the culture around

ea =

OF FREEMASONRY. 15

—.—

the cabin; the need to preserve animals taken during the hunt, and which can pass into a state of domesticity, that of bringing their pro-
The pagation created the pastures. The pre-priesthood was born, and with it all the good it gives, all the evils it brings about have been contributed to society. Families have become larger, the herds multiplied; the corner of land chosen by the tribe can no longer contain it, or rather feed it, suffice to its be-care; a portion of this tribe will seek another land,
to form another tribe, to pursue different interests.
This phase is one of the most interesting in the life of peoples.
one of those that provide the earliest materials for history; it is almost always accompanied by events that cannot be-Winds that will never be forgotten, which remain engraved in the memory of nations, because they often signal a new era for her.
Different interests, in creating and developing, have given birth to antagonism, envy, hatred, war. The
The fable of Abel and Cain was put into practice; the war of brotherhood to brother in the first family became a reality, and rose from family to family, tribe to tribe, people to people.
The men who emigrated in groups were therefore armed for Defense first, conquest second; the need to direct-

tion, discipline, unity, required a leader, they would find him; the parent, the brother, hitherto legally recognized by all, became the first of them. Tyranny does not easily establish itself in a camp formed in similar circumstances; Equality before the

The enemy's arrow and spear are the most difficult to destroy; there are commandment for the salvation of all, there is not yet despotism, not yet passive obedience, that will take time.

One to establish itself, the other to bow their heads; it is in the calm that follows the war, in the organization of the conquest, that oppression is born and develops.

No matter how much virtue one who can do everything may possess, it is difficult that he does not go beyond what is right, legitimate, and permitted.

Now that institutions have claimed to regulate everything, to map limits between all powers, ensuring the rights of all, you

You are witnessing this perpetual struggle between duty and desire, between power and right. Judge what must have happened at the origin-

16 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the creation of companies, when nothing was defined, nor the rights of leaders, nor the duties of individuals. Also, the first leaders of the These societies were quick to abuse the power that their gift-soldiers were born who were subject to command, who had fought with them, in whose eyes they were surrounded by the prestige of the victory, of the strength that public opinion attributed to them when the colony had prospered under their leadership and that their particular passions- They could use the pretext of the general interest.

Ambition grows in the heart of man at the same time that his fortune; always driven forward by an insatiable desire, He constantly aspires to conquer.

The chiefs had been appointed as arbitrators of the disputes; they judged- They often returned according to their passions, to which they were neither sufficiently strong, nor wise enough to resist; justice is eternal, but the rules of justice, poorly defined in a nascent society, let-

They knew the field was open to all whims; tyranny began.

The day when, after a successful war, the victors found

Finding the cultivation of their fields too arduous, they gave up the barbaric custom of slaughtering their prisoners, they reduced them to servitude forced them into the most arduous labors, to rest

It was their responsibility to produce. Thus it was inaugurated, entered in customs, then in laws, slavery which, in forms and different names, has continued to this day.

of whom we were equal, and the men who had knowledge of their rights and compensated for the lack of power with a firm will, offered resistance. Society was organizing itself; this wave intuition of a superior being that appears in all peoples some were beginning to take shape, that is to say, the cult was created. The leaders of the societies were well aware that the material force would not be enough to enslave their fellow citizens; they understood the power of moral strength; they looked around them, studied—revealed the morals of the men at whose head they were placed; they saw them, struck by the beauty, the order, the harmony denying nature, raising our eyes to that space called sky, worshipping an unknown being, creator of the universe embraced by their gaze or guessed by their intelligence. Skilled at taking advantage of this ten—

#

OF FREEMASONRY. 17

They distorted the religious dance of the peoples, their natural religion. invented religions whose dogmas, calculated by them, favored know their secret plans.

Gradually, we learned to teach man how to make the sacrifice of his freedom, his well-being, his life, by promising him the resurrection and a gentler life in another world. Then we threatened the enemies of tyrants with torments that should not never end; men were taught to look at strength and violence lence as sacred, by representing the gods seated on clouds—ges, lightning bolt in hand; the cult was surrounded by brilliant ceremonies lights whose brilliance captivated men who had only just the eyes of the body, whose spirit was surrounded by darkness; one does not To stop this misguided path, patterns were given. celestial, all errors were deified; all passions were deified. However, from the very beginning of these unjust powers, these cults Strange, yet he found wise men in these degraded societies. and enlightened people who preserved the tradition of their rights, and who, not capable of destroying tyranny by open force, they sought to to undermine silently; who, deeply religious, worshippers by conviction of a superior being, creator of the universe, retained natural religion rejected both the ridiculous gods and the vain ceremonies of new cults.

Drawn to each other by the similarity of their opinions, hopes, desires, through the communion of ideas, the only true one, the only great one, these men gathered to encourage each other in their struggle against the tyrants with whom they were going to contest the lam—beautiful in their freedom, to spread their doctrines through teaching grouping, to preserve the worship of one God in a cult purified by reason, this one and only true guide from which humanity—nité will go astray so many times; they were thus going to oppose a double that, in their avaricious self-interest, men constituted into a caste special relationships were maintained among the people. Tyranny is more vigilant than liberty, because, in order to maintain, one relies on strength, the other on intelligence. The oppressors were frightened by these gatherings of free men; they trembled for the scepter they forgot they had received for the

18 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

of all; the priests were frightened by these gatherings of men educated people who, denying them a sacred character, reveal their forgeries, were going to dry up the source of their wealth, and the persecution began against them.

Then the men who until then had freely gathered surrounded themselves with a protective shade; which would have been a great religion was a hidden cult; what would have been a philosophical school became a mysterious power. Secret societies were born! They had their trials, which did not frighten man with a pure and upright heart, but which, casting into the soul a certain terror, should naturally have driven away the one who had not penetrated in the temple only to reveal its mysteries, and which was to He trembled, knowing his mission had been guessed, his goal discovered. He was going there of life for the initiated, and we understand why they made themselves heard death threats against anyone who would betray them; the nations had proclaimed the right to punish anyone who put themselves in revolt against them, secret societies borrowed this code and sought shelter behind it. They had their serpreserved until now, the terms of which may seem outdated born, but they recall a great era of struggles and dangers; They had their distinguishing marks; they were going to Let's get to work!

The initiates had only one God, the Great Architect of the Universe—towards, and all the names they give it throughout the ages have the same meaning.

Their doctrines can be summed up in three words: holy trinity which has become the flag of the peoples, sacred labarum towards which All the oppressed turn their gaze, including all the freedmen strive to fulfill the motto, a banner often stained with blood and always resplendent, a hundred times overthrown and always raised again to hover over humanity and show it the path it must to walk; these three words were: LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY |

This is the origin of Freemasonry. Its action is at first slow, ignored, insensitive; only then does it reveal itself to be... bursting forth, from time to time, in public uproar, and the men who closely follow the history of their time, have—

unknown, whose existence was undetectable, whose traces... were soon losing, had brought a powerful direction to the events.

On calm days, it's surprising to hear in the middle of the the deepest silence of societies expressing thoughts that one believed them buried in oblivion or drowned in blood. The French-Masonry has hatched, there it is; let it spread its wings and look at the world; it will expand, it will grow; it will Spreading in the shadows, the winds will carry his thought to all Where they blow, they will deposit its seeds on all lands. as they scatter the seeds while running across the northern steppes of the South.

With her begins a silent war, which is everywhere, eternal-nelle, which will attack all tyrannies, political and religious-his. The leaders and soldiers of this army are also ineon-naked; no drums, no bugles announcing their presence; some are recognized by their actions, they strikes and we think we've destroyed them, but they're still there, too. numerous, also acute; other men have replaced the men

My fallen comrades continue their mysterious war. The fighting-Many have no shields that gleam in the sun, no spears that wound and kill, no battering ram overturning the ramparts of cities, no bribed soldiers rushing into the breach, no Bronze that thunders in bloody battles, not muskets striking from afar. They will have only their. lively, sincere word. inflamed by the love of truth; and yet thrones fell-will be, cults will disappear, the regenerated world will see the re-reading some of their thoughts, will adopt their doctrines, and will march stronger and more determined towards new conquests.

Words are mightier than the sword; the time has come when it is necessary to reckon with intelligence and recognize the predominance of reason based on physical strength.

Secret societies, formed on the foundations we have just described to indicate, having as its eternal, unchanging purpose, to enlighten and to aff-to cross, will have too many interests to destroy, too many things to undermine, so as not to be violently attacked by the men who are founding their power over ignorance and slavery. The initiates gather-

20 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

smells mysteriously – and that is one of the conditions of their success, of their existence – they will be accused of indulging in debauchery the most unrestrained, not to shrink from murder; the slander that discredits will not go fast enough for their liking their morals, their principles; unable to condemn them, we will be pursued by the sword; dungeons, exile, the executioner will come to crown the work of persecution.

But, futility of tyranny! Long centuries will pass over this Freemasonry, and its enemies will not be able to bring it down; the Time, which devours the empires where it originated, will pass. before her and will not prevail; time will destroy her temples, And, having turned to dust, the workers will go to join their brothers in the night of the tomb; other temples will rise, children They will succeed their fathers, and thought will remain ever unchanging, a star always brilliant, will reign majestically over matter.

The forms of Freemasonry will change throughout the ages, across societies, according to the laws and customs of the peoples; it will organize its work according to the civil constitutions and government policies; it will have different ceremonies at various points around the globe, varying according to the genius of men- my, adapted to the ever-changing needs of the population- tions; his important act, initiation, will become less difficult, less rigorous in calm times than in busy days persecution where she will have to defend herself against secret maneuvers vres; its temple will open more widely in times of freedom; but its goal will be eternal, its flag always the same, its documents invariable trines, and the immortal sgra of Freemasonry.

There is in these words neither pride in the past, nor ambition for The future. Pride! Who would it belong to here, when our greatest or- Our founders' names are unknown to us, while the names of our founders are a mystery? In our temples there is no marble table or ai- rain to remember fleeting names; to each his own work and the egal- Freedom for all. Ambition! And for whom, when we work hard... that day will render our order useless by achieving conquests What did he set as his goal? Ambition! But we would like to be able to assign ourselves an end to the existence of the franc-

OF FREEMASONRY. 21

02m

Freemasonry. We would like to see the abuses it has perpetrated destroyed. what, the tyrannies she fought, the errors she... prevented the spread, abuses, tyrannies, and errors that prevail still in a part of the world. We would like to be able to adopt with confidence, with security, the ideas of those who shout at us, too many today, these Fateful words: The one who was content saw her maxims pass away in laws, in institutions, in customs; it is

What do you still have to fight when you have disarmed your enemies?]] there is no longer any political or religious tyranny; the Freedom, won through bloody struggles, was proclaimed on the France, and public reason does justice to the men who want impose credulity and levy taxes on ignorance! Beware of such sophisms, of these grand, empty words. of wind and lies. When an army has conquered half of a country that it wants to occupy entirely, disarm- she, by telling the other half to fall in line under the law that she What does it bring? When soldiers were needed to conquer, weren't they necessary? Not to preserve and complete the conquest? If it is permissible, when it comes to ideas, to borrow a Compared to material facts, look at Italy on from which our soldiers rushed with such ardor from the top of the The Alps were covered in snow. They brought him new laws. institutions in harmony with its needs, which fulfilled its wishes, hopes; the light returned to the darkened sun. What remains of so many battles fought on the banks of the Adige? of the Piave and the Tagliamento, of so many hard-won victories Purchased? Names written in history and on a triumphal arch- phe; the dust of Rivoli, Arcole, Lodi, Marengo; of Grandiose titles that no longer have any basis! Of the freedom won, what remains for this unfortunate Italy? battlefield of Europe, trampled by the horses of all The armies, where the blood still smokes? Nothing, nothing but hopes- Rancids stirring to end up on the scaffold! One day everything destroyed; we were unable to hold onto the conquest, and the most Tyranny has replaced freedom.

©]

22 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Will this example not serve you? Will you disarm when Do you still have so much to do? Your past conquests, all great However they may be, however glorious a reflection they may have cast upon the world, look at them closely, see what they are and what dan- Gers, they run.

Of the three terms of the holy trinity which is our banner, the LIBERTY fights on, victorious on one point, chained to another; EQUALITY, written in laws, is distorted in application- tion; FRATERNITY, shrouded in darkness, ill-defined, poorly understood captured, was thrown out of its path, and saw the idol erected in its place almsgiving under the guise of charity.

Liberty, this common good for which your fathers dedicated so long- time fought, is usurped and belongs only to a small number;

nenie, delivered to all the miseries, to all the pains that it enfanta. In northern Europe, this great center from which once departed every light, where every great thought of emancipation blossomed,
In the pursuit of social improvement, freedom succumbs once again, in at this very moment, under the efforts of three powers, two of which have so far maintained slavery in the form it took in the
The Middle Ages, and the most immoral thought that ever crossed the mind leaders of nations, the organization of assassinations by those even those who are responsible for maintaining public order, gives you the measure of what can be expected of oppressors.

In the south of this Europe, liberty struggles relentlessly and without respite-che, still struck in her victory, still eager to rise again-to his defeat. In the East, on African soil where it was born Without the religion of the great initiator Jesus, freedom is bent beneath the Muslim's feet; in the arid steppes
as in the fertile gardens of Asia, in some states of North America as in those of South America
Slavery persisted, even in France's possessions.
to the efforts made to break it, and to the unfortunate ones, your brothers, your equals before the Great Architect of the worlds, groan in the hardest and most humiliating condition imaginable posed to a human creature. From all sides, finally, you hear-Around you, hear the sounds of battles fought for freedom, be

- OF FREEMASONRY. 25

in the bloody sword fights, or in the cinematic battles
from the platform and the press.

Where will you find equality when freedom does not exist? Done
One is the base, the other the column; the base is missing.

Fraternity, proclaimed from the very day when Masonic thought
It could emerge, is less conquered, after so many centuries of struggle, than freedom and equality, because it must essentially flow from of them. Fraternity is in the laws of nature, in the will of the creator, but man resists the laws of nature and of God. Work has been, in our Europe, one of the great means of emancipation; he granted freedom to the serfs of the cities, and in this industry which created liberty, fraternity does not exist;
the three great powers of industry, engineering, labor and Capital and the capital are engaged in a fierce war that undermines all three of them.

Is fraternity found in education, this precious light?
this divine torch which, by illuminating the chains of slaves, their learned to break them; who, by shining his light on their moral misery, Did it give them the desire to break free? She, in education, this radiant sun that illuminates the steps of humanity; which, despite the

as if to mock tyranny, gilding the iron of the bayonets
that she had placed in the hands of her soldiers?

Is this a nation of brothers, the one among whom we live?
The body has been liberated, but the intellect has not. The child of The poor will only receive a half-hearted education which will not allow them not to rise. In vain will genius bubble in his head, his pen-
A vision directed towards the heavens will dream of the unknown; it will consume its vigils to invent things already discovered, because he will not have put with one foot on the last step of the temple of science, for

to venture from there into unexplored realms; worn down by the struggles,

He will fall, useless to others, and without happiness for himself.
will have surrendered his life to illusion, his days will belong to despair.

We search for it in vain in our social order, this fraternity holy, one cannot find her in any of our institutions.
Privilege is everywhere, and consequently, so is domination.

Intolerance raises its head, momentarily bowed before the celestial body.

24 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

popular!.. She rises again, in the name of God who is the truth of lying miracles; in a ceaseless struggle, she aspires to di-to rule, to shape generations; you know what evils its triumph would throw him to the ground!

Your mission is therefore not yet accomplished; continue it!

To enlighten men, to unmask the imposture, to challenge freedom of peoples against their oppressors, that is your goal; to fight for
to make liberty, equality, fraternity triumph, written on your Flag, that is your duty.

It is with the thought that the struggle is far from over, that the Freemasonry is eternal, because there will always be men willing to deceive and enslave, and always other men ready to fight them, it is with this thought that we come to trace the history of Freemasonry.

There was an outcry, and unfortunate events sometimes give rise to this
An error with an air of truth, we exclaimed that humanity was turning always, men and things, arts and institutions, in a circle from which she had never emerged, that civilization, after having parran through all the phases, was doomed to go back and to start all over again. That's a mistake; the day is no, not to go back; she walks forward; she will go so far that it can no longer be reversed; but it is up to you to help him, if you want to remain true to the principles for the triumph-phe of which you are gathered in society.

OF FREEMASONRY. 2)

CHAPTER TWO.

The birth of Freemasonry in India. – The two Indian Genesis accounts, that of Valmiki, the
The older one, that of Manu, much later, contains two religious systems and completely opposing policies. – In the first, there is no distinction between men;
In the second stage, castes are created, which establish inequality among citizens. – Sing
The analogy between the caste system in India and that of feudalism in Europe. – First Secret societies; their raison d'être, their purpose, their temples. – Temple of Elephanta on the island of Salcette, of Elora. – Striking similarities between these temples and the Modern Freemasonry. – Buddha; his reform. – Secret societies in Persia; Zoroaster; his in Initiation into the mysteries. – Comparison between his doctrine and that of current Freem

ed

following the cycle gone through by society,
RS, we saw the nations arrive slowly,
ds. by degrees, in an uninterrupted sequence
of efforts, or rather of actions which are called,
develop, become linked, into an existence analogous to that which the Indians first had vidus, the family, the tribe. It's a circle that AKE will always be growing, like the one that HS2 produces in still water the fruit that falls
* > 2 of the tree leaning on its edges, circle envealways lopping a larger multitude, making them participate to the assets that result from this association, as it im-
will later lay the chains of tyranny, when ambition will have taken the place of the general interest, will have distorted notions primitives of right and wrong. The nation has replaced the tribe; the various chiefs handed over power to one of their number, of whom They will be the advisors; the old man has become the priest; the order civility was born, as was worship, that is to say, the form in adoration.
the union of God.
The first gathering of men is believed to have taken place in India.
the first organized society, a few thousand years ago

= °c o0 CR of

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

— ns ns ne de en ne

the current era. The world's memory does not extend beyond this; the written records, monuments, which are living records, are also lacking to allow for a climb higher.

Beyond that, everything is mystery, darkness. Some want this

The first society appeared initially in the valley of Cachcmire, a few myriameters from this kingdom of Lahore, where the

The English have just settled there after having, for a calculated purpose

of

conquest, bloodied each year by revolutions of palace, since the death of Runjet-Singh, of whom our compatriot, General Allard was the first officer. Others believe in find the traces on the upper plateaus where they emerge

the thousand streams that form the magnificent Indus River.

Others, placing it further south, locate it on the banks of this admirable river which demands a tribute of living waters from all the gorges of the Himalayas and plunges through a hundred mouths into the gulf

of

Bengal, the Ganges (1).

India, Persia, and Media would therefore have been the birthplaces of the pre-first societies, and the peoples of these lands, so different from

Characters, tastes, and inclinations do indeed appear in same time in the history of humanity. A single thought uniformity seems to indicate their common origin, a mark between them a kinship link, the idea of three races of men, two white women and a black woman dispossessed of her wealth by the two others. You can already see the division that will later occur

Bible under the names of Shem, Ham and Japheth.

(4) If there is any country on earth that can rightfully claim the honor to have been the cradle of the human species, or at least the scene of a civilization and perhaps beyond, the benefit of the Enlightenment, this second life of humanity; if there is a religion that explains itself as if by itself through powerful impressions of nature and by the free inspirations of the mind, and whose naive forms and sublime, the designs simple and profound at the same time, the system The hardy ones, in turn, explain the dogmas and symbols with some success. religious than most other peoples, that country, certainly, is India; This religion, the one that still appears alive to us on the banks of the Ganges, with its priests, its temples, its altars, its sacred books, its poetry, its practices and its doctrines.

Religions of antiquity, by Creuzer; translation of Guigniaut, volume 1, p. 135.
See the Geography of India, by Malto-Brun.

mms —© EE EP

DF FREEMASONRY. 97

Of these peoples, one will always march before him, tou-armed for days, marking his passage through his conquests, imprinting the seal of his particular genius on the nations which he invaded territory, and will reach Europe through the gorges of the Caucasus, skirting the shores of the Black Sea, after having marked its stages in Bactria and Asia Minor.

The other, on the contrary, the Hindu people, will shut themselves away under the
the most beautiful sky, in the midst of nature of such richness, of fertility, of marvelous splendor, which will bring him perfumes on all its breezes, whether they blow from the sea deep and tranquil, which no ship has yet traversed, that no foreign gaze has yet touched it, either by descending
From the gorges of the Himalayas, they shake flowers over his head.
gigantic trees caressed by their passing breath. It is among this latter people, so rich in the treasures of nature, of which language and genius are imbued with the most poetic colors

things borrowed from this same nature, which we will find the first seeds, the first traces of Masonic society-naught. Some of those who wrote before us about the Secret societies have not seen the imprint of their footsteps on the

It will not stop us, and the facts will speak for themselves.

Moreover, what is so surprising about this negation of existence?

The existence of secret societies in India? In the mid-eighteenth century Europe had not yet rediscovered the lost key to The alphabet of the sacred languages of the Orient. (is a young Frenchman) who enlists as a soldier to go to India, and who after ten years of racing, danger, work, and study, finds Finally, in Persia, a fire priest teaches him the language sacred, preserved only in worship, allows him to copy the sacred books which are translated into European language, which for the first time the West will to know (1). At the same time an Englishman rediscovered the old Hindu language; double conquest which was the true conquest for the Orient, which was to lead to his literary rehabilitation,

(1) This young man is Anquetil-Duperron.

28 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

in +

who, by bringing new elements to science, would to produce profound astonishment.

It is not only his literature that will be rediscovered; we will discover- It covers both its civil and religious laws. Its policy is revealed, his religion explained through the darkness of his mysteries, his philosophy is followed through its phases. We come to contribute to the building of this rehabilitation, of this the disclosure of the Orient, by revealing its secret societies, his Freemasonry which participates in both politics and the religion, philosophy.

The history of the primitive people of India is divided into two epochs. perfectly distinct things, in each of which the law Civil law and religious law are completely different. During In the first period, the nation did not yet exist; the tribes are wandering in the vast solitudes, seeking shelter for the family, a pasture for the flocks, camping in the shade of the forests, at the sources of the rivers; not yet having the idea nor the need for the plow, asking the trees for part of their food, the other to the herds which constitute their only wealth, their primary possession. The land belongs to this- he who occupies it, or rather it belongs to no one, because He will take his tent with him when the pasture no longer offers fragrant herbs for his flock, which will already arouse desire less well-distributed tribes, which will need to be defended against them. - |

civil law; religious law is limited to the worship of the god of light—first, Indra. We must be convinced, despite the various names given to this god, despite his division into three persons that one clearly indicated, despite the subdivisions attributed to these three people, whom the primitive religion of India does not recognize—knows that there was only one god who created everything, as noted by Brahmin Ram-Mohan-Roy, died in England in 1833 (1).

(1) See his work: Translation of several principal books, passages and texts of the vedas, and of some controversial works on brahmanical theology, by Ram-Mohan-Roy, 1st edition.

= ren de —

OF FREEMASONRY. 29

To make it clear how and why societies
Secrets were born, we need to explain them, and religion primitive India and the second religious phase as well as the order civil law created by it; a quote from one of the sacred books of India, from the Paitareya-A'ran'ya, one of the Vedas, will judge this primitive religion, while at the same time it will carry another en-teaching on an important issue that we will have to
to occupy later.

L'AITARÉYA A'RAN'YA.
BOOK II.

$ IV. "Originally this universe was only soul; nothing else Nothing existed as active or inactive. He (that is, God) had This thought: I want to create worlds; that is how he created these diverse worlds: air, light, mortal beings, and waters.

He had this thought: "Here are floods, I want to create..."

guardians of the worlds. Thus he drew from the waters and formed a being clothed in human form. He looked at it, and at this being thus contemplated the mouth opened like an egg; from the mouth came

The word; from the word came the fire. The nostrils opened;

through the nostrils the breath of respiration passed; through the breath of Breathing, air was spread. Eyes opened; eyes

A beam of light emerged; from this beam of light was produced the sun. The ears dilated; from these ears came hearing; from Hearing, the regions of space. The skin stretched; from the skin emerged Hair; from hair were produced herbs and trees. The chest opened; from the chest proceeded the spirit, and from the spirit, the | moon. The navel blossomed; from the navel came swallowing; of This one, death. The organ of generation appeared; from this organ The productive seed flowed out; from there the waters originate. | » These deities, having thus been formed, fell into this vast ocean; And they came to Him thirsty and hungry, and said to Him, "Grant us..." a smaller dimension, in which to live, we can to eat food. He offered them the form of a cow; they

me es 00 finally

nn —
RS

50 PHHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

They said: That is not enough for us. 1L showed them the shape human; they exclaimed: Very good! Admirable! That's why—that man alone is declared to be well-formed.

He made them take their respective places. The fire becoming The word entered the mouth; the air, becoming breath, penetrated in the nostrils; the sun, becoming visible, penetrated the eyes; space became hearing and occupied the ears; the grasses and the trees became hair and fur, and filled the skin; the moon becoming the spirit entered the breast; death becoming the The swallowing entered through the navel; and the water became the seed. productive, and occupied the organ of generation.

"Hunger and thirst spoke to him, saying, 'Assign us.'" our places. He replied: I distribute you among the deities, and I you share in their power; therefore, to some However much a deity is offered, hunger and thirst have their part in it.

He then remarked: "These are worlds and governments-- nurses of worlds; for them I will give form to food. [I]
He looked at the waters; from the waters thus contemplated, the form emerged, and Food is the form that was thus produced.

"Having thus formed, he turned away and sought to flee. The man" Primordial tried to grasp him through words, but he could not to reach her with his voice. He tried to reach her with his breath, but He couldn't breathe it due to inflation. He tried to reach it by a
He glanced at him, but couldn't catch him with a look. He searched He tried to seize it by Pouie, but he couldn't grasp it by listening to it. He he tried to seize him by the skin, but he could not hold him by the
He longed to touch her in his mind, but he could not.
through thought. He tried to grasp it through the organ of generation, But he couldn't hold him like that. Finally, he tried to reach him by the swallowing, and so he swallowed it; this air, which is thus drawn to the intelaughing, seizes Paliment; and this true air is the bond of life.

"He, the universal soul, reflected: How this body Could he exist without me? He considered which end he was going to could penetrate. He thought to himself: If, without me, speech is articulated, the Breath is exhaled and sight sees; if hearing perceives, the skin feels, and the mind reflects; if swallowing swallows, and the organ of generation-Tiou fulfills his functions, so what am I?

OF FREEMASONRY. 5

"Separating the suture of the skull, he penetrated through that opening."

Let's stop here. This is the whole genesis, as clear, as simple as it will later be that of the Bible. That is the indication of the the brain as the seat of the soul, of intelligence, this part of Divinity. Modern science, after forty centuries of research-ches, is still stuck in this thought that dates back to the early days which humanity remembers. What could be greater and simpler?
at the same time as this primitive genesis! God exists and he is alone,
That is to say, there is one God and there is only one! That's the double principle established from day one, from the moment when, extending his gaze upon the magnificence that surrounds him, opening his listening to the sublime harmonies of nature, to the great concerts that the storms roaring over the waves give him surging onto the shores, the winds hurling their powerful melody to Walking through the forests, man is well aware that he is only a part of this world, and that from a hand more powerful than his own came forth all this creation!

God had this thought: I want to create worlds, and he created them.
Here is God, a single God, creator of worlds, that is to say great architect of the universe. Such is the first theology of descends to man. He had this thought: Behold worlds, I He wanted to create guardians of the worlds. So he drew from the waters and formed a being clothed in human form. I] looked at it, and at this being Thus contemplated, the mouth opened. Further on, when he gave his each element that constitutes man takes its place, it asks how this man could exist without him, and, separated—

By opening the suture of the skull, it throws into the man's brain a a part of himself, a spark of Divinity. In what other Which religious book will you find this sublimity in? Which one will explain it?
better the gift of intelligence, the greatest of gifts given to Man, and his distinctive character in the scale of creation?

There is an extremely important point to be made here, and which
We will soon appreciate its full value when comparing the first Indian genesis in the second, the genesis of Valmiki in that of Manu. God creates men and makes them equal; there are three races distinct, known at the time, and God makes them equal; or rather, God'

L ne me Ø RE une mne e— den em GPS OU NE re nette en .
in bone, Se

32 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

He does not create men, he creates man, and he makes him eternally equal to himself by giving him intelligence, by penetrating into his brain, as the Indian poet says, through the suture of the skull.
Thus, in a single word the legislator proclaims equality, from which will follow necessarily liberty, fraternity; he does more: he consecrates it by bringing it down from the hand of God.

This is the whole of Freemasonry: one God, architect worlds; equality, and with it liberty, fraternity. It is of the primitive religion of India that Freemasonry will be born.
His lineage was never established; but his time has not yet come.
came again.

In this first period of the history of the Indian people
Obeying Valmiki's law, secret societies did not appear
No. What would be the point? They would have had no purpose, they had no no reason to exist; the people obeyed the dogmas that they will later retain with a consistency that will transcend the centuries without ever contradicting themselves. They will emerge when the time comes to

we have indicated from the outset as that which is proper to it, which essentially belongs to him, they will keep it until our era, as we find it today.

Indeed, everything is going to change in India; the civil order and the theolog-
The universe will be profoundly altered.

This is the first time I've learned that a people's religion changes.
when the civil constitution of that same people undergoes profound changes attacks; a fatal lesson that will be repeated all too often and accomplished-accompanied by persecutions, and yet which will be fruitful in the future;
it would later serve Europe to establish the predominance of the State over the Church, by proclaiming the freedom of conscience of which The insiders will give the first example shortly. It is as in the history of nations no teaching will be lost, and that the germ of a poisoned seed, transported
In a different climate, it will flourish a few thousand years later.
late and it will produce tasty fruit. India was to give us the spectacle of this phenomenon in the moral order as in the physical order.

Let us follow this transformation in which France will be born

OF FREEMASONRY. 39

masonry; it is interesting to us for this twofold reason that she will show us a free nation in a moment, and not adopt-believing that only one God, now bowed under the most dreadful tyranny, and subject to the laws of the strangest polytheism; as if the creator of worlds, the Great Architect of the universe had wanted to punish the first people who forgot their law, lent their name to idols.

War broke out; the Indians, full of weakness, like all the peoples to whom nature has lavished its riches, are sub-judged, are conquered by other races whose history has not... served the particular names. Where did they come from? Perhaps from the Persia, from Media. Perhaps it even descends from the gorges of the Hi-Malaya of the Indians, ancient brothers, who, in their Asian Alps-ques, amidst the arduous tasks of farming, on less soil richer than that of the plain, under a less mild climate than that the banks of the Ganges, have retained their original vigor that nothing has not altered their strength, which nothing has softened, and which marches on the conquest (1).

(1) This opinion that we express here on the successive conquests that would have altered so profoundly the form of government of India, is generally adopted by writers who have dealt with the history of Indian civilization.

Mr. Hecren said, speaking of the outcasts: The difference in color and profile between remark between the Brahmins and this proscribed class. And I choose all the more readily this comparison, that the establishment of the Spanish in New Caledonia The world, wrought by both sword and cross, might perhaps offer the faithful image of the establishment of Brahmins among the indigenous people of India, if we had the story of the latter.

Mr. Klaproth has the country conquered by a white Indo-Germanic race which would descended from the Himalayan and Caucasus mountains at two very distant points The first branch, he said, merged entirely in India with the primitive inhabitants, of dark colour, giving them his language and taking their teiul; The other went on to populate Persia and spread ever further west, while a the first division headed north and northwest, towards the northern parts of our Europe, where it formed the great nation of the Goths. (Asia polyglotta).

Creuser and Mr. Guigniaut adopted this system of a white race composed Brahmins, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas, spreading from north to south on the entire surface of India, subjugating one after another the original tribes and of various languages which inhabited its different parts in all their innocence, and who everywhere subjugated the natives by the sacred restraint of religion, willed,

---. HAS

54 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The Indians succumb; their first conquerors are soon conquered in their turn; always a new race comes to mingle its young and vigorous blood, mixed with the blood of bastard races, and finally From this shock, from this prolonged chaos, emerged civil and religious laws. all new; the Määnava-Dharma- code succeeds Valmiki Sastra, that is, the book of the law of Manu. The primitive nation, The patriarchal system no longer exists; in its place, the nation divided into castes; the God himself, Indra, changes his name and is called Brahmä. The inequality of conditions is founded by the conquerors; The people are divided into four distinct classes, complete-separated, and to make this division respectable, sacred, to maintain it, to stifle the murmurs of the crowd against She is attributed to God himself.

This is the new genesis that will disinherit the nation of equality proclaimed by the first: Brahmä produced from his mouth the Brahmin, or priest, who forms the highest of the castes; of his arm the kchatriya, or warrior, which forms the second; from his thigh the Vaishya, or farmer and merchant, who belongs to the thori-sixth; finally, from his foot the soudrä, or servant, that is to say the the mass of the people condemned to a kind of helotry.

After creating the castes, Brahmä assigns to each of them

never change. Here are the verbatim words of the law: "He gave the study and teaching of the Vedas, shared with the Brahmins (sacred books), the performance of the sacrifice, the direction of the sacrifices offered by others, the right to give and the right to receive see. » |

This right to receive will be widely exploited; it is being developed in the law in all its forms and about everything. A man Is someone who has committed a crime sentenced to a fine, to the loss The king must not keep these riches for himself, of his possessions. But he will perform a meritorious act by offering them to a Brahmin. Is a meal prescribed by religious law given by a head of in the institutions it imposed upon them, to perpetuate both its supremacy and their Dependence. (Religions of Antiquity, Part 2, Book 4, page 587.)

Mr. Quinet, in his fine work on the Genius of Religions, followed the thought Mr. Klaproth's opinion regarding migrations to the north.

eee ee me ee mr

—

OF FREEMASONRY. 39

In the family, the presence of a Brahmin is essential; the dishes those who must be offered to him are designated; it is essential to to serve first. If a Brahmin travels, the law imposes the obligation to... to give him and his servants hospitality. She enters on this subject in infinite detail.

The right to direct sacrifices offered by others, which seems This, which is entirely natural at first, will have the most serious consequences; the A Brahmin will know which families make sacrifices, which ones... abstain, and as the law punishes the latter, that is the brah- Mane was effectively appointed Grand Inquisitor. In another order In terms of ideas, the consequences of this right will still be significant. He must have the nation feed the Brahmins; they will collect a part in all sacrifices. If there were only one god, the sacrifices would not be as frequent; the priests will provide for them. Manu's law states that by creating the Brahma castes, he created in At the same time, other gods, who themselves created others, which produced gnomes, vampires, titans, dragons, and all that long litany of saints of all shapes and sizes, of all colors, before which the Indians had to prostrate themselves, to the- which made it essential to offer sacrifices.

One grasps at a glance the entire sequence of this domination, of this exploitation of the entire people, great and small, by the priest,

Let us continue our examination of the caste system created by Brahma.

"He imposes upon the Kshatriya the duty to protect the people," to practice charity, to sacrifice, to read sacred books, and not not to give in to the pleasures of the senses.

"To care for livestock, to give alms, to sacrifice, to study the holy books, doing business, lending at interest, tilling the land, These are the functions allocated to the Vaishya.

"But the sovereign master assigned only one office to the soudrà," that of serving the previous classes, without diminishing their merit.

You can already see the origin of the law, you understand who created it made, who wrote it, who lent it to God; if you still had any left Some doubt, it will soon be clear. Manou continues:

"Above the navel, the man's body was declared

me

36 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

purest, and the mouth has been declared the purest part by God.

"By its origin, which it derives from the noblest member, because that he was born first, because he possesses the holy scripture, the The Brahmin is rightfully the lord of all this creation.

"Among all beings, the first are the animate beings; among Animate beings, those that subsist by means of their intelligence agency. Men are the first among intelligent beings, and the Brahmins among men.

"The birth of the Brahmin is the eternal incarnation of the justice. The Brahmin, upon entering the world, is placed first rank on this earth; sovereign lord of all beings, he must to ensure the preservation of the treasury of civil and religious laws.

"Everything the world contains is, in a way, the pro—the Brahmin's privilege; by his primogeniture and by his birth "He is eminent, he is entitled to everything that exists."

This is the law that establishes the castes, that assigns to each of them its functions, and it is easy to understand that it is the work of the priestly caste, priests associated with the nobility, to the condition to have preeminence over them, to have priority over them in order hierarchical. Religious law completely dominates the law here. civil. The social order it created will be maintained with severity. ritual that does not allow it to be broken, that will put an obstacle invincible to desires, to love, to gratitude, to all passions, like all the virtues that might have as their re- The result is to bring about the mixing of castes. Listen to the law: "The spouse-sister of a soudra, if he belongs to the priestly class, is degraded on the spot; at the birth of a son, if he belongs to the military class; when this son has a male child, if he is of the merchant class. The Brahmin who does not marry a woman of his class, and who introduces a soudrâ into his bed, descends to "Hellish abode; if he has a son, he is stripped of his Brahmanate."

It is not only marriage, the legitimate union that the law will proscribe; even love will not be permitted between the Brahmin and the daughter of the people.

"For the one whose lips meet the lips of a soudrâ, or rather, as it is written verbatim in the law, for

L

OF FREEMASONRY. 57

he who drinks the foam from the lips of a soudrâ, who is defiled by his breath and who has a child, no expiation will spit him out-tera. »

God had to be held responsible for this condemnation; see How far do Indian priests go: "When a Brahmin becomes assisted by a soudra in the offerings to the gods, the oblations to the spirits and the duties of hospitality, the gods and the spirits do not they do not eat what is offered to them, and he himself does not obtain the Heaven as a reward for such hospitality.

Everywhere you find contempt for the lowly race of the Soudrâs, the superiority of the Brahmin. Is it a question of establishing the penaktes, the confiscation, death, inflicted in many cases on the soudrâ and the Vaishya, never reach the priest; of the interest to be paid to a lender, the Brahmin will pay two percent, the Kshatriya three percent, the Vaisya four, the Soudra five. In the scale of offenses or crimes commissions against persons, those that will have been against the brahmins or those to their detriment will be punished more severely; those committed by them will be redeemed by peilighter ones.

Is it a question of the administration of the kingdom, the duties of the

with them things to discuss, take their opinions and adopt the measure that seems most advantageous to him. But, the code adds, that he deliberates with a Brahmin of high knowledge on the resolution that he took in relation to the main articles; that he communicates all matters with confidence. There are in the governments provisions for days of scarcity when ordinary tax is not enough to the needs, where the prince has few scruples about taking the many of his subjects; the law will still safeguard the Brahmins. "In whatever distress he may find himself," this law says, "the king must One must be careful not to anger the Brahmins by taking their possessions; for, Once angered, they would destroy him on the spot, along with his army and

"his crews, through their imprecations and magical sacrifices.

"What prince would prosper by oppressing those who..."
In their wrath, they could form other worlds and other rulers of the worlds, and turning gods into mortals?

"Whether educated or ignorant, a Brahmin is a powerful deity,"

38 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

like fire, consecrated or unconsecrated, is a powerful divinity. Even when the Brahmins indulge in all sorts From lowly jobs, they must be constantly honored, for they have "There is something eminently divine in them."

Upon reading this social organization which constitutes castes, which confine men without ever allowing them to rise above their circumstances, neither by talent, nor by virtue, nor by courage, to those who are Placed in the lower classes, they were struck with astonishment. a similar society, no progress, no possible improvements bles; it is immobility until a great commotion which brings ruin. There is an insurmountable wall between the castes— sand established by the iron will of the legislator. To give one the only example that will explain the 'petrification of this society' In Indian tradition, a slave freed by his master continues to belong to the class of slaves from which he can never escape, the laws say. by Manou.

One is struck by the singular analogy that exists between this | social organization on the banks of the Ganges and the organization

feudalism was established in Europe before the Indies were discovered green. In the West as in the East, the nation is divided into castes; Europe has its barons, its priests, its burghers, its scribes, elasses which correspond directly to those of the kshatriyas, of the Brahmins, Vaishyas, Shudras. By what mysterious on the banks of the Rhine, the Loire and the Rhône, when India was still unknown to the West, or rather when the land route in had it been forgotten?

Did the successive conquest of Europe by the Franks brought forms identical to those that had emerged from the successive conquest of the indigenous Indian tribes by foreigners? And, in that case, does primitive tyranny have only one form? Isn't it natural to think that conquering peoples, the warlike migrations that emerged from the slopes of the Himalayas, and from which We retraced the route earlier, they did not leave their

em +

countries that, after the establishment of this form of government, ct that the tradition has been preserved among their descendants, to

OF: FREEMASONRY. 29

through the centuries, until the moment of complete victory, did this give them the opportunity to establish it?

However, while the principle is identically the same, the application- tion will vary in Europe for a reason that is easy to understand. In India, the Brahmins dominated, and we see from the laws of Manu what tenacity, what zeal he displayed in maintaining his domination; but the conquering peoples who made their way through the From the Caucasus to Europe, they had too many struggles to endure, too many battles to be fought, so that the warrior, the kchatriya, does not become the important man, the dominant one. It is in vain that the priest will want to maintain his power, I, the warrior, and he will land as equals, and from the struggle will emerge the division of the abandoned spiritual given to one, temporal things that the other will reserve for himself despite all the efforts.

|

|

|

Another reason will prevent Europe from resembling completely to Asia in its governmental form; the priests of Europe will accept the law of celibacy; they will have no fa- a thousand, they will be recruited from all ranks; the families then-

They are at the head of the army. The lower functions of the cult will be abandoned to the bourgeois, even to the serf, and the clergy will to be a field open to all classes.

These are the causes that prevented the feudal system of Europe to resemble entirely the caste system government of India, and why that one lasted for a shorter time.

It is in this second period of the history of the Indian people that society, the order which is called today, originates Freemasonry, after having changed its name under all the religions whose errors he fought against, under all civil laws whose imperfections he attacked, but without ever having changed of an object, without ever forgetting its dual purpose: the adoration of a One God, equality among men. What were his foundations? teurs? As we said before, their name has remained eou- green with a mysterious veil, an imperative necessity imposed on those who entered into conflict against a society whose leaders, the bräh- The men who fought would not have forgiven them.

ee ee + mon nt 4

40 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

their lies. Their individual actions likewise escape history, and for the same reason.

But their doctrines survive; they will soon form a body which will emerge brilliantly in the worship of Buddha and reproduce- Daira in Persia in the book of Zoroaster. If their names are fallen into oblivion that they can no longer pierce, their monuments These things remain, and after many centuries, they bear witness to their existence. Their underground temples can be found throughout India. rains, whose entrance is hidden in deep gorges, beneath rocks covered with bushes; sometimes even, as at Elora, It's a waterfall that hides the entrance to the cave from view. mysterious.

There is no doubt about the goal of the first initiates. Creuzer, who has shed such a bright light on the religions of antiquity, it indicates Clearly. "The most enlightened among the pagans, finding no more "in the public worship of their religion, enough to satisfy the needs of" "Care for their souls, formed themselves into secret associations where one » taught a purer doctrine, whose dogmas were con- » relied on signs and formulas inaccessible to the common people (1).

begin by attacking the mysteries with much more vigor than reason, and ultimately delivers them resounding justice. "The "Truth," he said, "knows no mysteries; they do not belong..." than to error and imposture. The need to deceive, if one can admit such a need, gave birth to them all. "It is therefore outside the bounds of reason and truth that he..." "We must look for the origin. That's why their dogmas have always..." Surrounded by shadow and secrecy. Children of the night, they re- "They doubt the light. However, we will try to bring it in their dark dens. Egypt had its initiations, con- » naked under the name of the mysteries of Osiris and Isis, including those of Bacchus and Ceres were largely a copy. The com- "comparison that everyone can do shopping and adventures of "The Ceres of the Greeks, along with those of the Egyptian Isis, offers too many of » characteristics of resemblance so that one can misinterpret the » lineage of these two fables. The poems about Bacchus and the story "of Osiris, the ceremonies practiced in honor of these two" "deities, and the identity of one and the other recognized by all" "ancient, do not allow us to doubt that the mysteries of the "The first did not give birth to those of the second. Cybele and" "Atys also had their initiations, as did the Cabiri; but "We will not go into the history of the specific ceremonies here." "Each of these deities. We will limit ourselves to grasping the general character and to define the purpose of these kinds of institutions, to "To present all the traits that they all have in common," and to give an idea of the means that were used to draw the » largest party in this politico-religious context.

(1) Religions of Antiquity, Part 2, p. 554. Notes.

OF FRANCHMAINORNAFI. 41

"The Eleusinian Mysteries, and in general all mysteries, had "with the aim of improving our species, of perfecting morals, and to restrain men with bonds stronger than those that "form the laws. If the means does not seem good to us, because it "It clings to illusion and prestige; one cannot deny that the "But, in this respect, it was not praiseworthy. Likewise, the Roman orator "Does it include among the establishments most useful to humanity?" "The Eleusinian Mysteries, the effect of which, he said, was to civilize" "Societies, to soften the savage and ferocious customs of the pre- first men, and to make known the true principles of morals that initiate man into a way of life that alone is worthy "of him." That's what they said of Orpheus, who brought to Greece "the mysteries of Bacchus, that he had tamed the tigers and the "cruel lions, and touched even to the trees and rocks by the "harmonious sounds of his lyre. The mysteries were intended to..."

» a system of those who felt they had to support one with the other.
"This twofold purpose is contained within this verse from Virgil:"
"Learn from us to respect justice and the gods; it was a
"A great lesson that the hierophant gave to the initiates (1)."

We hope you will forgive us for quoting this long passage in which finds a blatant contradiction, because the enemies of Pin-Masonic institutions have often relied on these words of

=

(1; Areyé of the origin of all cults, pages 475 and following; edition of year VI.

ee ee ne

0 qe +R ESSOR ne

of PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Dupuis: "Truth knows no mysteries; they do not belong
"than to error and imposture." As we retrace the
the first steps of secret societies, it was important to show Dupuis who attacked them so vehemently, to see for himself their benefits, based on the testimonies of antiquity and Cicero.
The author of The Origin of Cults did not see, in his legitimate hatred for all that is error and falsehood, the necessity in which one finds oneself secret societies used to shroud themselves in mystery; he did not
He guessed their goal, which had been laid out from the beginning; if he had understood it himself the story we are undertaking today. The societies secret secrets were not born from the need to deceive, but from the beast care to escape persecution, the persuasion that the mys-
Only symbols could initiate ignorant men.
to the great thoughts of a philosophy which would have been, without the use of this means, inaccessible to them, beyond the reach of their in-intelligence.

Let's return to Pindus.

The primitive cult was centered on the worship of a single God, creator of worlds; the primitive civil law was equality between the men; it is this double rehabilitation that will be pursued by secret societies; to capture the imagination of those who join will give them, to escape the persecutions that threaten them always, which often affect them, they invent symbols.
sublime design destined to exert such a powerful influence

"The pure light of intellectual concepts must first and foremost be re-» to bend in physical objects, and somehow take on a "body so as not to dazzle the weak eyes with its too bright light"
"Of these men... What could be more imposing than the image? The image,"
"By grasping the meanings, one will reach the
"soul and will suddenly make the truth of a salutary penetrate"
"lesson, which, entrusted to the less prompt, though more
"Direct, seemingly, reasoned instruction, would not reach
"It will reach its goal and dissipate without fruit (1)."

These are the leaders of the followers creating these mysterious allegories-

(1) Cicuzer, page #.

va Duts - ____- _____ - es

OF FREEMASONRY. 45

His, these symbolic figures that will transcend time, will arrive up to us, and explaining them to those whom they admit into the temple; their education is not limited to these figures, to these images, but it relies on them, draws its main strength from them.
By borrowing these images from the realm of nature, from its objects sensitive to its phenomena perceived by the organs, they compose-

It feels like a kind of morality book, a book that doesn't need to study it extensively in order to understand it, to delve into it
the meaning, but whose lessons suddenly appear simple and lucid, and are grasped by the intelligence, by the soul in which they descend, like the objects that the images represent-their sensations are reflected on the eyeball.

The pure, abstract idea then takes on a bodily form.
which she would never leave again in ancient Freemasonry, as in modern Freemasonry; undoubtedly the great thought Indian, creator of symbols, will not pass through the ages.
will not penetrate among the peoples without leaving and without taking something; it will lose some of its original simplicity, it will...
will be surrounded by a procession in which she will walk as if enveloped;
The genius of the Egyptians will overload it with mysterious symbols, fantastic images, inexplicable hieroglyphs; the character
The poetics of the Greeks will cause it to degenerate into a game of imagination; it will borrow from the successive eras through which it passes forms inspired by the needs of the times, by aspirations

so much, always profound and sublime, and precisely because of this
From the depths of this sublimity, it will reach us, and will resume its primitive form in our temples, almost without alteration.

At first glance, the symbol offers a vague, indecisive image.
which charm through their poetic form, which invite reflection, the analysis, which forces us to seek the truth between appearance and the meaning it conceals; the more the idea it contains escapes penetration
The more one tries to grasp it, the more it is first and foremost a fantastic form.
then a faint ray, a distant, uncertain light, which little by little
It grows a little larger and closer; then finally there is a sudden revelation, swift as lightning, illuminating the mind like lightning

Re el nee TE

4% PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

mine the horizon in the darkness of the night. In its astonishing concisely, he suddenly throws into view, by revealing himself, the ve-Rité, completely naked. The torch shines.

The goal that secret societies set for themselves in creating Islands symbols was completely reached in its part from the very beginning principal; they enlightened, instructed, made men of they were outcasts and pariahs. To escape persecution, they... built their temples in the depths of the earth that the English soldiers are searching today without understanding their destiny.
nation.

"On the beautiful island of Garipoura, which Europeans call
"Elephanta, which is near Bombay, close to the harbor, on the
"On the slope of the mountains, an elephant is carved from a rock" isolated. As we advanced through the narrowing valley, we arrives at a winding defile, between two mountains that seem "To touch each other. There, we find a stone horse statue. Coming out-"
"From this parade, one enjoys a rich view of the part
»
>»

y

northern part of the island, on the sea and the nearby coast of Pile de Salcette. . L

» suddenly you see the grand entrance of a magnificent temple which
"The massive columns seem to support the mountain that..."
"overcomes. The entrance to this temple presents a spacious facade supported by two pillars and two pilasters which feature three passages under a rock covered with undergrowth and bushes
savages. » | |

Doesn't it seem to you that the Masonic temple is far removed from the city, lost as it were in the mountains? This elephant of A stone, hewn from a rock, is it not an indication? (This appears to be a fragment of a la Does he not show foreign brothers the way they should follow in the middle of these uninhabited deserts? Further on, the statue of the horse...
Will it not be a second milestone that will mark that of the paths
Which one should be taken, indicating the vicinity of the temple?

This magnificent viewpoint, which one enjoys at the exit of the parade,
Will he not justify this race away from the city, in the eyes of those who Are they not initiated? Won't there be something in the way they turn around?
towards Ja mer a characteristic sign, an indicator sign which 3

Se ee ee ne

SNS NS
\ SSÿ

NL

INIÈJÎDÎDÎÎÎINIUN to to NK NS x

to: LS SNS RSS N ANNNINNNNNNN

LC
ww

Vo

Kener. in the led

p

L

N

\

HAS

\

\ has

\\

DDHA

BOU

According to the bas-reliefs found

\

ns the underground frictions of

HAS

Digitized by Google

OF FREEMASONRY. 45

—

Let us enter the temple.

"The long line of columns which in perspective have the appearance of

"touching each other on either side, the flattened roof of the rock which does not seem—» preserved from its fall only by these massive pillars whose cha—

"The piteaux are compressed and flattened, in appearance, by the weight"

"that they maintain, the darkness spread throughout the entire extent of the

"imposing and mysterious of these gigantic figures arranged the
"along the wall and carved, like the temple itself, into the "Rocky rock, this whole spectacle, in a word, combined with the uncertainty of despair-» widespread pervasiveness on the history of these monuments, seems pl-
"Let your imagination wander in the ocean of centuries and let it penetrate you"
"of that religious respect one feels at the sight of the works of a
"Unknown age (1)."

A large number of pillars in this underground temple bear, at apex of each of the four corners of their pedestal, a head of Ganecha, the god of prudence, or that of Kartikeya, the god of the war.

This temple contains a large number of statues of the deities Indian traditions, and that of the god Indra himself, of which we have spoken earlier. But what gives our assertions a great
The weight is that we see the figure of Buddha there, of Buddha the phi-the philosopher, the reformer of the religion of Manu, the representative of society, of the school that we can call the mason schoolnique, which we will discuss later. Further on, in a
In the chapel, there is a figure of Buddha sitting on a flower.
of lotus.

"A quarter of a mile from these excavations, there are several more-
"several other adjoining ones. They appear to belong to the cult of "Buddha (2)."

We find similar caves on the island of Saleette, near Bombay; one of them offers, along with our Masonic temples of curious rapprochements. Thus, above the entrance which ter-

|

(1) Laugles, Ancient and modern monuments of Hindustan, page 162, 2nd vol.
(2) Ibid., page 170, 2nd vol.

SR CE << = mme dd CE ne nt ne Rent pme

will teach the initiates which of the spectators is not their brother?

+ A mt

mine the porch is an archway whose ends seem to protrude from the mouths of the two animals placed at either end; the
the center of this arch is formed by the meeting of the flame that Each of them exhales.

At the temple of Kéneri, on the island of Salcette, the same particularisame Buddha figure, same flames vomited pure from monsters.

Another fact: Twenty-two inscriptions are engraved in the temple of Keneri, and no Brahmin is able to read them; this which suggests that they date back to ancient times, and that they are written in a lost language which has perhaps been to be that of the mysteries of that time. Finally, in that same temple, at
On the left, at the entrance, there is a dark room reminiscent of our room of reflections.

These caves, so well hidden from the eyes of the crowd, these temples mysterious as the Christian crypts of the days of persecution will retrace so well, but on a smaller scale, with Less grandeur, less beauty, to whom can they belong?
What hands carved them from the side of the rocks? Will they be dedicated to the law god Manu? But he has temples of which The domes gleam in the sun, in the public squares; there are in the king's palaces, in the splendid islands, the dwellings of the kchatriyas, in the houses of the merchants; he has some in the village, everywhere; and in those regions where not contempt, but scul-
how forgetfulness and indifference in worship would be regarded as a crime and severely punished by law, we don't hide from it to worship the God in whose honor the priests, the king, the nobles, Power finally burns its incense. No one thinks of digging... temples in the depths of the earth when the cult that one Professing is not prohibited.

Did the Brahmins build these underground temples?
would understand that one of these mysterious retreats had to its origin
ginc to the ascetic devotion of some anchorite, such as the ancient hermitages of Christian Europe; but the facts do not per-

do not admit this hypothesis; the immense work of these sanctuaries, the statues that adorn them, the bas-reliefs that decorate them rent, attest to the cooperation of a large number of men,

OF FREEMASONRY. 47

of a powerful society. It is no more acceptable that they be the work of the Brahmins; these priests are too keen to demonstrate their power through the publicity of their cult, the splendor of their ceremonies monies.

Trust them to bring themselves into being; their laws are imbued-

drir, to make it nothing more than a moral domination by locking oneself in a physical darkness.

Those who hide in the bowels of the earth, who veil the statue, the image of their god beneath the vines that hang from the ro-dear ones, these are protesting against an opposing cult, an enemy of their own; at the same time they preserve the tradition of their civil laws broken by new laws that established the tvrannie against which they are fighting. Without apparent strength, they hide under the flowering bushes, behind the iridescent curtain of the waterfall of which the island The murmur stifles their voices and prevents them from reaching the ear of their persecutors, like the Bengal cat nestled in the corolla of a lotus flower to escape the eagle's talons, and of the the bottom of this fragrant chalice, gently swaying on the waves, made to raise towards God his free song that defies the tyrant of the air.

These were our predecessors, the first initiates, the early Freemasons; their doctrines will not always remain buried in the shadows; faithful to their mission of spreading the truth, to share in his good deeds with other men, the brothers will spread abroad the ideas with which they have been associated. God did not tell them to keep the regeneration to themselves alone. that they received from their elders; they should not, they do not want not to be alone in enjoying the pure morality they found in the mysteries; gradually scattered outwards, like the sweet the scent of a perfume spreads and invades the space, the doctrines penetrate-thirty in the huts of the poor Indian whom they first console, which they then raise up before her own eyes; an innumerable crowd-brable adopts them, and, becoming a link that unites peoples to The other, they are making the peaceful conquest of Persia.

Then the Brahmins awaken, emerging from their leaden sleep in which they had paralyzed the nation and frozen themselves-they themselves; they open their eyes, not to see the truth, but

48 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

| to see what steps men have taken under a leadership unknown, from what point they started, how far they arrived vexed, and all the more implacable the longer they have remained stationary, feeling society slipping away from them, they begin-one hundred against the initiates this long series of persecutions which throws-will shed blood throughout the ages. You have seen the first works-You witnessed the first triumphs of your fathers, their first sufferings. Sad condition of humanity which forces the men who come to alleviate his suffering, falling victim to their generous inspirations, from their sublime devotion!

Here the facts begin to become clearer, the dates more precisehis; when the pages of happiness quickly fade in history-History of peoples, the pages written in blood are read more for a long time. Historians agree that the laws of Manu had lasted a thousand years when the religious wars broke out;

| A thousand years of slavery was still not a high enough price to pay for reform required further sacrifices, and these were human victims.
The hands that were going to be given to Brahma. The persecutions that have with the aim of violating consciences, of imposing an ultimate Rejected, they are never justified; if there is a freedom that must Above all, respect is surely that of the heart which rises towards

| divinity and the priest in his own way; the horrible persecutions in of whom were slaughtered those who had adopted the new faith

Therefore, they cannot be excused; they are explained like all others.
crimes committed against nations.

He was far from this great and noble principle of equality.

| by the temple initiates on the principle of caste inequality written in civil and religious law, imposed by conquest, handheld by force and violence. Under the overwhelming influence of this Lastly, no progress could be expected from civilization.
which circled around a boundary without crossing it, without being able to Never surpass. In vain the thought, which nothing binds, between-

| Did she see a better order, more suited to the needs of the nation; in vain did imagination dream of it; in vain the ini-
They proclaimed its necessity; society was trapped in a circle, she lived there without walking, deprived of pro- action

ee 06e no D io 6 RC

OF FREEMASONRY. 49

aggressive, which is his eternal law, outside the path that the great arch-
The text of worlds has traced it for her.

Tyranny was present in form no less than in principle.
cipe, the persecution necessarily had to stem from the will to maintain these forms; the principle that governed the nation prospered all that was opposed to him, because, evil by its essence, its downfall was certain from the day when a different principlerent manifested itself and acted. The force that dominates through free consent from all tolerates discussion, the one that dominates at always fears that other forces will take over the society that she has molded itself to its yoke, and she seeks to crush them all; she marching towards this goal without hesitation, ruthlessly; its path Once its path is set, it will go as far as cruelty and will not deviate. Civilization—that this force establishes and maintains, he said, on the very day of his appearance, her last word, she doesn't want to go any further; from—when its power is absolutely applied to retaining; its logic does not shrink from the torrents of blood it must shed.

Different ideas, opposed to this civilization, are bubbling up. in the minds of men; systems are born from them; the let them develop, then coordinate them, bring them into harmony when people recognized its superiority, it would avoid Bloody struggles would be progress; but all progress im—explains a change, and the rulers of Indian society are determined not to change, not to accept any modification; They prefer war, in which they must either succumb or triumph.

By so profoundly altering the forms of society, by creating the castes, the conquerors of the tribes of Hindustan, the conquerors These soil rants served a dual purpose: to reserve power, the domination, the enjoyment of wealth, material control social elements; secondly, to ensure and the direction The morality of men and the power that was necessarily being established religion's influence on these contemplative natures among the that religious sentiment was developed to a high degree.

It is unnecessary to elaborate on the first of these two points; the civil organization that we have explained and which is clear—

ideas, Secret Association of the Temple.

50 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY 3

The way it is laid out in Manu's law says enough for it to have been Understood; as for the second, the creation of an order of priests who receive the brahmanate only from their birth, do not per—tooth that by an infraction of the law which establishes a separation eternal among men, who can defile themselves with crimes without cease to be respectable, according to this law, forming a nation in the nation, passing down from father to son the priesthood which does not could never escape a caste inaccessible to anyone who wasn't part of it not born, enjoying immense wealth and exorbitant privileges so many tended to increase; this creation, we say, was for them the safest way to remain in control of the direction morality of society, to dominate it in the most absolute way.

The Indian church, as we have seen, did not confine itself to the sanc-tuaire, was not limited to commanding and directing the sacrifices, to take one's share among private individuals, to enjoy the right of hospitalization so broadly understood in the law; the priest rose up, not only in his ambitious thinking, but in reality in the daily practice, above even the king's ministers, It should be noted that, in this case, their power was almost almost without control. The king listened to his ministers discussing the questions—important points, give their reasons rather than other reasoning could destroy, explain their views that views, had more high, or lower and better understood, better tasted, could cause regrowth; the struggle existed in the councils by that alone meant that discussion was necessarily permitted there; the per-

The sound disappeared; the king made his decision after listening to the advice, but, says the law, he would do wisely to submit the matter to a Brahmanic. In other words, and indeed, the king descended to role of rapporteur of the council to the priest who was entering from the in a way, in the active politics of the State, was its true arbiter, the supreme judge, in short, the real ruler. The Brahmin is the The king, the linchpin of Indian society, is deferred to the priest. He then understood what immense power the priesthood must have to exert power over rulers and over ruled islands, with what

He relentlessly struck those who attacked and fought him. directly or indirectly through reasoning, the outpouring of

OF FREEMASONRY. 51

Major reforms, whether opposed or not by those they support their aim is to limit power, to destroy prerogatives, are not easily accomplished; Hindustan offered proof of this. The efforts of the secret societies were ardent, the reaction of The Brahmins were bloody, and Indian society found itself completely... suddenly, as a result of this struggle, thrown into incredible chaos of ideas. In the minds of the people, the political organization and The nun was condemned; she offended all feelings. it outraged all consciences, its time was up, we com—took it, but we didn't understand it as well as we needed to. put it in its place; the whole worn-out edifice collapsed, and people applauded. at his fall without really knowing what should be built upon his

They did not have enough power to make their triumph doctrines that were not sufficiently understood by that same

that they were very widespread; there were more in the masses sincere desires rather than fixed ideas; one sensed the evil, one did not speak—

The remedy was not working well. We discussed this in the chapter the previous example of the happy influence was truly extraordinary.
Freemasonry will exert its influence, throughout the ages, on societies with whom she will be in contact, and we will indeed understand how great it was; but it must be noted here, from the
the moment she first appears on stage, the
The mystery surrounding her will forever be an obstacle to her triumph.
complete on a given day. This is not a criticism that we
We address it to him; it is a fact that is inherent to his very essence and that has
This needs explaining. The people are willing to accept this.
that they embrace, and one must admit that their intelligence of reforms are less developed than the sense of their needs;
They can get lost in an abstraction, tear each other apart for that one, but they do not fundamentally change their laws without knowing precisely what they are adopting, or at least without to be convinced that they know it; also, from the day of his first struggle in India, Freemasonry reveals a particular character

a bond that she will always retain; she will create soldiers for the

Whether the struggle is covert or overt, it will have no leader who will accomplish fairly quickly the reform on which she is still working

—— — — — —

52 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

to have time to establish herself as the leader of a nation; she pro-will proclaim the highest principles of morality and justice, she
She will defend them vigorously, she will make them triumph, she will make them to adopt in the constitution of peoples, it will not be given to him to apply them as a body; similar in this respect to schools philosophical aspects from which it differs essentially on other points, she will sow ideas, develop them, make them germinate, will improve through them the lot of individuals and the lot of nations, and however will never see their complete, total, irrevocable triumph cable.

courageous and enduring great suffering, one can judge what must have happened. to be his first victory. From the midst of the general upheaval. produced by religious war, by the uncertainty of ideas in the largest portion of society, due to the lack of uniformity in their views, some being driven by firmly held thoughts of reform, the others having only a vague desire for it, a doctrine A new idea emerged which was taken by the ignorant masses for improvement. The promised ration took its place; Shiva appeared, Shiva considered later as the second incarnation of Vishnu, bringing the the cult of the Lingam, symbol of life and death, which, poorly understood Taken by the Indians, it was an appeal to passions without giving them no restraint, and motives for scandalous orgies often culminating in in the blood of human victims.

Where did this doctrine come from? Was it merely an aberration of The mind? Was it the result of some infamous calculation? It is impossible to specify it after so many centuries have passed, in the absence of docu- positive aspects; one finds them everywhere on the ruins of the temples. Brahmanical image of the Lingam, object of worship of the few Nowhere is there any indication of the thought that establishes its worship. What is certain is that social organization, which is important- was the most likely to be destroyed, received no damage, than the institution The castes emerged unscathed from this upheaval. The work of Those initiated had to start again; they pursued it with patience. which will become one of the distinctive features of the order in the future. This time They will not wait that long for success; their action will be taken soon they will feel it; their doctrines react, they will not triumph not yet, but they will at least help the efforts of a reform- amateur who tries to wrest society from the disorders of which it gives the terrifying spectacle; they prepare the way for Vishnu, who purifies the worship of the Lingam by spiritualizing it, and which, unable to Extinguishing it, however, dampened the consuming fire of Shaivism.

OF FREEMASONRY. D9

At this point, those in the know can believe in success, in religion seems to date back to the earliest ages, the ancient doctrine of Val- Miki reappears; but the evil is too deep, the young priests of Siva are too interested in maintaining the lewd ceremonies and absurdities which accompany marriages in the worship of this god, to allow themselves to be easily stripped of their prerogatives, and Crichna, who seeks to destroy the Lingam cult, makes vain attempts efforts to achieve a complete reform that only Buddha could accomplish- will read thirty-six years after Crichna's death.

This era is one of the greatest, the most beautiful, of more solemn, which secret societies will traverse; the thought Masonic emerges in all its splendor, and this time throws at

Time had marched on, carried out its inevitable work that destroys everything to renovate everything; from the heart of this Brahmanic religion materialized in the worship of his thousand idols, doubt had arose; philosophy, by undermining religious doctrines, had struck at its base, the civil organization. By overthrowing them pedestal the statues of the higher and lower gods which can- they please the Indian sky, proclaiming the unity of God upon the ruins From polytheism, the Masonic school wanted the abolition of castes, that is to say, the overthrow of the political order; it put equality in place of the lie that had founded dependency, slavery.

It is from the temples of the initiates that the Buddhist religion emerged; Christianity will one day be the purest, the most the heightened religious tendency of men, and one can com- to take, by the striking similarities that exist between the forms adopted by him and those of the Buddhist religion, com- These women must have exerted their power over the Indians.

Buddha, who is God, says the popular legend that personified- Trusted in the reform by one of his priests, he created the myth, Buddha

mt

4. PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

descended from the celestial abode into the womb of Maya, wife of Sou- tadanna, king of Magadha, in northern Hindustan, and member of The Sakya family, the most illustrious of the Brahmin caste. Her mother conceived him without blemish, and gave birth to him without pain. After ten months had passed, he was born at the foot of a tree and did not touch not the earth; Brahma was there to receive it on a vase of gold, and gods or kings, incarnations of the gods, attended His birth. Mounis and pandits (prophets and scholars) recognized in this wonderful child all the characteristics of the divinity.

Buddha made incredible progress early on in the sciences; her beauty and her wisdom were more than human, And when he sat under a fig tree, the people gathered around him. He never tired of admiring him. The doctrine of renunciation to himself had not yet penetrated into the Spirit Islands, well that it had been proclaimed in one of the allegories of Brahma- nism; thus, legend has Buddha marrying a princess ceases to be his family, no less beautiful and no less perfect than he, and she gives him a son and a daughter; but, she continues, her noble heart, torn apart by the suffering of his fellow men, breathed only and goes into the desert where his divine mission is to begin; there, He ordained himself a priest, shaved his head with his own hands, and, surrounded by his five favorite disciples, he gives himself over to life. more austere for several years.

After long trials, his penances completed, he declares to his disciples that the time had come to bring the flame to the world beauty of true belief; the gods themselves descend from heaven to invite him to spread his doctrine, and, radiant with glory, He travels to Varanasi (Benares), the holy city par excellence, to occupy the throne of the saints who had taught the law in the previous ages. Despite the opposition of his adversaries, he receives The people's honorable nickname was Mount (prophet). At this time—that the fire worshippers, who came from Persia, sought to pro— They would page their religion, but the divine prophet confounded the false doctors. Then word of his calling began to spread, and

ee _ _
ee ee 2 – ce 00 ee

OF FREEMASONRY. DD

the doctrine of salvation that he brought, preached everywhere, pre— gradually gained value in Hindustan.

It is said that before his death, at the age of eighty, he announced that his doctrine would last five thousand years, but that it would outlawed in India, its birthplace; that its disciples would suffer violent persecutions, and that they would be forced to flee on a foreign land, from which true belief would then emerge, more More powerful than ever, to travel the world. He also predicts that after five thousand years a new god—man would appear; then he went to reunite with the divine essence from which he had emanated, and was worshipped by mortals as wise, inspired, or prophetic, or god same.

He is called the God of mercy, the giver of salvation, guardian of the human species and tasked with fighting against invasion ever-increasing plagues.

His images depict him being breastfed by his mother, who is holding him on her knees, receiving offerings of flowers and fruit. A A halo encircles the head of the divine child as well as that of his mother. The beautiful Maya. Elsewhere, Buddha, symbol of doctrine and of the Wisdom is often represented in the attitude of teaching. or in that of meditation.

the imprint of his right foot on a mountain in their country and

The one on the left in Deva-Lanka. The writers disagree on the time when Buddha appeared; the opinion that seems to have prevailed

This was worth noting, as it was born approximately ten centuries before the Christian era
Some thought there had been several men from same name, continuing the Island triumph of the same ideas; we re-Buddha is still found in the planetary system of India.

But that's not what this is about; the reform has been proclaimed;
Buddha does not attack the warriors, the kchatriya caste who provides the kings; that is not the important thing; the entire nation is dominated by priests who rule indirectly, it is up to those that he will strike the first blows; the liberation of the people Indian power will result from the overthrow of their rule. Its first
The task is to call to the priesthood all castes, all men who feel divine inspiration within them. This proclamation of the right

56 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

ns

of all to the priesthood is in itself a revolution; it is the dethe fall of the Brahmins, the overthrow of the constitution, the et-promotion of equality.

"This consequence," says Mr. Quinet in his fine book on the
"The genius of religions, was, in fact, deduced by Buddhism"

"with a fearlessness of logic that seems to belong only to "The West. Christianity itself, in its most charitable form..."

"pure, did not more irrevocably proclaim the equality of all"

"Men. The Eastern genius wants to make it tangible. The "Distinction between races," said one of these abolitionists from Upper-Asia is characterized by its organization: thus, the elephant's foot is different from that of the horse, the tiger's foot is different from that of the bull; but I have never heard that the foot of a

"Sudra differs from that of a Brahmin. Likewise, in what

Look at the birds, you can make out the eagle, the sparrowhawk, the turtledove,

"The parrot, by its plumage, flight, color, and beak; but

"Priests, warriors, farmers, artisans, are similar in the "Flesh, through skin, through blood, through face, through bones: all the

"That they are all part of the same caste."

This was the synthesis of the doctrines preached in the temples. initiates, scattered outwards by this force of expansion which On certain days, great truths triumph. We must to make here, in passing, a remark whose gravity will be necessary- understood. By declaring that men of all castes had the right to become priests, Buddha then carried out the separation of spiritual power and temporal power that the Brahmins had confused them and that they were reunited in their hands by dominating kings. Philosophers and writers have perfectly understood, when the Christian church, in order to defend itself to fight against the domination that she had to seek to re-establish more late in his favor, he began to fight to obtain this separation tion, that this was the source from which the would one day flow Freedom of conscience. These are the initiates, the forerunners of... Freemasons establishing their first titles to recognition of the world by trying to establish in Asia this freedom of conscience whose conquest was to cost Europe so much blood.

Read

5

>

5 nn - _- 22 0 + 2 00 th, ms

OF FREEMASONRY. 57

The Brahmanical religion had its prophets; - they were called Thus the wise and learned. - To the word of Buddha and his among his disciples, a new order of prophets was formed in India, living according to the new doctrine, emerging from all castes without distinction, calling to them those who wished to follow them, admitting to the prediction anyone who felt convinced and capable of convincing created others. Equality ceased to be a theory; it was now... when put into practice on a large scale and by those who can- were expected to exert the most influence on the nation. These were called Samanean prophets, that is, those who have overcome their steps- siones, and that word alone sufficiently expressed their virtues; they are the same that Clement of Alexandria, Porphyry, Saint Jerome, call will believe they have swept it off the ground.

The doctrine soon spread throughout Hindustan; it was a fire which found before it only dried and covered heather—would pass through them, setting them ablaze; to the crackling of that distant fire First, and then drawing closer day by day, the tribes flocked to them to draw from the hearth a ray of light, a life-giving spark; that is a burning baptism in which everything is regenerated, the spirit and the body; the enlightened mind, the body finding unknown strength spend in the struggle. What could borders do? They mark—They were asking for the limit where human law should stop. What was their Power against thought? They didn't stop it. Worked by the ideas that secret societies had in this fertile soil, ready for any seed, and which, after germinating For a long time, they were blossoming into the open, Asia felt so deeply—the need for a change in its laws, for a renovation, that on all sides the people were opening their arms to the reformers, adopted their principles.

It's a huge concert that erupts in the middle of India and in—sees its sublime notes stir the four corners of the horizon. II It seemed that this aging society had outlived its usefulness, that the organization civil sation, struck by anathema, had to succumb to the shock, disappear—traitor, leaving only memory as a vestige. Buddhism first went down to the island of Ceylon, and, as if he had Having drawn strength for conquest from this pause, he launched himself at

= ms me de be = mt ue eu ve 6e Reno nn ee +6 0e Ce en 6

ri mr eo qe 1 as Es 2

ge eee mt meet

PRESESS

: *

oo mr + > PME A 0 ue neue A + di sq — Ed mms

Bt PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

across the islands and waters of the Bay of Bengal, he set foot on the land of the Burmese empire and seized it, invaded Siam, and, marching always pushing beyond, it penetrated China and Japan, and established itself there under other names appropriate to the genius of these nations. The idea does not stick, it radiates; also, going up the Ganges Island, crossing the rocks, eternal pedestal of the Himalayan ice, the bud-Dhism simultaneously brought civilization and the arts to Tibet. would settle on the plateaus of Central Asia as far as the Mongols and Kalmyks, and finally, taking its course in a in another direction, returning to that beautiful valley of Kashmir, cradle of Indian society, of the primitive religion to which that of Brahma had been violently substituted, dethroning this conquering 'and reclaimed her former position before climbing the peaks of Bactria.

A sublime epic, a magnificent poem of conquering thought, which begins with triumphs, which will end in blood and larmy, and so will all poems end until the day when the pure Light will flood the universe!

Every generous thought encounters enemies, every principle, However noble and great he may be, he had adversaries; the reform was not favorable to the people, the people had masters, and this It is never through them that reforms begin. The brah-The rulers were too keenly threatened in their despotism, they possessed too much material power to allow themselves to dethrone without resistance; the whole of society was in their hands, They tightened the yoke. The struggle was from the outset entirely one of discussion, entirely philosophical; in their temples, in their discussion, entirely philosophical; in their temples, in their discussion, In public or secret courts, the Brahmins attacked religion of Buddha with the violence that never fails to occur in discussions religious or philosophical; they presented it to the people as false, they proclaimed it invented by an imposter, the depicted it as a doctrine of atheism, of materialism, of nihilism, imputations that nothing justified (1), and, unable to Having overcome through persuasion, they took the sword as their ally.

(1) Creuzer, History of Religions, page 306.

OF FREEMASONRY. D9

The rajas joined them and turned their weapons against the sectarians who threatened to build their empire on the ruins of any other power (1); thousands of men fell victim of their faith; the persecution was long, Buddhism had cast its roots were too deep to be easily uprooted; it was cruel precisely because of the resistance that was encountered, the The cult was outlawed, the temples destroyed, and one could hear the The ferocious Koumaril Bhatta will pronounce, in ordering the massacre at those he had recruited for these bloody executions, this phrase which has become historic: "From the Rama bridge to the Himala "Whitened by the snows, whoever spares the Buddhas, en-

Here, there can be no illusions about the real cause of these horrible things. persecutions, it is in the abolition of castes, in the war made by philosophy to the errors propagated by the priests who had erected a multitude of idols on the altar of the God of religion primitive, in the abolition by Buddha of part of the rites and Brahmin ceremonies. All purely theoretical religious figures of Buddhism, the doctrine of contemplation by in which man unites with God, the extinction of the flesh, finds himself wind germinating in the Brahmanical religion, and their development-

This could not have been the true cause of the persecutions. We nor do we think that it can be found in the procla- the formulation of this abstract principle of Buddhist philosophy, "that "The universe is animated by a single spirit, individualized under..." "Endless forms made from matter which is but illusion," for it was This is the continuation of Indian pantheism.

These persecutions must be attributed primarily to the revolution policy produced in Hindustan by the religion of the initiates.

A marked dissimilarity profoundly separates the new the church of the old, the Buddhist religion of that of the worshippers of Brahma; in the first one finds an organization which It presents striking similarities with Catholicism. Brahmin priests constituted a separate caste, an aristocra- priestly bond, maintaining itself by its own strength, by exclusion

(1) Creurer, History of Religions, page 501.

The SS ES
_ ee 2 2 + oo

ce mm em Re met sm =

++ EUR 2

60 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

of the other priestly castes, dominating the kings, if not by right, at least in practice; but no trace of an authority can be found special institution established by these priests to guide them, and to which they

First, at their head were patriarchs who traveled throughout India in missionaries, then they eventually established a head of the church, commanding a large clergy, sovereign master of the law, he-based on a sacred rule for all, including priests only remained in society for monks who had retired to cloisters. completely separated from the world and devoted to the contemplative life. This is the organization that would later be found in Catholicism. in the papacy.

Some historians have believed they saw in this organization the cause of the fierce war that the Brahmins waged against the Buddhists; In our opinion, they have given too much importance to a secondary cause. The persecution had more serious motives, and these are those that we have developed. As a result of these terrible struggles, the Initiates were exterminated, and Buddhism disappeared from Hinduism. But, human weakness exiled from his primitive homeland, of places where it was born, where it shone, Buddhism soon dominated to the south, to the east, to the north, so as to envelop his cradle on all sides. The name of Buddha, in the places even where his religion was outlawed, it retained the meaning of scholar. of wisdom, of excellent intelligence, and, despite the anathemas, the The curses with which he was burdened remained as the epitome of what he was. has a higher and purer form. Moreover, the initiates, obeying the supreme law which we have indicated further on, and by virtue of which they never die, the initiates secretly began again—their eternal work of propaganda, and, professing the the same doctrines replaced the Samaneans, the gymnosophists—tes, under the name of djainas.

Thus, from the cradle, in the very midst of her pains, at the breast Amidst the most violent persecutions, the Masonic order emerged with its seal of immortality, always preaching the same principles cipes, always raising the banner of truth beside the ban—

_nière of the error, feeling his courage being renewed in Blood Island of its martyrs. Under the crushing rule of the reconstituted castes, ei me

om —

OF FREEMASONRY, 61

placing a more oppressive yoke on the nation than ever before, The initiates will still live, but they will vegetate in obscurity; later times, subject to the law that disorganizes defeated parties, their children will even lose themselves in their dreams of triumph, and form—

will bear no resemblance whatsoever to those we have described.

It's done, the mysterious caves of Hindustan will keep still held the hopes of early Freemasonry, but it will no longer have brilliance, glory, or resonance in these regions where She reigned for a few moments, during which she fought for good.
Humanity's hour. Sit down, dethroned captive, upon the stones on the path, feet bruised by brambles, and weeps on the misfortunes of the men who have stripped and banished you. You I lured them with sublime harmonies, and the clash of their swords and their war bands drowned out the accents of your divine har-Monia; you brought them civilizing liberty, and they did to triumph over the barbarity of despotism; you spread upon them
Sweet perfumes, and they preferred the intoxicating scent of blood.
high on the peaks where you were to reign over this admirable nature, casts a final glance and a final farewell to this beautiful peninsula deprived; it is now in other parts of the globe that we Let's meet you again with your active life and your strength.

We have seen the secret doctrine penetrate Persia; it brings back to this nation as ancient as the Indian people the primitive religion which seems to have been common to both country (1). In both we find this thought of light and darkness, – good and evil, – opposites
as principles and in a perpetual struggle. The light and In Persia, darkness is deified under the names of Ormusd and

(1) Everything suggests that religions, like the populations of Persia and of India, were very closely linked in origin; the very name of Hom and the ideas which those connected to it seem above all to attest to this link. The first belief and the pre-
The first regular cult of Iran must have been something quite analogous to this natura-symbolic realism, to this purified Sabaism, in short, to this primitive pantheism which ma the truly ancient foundation of the Vedas. The Zend-Avesta, in a multitude of passages, te still bears witness to this original identity of the two religions. (Creuzer and Guigniaut page 685.) William Jones notes this analogy; Messrs. Gærres and de Hammer think that India must have been the common cradle of the two religions.

62 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

of Ahriman; this thought will be so powerful that it will outlive all these long wars that the Persians will wage against their neighbors, and in which so many ideas are modified or succumb; she scra written on the banner of this warlike people whose steps seem-bent devouring the borders of other nations, always trembling impatient at the sound of the instruments of war; she will cross
all these splendid dynasties of kings from Dschemschid to Darius will pass through Egypt, Greece and Rome; she will appear
It will even extend into Christianity: Dicu ct Satan; it will be in

res of Hindustan, and the first steps of the profane in the temple will represent the passage from darkness to light, as more Later, his initiation to the rank of master will offer the spectacle of Ja wrestling putting these two principles into action.

This thought, we will find it sculpted in the gigantic ruins—the temples of Persepolis, as in those of Ecbatana, the capital of Media, as in the underground temples of Bamian, no far from Kabul. "Persia and India, Hom and Brahma, Buddha and "Zoroaster, they seem to be holding hands (1)."

Freemasonry appeared in Persia with a somewhat... different from the one she had shown in Hindustan; we We saw it in this latter region, which is essentially political, to fight civil power, to break down the barriers that separate the castes, to free the people from the yoke of the priests; in Persia, where the The nation is still divided into four castes, but where these castes do not were never hereditary, she seems to attach herself more particularly to develop moral ideas; his political action no longer such a high level of activity, or at least doesn't let it show so much Clearly. Royal power was almost absolute; however, it was governed by a law that seemed to have foreseen everything, and consequently—Quent had to bring some tempering to it. It is to this power and to the upper classes that Freemasonry will give its great lesson in equality, erite in modern temples, repeated in all our ceremonies, like an eternal thought that the Insiders have the mission of making it prevail.

(1) Creuzer, page 677,

<q en nt go 6 mm mt mm im mm P0 qe eu tre rer

OF FREEMASONRY. 63

We will not follow through the centuries that separate Buddha Zoroaster's secret doctrine in its developments; his mar—the same is true in Persia and India; there as here it goes to produce a book, and by consulting these annals one will find everything entire. At the time Zoroaster appeared, secret societies had a powerful organization; crowds flocked to request initiation to the mysteries of the sun and those of Mithras, but the trials were long and the entrance to the temple was not easily accessible dée. Twelve main tests were imposed on the novices; Initially simple and lightweight, they gradually became not not cruel, as historians have said, but painful.

Nonnus states that in trials the life of the recipient mystical tortures and torments; this is a double examination. Suidas said that one could only be initiated after having proven, through the most terrible trials, that one had a soul virtuous, beyond the reach of all passion and in a way impassive.

Magnificent praise coming from men who have not always confined to the role of narrators! The trials had the triple goal of ensuring that the novice was not led to ask the initiation through the desire to work on the common project, that he would be able to keep, at the risk of his life, the secret that would be revealed to him; Finally, like the victory of the spirit over matter, the subjugation of

These were essential conditions for admission.

sion, it was quite natural to observe through trials and this triumph and this dependence.

The day when we can no longer apply the parol
The Suidas family, Freemasonry will have lost its power.

A cloud still hangs over the precise dates; some believe that there were several Zoroasters, and trace the first ones back to thousands of years before our era; others think, and This is the most widely accepted opinion, that the doctrines beliefs attributed to this legislator had long been widespread. when he came to summarize them in his writings, and this emerges, in In effect, quite obviously, as a whole; five hundred are kept alive years before Christ, the author of the sacred books of Persia. Thus,

ee <e-0

RS RS po

64 PHILOSOPHIC HISTORY

Long before the Christian era, a man appeared on this side of the earth. of the Indus, Zoroaster, 'who will be exactly the representative, initiated into Freemasonry; he will be the second one to have been initiated into it. transmitted the principles and ideas. There is no longer any need to search. the earth and to ask the unexplained monuments for their secrets buried deep within it, there's no need to search in our legends. a distant echo of Eastern hymns; everything will be explained, everything will be precise and clear; we will see through the transparent veil of twenty-Four centuries later, a brilliant light finally shines upon our order.

less than a hundred years, by Anquetil-Duperron, of the sacred books that he held Parsian priests who still obey the law of this legislator. There is no ceremony that resembles lini-Masonic tradition of our time, no thoughts that have a purer reflection than that offered by the doctrines of French current masonry.

Zoroaster remained in solitude for a long time, preparing himself to the initiation. "Then Brahma, radiant like the sun, and the hand » covered with a veil, presents herself to Zoroaster by the order of 'Or-Musd, – Island creator of beings and worlds, – and said to him: "Who are you? What are you asking?" Zoroaster replied, "I only seeks what pleases Ormusd who made the worlds; "But I don't know what he wants from me. O you who are pure, my-" "Show me the path of the law." These words pleased Brahma, who "He told him: Close your eyes, and walk quickly. You will have-" "Siez said that a bird carried him off and brought him before God. When-" "When Zoroaster opened his eyes, he saw the glory of heaven."

Zoroaster asked the supreme being what the best of "His servants. God, who has always been and will always be, him "He replied: 'It is the one whose heart is upright; the one who is generous.'" "towards the righteous, towards all men, and whose eyes are not "not turned towards riches; he whose heart does good to » (out everything that is in the world.

Ormud also taught him about the revolution of "sky, the good or bad influence of the stars, the secrets of the "Nature, the equal happiness that all beings should enjoy in the "Heaven."

OF FREEMASONRY. 65

These words of Brahma, these dogmas taught by the supreme being Zoroaster's images have been faithfully reproduced in Freemasonry. laughter; by a rather remarkable peculiarity, there are some words spoken here by God which are verbatim the even in one of our ceremonies where they are necessarily reproduced by the one presiding over the initiation. What follows is a symbol preserved since antiquity, and that all The Freemasons will understand.

"When Zoroaster was filled with the knowledge of God, he "saw a mountain of fire, and he was ordered to pass through it; "He crossed it without his body suffering the slightest harm." "Then they melted down various metals and poured them over him." "body, and he didn't lose a single hair. After that, they opened him up "The belly, they took out what was in it; all this was done by order" "of Ormusd. He whom God protects, the iron in his hand is like

These are emblems that still have the same meaning today.
 meaning; we will see its application. "Ormud said to Zoroaster: Teach the people what you have seen, you who "You are their shepherd. He who follows the impure way of Ahriman (the "evil genius"), as you have crossed a mountain of fire,
 "And when your belly is opened, streams will flow from your body"
 "Of blood, his body will be consigned to burning flames. For this"
 "which is from the river of molten metals, which could not have damaged a
 "Just one of your hairs, here's what it means: A generation" will abandon the law to follow the path of Ahriman; but the Mobeds
 "will arm themselves to fight the Dews. Doubt will seize the
 "The hearts of men, and this burning river will dissipate it: Aderbah"
 "Mahrespand will appear, he will instruct the men in all that they
 "They must know; molten metal will be poured over his body."
 "which will do him no harm; this miracle will dispel doubts and will reveal the right path.

"After that, Zoroaster consulted the one who knows the secrets about..."
 "The duties of his servants. He asked him how it should be done."
 "Pray," which is what the one who wanted to address Ormud with... must have said.
 "Praise accompanied by thanks, and from which side, in "Praying, one would turn one's face. The being who gives food"

Se

66 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"of each day, and who needs nothing," replied Zoroaster:
 "Teach the people that my light is hidden beneath all this"
 "that shines. When you turn your face towards the light"
 "and if you carry out my orders, you will drive Ahriman away;
 "In this world, there is nothing above the light."

Don't you recognize yourself in these ceremonies that accompany Zoroaster's initiation, those to which you submit the ap-Preti? The third journey, in the reception to the first degree,
 Is it not that of the Indian legislator across the mountain of Fire? The advice is to turn your face towards the light.
 Don't you find all the ideas associated with the Orient in your temples? After the initiation, Zoroaster withdrew to the mountains;
 He dedicates a cave there to God, the father of all that exists;
 wants this cave to represent the world to him, and that the things it contained, placed at fixed distances from each other others offer symbols or figures of elements or climates.

"This spectacle," says the historian of Zoroaster, "was very suited to

"Before our eyes, the constant order of the universe, its different parts,
"the elements of which it is composed, this protected harmonic whole"
"By Mithras, companion of the sun and the moon."

Such a spectacle, or rather this representation of the system of world was a religious symbol, a permanent manifestation of the Zoroaster cult, as, in all religions, the statues, The sculptures, bas-reliefs, and paintings were in the temples. the indication of the cult to which they were dedicated. We find today on the walls of our temples all these emblems of the Zoroaster's cave, described nearly twenty-four centuries ago, and we can truthfully say that they represent for us the asylum of Persian legislator.

The vaulted chamber that Zoroaster had built is faithfully reproduced in the architecture of our sanctuaries, but this res-
A mere resemblance would not suffice to establish a direct lineage; which must hit harder, which should convince Micux that images, micux than ceremonies preserved from antiquity, this are the doctrines carefully preserved, the precepts copied word for word

D
dm

Subjects, masters, and servants are equal!

OF FREEMASONRY. 67

words from the book of Zoroaster and constantly applied by the Freemasons. In the instructions that the legislator gives to King Gustasp, after receiving them from Ormusd, said, "You see, him
"He said, 'These domes,' pointing to the sky and the Atesch-Gäh, which is..."
"the temple; they gather together without distinction kings and subjects, the
"Masters and servants." Sublime words, if one considers the time when they were pronounced! fruitful doctrines which tell of They were born the seed of equality for all men! Words and documents trines that the Freemasons have meticulously preserved, which they pronounce at certain times, which they always profess, and which are represented in all their temples, without exception, by the emblem of the square.

In all rites, if not in all eras, the temple has enjoyed of certain immunities; vengeance could not pursue him there who came to embrace the altar; human justice even stopped there. sometimes on the threshold; the victim designated to the executioner enjoys there- He knew of the right of asylum. The Masonic temple bore written on its walls, on the capitals of its columns, a broader principle

This thought of the temple that Zoroaster erected at Ormusd, in which he traces back to the astronomical system essentially linked to his worship and inseparable from the religious idea for men whom the material forms must be prepared to seek the meaning of the symbols, had been brought to Persia by the initiates of Hindustan or was the imitation of their customs. The Persians, in fact, were not in the custom of erecting statues, temples, to the gods altars; on the contrary, they called those who did so fools. This, says Herodotus, is because they did not believe that the gods would take on a human form (1). They used to sacrifice to Jupiter on the summit of the highest mountains gave the Jupiter's name encompassed the entire circumference of the circle. They were still doing sacrifices to the sun, the moon, the earth, fire, water and to winds, and they never offered them except to these deities. They added to them in the sequel the cult of Celestial Venus or Uranic that they have

(1) Herodotus, 1. I, ch. CXX XI.

D -

68 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

borrowed from the Assyrians and the Arabs; they called him Mithra; the The Assyrians called her Mylitta, the Arabs Alitta.

When they wanted to sacrifice to these gods, the Persians did not erect no altar, they did not light a fire, they did not make a libation tions, used neither flutes, nor sacred ribbons, nor of barley mixed with salt; they led the victim to a place pure and with their heads covered by a tiara crowned with myrtle; they invoked- they would call upon the god, cut the victim into pieces, and make of it boil the flesh, then, after spreading the most grass on the ground tender, usually clover, they placed the pieces of victim and arranged them carefully. The magician, who was always present at these kinds of ceremonies, would then begin to sing a sacred song called a theogony, then the one who had offered the sacrifice carried off the flesh of the victim and disposed of it as he pleased (1).

It is worth noting that here, as in India, before the reform No one is permitted to offer a sacrifice to Buddha without that a mage (priest) attends. The mage acts, like the brahmane, the indispensable intermediary between God and man. The Did the initiates change this custom? We don't think so. we have found no trace of such a reform; the The priest's power was still too well established, too great;

through prayer or thought, without anyone intervening between this God and him; but in material things, in the ceremonies where the Thought was no longer the sole actor; the body was also taking necessary steps. The priest's presence was considered useful, as he played an active role in the process.

But if the action of the initiates fades into the background when it comes to sacrifice in it itself appears evidently in thought and in the form of prayers that always accompany the sacrifice. Here there is no individuality, no selfishness in the secret act which unites man with the god he invokes; indeed, it is not permitted to he who offers the sacrifice of making vows for himself alone in part-culier: he must pray for the prosperity of the king and that of all the Persians in general, because it is included under this name (2).

(1) Herodotus, 1, 1, ch. CXX XII.

(2) Same.

2 2 0 0 CIE GP EP NE PP mg RD

mo <q

OF FREEMASONRY. 69

This is the first application of the principle of fraternity, applied- a very vague, very incomplete cation, but which nevertheless This already indicates a new era in humanity, signals the emergence of great thought. We have no right to be in this regard We are quite harsh on insiders, and we cannot justly criticize them for not having given this principle a development- a broader and truer approach, having applied it with greater effectiveness efficacy, since, after so many centuries, this principle of franc- Ancient and modern masonry is still in its embryonic stage, debated in books, but not practiced anywhere in its entirety sincerity, with all its consequences.

Although the barrier between castes was less insurmountable- sand in Persia than in India, the inequality of conditions was however, it was written in civil law, and was noted in the external relations between men. When two Persians you would meet in the streets, you could recognize them by the way they they greeted each other despite the diverse social conditions to which they belonged; They were equals, they kissed each other on the mouth; if one was of a different birth slightly inferior to the other, they only kissed each other on the cheek, and if the condition of one was far below that of the other, the inferior The leader prostrated himself before the superior (1). The initiates proclaimed they proclaimed equality among men, and Zoroaster made his voice heard men, both kings and subjects, masters and servants, in the temple are equal. The public square belonged to civil society which maintained an unjust inequality between citizens, which constrained them knew, even in their friendships, to mark, to note by apparent signs the superiority of some, the inferiority of others. The temple belonged to the initiates; it was the sanctuary of equality; all distinction between men ceased in the sanctuary.

We have seen the principle of fraternity emerge in the prayers of sacrifice; we heard the great voice of Boudha to proclaim the equality of rights to the priesthood, that is to say the equality of the humanity of men in relation to God; we see a few centuries later this principle was put into practice in the temples. It works well.

(1) Herodotus, 1.1, ch. CXXXIV.

70 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

slow to take shape, a great and true idea, but one that had so many obstacles to conquer.

We believe that the institution should be attributed to the Persian initiates of the Masonic kiss preserved until now in the lodges under the name of fraternal kiss; their customs in ordinary life seem to have brought it about naturally. The citizens have various ways of kissing that indicate between them social differences; initiates adopt the kiss on the mouth which characterizes equality of conditions in civil life, and from the moment of entry into the temple, there is no longer a king, no more warriors, no more priests, no more artisans, there are men. The fraternal kiss, preserved in Freemasonry as it was practiced among the Persians, equal between them, must therefore have been originally the basis of equality in the temple.

If, after these great proofs of the lineage of our order, it were needed another one, we would find it in the education of children in Persia a coincidence with our first three degrees, which seems to indicate that ordinary life had become imbued with the ideas widespread in the symbols of the temple. Thus, when the child has just reached three years old, the father must make an offering to Mithras for him. Until he is five years old, he must be taught to distinguish between good and evil, and, when he commits some fault, to tell him simply not to do it. At seven years old, he is required to follow the precepts of the law. These, as Freemasons know, are the same at the ages of the first three grades.

The manifestations of worship are still present in our own islands. More than among the Persians; the festivals we celebrate are, like the cures, relating to the renewal of the seasons. Finally, if we let us rid our religion of the worship of lesser gods, invoked and demanded by the crowd, and whom the priest respects, prays, but does not worship unique, the recognition and adoration of Dicu of which all emanates, master of all that is good, principle of all justice. The morality of this religion is written in a single precept which can be subdivided into three, and here it is verbatim, as it is written in the Izeschné, at the beginning of the fourth Ha, that is to say at the Fourth part of the prayer: "Be pure in your thoughts,

OF FREEMASONRY. 71

"Be pure in your words, be pure in your actions."
This morality of Zoroaster is that of the Freemasons, that which is taught to all Adini men at initiation.

Let us summarize in a few words this first period of history-Masonic tradition, so that later we can appreciate it with a rigorous accuracy of actions, fidelity, deviations from companies secrets.

From a religious perspective, one god is recognized, a single, uncreated one. within which everything is born, everything develops, everything is transformed form. The worship of this god is the primitive worship of nature established based on observation of the world system. Its entourage composed of seven planets represented by seven stars, or the seven-branched candelabra; with four angels or stars indicating the four cardinal points, the four seasons; of twelve constellations through which the sun passes successively, and which we will be found under different names in the mythology of all the peoples. The festivals are those of the solstices, the separation and the the return of the sun, or, to speak in Persian terms, the festivals of the destruction of Ahriman's productions.

In politics, equality between men is proclaimed; this This principle is applied with regard to the priesthood; it is written books are among the most advanced monuments of intelligence.

In philosophy, the struggle between good and evil is represented by the light and darkness; the initiates are the priests of light, the enemies of darkness, that is to say, they must spread the good and fight evil; the time will come when evil will be destroyed, where good alone will reign; that is the goal that must be pursued secret societies, until the day when the earth, without inequality, becomes—dra the sojourn of happy men, living under the same law, enjoy—experiencing an unalterable happiness under the dominion of light.

The world will then be a great temple where all men will be equals.

However, this doctrine, identical initially in India and in the

and Freemasonry, by establishing general principles and in allowing men to worship Dicu as they see fit, has indeed

44 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

understood that no religion can be universal in its | details no more than in its rites, and that the genius of nations there | would always bring about alterations. It's the lack of intelligence of This inevitable fact has often led to religious wars.

The Indian, of a soft and nonchalant nature, indulges in con- Temptation, and, without abandoning the dogma of the dualism of the principals He believes he can overcome the latter through sacrifice, clinging to the concepts of good of his individuality, through the absorption of man into God; he seeks- | In short, happiness lies in rest. The Persian, on the contrary, lively, restless, warlike, fond of fighting, upholds the dogma of combat in its original integrity.

This is the starting point of Freemasonry, leaving Hindustan and Persia, from where it will penetrate into Ethiopia and

|

Egypt.

oo og ee me ©

Digitized by Google

OF FREEMASONRY. 73

CHAPTER THREE.

Freemasonry in Egypt: the spread of Masonic faith from East to West. – Antiquity of civilization in Egypt. – Gymnosophists of India found in Ethiopia; their doctrine. – Government and religion of the initiates. – Myth of Isis and Osiris; Typhon; Horus. – Evolution of this myth; the third symbolic degree of modern Freemasonry reproduces it entire. – Religion is based on the astronomical system. – Thebes, capital of the governor-initiation of the initiates, – Saïs; festival of lights.

K, onr inuanr its march from the east towards the west- \ {tooth, Masonic faith was to encounter

all of Egypt, a mysterious land like the primitive initiation, splendid theatre of Z, our religion and our philosophy, ground
2 who in turn wear the most brilliant mo-elements of civilization and bends under the yoke of the most appalling barbarity. The French-masonry will cross, on the banks of the river and in the delta that its branches enclose, the seven great periods of illustration, ruin and misfortune which divide Egyptian history. She will reign, a beloved sovereign of peoples, will rise, throughout the theocratic period, to the
the highest splendor she had ever attained, neither before, nor since then, and in its shadow the laws will be powerful, the floral arts
They will laugh, the marble monuments will rise. Diminished by the a revolution that will bring the Pharaohs to the throne, it will unfold
Its activity and strength will remain largely intact; it will fight with weapons in hand when Cambyses, leading the Persians in conquest, will have plundered its temples, ravaged its palaces; it will fight to restore | 6

AT--_ -

74 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

independence from the homeland. Alexander and the Greeks who will drive out the Persians, Pompey and Cato who would inherit the legacy of the last-
The Greek kings, the Arabs who would wrest this heritage from The Romans, the Turks who will take it from the Arabs, will find it still motionless like the granite sphinx seated at the gate of its demolished temples. It will make an echo heard, when, coming From the West, the crusaders will go to conquer the tomb of Christ; she will give them one last word which they will report back to Europe; finally she will tremble beneath the stone that covers her, the day when French people, his children, will sing a song of Triumphant freedom at the foot of the pyramids!

At that moment she will believe she sees her Osiris again, her sun, her god;
light of a day that will pass over the ruins, a ray that will die in the desert sands, a date inscribed alongside the dates ancient ruins, ruins added to other ruins! Then the shadow unfoldsrée, hands supplicating, eyes turned towards France,

will lie down again in his shroud to wait for us.

The historian would go astray by trying to find precise dates.

'Egyptian eras whose history has been recounted in books'

To come. On the sands churned by the simoom, in the forests dedicated to the deities, on the rocks of Libya, across the A thousand and one canals that cut through the meanders of the delta, of the the bottom of the fertile alluvial soil with which the Nile has covered its banks sandy and sterile, from the peak of gigantic palm trees whose flexible branches and broad leaves rise towards the sky and swaying in the air, from the midst of the ruined capitals, one hears a distant echo murmuring the traditions of the past, in Pobsuprofound ritual of a night that the human eye will never to break through. Everything has its voice in this immense desert: the stars around from which our earth eternally turns; the river that fertilizes
the sun-scorched fields; the ruins of the temples and the monuments lying in the grass, covered by moss and the silt deposited by the waters; the Herculean pyramids, mys-
formidable barriers opposed to the invasion of swirling sands under the blazing breath of the winds; the symmetrical tombs where Extinct generations, forgotten dynasties, lie dormant;
large necropolises where six races of rulers and

OF FREEMASONRY. 75

RER WHEEL that in age |

conquerors who drove each other out in turn, heirs by force
of this splendid land in which everyone overturns what his predecessors built; everything, even the valleys that guard piled up the bleached bones of the bulls sacrificed to gods; each of these remnants proclaims disputed eras

the anteriority, cries out dates going back further into antiquity.

Which one to hear in this strange Babel of diverse accents, of Confused pretensions? The noisy waters of the Nile roar their forty centuries of periodic flooding observed by the men; from the ruins of Memphis rises a voice that gives to monuments with an existence of four thousand five hundred years; the Priests of Sabaism murmur from the depths of their tombs.
fifty-two centuries of astronomical observations; the table

Alexander and five thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven years before the era Christian; Plato notes facts predating him by ten a thousand years; Thebes, the capital of the theocracy before the conquest | of Menes, the first king of the first dynasty, Thebes, with its brilliant civilization, its splendid arts, bear witness to a duration lost in the mists of time; the signs of the zodiac, all of which, in the cycle traversed by the world, are destined to mark In turn, the equinoxes buzz above our heads, from various points of the ecliptic, a first date of twenty-five thousand years. Thus, from the depths of the earth, from the rays of the sun, voices rise and fall, rejecting thought beyond of all known limits, in a darkness that nothing disturbs but will no longer be able to provide light.

The peoples of Hindustan, surging across the gulf of Oman and the Bab-el-Mandel Strait, were they the first landed in Abyssinia and entered the deserts of Lydia? Persians, ever eager for new lands, ever driven propelled forward by the genius of conquest, did they carry their ideas forward? religious women in Syria? That is an insoluble problem; we find- vons at the same time, merged in the same antiquity, in In India and Egypt, identical doctrines existed, the dogma of darkness and light, analogous Masonic mysteries, an almost identical initiation.

|
|
|
|

70 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

In the material world, we see the life-giving star rise with splendor and casting its rays upon the world, we follow its course of Lorient to the west, but it is so far from land that a whole The hemisphere is illuminated at the same time; in the moral world, the light does not appear at first to the eyes of the crowd, she remains long buried in the caves of India and Egypt, It spreads without fanfare, and when it appears all- a radiant blow, illuminating both lands, we no longer know where It has begun; it dazzles, it astonishes, and one does not think of to search for where his cradle was (1).

Upon leaving India, we left behind the Gymno- philosophers sophists, initiates hidden in the ruins of Buddha temples overthrown by persecution, secretly reviving their pro- written by the Brahmins; we find them in Ethiopia in the most remote antiquity, organized into a college.

Their home was situated on a small hill, not far from the banks of the Nile, in Meroë; they gathered in a sacred grove to deal with common affairs; legality existed between them, and age alone conferred the title of supreme leader, of hierophant par excellence (2). They had preserved the custom of Hindustan to speak in symbols, led an austere life, presided over the education of children, and inspired in the people a veneration profound; their god was the immortal being, the principle of all things; doing nothing wrong was, they said in their instructions, the most beautiful tribute that could be paid to him. We find— They have in their homes the cult of light and the representation of darkness by the sun and by the moon; they had consecrated to the former a akelage of four white horses to mark its speed and its brilliance; at the second a team of oxen, offering the animal which crisscrosses the earth to the nearest celestial body (5). We find them

(1) Did Egypt, by the slow path of experience and progress, reach the point of social advancement, as her earliest works have shown us? Or did she receive— she possessed a ready-made science from another people who had preceded her in this path of Primitive attempts at social organization? How many days and years passed in both! supposition! Cnawrocliox-Ficeac, The Universe (Egypt), p. 2.

(2) De l'Aulaz;c, History of Religions, p. 61.

(3) Heliodorus, |. X, p. 175.

OF FREEMASONRY. 77

looked at them like the inventors of astronomy; the Freemason-nerie thus marked its first steps on this new land by
in-depth studies and discoveries useful to humanity.

These gymnosophists were renowned in Egypt as the custodians of all the sciences that made Ethiopia famous, and they themselves regarded the Egyptians as a colony of their country, which had emigrated under the leadership of Osiris (1). This name of Osiris is pronounced for the first time

(1) The opinion that the ancient population of Egypt belonged to the race
The term "African Negro" is a misconception that has long been accepted as truth.
travelers to the Levant since the Renaissance of literature, few capable of appreciating v accuracy the notions that the monuments of Egypt provided on this question important factors have contributed to spreading this false idea, and geographers have hard failed to reproduce it, even in our time. A serious authority had also declared itself created this opinion, and had, so to speak, made this error popular. Such was the effect of what the famous Volney published on the various races of men he had observed in Egypt. H says in his travelogue that the Copts are the descendants of thick lips, like mulattoes; that they resemble the sphinx of the pyramids, which is a very distinctive black head, and he concludes that the ancient Egyptians were true Negroes of the species of all the natives of Africa. In support of his Volney's opinion invokes that of Herodotus, who, concerning the inhabitants of Colchis, It's worth remembering that the Egyptians had dark skin and curly hair. But these two Physical qualities are not sufficient to characterize the Negro race, and the conclusion of Volney, regarding the Black origin of the ancient population – Egyptian, is evident–forced and unacceptable. The observed facts contradict it very formally.

It is widely recognized today that the customs of Africa belong to three races, at all times very distinct from one another: 1° the Negroes proper–as they say, in the center and in the west; 2° the Kaffirs, on the eastern coast, who have a less obtuse facial angle than that of Negroes, and a high nose, but thick lips. and curly hair; 3° the Moors, similar in stature, physiognomy and the hair, to the best-formed nations of Europe and Western Asia, and not of differing only in skin color, which is tanned by the climate. It is to this last–the first race to which the ancient population of Egypt belonged, that is to say, to the white. To be convinced of this, one only needs to examine the human figures representing Egyptians on the monuments, and especially the large number of mummies that have been open; to the color close to the skin which has been darkened by the heat of the climate, they are the same men as those of Europe and Western Asia. The hair curly and hairy are the true characteristics of the Negro race; now, the Egyptians had long hair of the same type as that of the white race of Occident. CuaupozLion–Ficeac, The Universe (Egypt), p. 26–27.

The first tribes to populate Egypt, that is to say the Nile Valley, between the The cataract of Siena and the sea came from Abyssinia or Sennar. The ancient Egyptians–these belonged to a race of men quite similar to the Kennous or Bara–arms, current inhabitants of Nubia, One finds no trace in the Copts of Egypt in the history of secret societies; it will henceforth be eternally there–repeated repeatedly, and, although it varies among different peoples, He will remain as the immortal representative of the sun, a symbol of light.

78 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Osiris was the Indra of the Indians, the Ormuzd of the Persians; but the Indian metaphysics, the dogma of Persian dualism, will in Egypt to take on a less transparent body, a poorly–fortunately material; for the ignorance of men will take this To make the myth real, she will transform him into a man, a hero, a god. and from this first mistake will stem the most monstrous errors false crimes, saturnalia, tyrannies that defile the history of peoples.

During the first Egyptian period to which we give a fabulous duration, the priests, initiates and initiators into the doctrine secret, reigned supreme; the priestly order and the order the first of these orders; the college of priests made the laws; religion, which encompassed all branches of administration, was the powerful link by which citizens and various parts of the empire. This period has since been called the reign of the demigods, history has accepted this name; it is probable that originally it simply meant the priests, the representatives God's followers, those who ruled in God's name. In During this period, the people were not subjected to a despotic yoke. because it gathers in assemblies called Panegyries for to make known its needs, its wishes, and to indicate to the legislators those who are concerned about what affects their interests. Thus, from the outset, the in

we do not limit ourselves to preaching grand theories of freedom, she applies them to the government in countries where it dominates (1).

characteristic traits of the ancient Egyptian population. The Copts are the re- The result of the conflagration of all the nations that successively dominated over Egypt. It is wrong to expect to find in them the main features of this ancient race, 'CuawPoLLiox young, Historical Memoir on Egypt.

(1) The Egyptian sages attached themselves with rare predilection to everything that was to be true, useful, and lasting. The happiness of all was the goal of their study of man and of nature, a study enlightened by perseverance, strengthened by solitude; and these w They fortunately understood that, in order to achieve this noble goal, they had to become kings and prostitutes; they also discerned the true foundations of human society,

ei
ee me

OF FREEMASONRY. 79

The figure that appears at the top of the religious building of Egypt is Osiris, a myth created by Ethiopian priests, by the gymnosophists, preservers of the secret doctrines of India and of Persia. Osiris has several characteristics: first of all, he is the god uncreated, principle of all things, soul of the world, intel- light lectual; then it becomes, through a rather slow transformation natural to the minds of men, the visible god, source of all warmth, of all life, of all fertility, the perceptible light, The opposite of darkness, the sun at last. This first philosophy, so great, so high, coming from India and Persia, darkened after the invasions of pastoral peoples, and in some con-

Treces, in the Egyptian delta, for example, which owes its fertility.

to the regular flooding of his great river, Osiris ceases to be the universal discussion to be only that of this delta; it is the Nile.

The annual revolution of the sun gave birth to the legend symbolic of his wanderings, of his assassination by Typhon, – the evil principle, the darkness, – of his body found by Isis, – the female or moist principle, – enclosed in a tomb – beautiful, of his resurrection, of his ascension to heaven; the Egyptian spirit-tien applied this legend to the Nile, and, thanks to a few subtleties, this application, quite ingenious in itself, has nothing to do with shocking.

In India, we rediscovered our temples, our principles, our doctrines; in Persia our initiation with its journeys, its symbols, down to the words we speak in this ceremony – denies it; the first grade, that of apprentice, is entirely contained within it; the

L;

and the one they created in Egypt had a duration that no other equaled or will equal. never, irrefutable testimony to the power of laws skillfully adapted to the es- and adapted to the customs of the people they governed, and also to the Enlightenment, to the probity and integrity of the legislator.

Our spirit is deeply moved by the spectacle of this moral and political organization. tick of ancient Egypt, which seems to have sprung from the hands of the Creator fully ended the institutions most necessary for its existence and social development. indeed ignores its origins, and to the most remote eras to which criticism Historically, she was able to trace her roots back to Egypt, with its laws, customs, and its kings and its gods; and, before those same times, there were still ruins from earlier periods. CnaupozLion-Ficeac, the Universe (Egypt); p. 2°

mo © 9

80 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The Egyptian legend of Osiris will completely retrace our third grade, feature for feature, word for word. Our second The grade, that of companion, is indicated in the Egyptian mysteries. hold by the trials to which men were subjected newly initiated, but it is not traced there with a resemblance – white as well; we will only encounter it again later. among another people. The action carried out by secret societies, she was practicing, will easily make it clear why this second grade does not exist in Egypt as it is given today (1).

Listen to the Egyptian myth preserved in Freemasonry modern under another name: Osiris marries his sister Isis, and they descend together to earth; Isis is the first to bring them men cultivate barley and wheat; Osiris invents the tools of agriculture. culture, gives the inhabitants of the banks of the Nile the harvests and the laws, marriage, religion, civil society. He wants to bring his property to... Having been involved in other lands, he sets off, traveling the world at the head of of a large army, subjugating the peoples, not by the fighting, murder, pillaging, but also the allure of music and poetry; a beautiful image of initiation, a great lesson imparted to men.

During his absence, Typhon, his brother, the pervert, the rep-sensing darkness, seeks to seize the throne of Egypt; Isis, who commands on behalf of her husband, thwarts the plans of Typhon. Osiris returns, and Typhon, who has allied himself with sixty-twelve conspirators, allied with the Queen of Ethiopia, Aso the Black, invites his brother at a splendid banquet. Amidst the joys, the pleasures-Lords of the festival, Typhon and the conspirators throw themselves upon Osiris, They lock it in a chest which they seal with lead, and the They plunge into the Nile, which is to carry him to the sea. Osiris dies Thus, at twenty-eight years old, on the 17th of the month Athyr (November 13th).

Immediately the Pans and the Satyrs began to roam Egypt crying out in pain, Isis learns in the city of

(1) It was some time before 1830 that the grade of journeyman, ceasing to be in France, a continuation of physical trials, became a magnificent allegory rendered more sensitive through the notebooks of Mr. Désestang, who devoted his entire life to the tion of the order. The rest of this story will indicate the source of this second grade.

FREEMASONRY. 81

Chemmis, after the death of her beloved husband, abandons herself to despair. pear, then puts on mourning clothes and goes in search of the Osiris's body. Children point out the Tanitic mouth of the Nile to him. who dragged her husband's body into the sea. Osiris, by a The error, later acknowledged, had been attributed to Nephthys, sister and wife. of Typhon, a natural son similar to his father in wisdom and goodness, but who wore a dog's head, Anubis; Isis the taken to help him in his research. They were a long time useless; the coffin had been washed ashore on the coast of Byblos, amidst the reeds. A heath (1), at the foot of which he had stopped at, had grown in such an extraordinary way-naire, that the chest was found wrapped in its wood. Struck by admirable stem which contained the body of Osiris had a column that supported the walls of her palace. Isis learns these details, rushes in tears to the gates of Byblos, and sits down at edge of a fountain.

The queen's women met him there; Isis graciously raised him up
They combed their hair and poured the sweetest perfumes over it. Upon their return,
They spoke to the queen about the foreigner, who displayed her marvelous talents.
them; the queen summoned her and gave her child to nurse; Isis the feeding him by putting his finger in his mouth instead of the breast, and at night, to purify his body of what he had of
On earth, she made him pass through the flames. She herself, pre-taking the form of a dove, it fluttered around the column, filling the air with its plaintive tones. One night, the queen, Struck by the strangeness of his behavior, she spied on him secretly, she threw a great cry upon seeing his son in the midst of the flames, and, rom-
The spell cast prevented her from achieving immortality. Suddenly Isis appeared in the guise of a powerful goddess, seized the column, removed the coffin, then returned the wood to the king of Byblos sacred thing that was deposited in a temple where it has been worshipped ever since.
Then, rushing to the coffin, Isis gave herself over to her grief.
and uttered such piercing cries that one of the king's sons died from them.
fright.

(1) Erica arborea; some authors say acacia.

D
me ee

0 << PP
A PR mm

oo PP PGM
ne oo

82 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

From this pious concern, he went to Buto, where he was secretly being raised, and hid Osiris's coffin in a secluded spot. Typhon, who hunted one night by moonlight, discovered it, recognized it he cut his brother's body into fourteen pieces which he scattered From all sides. Isis returns, searching once again for the scattered limbs. of Osiris, travels through the seven mouths of the Nile in a boat made of papyrus, finds the sad remains except for one, the fertilizes Egypt by its overflowing; then it transports its

He married Philae and buried him there. Philae was from then on the holy place par excellence (1). However, revered tombs and temples by the peoples arose in all the places where it had been found one of the members.

However, Osiris returns from the underworld to instruct his son in the weapons, to test him and to inspire him. Horus gathers his loyalists; his party grows every day; they march to battle;
Horus triumphs, and Typhon falls alive into his hands.
Isis breaks the chains of this cruel enemy, and restores his freedom.
Horus, indignant at this action of his mother, lays his hand on her and tears off her diadem; Hermes replaces this crown with a cow's head adorned with its horns which has since remained the symbol distinctive of Isis. Typhon again sought to seize the throne from Horus, but he was banished by him and relegated to the deserts. Isis had a child by Osiris, Harpocrates, born after Osiris's death.

(1) The island of Philae was accessible only to priests; every day they offered there, at tomb of Osiris, three hundred and sixty cups filled with milk (a number equal to that of the days of the year in its oldest form), and this funeral offering was accompanied accompanied by lamentations with a kind of litany. A completely similar usage subresided in the city of Acauthus. It is evident that this cult had a dual relationship to the annual revolution of the sun and the vicissitudes of the Nile which depend on or corresponporndent. Osiris was considered to be both the Nile and the sun. In accordance with These ideas, the foundation of the national religion, were not taken as oaths by the Egypt more sacred than this one: "By Osiris who rests at Philae." The discovered monuments daus this revered Island perfectly supports this.

Diodorus of Sicily. Zoëga, from Origine et Usu obeliscorum, p. 286. Lancrét, Description Egyptian history, Antiquities, p. 4. Creuzer. Herodotus, always and thought of avenging him; she wants to charge Horus, her son,

Isis brought back to Egypt the body of her husband, whom she mourned.

has

OF FREEMASONRY. " 83

who came before his time, mutilated, lame, a child of pain and tears (1).

This is the sacred myth that formed the foundation of Egyptian religion.
yours, the cornerstone of the mysteries of the ancient society, and

The main characters are actually the sun and the moon who necessarily occupied the first rank among the stars, and the The sacred fable is explained quite simply by their movement compared to the zodiac and the para-anatellons (2). Osiris is the benevolent sun, which fertilizes the earth, presides over vegetation universal, it brings to life and matures the productions it has sown. in the bosom of the earth, and that the earth gives to men, su-transfer of events completed since the moment the sun returns to our hemisphere until the one where it moves away from it to move towards the southern regions of the world.

Osiris is therefore the sun, god of plowing, benefactor of men, pouring out their riches upon them (3); the sun, considered as a good principle, as the author of the goods enjoyed by humankind Typhon is his enemy, Typhon who, in theology Egyptian, is the bad principle, the one that presides over the tenèbres; it is Ormusd and Ahriman who changed their names in passing from Persia to Egypt, but who continue their eternal struggle. [I] another principle existed in Indian and Persian philosophies a topic we haven't discussed until now, because it wasn't Jiait that very weakly to the development of our history; it does not He will not play a more important role in the sequel, but he takes on a

(1) Plutarch, On Isis and Osiris.

2) The paranormals are the celestial bodies taken outside the zodiac, to the right or to the left of this band, which rises above the horizon or descends below it in the same moment and during the same time that each of the ten degrees of each sign puts at motion to go up or down, From which it follows that there must also be thirty-six paraglidiers who By their rising or setting, they are naturally linked to signs and tics of signs, otherwise to the thirty-six subdivisions inspected by the decaus, and in which are distributed among the seven planets, each five times. This number thirty-six of the decans and the paranatellons is precisely that of the planes or constellations celestial figures outside the zodiac; for the ancients counted only forty-eight celestial twelve of them are in the zodiac or in the signs, and thirty-six are outside the zodiac.

Drruis, Origin of all the Culies, vol. 1, p. 180.

(3) Iamblichus, ch. XXXIX.

body in the Egyptian mysteries, is personified there; it is the principle of heat and humidity are the sources of all things, of the heat doing the role in the reproduction of beings

Everything is born and develops.

This abstract thought materializes in Egyptian religion. yours, and the priests give to Osiris, supreme god, author of all things, sun-god, principle of heat and fertilization, Isis, the moon, as their wife; they attribute adventures to her. which merely represent his races, his revolutions in the astronomical system; the administration of the world depends on them, all sublunar bodies owe their nourishment, their increase, during the annual revolution they generate and the different seasons that share it (1). The combined action of These two causes harmonize the temperature, produce the generation beings, because they possess, one the fiery and spiritual qualities tueuscs, the other the moist and dry qualities of bodies, and both an equal portion of the principle of aerion. The sun and the The moons are therefore the supreme moderators of universal nature. saddle whose elementary parts are the spirit principle, the the fiery principle, the dry and the wet, and finally the aerial principle; they are the principles of fruitful activity and good that heaven communicates screw the earth; they gave mankind civilization, all that which relates to it and all the benefits that result from it.

Osiris's cloak, like Ormusd's, is a color bright and vibrant, without any mixture of other colors which could alter its purity; its hue is one, simple and without shadow (2). Osiris, in the spring, united with Isis, and poured into She was the seeds of fertility; she was spreading them throughout Pair, imbued it with generative principles that set the universal vegetation (3); the zodiac sign of Taurus occupied then the spring equinox; hence the Apis bull, a living form under which was represented the sun-Osiris in his union with

(1) Diodorus Siculus, Book 1, Chapter 1, pp. 14-18.

(2) Diodorus, De Iside, p. 582.

(3) Diodorus, De Isile, p. 559.

OF FREEMASONRY. 85

the moon-Isis, at that same time, when the two celestial bodies spread regeneration and fertility across our hemisphere; From there again, when superstition obscures the symbolic meaning from the myth of Osiris and Isis, the requirement that the ox Apis, among its distinctive characteristics, carried on its shoulder a A symbol representing the crescent moon. This fruitful action The relationship between the two stars was also expressed in Egypt through images. that our current customs reject, that the initiates of Egypt accepted them because they had a true meaning, but who did not never been admitted into the temples of Freemasonry

At the moment when the primitive myth is altered in the delta and in the part periodically flooded by the great river, the Nile is regarded as the god, as Osiris himself; the fertile earth—The goddess he named Isis. It was at the spring equinox that a kind of movement was beginning to be noticed in the river water gradually rising, so that the action of the Nile on Egyptian soil coincided with that of the sun on the moon. This connection must have made the error easier; Egypt is viewed in its entirety as the bed of its river; what it does not water not remain barren; it is a desert that the waters of heaven cannot not to fertilize; that is Typhon's domain. Thus is explained the birth—Anubis's power. Isis is the fertile wife of the Nile; Nephthys is Typhon's barren wife, and can only conceive through an adult—to be with Osiris, meaning that the desert cannot be fertilized than by the Nile.

The Egyptian national religion has been, from the beginning, that of the initiates, the cult of the great architect of the universe represented by the sun, a source of light; long, calculated observations firstly, the length of the meridian shadows leads to the knowledge of its annual revolution; the inspection of the stars leads to the discovery of the sun's oblique movement in the circle of the ecliptic; the zodiac, with its twelve signs, that is invented, or rather the actual movement of the stars that make up the sphere is translated into sight, made perceptible to all; the celestial system is established; worship will be based upon it.

The priests had invented astronomy, the observation of phenomena of nature came to complete the general system, and at the same time as they were developing the elements of a science Exactly, they broadened the foundations of a religion. The year is divided in four seasons marked by temperature changes; The seasons themselves are subdivided into twelve indicated months. by the twelve signs of the zodiac band, where the successive entry the sun's activity is determined by observing stars placed in outside this band; the time the sun spends in each The constellations are measured, the zodiac divided into three hundred sixty days or revolutions bringing in turn the light and the darkness, to which are soon added five additional days taires which represent the entire path of the sun.

86 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

All external worship will be based on astronomy; the cere—Monks will recall these various developments; the festivals will seem to have as its sole purpose to celebrate the periodic rapprochement of the sun, to pray when it moves away. But science cannot—in that the historians who have written about initiation without Having received it, on the mysteries without knowing them, which have copied in turn, they propagated errors that they passed on to one another. They were innocently passing from one to the other. We understand, in all Throughout history, some men have striven to improve themselves. working together in a manual art, obeying a partisan interest eulier, to an interest of existence or well-being, rejecting those who present themselves to exercise it, ensclating it only to a small number, than to members of their family, so as not to be delighted to themselves, through distribution, their means of wealth, their resources; one groans from this state of inner turmoil, from this antagonism, of this necessity, if you will, in a bad a social organization that makes men rivals instead of to make brothers; they are not approved of them, however they are complicit. takes.

But this could not be the case for the leaders of the initiation. Masonic, custodians of the sciences; the knowledge as- the tronomics spread by the Egyptian priests illuminated the initiates into the superstitions of the masses, which we will have to talk about earlier; they were the corollary of the reception, of admission to the mysteries; they were not its principal object, nor the basis. They did not constitute a secret doctrine, but only a little-known science; initiation had another But, and this goal, we will explain, not by induction, not by searching for a few haphazard inots, scattered in the books, but relying on ancient authors who, struck by This great fact of the existence of mysteries, they have sought and revealed philosophy as much as was permitted to them, when they had themselves received the initiation.

OF FREEMASONRY. 87

The dogma of the immortality of the soul was born, and with it the idea rewards and punishments; a comforting, civilizing thought, which reformed an entire society delivered without hope to anarchy The morality of materialism. From this dogma naturally followed lessons in wisdom, fairness, rules of conduct, the idea of resistance to the immoderate appetites that drive men by such a rapid descent into degrading immorality, of the prin- principles of fraternity, equality between men, and regulated freedom by the laws. That, as all writers note, was the doctrine the secret of the Egyptian Freemasons, the teachings of the priests, leaders of the initiates, and constituting the theocratic government which preceded the rise of the Pharaohs.

During this famous period, the city of Thebes arose, the capital- tale of the empire ruled by initiated priests; and, says Diodorus cence. Its beginning is unknown; its first days lose, like those of the Egyptian people, in these mysterious times rieux which have no precise date. Historians of all most people of all ages have the crazy habit of looking for a foundation a leader in all the cities; hence long disputes, a thousand tales-sterile speculations that do not advance science one step. Apart from some cities were founded by kings, often for practical purposes, in a vain thought sometimes, but who take good care to ins-

Cities are built by writing their names on their monuments.
slowly by the populations; they do not emerge from the ground
like a plant. By the sea, on the banks of rivers,
A few traffickers gather, a few fishermen meet-thirty, they make shelters against the coolness of the nights, against

88 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the inclement weather of the seasons; they gather under a tree to deliberate, and the shadow of the commune appears; they pile up among a few stones, they celebrate the ceremonies of their worship, they place the image of their god, and the temple is indicated; the family increases, men attract men, cities are born, develop, grow, surround themselves with walls, adorn themselves of buildings. When they are given a name, those who founded them:
The goddesses have been sleeping for a long time in the oblivion of the tomb.

Thus Thebes was built; some men first erected on the eastern bank of the Nile, cabins made of borrowed reeds to the river; the population grew, built a bridge over the waters gradually covered the western bank; an immense
The valley stretched between two mountains; Thebes only stopped at within these limits; the initiates established their principal college there, the seat of their power; then the buildings rise; one sees emerging from These splendid palaces, these marvelous temples, between which will shine this famous temple of Karnak whose ruins cover still the earth. Nothing in modern times could give an idea of this grandeur: the temple of Karnak was nearly one half a league in circumference (1); who would dare say what it contained-then master of colonnades, colossal statues, obelisks, in seeing what still remains after the devastation of so many centuries
how much time has passed since its fallen splendor?

One hundred and forty-two columns in two quincunxes, of which twenty columns eleven feet in diameter, from sixty to eighty peaks of height, composed of the main portico of the island, lit by a mysterious day; beyond this portico lay a second entrance followed by four granite obelisks of exquisite workmanship; three were still standing just a few years ago; perhaps
Has the wind of destruction swept over them by now?
The ceiling of the Karnak temple, painted blue, was studded with stars

Description: we believe we see the starry vault of our sanctuaries, as we saw it again in Persia. The gate through which one

(1) Denon, Voyage en Égypte.

(2) Caupo Luox jeune, l'Égypte sous les Pharaons, 1. 1, p. 206.

ee ee ee ein

ee 00e ie mere

OF FREEMASONRY. 89

entered the second circumvallation from the north side lined with sphinxes whose pedestals still exist; beyond, in
In a courtyard, colossal statues of sandstone and white marble rose up.

|

A second temple was enclosed within the precinct; its first
The gate was preceded by an avenue of bull-headed sphinxes which

|

D

nm er es 2 RS 5 rer

arrived at a fork in a second avenue of sphinxes at human head, cutting across a third avenue of sphinxes with heads of ram; one had one hundred and twenty, the other one hundred and two (1). This last-
The nière connected the temple of Karnak to that of Lugsor. Finally, within the general enclosure there were four temples, of which we can see
The ruined walls, the truncated columns, the statues...
Mutilated. Two obelisks carved from a single block of pink granite, one hundred feet in height, two statues forty feet high, more than one hundred columns adorned the entrance to the Luksor temple. All these Magnificent displays extended over the eastern part of Thebes.

The west bank of the Nile contains a greater number of ble more columns, pilasters, statues of colossal priests dirty and carved into caryatids, monuments among which are The Memnonium: tomb, temple, or palace, we no longer know.
which, a statue seventy-five feet high, a library on the door of which was engraved this inscription tion: PHARMACY OF THE SOUL. An idea quite worthy of Freemasonry-

Such was this famous capital, when the initiated governed—were born in Egypt; it was in these resplendent temples that they they celebrated the mysteries, and that's where the people flocked to their Voices, they came to listen to the word that gives life, that regenerates. More Near us, going down the Nile, one found in the delta a another city, Sais, where there was a renowned college of priests and a temple, since called Naët, in which there was a chapel made of a block of granite quarried from Elephantine and transported to Sais, which is one hundred and eighty leagues away (2).

The difficulties of locomotion seemed to be a game for ee
a people to whom civilization lent so much power; the land

(1) CnawrozLioN young, Egypt under the Pharaohs, 1.1, p. 206.

(2) /d., id.

nn

90 PUILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

that he inhabited, all of Lower Egypt, was the result of landing= successive ments produced by the Nile which had added a counter to the Thebaid valley by pushing back the boundaries of the sea; the delta was merely the remains of Abyssinia carried by the river nearly three hundred leagues away, and this people, too, transported to considerable distances the columns, the obelisks, the chashovels, the temples; the waves had given him the land, in his turn
He would take the granite rocks they respected and add
Thus, one conquest leads to another, even more marvelous conquest.

History has preserved for us the memory of the great ceremonies national ones that attracted initiates to the mysterious temple of Sais, a whole religious and enthusiastic people. When the time
As these festivities began, the Egyptians embarked on the Nile.
in splendidly lit boats, and the whole river
The waters up to Sais were covered with these ships going up and down.
its course, and whose brilliance dispelled the darkness of the night. They arrived in Sais, where the mysteries were celebrated after sunset,
The Egyptians lit candles around the temple and around tents, in which they camped in the open air; the inhabitants of the city surrounded their houses with lamps placed outside laughing; they were small vases filled with salt and oil, with a wick swimming on it and burning all night (1). In At the same time, in all parts of the country, those who could attending the solemnity would burn candles in their cities, so that at the same hour all of Egypt was asked, while passing over one of the branches of the Nile, or while re-guarding the delta from the bottom of the Inland Sea, the cause of all These fires that brought forth day from the night, the answer given was: They are the Freemasons who celebrate the festival of lights, and who celebrate the night amidst these splendid lights, because Initiation dispels the darkness of the mind, like the light of Lamps chase away the darkness of the night.

Like Thebes, Sais has suffered the ravages of time; the city

(1) Herodotus, I. I, & LXII.

(2) Herodotus, I. II, & CXI.

OF FREEMASONRY. 91

the most considerable part of the delta seems to have been submerged in the waters; his college of priests was dispersed by the conquest; of the temple famous of Naët, today only ruins and colonists remain truncated bodies, mutilated sculptures that serve as supports for poor huts of fellahs ignorant even that the ground trodden by their feet were dedicated to the ancient gods of their homeland.

It is pointless to search for what they were at that time. famous and unique in the history of Freemasonry, the trials imposed on those seeking initiation; that—"1 It had several degrees, and we can easily understand why. secret doctrine had become the dominant religion, the religion national, the object of everyone's veneration; she no longer had anything By concealing her identity, she could make all her knowledge public. It wasn't she who resisted intelligence, who enveloped herself of veils to hide from his eyes; but, charged with the instruction— The formation of men proceeded slowly, as it does today. In the study of science, one begins with the most simple, the least difficult, so as not to discourage the minds of those who engage in it. She measured her successive revelations against the intelligence— loyalty of those who had obtained initiation, so as not to not to frighten them by suddenly showing them the goal they were to reach, but to lead them there by degrees. A: this mo— The mystery was no longer within her, but the darkness was still in the minds of men; she could only dispel them

Little by little. His trials were therefore, like Faure bui's, much more moral than physical.

CHAPTER FOUR.

The story of Freemasonry in Egypt continues. A revolution wrests control of the country from the priests and establishes a hereditary monarchy. – The myth of Isis and Osiris is distorted, – Gross idolatry of the Egyptian people maintained by the priests. – Invention of astrology; of talismans; of charms; lends a soul, an intelligence, a life, an influence on the fate of men, or constellations. – Divination; horoscopes; the supposed power of the moon; palmistry; magic; necromancy; human sacrifices. – Empiricism; personification of the planets, – The Apis bull. – Aberrations. – The role of Freemasonry during this period. Its philosophy, its struggles, its suffering.

This begins, for those in the know, a period of Egyptian history. News: a revolution was brewing; one of the warriors' leaders, Menes, soured up the soldiers, wrested from the priests the power, founded a throne (1) and there established his dynasty, the first of thirty-one who reigned before the Alexander's conquest (2). It was not enough of having taken away from the priests their scepter, it was necessary to escape the moral domination they exercised– They were saying that they needed to distance themselves from their still very powerful control. Menes built Memphis, which was thereafter the residence of the Pharaohs; Egypt had the capital of the kings, just as it had the capital of the priests.

During the first period, Egyptian Freemasonry had focused primarily on perfecting the laws, on civilizing the men, and the great initiation which later became known as the Telele. The name of Telele was indeed regarded as suitable for raising them

(1) 5867 years before Christ, according to Manetho.

(2) The crown was hereditary from male to male, by order of primogeniture; the brother succeeded the brother who died without surviving children, and, in the absence of a son, she yielded to the father, and the man she married was the queen's husband without being her brother.

Cnawpouion–Ficeac, the Universe (Egypt).

© = — — —

It is likely that the priests, heads of state, did not have the fundamental principles of freedom have not been sufficiently developed. of equality, of fraternity, the basis of the secret doctrine; the materials They lack the means to judge them impartially in this regard; perhaps had they not succumbed in the struggle against the ambition of warriors, if, as rulers of society, they had given it laws satisfying all his needs.

The military order could not view the domination without jealousy. constant of the priests; invested with the right to bestow the crown, he naturally aspired to place it on the head of one of his mem- bres; if the right to vote, in this great circumstance, belonged exclusively to the first two orders, the people, Understandably, he must have taken little interest in a revolution that did not specifically affect him, and refraining from defending a go- a government he did not help to form. The revolution which replaced the elective sovereignty of the priests with royalty The hereditary power of the Pharaohs would therefore have been merely the result of a struggle between the two main bodies of the state, in which the people would have remained a stranger. However, it is so difficult sometimes to To properly judge the revolutions taking place before our eyes, that there are caution is advised against expressing a specific opinion on facts that have remained unres observers. and passed seven thousand years ago.

After the overthrow of the priestly government, the Frank- Freemasonry, religion was not confined to temples; the Kings had to reckon with her, for she was still powerful; She intervened in the laws, of which the priests remained the inter- ready in the government, since they remained in charge of the administration of justice; cultivating the sciences, arts, the letters, she contested power, she often shared it; but of This era marks a period of decadence for humanity. hopeless. The Pharaohs, recognizing the inadequacy of the laws to maintain the people, they too called upon religion to their help. The initiates had adopted the philosophical principle of light and darkness in a constant struggle; the myth Isis and Osiris showed them this ever-regular struggle in its perpetuity; efforts were made to persuade them that the gods their

RS+, mm

94 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

even in this battle they set an example of an order that nothing did not disturb, and that the imitation of these gods, in relation to the social institutions was the surest way to please them: the Politics began to be based on religion. Then came the symbols, simple at first, they took on a grandiose, pompous character;

borrowed from all known sciences and already brought to a point elevated; the splendid decorations, an imposing ceremony, a intoxicating music, choirs, and dances were employed to charm the initiates, to attract them to the celebration of the mysteries (1). We spoke more. We focused our senses more intensely while we spoke. more weakly in mind. However, it must be noted again, We never forgot to include in the grand ceremonies lessons in morality and virtue, even in days of delirium. However distressing the spectacle of these days may be, it is necessary However, offering it to view. The entire Egyptian religion was based on the astronomical system; it was the basis of the cult outside the circle of initiates who guarded the repository of knowledge. an ignorant crowd; always ready to accept mistakes, the Lies gradually transformed this lofty cult into the most formless chaos. the assemblage of strange, bizarre, cruel practices and doctrines them; she gave free rein to everything that the imagination can conjure up- tion without guidance, thought without knowledge, the religious tendency without principle.

Those initiated into secret doctrines in India had rio the language of symbols; it was for them an absolute necessity- a serious matter arising from their situation in the state, from the struggle they are wag They were born against the priestly caste; it was necessary to conceal the reality under the emblem, and to escape the investigation of the powerful sgnce, the foundation of which they were undermining, and to bring down pen- abstract philosophical concepts in minds that no study had not prepared to receive them.

In Egypt, why did the priests bring it from India?
did they retain the same system when the situation was not

(1) The music used in storms made it fearful that the initiates would study the Inveleurs. Dereris.

OF FREEMASONRY. 95

AD UZL

BR meme? Why emblems when the simple reality doesn't
It should neither offend public opinion nor provoke persecution. Why?
What about mysticism when the truth could be proclaimed without danger? Why symbols that, instead of making this
A more tangible, clearer truth, on the contrary, would obscure it.
and throw the people into an endless maze of the crudest kind Superstitions?

Should we look for the solution to this problem in love?

men for the wonderful, love that we will see in all The eras occur and develop? Wasn't it a a mistake that was later complicated by an unworthy speculation of some priests willing to create and maintain a superstition that they exploited for their own profit, sowing ignorance to gather Read about domination?

The error resulted from these two causes; but if the bridle was a misfortune inherent in human nature, the second was a
A deplorable calculation, a crime against reason. Also, see what became this religion, so simple from the beginning, so clear at the origin

ginc. The sun's passage through the twelve signs of the zodiac:

become the races, the battles, the victories of the god. Cha-
Each of these twelve signs will be the domain of a particular deity.
a line that reigns supreme there, that exercises over the earth a a fortunate or fatal influence, which one must therefore pray to,
To conjure, to make favorable through offerings, through sacrifices.
They wanted to read the future in the stars; they claimed to be able to do so by the inspection of the state of the sky at a given time and by the com-combination of the alleged influences of celestial bodies in constituwualent eet état.

The sun was regarded by all men as the celestial body.

beneficial par excellence, always fruitful, always favorable
ble; they did not dare to deprive him of these qualities, of these functions;
there would have been some danger in directly challenging beliefs popular; so it was imagined that this influence, always...
The sun's reuse could be so corrupted as to become fatal.
when its rays are reflected by a star that is too arid and too
Too hot, or too dry and too cold. Thus misusing observations Based on seasonal temperatures, it was claimed that islands could be predicted.

nt ne mt
eme
,

ne om pm mm MN + ee One ee one cane

events, human vicissitudes, submit these predictions to invariable rules. The planets were regarded as capable of drying and numbing, fertilizing and revitalizing. A color special 'was devoted to each of them, and the combination of these Various colors were one of the elements of the horoscope.

Astrologers divided the sky into twelve parts, by imitation of the zodiac, itself divided into twelve signs; they called them The twelve houses of fortune attributed to them an influence on the future individuals, future determined by the qualities of the deities benevolent or malevolent qualities of those who inhabited these houses combined with the influences of the planets and signs.

This absurd science of combining completely nonsensical facts strangers to each other, to draw from an insignificant chance a horos- The coppa presented as certain became an art, and the peoples, themselves nurtured in a belief beneficial to priests, attached the utmost importance to all these juggling acts. But It was not enough to predict a man's future; madness went to the point of individualizing a city, an empire composed of so many of different beings, of so many opposing passions, subject to so many events that result from external facts, wisdom or of the incompetence of the rulers, and people wanted to predict their des- future tins.

To create this art, the priests gave to the planets symbolic characteristics, they attributed to them a sex, a temperament erasure, they supposed them to be formed of elements, metals, trees, stones, colors, which all corresponded to a quality of man. Each of these planets had a seal or talisman. to which a special virtue was attached, on the condition that it would made of gold or silver, lead or molten tin, engraved on such and such a day, at such and such a moment which always relates to the course of such and such a celestial

Three zodiac signs, combined at the moment of birth, determined the lifespan of individuals.

The forty-eight constellations known to the Egyptians became- They are animate beings, offering in their forms all that Ja Fantasy and imagination can create in their delirium. The sign Jupiter of Aries is Ammon; a star, Cassiopeia, is a A woman seated on a throne, holding a whip and a triangle.

oo 1 6 q-- gn OR - d

- ne es

em - +

+

OF FREEMASONRY. 97

Taurus is the Apis bull, bearing a hen and some on its forehead Chicks. Gemini are Hercules and Apollo. The Great Dog is Anubis. A gathering of stars takes the form of a man with goat horns, holding a snake in one hand, a snake in the other stick, with a small goat on its arm. Cancer becomes Hermanubis, or Two-Headed Mercury. The Lyre transforms into An Egyptian priest carrying a musical instrument. The Virgin is Isis the harvester; one of the stars that can be seen among her para-Natellons is a tree bearing in its branches a dog and a ibis. The Bouvier is a bull's head whose neck belongs to a man and surrounds himself with draperies. In the Scorpion rises Typhon, the evil genius, the god of darkness. Orion is a man armed with a javelin, a torch in his hand, on his head a bird. Capricorn is the god Sothis, Sirius, Anubis con-leading a fish-tailed Capricorn beetle on a leash. The year Egyptian tradition began at the moment the sun entered the degrees of Capricorn; Sirius appeared on the horizon and heralded the next Nile flood; they made a faithful barking dog out of it when the thief comes. The spring equinox is personified in the god Pan, the emblem of generative and nourishing power nature's tive. Spring itself and summer become a bull and a lion crossing. I space in a boat at the extreme a pit from which a woman is seated.

Everywhere, finally, the Egyptian priest places spiritual beings, then-healthy, active, in place of the stars, the constellations, the signs representing in principle the annual revolution of the sun, the successive passage of the two hemispheres of light to darkness.

The priest becomes a soothsayer; he attributes an influence on the stars.
the character of the child who is born; astrology, the most false of All the so-called sciences are invented. There were only twelve signs in the zodiac; give each of them a specific action.
Having the same number of days was too restrictive for the series of horoscopes.

Copes for the three hundred and sixty degrees of the zodiac signs, that is to say, for every day of the year. Thus, he who, born yesterday, would have been a faithful companion, will be, born today, a bad-

mn ee RS mme Re

ne - Re = éme

© ©
0 tm

mme mu ee + eg RS à ee

= dns de ue cn om : em

98 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

I'm going, companion. A one-day difference in birth will suffice.
to make an immodest man out of someone who had been full of chastity,

a lazy person compared to someone who would have been hardworking, a slave compared to son

A fool to a scholar, a baker to a king. Of the twelve mansions of the sun, some were pleasant to him, others odious, and, depending on whether he was in these or those places, he poured onto the children unc fatal or benign influence.

These are the ridiculous superstitions that were preached to the people.
how it was dominated, for the power of the stars could be destroyed by the priest whose empire extended to the sky and whose services we paid for. A sad and discouraging spectacle!

What a distance from primitive religion, which worshipped the god principle of all things, personifying it in the sun, of the doctrine that established the struggle between light and darkness, to these serious follies imagined by the priests, all of whom, opening to Their predictions of a new path, would they lead to chaos?
The delusion of human reason was not to stop there.

The monthly revolution of the moon, fixed at twenty-eight days,
counted twenty-eight houses in which this star stopped, etc.
Each of these houses had its own particular genius, endowed with a

the constellations that the moon encounters in its course, But where would the marvelous have been? It was better to create these rests of the moon and the entirety of horoscopes; the nomenclature of predictions Calculated in this way, the lunar revolution is immense, and presents all that can be produced of the mediocre and trivial in this:
genre; as original as the imagination had been in the representationtion of symbolic images of the signs of the zodiac, as much as it is poor and colorless in these predictions; one thinks one hears these unfortunate sibyls of our time who, for a few pennies, tell fortunes. In a deck of cards soiled by their fingers or in a grimoire they don't even know how to read.

The elementary parts of the universe had been given names of divinities (1); the universal soul, the spiritus, was called Jupiter, Vulcan fire, Ceres earth, Ocean and Thetis water, Minerva air.

(1) Jaunblique, ch. XXIX.

OF FREEMASONRY. 99

It was not enough for the priests to have deified the elements, to to present for the adoration of the people; they added that these five Deities roamed the universe, appearing to humans in various forms.
the appearance of sacred animals, sometimes also adopting the form human and other figures; they tried to persuade that This was not a fiction, but the real effect of their nature which is to enter into the generation of all beings. Thus, a strong a beautiful allegory of the elements that make up all
The bodies became the object of superstition.

The source of income was not yet large enough; the pre-Many Egyptians imagined they could read the future in the lines of the hand and in the configuration of the front. 1] it was necessary to strike the imagination-tone, to seduce, and therefore not to stray too far from the ideas received; they attached this new branch of the business human to the astronomical system, the basis of religion; they distinguished-scarcely held in their hands seven protuberances which they brought back to seven planets, and announced the temperament, the character of the men and the events that were to mark their lives.

Magic was then invented. You can feel it, seeing this strange
At this time, the human mind is at work; it strives to penetrate the profound mysteries of this immense nature of which he only glimpses
the envelope; he wants to reach God; he rushes off in the footsteps of everything he believes can offer him the solution to the problem unknown, He rises with the sun, travels with him through the signs of the zodiac and seeks its light; he descends into the darkness and he asks the constellations for the secret they keep; he searches bowels of the earth to reach the secret that flees before him;

| fallen from the sky, risen from the depths of the earth, discouraged but
Not defeated, he seems to want to rest while continuing his work.
true in the analysis of the chance events that pass around him. So, carried away in turn down a thousand different paths, he evokes, the
At night, shadows on the tombs, and he thinks he sees them indicating
He points to the object of his desires; he reflects the wrinkles in a mirror light waters this questions them; fish run in Playing in the river, he asks their fins for a thought.
| inclined; he throws ashes to the winds and wants to know what there

100 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

where the winds carry it; the leaves of the shrubs tremble in the warm breath of the breeze, and he seeks meaning,
a thought in their palpitations; the trunk of a tree resounded
Under the woodcutter's axe, he asks that voice what it cries out; the smoke leaps, he questions its aerial forms, capri-beautiful, fantastic, by turns hair and serpent, monster and beauty; always deceived, he becomes irritated, his ardent desire prevails,
He evoked the shadows, now he opens the tombs, and,
in the inspection of the corpses lying on a stone outside of
In their tombs, he wants to read the present and the future: still nothing!
He still walks, the blood of the flocks flows on the altars, and the crackling of steaming flesh on a brazier are still mute; then frenzy seizes him, all the laws of man-Manita are raped, trampled underfoot, a man knocks over a another man on the flagstones of a temple, opens his chest his knife, plunges his dripping hands into the body of the victim and demands an impossible revelation from her inner self.

Horrible results of a happy trend that led to the discovery of the sublime workings of nature, and that ambition priests gone astray!

We talked about talismans: each planet will generate a certain types of diseases, and at the same time will give birth to plants specifically designed to cure them. It was simply a matter of observing-to determine the influence of temperature, not determined by the ap-appearance of this or that planet, but making itself felt in the
The regular course of the seasons occurred at the same time as the planet was at
at this or that point of its ordinary revolution, to say which plants were born, grew, flowered or dried up during during this same period, the priests preferred to establish reports.
absurd connections between the planet, the cause of diseases, and the plants presented as having curative properties. Hence the origin of these talismans, composed of the most bizarre mixtures, in the-
which are crushed, to name just one, from the poppy seed

magnet powder, pulverized and made into a paste with blood of bat and black cat brain.

There weren't enough deities: the planets are personified,

OF FREEMASONRY. 101

or rather, we lend their names to beings who have never existed, to whom we give a father, a mother, children, and the sky is thus populated by thousands of fantastic deities. The operations of nature all have attributes that give birth to emblematic, symbolic fables, accepted by ignorance as realities. Once on this path, the pen- The sleuthing never stops; ignorance is exploited by lies and ambition, – the three wicked companions who killed Hiram, – and already the Masonic emblem is a reality.

From the adoption of all the preached chimeras, presented From real events, the labyrinth of Egyptian mythology was born. which will be reproduced in the religion of Greece and Rome.

Each priest has his portion of the sacred meats, which are given to him all prepared; he also receives a portion of wine.

The priests say that the world's oxen belong to Epa- Phus, the god Apis; so they chose one of them to examine They took care of all the hairs of the oxen intended for sacrifice. to indicate in their sacred books the particular signs to which These animals will be recognized, to designate one of their own who will... mark by attaching to their horns a rope made of bark Byblos applies seal clay to it, onto which he imprints his seal. No one may, under penalty of death, sacrifice an ox that does not bear this imprint (1).

Do you hear that confused noise of footsteps, men's cries and of animals, trampling in streams of wine poured over the altar and around the victim, these furious imprecations that rise from sanctuary with smoke laden with a horrible odor, incense Is this truly worthy of the god we worship? It is the absurd sacrifice that is being made. complit.

The victim is brought in, the fire crackles, the wine flows, and in a the dreadful mixture mingles with the boiling, steaming blood; The head falls, and then priests and people alike burden it with curses. tions and pray to the gods to make all the evils fall back upon her the dangers that threaten them and their homeland (2). Superstition

(1) Herodotus, I. I, & XXXVII.

(2) Herodotus, Book 11, & XXXIX,

+ om << men

replacing the great lessons of the initiates, the worship of the animals evils, the disgusting spectacle of the bloody sacrifice in place of High truths, sublime lessons of initiation! The priests will go so far as to develop theories on how to burn the victims and to search their entrails. The sacrifice made in Isis's honor will not be the same as that offered to her husband; We only consume a part of the body after we have filled it with bread made of pure flour, honey, raisins, figs, and frankincense, of myrrh and perfumes; streams of oil flow in place of streams of wine, and, while the victim burns, those who offer the sacrifices are all made, and when they have ceased, they are served the remains.

The slaughter of the ox is general, but it is not permitted to sacrifice heifers, because they are sacred to Isis; one sees that the goddess has been the object of gallantry on the part of the pre-very people who gave her more privileges than her husband. Everywhere Heifers are shown more consideration than the rest of the livestock; the different nomes of Egypt adopted in the sacrifices different victims: Thebes only sacrifices goats and respect the sheep, because one day Jupiter had donned the the fleece of a ram and had held its head before his face, to to show himself to Hercules who desperately wanted to see him, but whom he He didn't want to be seen. Mendès, on the other hand, spared the goats. and sacrifices the sheep.

The ceremonies still differ from one city to another: the women Those who go to Bubastis engage in indecent acts; at Busi- They laugh, they lament, they hit each other, they slash their foreheads with swords; at Sais, they limit themselves to the beautiful festival of lights; at Helio- In Buto, they are content to offer sacrifices; in Papremis, As the sun begins to set, a few priests become agitated. Around the statue of the god, others stand at the entrance. from the temple, armed with sticks; the pilgrims arrive similarly armed, And soon a stupid but real conflict develops between them and the priests. combat (1). | |

In most of the nomes, animals, wild

(4) Herodotus, Book II, & LXIN.

ee OR of CE nt ee ape or ee em

or domestic, are sacred; whoever voluntarily kills them deserves the death; whoever kills them unintentionally pays a fine fixed by the priests; but if it is an ibis, whether it was killed intentionally or No, we are presumed guilty and put to death. We had to find a pretext for this severity; it was imagined that every year, at At the beginning of spring, a... arrived from Arabia to Egypt a large number of winged snakes, but the ibises were going to post near Buto, in a narrow gorge, at the place where she opens onto a vast plain that borders that of Egypt, and that there they attacked and destroyed the winged serpents (1).

Thus, a simulated fight between a bird and a winged serpent,
To arrive at the worship of an ibis! Poor humanity!

Cats are regarded everywhere as sacred; if a fire
When a fire breaks out, the house is left to burn, but the cats are saved; when
If one of them dies, we shave our eyebrows, we embalm the body, and it is buried in Bubastis; if it is a dog, one shaves
the whole body, and the corpses are placed in sacred boxes;
The ibises are transported, after their death, to Hermopolis (2).

The inhabitants of Thebes and the shores of Lake Maeri venerate this They tame the crocodiles, they put earrings on them
of gold, surround their front paws with bracelets, the feed-smells of the victims' flesh. Those of Elephantine, on the contrary, kill and eat the crocodiles they catch by throwing a bait to their voracious appetite. The hippopotamus is sacred in the nome Papremite; it is just an ordinary animal among others.

The imagination can no longer move freely enough in the an immense circle of animals actually created by nature; it He invented islands to dedicate to the gods. Of this number is the phoenix which appears every five hundred years in Heliopolis, coming of Arabia, and, on its wings half purple, half gold, bringing the

(1) There is in Arabia, quite near the city of Buto, a place where I went to to inform me of the winged serpents. I saw upon my arrival a prodigious quantity of bones spines from the backs of these snakes. There were piles of them scattered all around, large, medium, and small. The flying snake resembles in appearance the scraquatic pens; its wings are not made of feathers; they are entirely similar to those of the bat. Henovore, |, I, 8$ LXXV-LXXVI.

104 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

his father's body in a myrrh egg which he places in the Temple of the Sun (1).

Savior birds resting on islands, winds they beat with their wings, animals that fantasy has sacred, born of a myth whose Peoples have forgotten the meaning, colossal statues of marble and bronze that capricious imagination has raised onto a granite pedestal and that philosophy can overturn with a breath, splendid temples ideas where both perfumes and the blood of victims mingle, this was not yet enough to dominate the Egyptian people; Kings saw the priests too closely; the people grew weary to always hear the same voice; birds, monsters and statues maintained a silence that could ultimately compromise their dignity by betraying their weakness, their powerlessness; they did Speaking of the gods. Hercules, Apollo, Minerva, Diana, Mars, Jupiter and Latona delivered oracles from the depths of their sanctuaries. tuaires. |

Then riches flowed to the temples; the kings wanted to know their destinies and those of their children, the outcome of wars they undertook, distant expeditions they confided in their officers or directed them themselves; chacun tried to gain the favor of the deity, and believed he could sway her or to win her over with gifts; the temples sparkled in the fire of candles, chased bronze cups, silver craters of a weight enormous, of vases and statues of solid gold enriched with precious stones. An unprecedented luxury of offerings, growing due to weakness, The fears, desires, and passions of kings!

Hence these ambiguous oracles whose words are arranged with enough art to offer a double meaning; hence these prophecies that

(1) Heliopolis was between the Nile and the Arabian mountains. One of the principal cities Under the Pharaohs, it communicated with the Nile by means of canals.

It was famous for the priests and illustrious scholars who, in the good times of the Egyptian empire, lived within the precincts of its temples. The vast buildings which served the Masonic initiations that persisted long after the total ruin of the city which, under the emperor Augustus, offered nothing more than the sad ruins of its past, protesting against vandalism and barbarity.

It is in these sumptuous buildings that the degenerate descendants of the Egyptian people the link communicated to the wise men and legislators of Greece the already corrupted initi through superstition and ignorance,

Te ee tn ep
ie rte

OF FREEMASONRY. 10

The event alone makes them intelligible; hence also these scandalous complaints the chants that the ambassadors made resound in the sanctuaries kings disappointed in their hopes: God, I have filled you with pre-Sent, and you haven't been favorable to me! A deal between man He's the one he regards as his god! Aberration of the mind! The debasement of reason! One can almost see the porters of Naples shaking the rope around the neck of the statue of Saint Jan-virgin, and hurling disgusting insults at him when he doesn't hurry not enough, given their impatience, to accomplish his miracle! And it was kings who put on such a spectacle!

The Egyptians eventually stopped worshipping the gods, but their images, and this error was exploited by clever kings. After the violent death of Apries, Amasis, from the city of Siuph, in the Saite nome, which had overthrown him and had been forced to delivered to the fury of the people, he ascended the throne. At the beginning- Throughout his reign, the nation showed contempt for him. because of the obscurity of his birth; the king, among other things precious things, possessed a golden basin in which they washed themselves He put him and the adults who were eating at his table on his feet. He put him in pieces and had a statue of a god made from them, which he placed in the place the most obvious in the city. The Egyptians did not fail to to gather there and worship this simulacrum. Amasis then summoned them and declared that this statue, for which they had so much veneration, came from the golden basin that had served formerly used in the vilest ways. "It is thus with me, " he added; I was a plebeian, but now I am your king; "I therefore urge you to give me the honor and respect that "They are owed to me." He thus won the affection of his people, who found it very right to submit to his government (1).

Thus, the corrupted religion served as a means to power; it it became a political weapon, one of the most profound forms of degradation tions in which human passions can make Ja do- ashes. When public worship reaches that point, it is no longer a Communication between God Island and man is a lie. surrounded by pomp, an instrument in the hands of the strongest and

(1) Herodotus, 1.11, & CLXXII.

From the most skillful, a calculation; such a cult no longer has power real; condemned by enlightened minds, it now only acts on the ignorant, he has lived, he is worn out, he is destined to fall, to disappear—three. World history will offer us several examples of this nature; the mistakes of that time will be repeated twice in the succession of centuries with similar, if not identical, characteristics, differing only because of the diversity that will exist among the peoples where they will occur; the causes of this degeneration

Details will emerge from what we will be asked to provide. and will, moreover, be clearly explained in the summary who will complete this work.

However, not all priests and initiates had accepted the deplorable role that we have seen some play members of the priesthood, to the crude and ignorant crowd, converging the symbol with reality, worshipping the material image without to trace back in thought to the being she represented; not all had not subscribed to this abdication of intelligence lost in ridiculous practices, lost in absurd ceremonies, lowering—overwhelmed by this phantasmagoria of spells, prognoses, and talismans medicinal herbs developed under the influence of: such and such a constellation. It rose from the depths of the sanctuaries of courageous voices, like those found in every era. of humiliation, fighting, for the honor of humanity, against the errors of reason, forgetting or abandoning principles, converging between the tyranny of the conquerors and the humiliation of the homeland. No people ever resigns itself entirely to a transformation degrading, does not throw itself without exception into the Saturnalia which, at At certain times, they sway the masses and make them think that a The nation is plunged into a kind of intoxicating orgy.

In these painful, discouraging times, instead of to make forceful accents heard to which the people remain While rarely indifferent, science sometimes maintains a guilty silence. or makes common cause with the leaders of the company; the pulpits from which truth, instruction, and lessons were to descend invigorating with wisdom, resounding with passionate declamations, of calculated sermons, resulting in corruption; it is perhaps—to be the saddest moment in the life of a people, while

ee me ee ee em D

EEE IN YOUR E

Those who had the mission to mislead him or leave him without guides to direct it.

All forces, all activities seem to have only one
 But the goal is to let oneself be swept up in the same whirlwind. Eh Well! Of all these humiliating times that the future will take in pity, which he will be ashamed of, which will serve as an eternal text to those who they fight against the grand and beautiful idea of human perfectibility, who want to see in society a slave always turning in the same circle, climbing the steps of civilization for the descending again, raising and destroying in turn its monuments
 ments, successively inventing and forgetting the arts and sciences
 those which constitute its glory, from all these eras, we say, sort a resounding protest against public error. Firstly a voice lost in a confined space, which later enlarged the-said, it resonates, grows, attracts the crowd and manages to vibrate with all its power health; it is a timid ray of light that pierces the clouds in the tempêt, a rainbow nuanced with beautiful colors, hovering over the storm, a lighthouse on the reefs battered by the crashing waves, then a star shining in a corner of the sky in the distance nights, serving as guides for ships!

Such was true Freemasonry. The history of the initiates in Egypt can be divided into two periods: during the first, they see their power grow and their influence extend successively worse; in the second, they descend to this deplorable state that we described earlier. In this very slow passage of the obsprimitive security of the gymnosophists settled in Ethiopia, deliberating in the shade of the woods, to this grandeur, this power, this wealth that forms the basis of Egyptian society, giving it laws, govern it, endow it with fruitful institutions, raise these temp-
 these splendid palaces, whose ruins still astonish and attest to a civilization unexplained until now; during the period decreasing which from this height will see Egypt descend to-that to slavery sitting upon the ruins of its monuments, he finds himself will always see a certain number of men, superior minds, who will keep unchanged the inflexible principles of initiation Masonic. Amidst the glittering pomp that followed Initially simple, they devoted themselves primarily to propagation

108 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

from moral ideas to the explanation of allegorical themes, including religion, having become national, they still borrowed the veil; they retained intact the repository of light, and, by spreading it, accomplished faithfully their noble mission. Dedicated to the teaching of the highand which linked man to the great architect of the universe, they did not neglect the popularization of practical political ideas which were the basis of initiation, but perhaps their voice did not have— It didn't have enough impact; we find traces of their constant action, but it is no longer possible to ascertain its exact nature—the power at this moment of unprecedented magnitude; in all the In this case, she did not save the government of the initiates, but left it succumb to be overwhelmed by the ambitious efforts of the military class. This small number of faithful men did not bow their heads; they did not He remained silent neither in triumph nor in defeat, and when, After the accession of the first of the Pharaohs, it remained constant for the masses that Mercury had dictated to Menes the laws given by This one to the Egyptian people, a lie repeated so many times Since then, the exploitation of religion has grown, and its decadence has continued. began or increased, these initiates appealed to reason, combat—they overcame the intoxication of the senses, they put the gods back in their place, they defined the limits of the power of kings and priests, They tried to stop the degradation of the human species. Their Ardent voices could not be stifled by the crash of cymbals resounding on solemn feast days; they pierced despite the chants that filled the temples; they continued—renewed to make themselves heard amidst these terrible revolutions of palaces which, like a hurricane, swept away dynasties, replaced by new families destined to perish Like the first ones, they covered the country in blood and mourning. In times when religion is most corrupted, when the most deplorable superstitions had replaced a cult enlightened, where society had reached the lowest degree of degradation, Masonic philosophy retains its elevation and purity. Listen to one of the writers who have studied, penetrated, and understood the meaning mysteries: "I learned from the Egyptians themselves the spirit and "The interpretation of symbols. Be careful that the image matérielle—"

pe
DT ad

S 5 5 5 7 y

+ 7 57 5 vy

OF FREEMASONRY. 109

The nature of symbolic things seizes your imagination or with your ears; prepare, on the contrary, to perceive the truth by intelligence. Therefore, consider Lutum as meaning all corporeal and material things, such as power nature, agitated by the various movements of matter; as everything that receives the heat of generation or relates to it; Finally, as the primary and fundamental cause, there are elements, either the power that resides in these elements. Thus must understand the Lurn. (tā se habet Lurn.)

"God, author of all nature, cause of generation, of powers, of all the elements, is greater than all and enm- He stirs everything within himself; he is the one who surpasses all, immaterial, incorporeal, above nature, uncreated, undivided, all by itself and contained within itself, and just as it contains everything within itself, it communicates itself to all parts of the world, it shines in them; just as he is above all things and, alone, spread over all, thus it is separated from them, outside of their affected in its elevation, and by itself extensively disseminated mined on the powers of the world and on the elements.

"The following symbol confirms all these thoughts. Thus, God" is seated on the Lotus, and this signifies his supremacy, his power which does not affect the Lurn; this further indicates its superiority intellectual and celestial. Everything in the Lotus affects the circular shape, its leaves, its fruits, a shape to which re-pondered the operation of his thought moving as in a circle, that is to say, always acting under the same conditions, with equal order, equal wisdom. God alone, venerable, holy, extends himself over this universal empire, resting in himself; that is why he is depicted seated. When In the symbols we see God directing a vessel, this em- The problem indicates the power that governs the world. Like the The pilot, separate from the ship, stands at the helm, of the same God holds the rudder of the world from which he is himself distinct (1). "The ignorant masses adore the animal islands that are offered to them"

(1) Iamblichus, section VII.

Ms. - #- +

Li
This is not from
- PRESS Let ne ee me
LS - ë + ns 7
:
.

in mem ©
had j— mm mt ee M cm ms —
+
.

— SR 2 2 RS

110 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"The image; for initiates, celestial animals, besides the fact that they are
"The signs of the zodiac signify the various forces that the sun"
spreads throughout nature and the various aspects it gives to
"all things by his courses, though he remains motionless, eternally"
and powerful ({}).» |

"Therefore, we must not honor such beasts, but through them the "Divinity which shines forth in them, as in a clearer and more

THAT

ÿ

"shining mirror, which is according to nature, so that we may reject them"

» (ions as instrument and artifice of the dicu which governs and governs
"Ucerne all these people. And we mustn't think that anything,
"Having no soul or feeling, may it be more
"No one is more worthy or excellent than she who has a soul and feelings."
"Not if we put everything in as long as there is gold or emeralds"
"together; for it is not in color, nor in figures or
"polishes that divinity imprints upon itself; but everything that does not
"Participates in life, nor was it ever by nature to par-"Ticipate, is of lesser and worse condition than the dead"
memes (2). »

We talked about Osiris's cloak, which is a certain color unique and radiant; Plutarch will explain this symbol: "The "Osiris's garments have no shades, nor any variety,"
"They are all of a single, simple color, namely the color of "Light, because the first cause and principle is quite simple,"
"without any mixture whatsoever, being spiritual and intelligible (3)."
Everything is symbolic in the cult: the priests' clothing,

ÿ

the perfumes they burn in the morning, those they burn in the middle of the day, and those whose temples they perfume at the entrance of the night; Plutarch also gives us the explanation of these emblems (4).

Misled by these allegories which they unfortunately took to heart letter, the people had rejected far from themselves the principle of The unity of the great architect of the universe, of the one whom Iamblichus

(1) Junbligue, section VII

(2) Plutarch, translation of Amyot, of Isis and Osiris, p. 535.

(3) 1d., id, id.

(4) Ibid., ibid., ibid.

'later, so many followers will distort the notions of justice and truth' PPJ;

sn _ Be dE mute = me ge
+ me
,
[2

OF FREEMASONRY. 111

He calls him the worker par excellence; they had made several gods of themselves.
The initiates have only one god, who was not created, who does not die point, but which takes on different names in the works it accomplished.

We will see later another people, like the Aeolians
the priority of this thought of the unity of God; it existed in Those in the know, as many monuments attest, attest; she was also older, if not older, than secret societies and priests of Egypt who were not imposters preserved without alteration.

When the common people, driven by their superstitious fears, by his unrealistic, senseless hopes, deceived by the calculation of those who took advantage of his ignorance, he admitted without thinking that Human destinies depended on the chance of birth.
under such and such a constellation considered as exercising necessary-

contrary to laws and customs, which dissolve all bonds of the society, was bound to throw it towards inescapable chaos, towards anarchy appalling morality, in which nationality itself would To perish, the initiates had highly inscribed a philosophy completely different, completely opposite, which undermined this absurd system.

Listen to them again: "They say that there are two in man
"natures, which they also call two souls; one participates in the "power of the architect of the universe, for it emanates from him;
"The other is given to us by the movement of the celestial worlds."
"That which comes to us from the worlds is influenced by them; that which
"stems from the intelligent being, which constitutes intelligence within us,

"Hovering above the universe, we are freed"

"The bonds of destiny (1)." The dogma of fate, which will count will teach men to quietly make a life of The pointless sacrifice was rejected from the outset by the initiates, who proclaimed that the soul was not subject to invincible bonds of the necessity that we call destiny (2).

(1) Iamblichus.

(2) Hd.

119 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

One will naturally wonder how the voice of the initiated had so little power that, despite all their efforts, it left the people given over to the most deplorable superstition, to the practices more contrary to reason. Alas! to this fact, unfortunately too much True, we could let the Freemasons of today answer... of today, who know with what difficulty it is necessary to gain entry into the minds the soundest, most just, and preached ideas especially since the birth of their order. This is the story of the human mind. We will limit ourselves to citing a curious example difficulties encountered in rectifying, even in the material order-

The Egyptians had initially divided the year into three hundred and sixty.

days; later, when it was realized that this first calculation was cronic, and that to complete it, five days had to be added and a fraction, it seems, encountered some resistance, and

To get this change adopted, a rather...

singular: it was imagined that Mercury, playing dice with Ha Lune, he had won the seventieth game of all his illuminations, and that, joining each of these parts together, ties, he had composed five days' worth of them which he had added to the an-
born (1). |

Later, when we have to talk about Freemasonry among the Israelites, who posed it very clearly and rejected this who had interfered there as a foreigner among the Greeks and the Romans;
when we come to the building of Solomon's temple, to

to which today belongs the modern Masonic order

and the guilds of various trades, two associations
now distinct and which obviously derive from the same Source, we will see the myth of Osiris and Typhon change from name by reproducing itself in the murder of Hiram assassinated by the three bad companions. We will explain it then with the greater clarity and in all its parts, making it understandable to draw the moral meaning attached to this great drama, to this beautiful poem of initiation; however, we could not leave Egypt so full precious memories for us, from a time when our order was so powerful

(1) Plutarch, on Isis and Osiris.

OF FREEMASONRY. 113

where it flourished, where it reigned, without pointing out that the meaning
The high value we place on this symbol, apart from its meaning in the celestial system, it was given to him from the beginning by the pre-Very Egyptian. The ancient authors who wrote about the mysteries are full of reservations that were dictated to them by the laws secret societies; you can feel their embarrassment at every step; they don't

to remain silent, and Herodotus, among others, clearly admits that it is not for him not allowed to explain everything; however, through the veils of which They are covered in so many symbols, Plutarch let their meaning shine through the moral of the Osiris myth, and sometimes, when listening to it, one thinks one hears a

A Masonic orator of our time. This is not in order.

He is only looking for the meaning of the symbol in physical terms. in the distance or approach of the sun that he sees it, in its relationship with the constellations that it finds and the complete; they rise above what strikes our eyes, our senses, to speak only to our intelligence. "The desire to hear the "Truth is a desire inspired by the divine, and its study is more holy than the guarding or the building of a temple. Knowledge and the science belongs to Isis; Typhon, her adversary, her enemy, puffed up and proud because of his ignorance and error, dispels and erases the holy word that the goddess gives to those who. follow his precepts. In our soul, the understanding and the reasons that guide her, lead her, shape everything she "contains good; it is Osiris; the passionate, violent part, "Unreasonable, mad, of the soul, that is Typhon (1)."

Moral trials were consistently the most important in Egypt. important ones, those that were used more recently to determine the level of instruction that should be given to novices, or, to use today's language, the ranks to which they could aspire. They usually lasted three months, and the content the recipients' background, their knowledge, and the rank they held or to which they were entitled in society, served as rules for these tests. Before taking the exams, they had to... long conversations with priests, attended instructions.

(4) Plutarch, on Isis and Osiris.

=

114 _ PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

They held two conferences a day in the presence of the neophyte. In the morning session, one of them explained the principles generals of the Egyptian religion; he eroded the notion of it

The One God who had conceived the world through his intelligence before than to shape him by his own will. In the evening conference, we dealt only with morality; one of the priests first explained the rules cases or examples suitable to the applicant's condition, after which other priests proposed difficulties which were resolved by the first. The aspirant did not speak there; but in the

L 2

'familiar conversations that the priests had between the two of them:'

twice a day, he was allowed to say whatever he wanted, not on the -- religion, but on morality, and we answered his questions and his objections.

This freedom, which lasted for days, gave rise to the as-urging them to reveal the depths of their souls, and the priests brought great attention to studying his character and inclinations.
When the evening of the forty-second day arrived, they prevented-
The aspirant was born knowing that the next day he would enter into silence.
eighteen days, during which he would not be allowed to say not a single word, nor even making any sign that represented his thought, for whatever reason it might be, except if it was sick, and then he had to indicate it by putting his hand there.
heart. He was treated with care; but, after his recovery, it was necessary to repeat this ordeal which was called the purification of the soul; at some point during the three months he had remained there. The as-Pirant had books, tablets, and a stylus for writing
He had complete freedom to do as he pleased. He was given twelve days.
to gather in writing or in his memory what he had learned in lectures and in his readings; he could then... to maintain contact with the priests. The moment had come when, by revealing the soundness of his judgment, the knowledge he had acquired questions in the study, either before or since the beginning of the trials, by laying bare his ideas and feelings on points
He was going to conquer, having been raised in morals, politics, and religion.
to establish one's place in the hierarchy of initiation. Three questions
They were offered to him, encompassing the most extensive range of objects that the

res --

of Isis. After this period of time, CORMeneN, the manifestation which both light to the eyes, revelation to the mind.

= The mysterious twists and turns of the splendid twelve-leaf labyrinth philosophy could be addressed; he was questioned about his opinions relative to divinity, on the principles of individual morality.

visual, on the mission that human society is called to
to fill in, on the distinctive characteristics of heroism and virtue, on the duties of the citizen towards the homeland, towards his fellow citizens,
on the form of government that best suits a people, on the application of the precepts of liberty and equality, the basis of mysteries, on the means of making them triumph; he had nine days to prepare his answers; but, during this time, he was Asireint, on fasting with bread and water, was to keep silent more complete, and slept in the sanctuary, behind the statue lasted twelve days (1).

Physical challenges also played a major role in the initi-

initiation into Egyptian mysteries; but everything points to proving that they were only used for men whom one wanted to raise them to higher degrees, they would have been impossiblebles for the crowd of men and women who frequented the temples.

These trials appear to have been long and arduous, and all
The authors who have delved into these mysteries represent the recipientsdaires as exposed often risk losing their lives in the long rope-underground ramparts, the dreary lakes, the blazing spaces that he...

one had to cross before arriving at the sanctuary, where they burst forth at the palaces, reproduced in the bowels of the earth, were they consecrated?

Created for initiations? Did some of the pyramids serve as initiation sites?
to this preparation which so profoundly marks the passage of the .

A novice in ordinary life, embarking on a new life? The broad foundations upon which rest these imposing masses raised towards the sky, so precisely oriented that they scrupulously indicate the

in which the unity of God was revealed to the initiate, while at the
On the surface, the crowd adored its living emblems, its statues of mar-

(4) Sethos, book III and IV.

116. PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

br, of bronze or of gold, thus making themselves as many gods as the Great
The architect of the universe had images? The secret remained.
Hidden in these depths. The Great Pyramid of Gizzard dates from fifty-one centuries before Christ (1), those of Meroë, in this Ethiopia where we have seen the gymnosophists reborn from India, are even older, and perhaps, during this a long period when mysteries were held in high esteem, some Did the pyramids lend their dark vaults to the ceremonialnees of initiation.

The existence of a large and deep well identified in one of the three pyramids still standing at Saqqara could have given some value to the opinion that makes it the scene of physical trials Freemasonry of that era (2). In this hypothesis, Nothing is more dramatic, more striking than the description provided by Thomas Moore.

"I climbed the pyramid, and I advanced in search of the "secret spring, when, at a certain distance, I heard a a great and mournful noise to which all the echoes of the "Cemetery. He came from the great temple on the shores of the lake, and"
"It was the sound of its doors, which were called doors"
"of oblivion, turning this night on their hinges to receive in "Their enclosure contained a newly brought-in dead body."

"For a moment I doubted whether I should abandon my undertaking-x taken; the hesitation was only momentary. I touched the res-
"I came out of the door; a few seconds later I was in the passageway

(1) Thanks to recent scientific discoveries, it has been possible to establish with certainty
the date of some of the pyramids; that of Suphi, called the Pyramid of Cheops, It dates from 5112 BC; it is 150 meters high; its base is 238 _ meters 50 centimeters.

(2) There were forty-eight pyramids at Saqqara; forty-five now offer only
Of the debris, three have withstood the ravages of time; one of them, called the pyramid of degrees, composed of six superimposed floors, is the only one that is empty inside.
This is where there is a large well whose depth had not yet been determined.
in 1845, or at least nothing indicated that it did. Did it communicate via underground passages Ancient temples of Memphis? That's possible, but we don't know. As for the others narrow corridors, small rooms that could have been our rooms reflections and are quite similar, but which do not allow us to admit that they have never used in the great mystery ceremonies.

mms

OF FREEMASONRY. | "117

born

=

»

»

»

»

»

»

" cast a light upon my passing that seemed supernatural.

|

of the pyramid, and my lamp giving me the ability to follow it.

I took the detours less slowly, and found myself promptly
in the gallery, at the door of the chapel.

"A lamp burned on a crystal reliquary; the cold image,
A cross was placed on his chest, and he had a calm gaze.
as if voluntarily resigned to the solitude of death, Complete solitude. I had lost all trace of the object of my research, and I was slowly preparing myself to resume my journey back to earth, when, raising my lamp
To leave the chapel, I recognized that the gallery, instead of ending at this point, turned abruptly to the left-che, and promised to lead further into these dark retreatsyours; and, without further reflection, I advanced eagerly.
"For a while I found myself confined in de-towers similar to those I had encountered following the es-descent ramp; then the passage widens into a long and narrow gallery, on each side of which was aligned a rana collection of dead bodies placed upright, and whose glass eyes

"Having reached the end of this gallery, I realized that the path..."

the glow of my lamp, which grew dimmer with each passing minute
In addition, there was the mouth of a huge well opening in front of me, and showing me a dreadful, dark abyss without bottom. I then remembered having heard of such wells as sometimes serving as a passage for priests. Leaning on So, on its edge, I regarded it with concern, looking to discover some way to descend into this abyss;
but the sides were straight and smooth like glass, being in-Produced all around this black pitch that the Dead Sea jotte on its edges (1).

"After closer examination, however, I discovered, at the
a few feet deep, a sort of iron ladder
projecting very little, and below a similar degree which, although barely visible, was just enough to

(1) Bitumen.

118 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"To determine an adventurous foot to venture there. Subjecting on

"My head, my lamp which was hollow underneath, so that
"to be able to hold like a helmet, and having, by this means, the "Free use of my hands, I carefully placed one foot on
"The first iron step, and I descended into the well.

"I found similar things down to a considerable depth"
"degrees, regularly spaced, and I had already counted nearly a
"A hundred of these steps, when the ladder suddenly stopped and "deprived me of any ability to go any lower. In vain I extended a foot to seek some support, the sides smooth and slippery were all I encountered. In the end, lowering my head to By shining the light of my lamp lower, I glimpsed a opening or window directly above the step on which was my foot; and, concluding from this that necessarily
"The path had to follow this direction," I entered, no
"Without some difficulty, in this opening."

"I then found myself on a difficult and narrow staircase whose
"Steps were carved into the living rock, and descended in a spiral-" » ralc in the same direction as the well. Completely dizzy from this
"A descent that seemed like it would never end, I finally reached the
"last step , and there, a pair of massive iron gates..."
"Found directly in my path, as if to close me off"
Absolutely the way. Gigantic as those gates were,
I recognized, to my great surprise, that the hand of a child...

they promptly yielded to my every effort.

"No sooner had I passed through those doors than they, in

"falling one on top of the other, a noise that would have awakened death"

"herself. It seemed that every echo, through this immense the underground world, from the catacombs of Alexandria to the Theban valley of the kings, would have seized and repeated this crash of ton-

5 y

v

ÿ

+

ÿ

» earth.

"Astonished as I was by this supernatural noise, my attention-

tion was nevertheless attracted by the sudden flash of light

"Sweet, warming, and for me as welcome as the

"The stars of the South to the sailor arriving in his homeland, after having

"Long wandered in the North Seas. Looking back to where it came from"

y aa —

,
nn ne ec ee ee me —

OF FREEMASONRY. 119

»

»

this light, I saw, through an archway, a long ave-illuminated nude, stretching as far as the eye could see, and adorned on one side fragrant shrub bushes, while on the other reigned
a long portico with high arches, from which light emerged which filled the entire space. The resonance produced by the Echoes were followed by a chorus of music that seemed to come from several vast rooms within these brilliant arcades.
Among the voices, I could distinguish a few women's voices.
whose light, silvery tones dominated all others and

"formed the main appeal of this harmony.

5

"I ran towards the arcade, but I found it closed by a trellis whose bars, although not visible to some extent-
tance, resisted all my efforts to break them.
While I was making these futile attempts, I noticed to the left a dark, cavernous opening that seemed to lead
in a direction parallel to that of the row of illuminated arcades.
My blood ran cold at the sight of this passage, which I could not to look at with a shudder. It wasn't so much the darkness that of a sort of livid and frightening half-light, accompanied of a dampness similar to that of the caverns of death, and to through which, if my eyes did not deceive me, I could see
to pass from pale and sinister phantoms,

"Looking anxiously around me to discover"
Some less dreadful outcome, I lived on the vast shutters of the door through which I had passed a bluish flame and trembling, after wandering for a few seconds on the ground obscure, gathered successively in characters of fire and formed the following words:

"You who want to attempt this terrible passage, it's life or death."
dead; but never look back.

"You who yearn to be purified here by the terrors of fire, of the earth and the air,

"If you face danger, hardship, and death, again"
you will rise into the light;

"You will rise into the light with this divine secret many-"
hidden from view by the veils of the sanctuary.

"But yes..."

"[The letters merged into a luminous surface]"
 "more intelligible than the most expressive words."

"Am I then," I exclaimed, "on the path of this mysterious
 "promise, and will the great secret of eternal life be in my "Power?"—"Yes," a celestial voice seemed to reply from the air.
 that I heard, dominating the choir's chants with its sweetness
 "of his accents."

"I plunged into the abyss. Instead of that vague twilight"
 "This friend of ghosts, who first caught my eye, I..."
 "found in a thick darkness much less horrible, but at this much more unfortunate moment, my lamp, which during
 "Some time had been of no use to me, being near expi-
 "rer. Resolved nonetheless to help me with its last glimmer, I tra-
 I quickly crossed into this shadowy region which seemed "Less secluded and more open to the air than anything I had" » traveled. Shortly after, the flash of a great fire announced to me that a
 "The first and serious test was about to begin. As I approached-
 "She, whirlwinds of flame rose from all sides, de-
 "unleashing a fury capable of frightening even the most courageous
 "More familiar than I am with the dangers."

"Opposite me, and completely in my path, was a grove"
 "among the most flammable trees in Egypt, the tamarisk, the "Pine, the Arabian balsam. Around these trees were twisted-"
 "The wounds of the fire serpents, which, swiftly entwined from branch to branch"
 "In this branch, they scattered the flame in all directions, and in all "These trees were nothing but a huge blaze. The fire was » also suffered as much as that of the reed plains in Ethiopia, whose "Twinlight during the night extends to the distant distance of » Nile cataracts.

"My only way out was through the middle of that burning fort. I..."
 "I could see, and not a moment was to be lost: the conflagration was spreading-
 "was happening rapidly from all sides; already the narrow path was surrounded by flames. Throwing away my now useless lamp, and covering my head with a fold of my dress, I ventured into this
 "Fire, trembling in all my limbs."

"Immediately, as if my presence had given a new activity-
 "Avoided the fire, the conflagration became general on all sides.

E

ns

OF FREEMASONRY, 21

"The trees formed a huge bouquet of fire above"

"From my head; the snakes hanging from the flaming branches"

" were showering me with sparks. Never before had the activity and the pre-Common sense was no longer needed. One minute later, and I was perishing. The narrow opening through which I was so promptly The door that had just entered closed immediately behind me, and, as I I looked back to consider the ordeal I had endured, I saw that all the wood was now nothing but a mass of fire.

Having finally escaped this first danger, I tore myself away from one of the

"pins a burning branch, and with this single guide, almost

"Unable to breathe, I rushed forward in great haste. Barely

I had taken a few steps when the path suddenly changed.

"of direction, and inclined at a fairly steep angle. As well as

»

»

I could judge by the light of my pine branch, it became more narrow, and I felt on my forehead a cold and damp air like

"That of the vicinity of the waters. Soon my ear was struck by the

"The sound of torrents mingled with cries of distress, like those"

"of people in danger of dying. With each step the number increased"

"The sound of falling water, and finally I realized I had entered"

"into an immense cavern, from the middle of which, also

"as impetuous as a winter torrent, the waters rushed forth"

whose crash I had heard floating on their surface

"Strange figures, like specters, uttering these cries"

"sharp, inspired by the terror of the precipices where they ran"

"To be destroyed. My course could only be directed through the torrent."

"There was reason to be terrified, but my courage was my

"My only resource. I didn't know what awaited me on the opposite shore—"

"Dry, for everything was shrouded in impenetrable darkness," and the faint light that I held in my hand could not reach

Up to this point. Dismissing all thoughts other than moving forward,

From the rock where I stood, I plunged into the waves, hoping that with

With my right hand I could resist the current, while, from

"The other, I would try to hold above my head this remnant of

"A lit branch for as long as it could last, and"

"to use it as a guide to lead me to the other side."

"My efforts were to be long and arduous. More than once "Carried away by the impetuosity of the waters, I let myself go as

QE <e

|

ee - ne ne menetnnne L
<
ee mn mm

a — 2 — — 2 to

129 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"intended to follow these apparitions which kept passing by"
"beside me, running to plunge into some invisible abyss.

"In the end, as my strength was almost entirely exhausted-»sées, and at the moment when the last remnants of the burning branch
"escaped from my hands, I glimpsed in the water a double » balustrade bordering a series of steps that rose up
"dicularly above the waves, and whose summit appeared
"Lost in thick clouds. I had only glimpsed it, for my
"The dying light had not allowed me to discern any further» tage; but it was enough to revive my courage and strength.
"Having both hands free, I made such desperate efforts-
"I realized that after a few minutes, I felt that my forehead
"hit the balustrade, and a moment later my feet were on
"the degrees."

"Although I didn't know where that staircase led me, I..."
I climbed the stairs; but I had not yet reached a great height,
"when I saw with horrible dread that each of these degrees,
"As my foot gave way beneath me, broke, me » leaving in mid-air, with no alternative but to continue-
"To be able to go up this staircase for a moment, and without even
"To know if he could put up with me."

"For a few seconds, I continued to climb without having
"Below me, nothing but this terrifying river where I hear-"
"I would let the fragments of the staircase fall, as each
The degree crumbled beneath my feet. It was a moment of harsh » ordeal. Gette balustrade, on which I had leaned in "Rising, it became trembling beneath my hand, while the degree

"(ant, my eye was struck by a momentary glimmer, as
"Would be that of a flash of lightning, and I saw suspended within my reach a great
"Bronze ring. Instinctively I seized it; at the same moment,"
"The staircase and the balustrade collapsed beneath me, leaving me suspended" » hung by the hand in the vagueness of the air; and as if, by
"Some magical power, this enormous ring would have been in association"
"Clalion, with all the winds of heaven, I had not had him any sooner—"
"It seemed that she had set in motion all sorts of things"
"of hurricanes and storms that have ever filled the shores"

DFE FREEMASONRY. 129

"Maritime shipwrecks and deaths. In the midst of this battle"
"Elements, each new burst of his fury threatened to » reduce me to atoms, like a sail torn to pieces by the " storm.

"I was swept away as if by a thousand whirlwinds, and, at
In the midst of this deafening chaos, I felt myself turning into a pair like a stone in a slingshot, as long as my head ends up

this wheel of the infernal world, from which, it is said,
Only eternity can count the rotations.

Human strength could not have lasted much longer in such a situation.
It was a tough ordeal. I was on the verge of giving up at the end, when—
"that suddenly the violence of the storm subsided; I ceased by
"degrees of being whirled through the air, and I felt the ring"
"descend gently with me, until, happy as
"A sailor who reaches land after a shipwreck, I found myself..."
"Once again, on solid ground."

"At that same moment, the air was filled with the most intense light."
"Delicious sweetness. Music like the music we were lulled to sleep."
"In dreams it could be heard in the distance, and my eyes Gradually regaining his sight, he unfolded himself before "Them, a spectacle perhaps too brilliant for the dreams of the ima—"
"Genation, but nevertheless alive and real. I was going to run... a
"The priest stopped me and said: 'The victory over the body has been...'"
"Within reach, follow me (1)."

After all the physical and mental trials, the fasting, the silence, the instructions, the answers to the three questions asked The aspirant finally received initiation, which ended with a brilliant procession in which the initiate appeared at the head covered with a veil that concealed her features. [1] was surrounded by a full of warmth and charm, the story he borrowed from the author of Sethos, Movre, has felt compelled to attack very vehemently the Egyptian mysteries to which he opposed the Christianity. It is regrettable that this writer was not himself initiated; he understood how closely ancient Freemasonry resembled Christianity, of which it had prepared for the arrival, and which fulfilled some of the promises that she made to humanity.

1
!
CLOSE

to become confused. My thoughts became muddled, and I thought I was almost sure.

ee en

A military procession from Jui served as a reminder that he must always be ready. to serve his patrician; before him marched a triumphal chariot drawn by a chariot four horses abreast, but one of which he never rode. to show that he doesn't even expect the honors that his Great actions could merit. First public lesson of modesty, which may well have influenced his ignorance where we are among the most zealous names of the initiates of the Freemasonry, of those who, in those early days, have to have raised the glory of our order to its highest point.

This public demonstration of all peoples where the initiation will have penetrated, which we largely find today in France, in the United States of America, served as a model for Catholic processions of the Feast of Corpus, which reproduce them to a small extent near all the provisions, in which we find even the Young girls adorned with flowers walking before the tabernacle. The initiation-Egyptian confederation, after having proclaimed the unity of God which it represented by the emblem of a cross, a unit which is the basis of the Christianity, it was still necessary to lend it its most elaborate ceremonies imposing.

Women were admitted to Egyptian initiation; for as a distinctive sign of their admission to the mysteries, they wore in their hair a golden cicada, a symbol sacred to the sun.

It was not enough for the activity of the initiates to preserve and re- to spread doctrines, to preach lessons of morality and wisdom, of politics, to present a peaceful spectacle of it in the temples, in administration, in private conduct; the life of peoples There are times that impose other obligations on those who aspire- They are expected to lead men. At certain times, words no longer have any effect. Sufficient power, these are the acts that are required of the speaker;

by showing them the way with just a gesture; he must then
They descended from the platform and girded on the sword. Thus did the initiates do.

When, precursors of those other barbarians who so often are rushed against the civilized peoples, the hordes of the Hyksos or pastoral peoples, who came armed from the eastern lands, descended fire on Memphis, on middle and lower Egypt, 2082 years before the Christian era, seized the country, dispersed or

OF FREEMASONRY. 129

they oppressed the leaders, burned the cities, overthrew the temples, pitched their nomadic tents on the mutilated ruins, put barbarism in place of the arts, tyranny in place of the Laws, but the initiates did not shut themselves away in their sanctuaries. The the highest lesson in public morality they owed to the populace—tions accustomed to obeying their voice could no longer stem from Their words, but not their actions; they had a mission to to fill in when the enemy invaded the homeland; they did not retreat not before her; as today, they carried a sword, and they They knew why it had been given to them. For two centuries and half, we saw them fighting in the insurrections whose purpose was to drive out the rulers of Egypt, and from all points, of two banks of the Nile, from Heliopolis, refuge of kings, from Bubastis, from Memphis, launching an attack against the city of Tanis, whose barbarians had built their rampart between two branches of the river, entrain—liberating the people in the name of freedom.

Such noble efforts were crowned with victory: the con-foreign seekers, whom the historian Joseph calls the children of the Jews, that other authors call them Seythes, were finally partly chased away ses, partly reduced to captivity; the Pharaohs regained their power lost, aided by the very people they once had stripped of power, but who silenced all resentment particularly in the common danger.

This courage was not to save the leaders from persecution.
initiates; before as after the invasion, they had preserved the pri-
the duty to judge dead kings, to condemn or honor their memory, to open or close the temple doors at their tom-beautiful. This immense power, exercised with pomp and solemnity, by judges appointed by each of the nomes, in front of the people who had the right to raise their voice to accuse the one whom death had just equaled him, frightening the kings who feared the severity—
The truth of the arrest. This contemporary history written on a shroud.

by subjects that were defended by both customs and power

priestly ordination, and the prestige of religion, were for the survivors an inconvenient brake, and often the initiated paid for their life, the fairness of their judgment on the deceased monarch or the fear that he inspired in the living monarch.

ne ee ee + nn de en RE DR

ms ee em ee © = ne me ee = ee + ms ee same mrs ©
me +

ee + em ee +

us ee ee
4 mn me —

126 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The devastation inflicted upon pastoral peoples was to be repeated. by the Persians; sword in one hand, torch in the other, Cambyses, victor at the Battle of Pelusium, piled ruins on ruins, made the bones of the Pharaohs beaten with rods in their violated tombs; the looted and burned temples mark the footsteps of this conqueror, who seems to have wanted to destroy all the monuments of Egyptian civilization, and did not stop, if we refer to a bas-relief from the recently rediscovered past amidst the rubble, in front of the temple of the goddess Neith, to whom he made an offering. But neither Cambyses nor his successors The censures did not peacefully enjoy the conquest; long civil wars, frequent revolts in which priests and Initiates played a large part, occupying the armies of the victors.

queurs, and, during these fierce struggles for liberation from the homeland, Freemasonry regained some of its power primitive. The brilliant celebrations were held again, the voice The cries of priests resounded, an echo of a past that was never to be reborn. until the day Alexander, at the head of the Greeks, came to drive out the Persians, to establish their empire on the ruins they had sown Egypt, adding further ruins. A fateful era to which All the forces of Freemasonry expire; the old love more than a chaos of ancient ceremonies mixed with practices news borrowed from Greece. It's not just in

In Egypt, initiation loses all its prestige; it is persecuted.
even in Ethiopia, which was his refuge or his cradle, and the King Hergamenes, a contemporary of Ptolemy Philadelphus, made to massacre all the gymnosophists in the temple of Meroë. At this at the moment, the spirit of nationality, so carefully maintained in The moral trials of initiation disappeared from Egypt, and did not will no longer be able to offer resistance to the Roman armies which van-will in turn drive out the powerless successors of Alexander.

Of such grandeur, only scattered debris remains.
on Europe. The stupid Muslims, after having seized Egypt to the Arabs who had dismembered it from the falling Roman Empire
In dissolution, they thought they would be pleasing Muhammad by mutilating the statues remained standing on their pedestals; it is not even up to the

is

Se ee to Re de ee M0 ee as same a ee eue
ee ee ee Re de Je een mt

OF FREEMASONRY. 127

large reclining sphinx figure at the foot of the pyramids on which they did not drop their wrecking hammer. The artistic treasures that the sand has covered have been the only ones saved from their blind fury.

Monuments only fall with the people; the collapse and decay go hand in hand, sowing a land of debris and mourning, holding the two ends of the shroud spread over a nation.
The moral state of Egypt is no less appalling than the aspect of its palaces and temples; like liberty versus tyranny, the Splendors have given way to the most appalling misery, the sciences to the most profound ignorance. One would search in vain in this a degenerate people, a memory of initiation; but, more real than the phoenix, Egyptian Freemasonry, by plunging into ruins, would be revived among the fleeing Hebrews, and, at the voice of Gold-Phea, to rise up over the Greek people, a star on their foreheads.

“

—e I

gp er oo

1928 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

CHAPTER FIVE.

Freemasonry among the Hebrews and the Greeks. – Initiation of the former by Moses, of the Seconds, par. Orpheus. – New phase – The institution takes on a more distinct character. – Restoration of the Indian Masonic idea by Moses; its natural progress. – Unity of God.
– A clearer proclamation of the principle of liberty and of the law – Laws of Moses. Hymns Greek mysteries, Hebrew mysteries.

<@) RELATED or descendants of the peoples

pastors who had subjugated a t part of Egypt, the Hebrews

HQ: "At TD they remained captives after the Island
2. The triumph of nationality over the invasion. Short and constantly agitated by the insurgency
The conquest had resulted in slavery.
The time was past when one of their sons, Joseph,
He came from the land of Canaan and ruled the country.
Apophis' all-powerful minister, one of the kings foreigners (1); however, after their defeat, they had continued to
to grow, to expand, to occupy a fairly large territory, to the point

(1) Hyksos means captives in Egyptian, which would indicate that this name was only given to these temporary victors after their defeat and during their enslavement vage. The historian Joseph modified it to that of shepherds. Maneichon says that indeed
It was in a state of captivity that these foreigners were represented on the temples of th
All that remained of them in the country was a deep hatred that would forever engulf them.
the classes. They built nothing; the sacred script could not preserve their names on the frontispieces of temples, they rejected the national religion; nor on the palaces, They lived in the camps and destroyed the cities. They enabled the cultivation of fields, in order to extract onerous tributes from the enslaved people, but sufficient for the maintenance of the army, the needs of the leaders and the demands of war.

: Cuaurozuiox–Ficeac, Univer. Egypte, p. 298.

[| IN TR LR D |

to overshadow their oppressors. Their pre- history feel this singular spectacle of a race that was first conquering, then defeated in turn by the indigenous people, but attached to grounded by its interests, its hopes perhaps, not wanting abandoning the homeland it won by force of arms, creating there a separate nationality, a particular religion, a memory of the religion primitive India, an echo of the Masonic religion of the early

time, preservation of Egyptian initiation, while it was not altered by the error that had led to the symbols, to myths, altars dedicated to the one god, the Great Architect worlds.

While the victorious nation, having once again become master of the territory, indulged in superstitions that the priesthood nc did not sufficiently restrain himself, of which he was sometimes complicit, in a corner of land, a very small people preserved the religion of the
it was created and drew its strength from it. Under the watchful eyes of armed guards of sticks, condemned, after the complete subjugation of the Hyksos, to work in the quarries, to extract stones from the mountain of Massarah, to rebuild the ravaged cities, to repair the temples of Ptah, Apis, and Ammon, mutilated by war, the Hebrews mutilated tiplied, according to the words of their prophet, like the stars of the sky and the sands of the sea. Their number frightened one of the Under the Pharaohs, slavery became more burdensome, and then appeared
Their leader was a liberator, Moses.

Elevated to high positions by the dominant figures of his nation, he did not
He did not, however, sacrifice its interests; admitted to the mysteries,
A priest himself, he found in initiation the great principle of unity, and he considered transferring to civil life the maxim which was the foundation of the religious edifice; the ideas of equality, liberty, of justice, which are the very foundation of Masonic doctrine, he wanted to put them into practice in the constitution of the people that he freed them from servitude. We have described the Exodus from Egypt; but

It was not enough to flee; the liberated population needed to be...
to feed her, to lead her to fertile land, to discipline her, to organize her to unify, to make it a people, to give it a stronger nationality, more active than that preserved in captivity with more persistence is more than true power.

+ 0

Ve ne 2 2e + 0 meme none

150 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

|

Moses begins the work of regeneration. The criticism has raised doubts about the migration of the Hebrew people; she did not see in the flight by which he escaped Egyptian domination than a moral liberation (1). Without seeking the truth of a a fact accepted by tradition and which it is impossible to assert or to deny today by supporting the acceptance or the negation of Irrefutable evidence; it will suffice to say that the effect of this freedman-
The vow, whether symbolic or material, was absolutely the same.
Major historical events are altered as they pass through the centuries; they are arranged in such a way as to highlight the courage, the virtue of those who accomplished them; but, whatever Whatever the alteration undergone, there is always something in them of true, in the sense that they invariably indicate a change,
a transformation.

The Genesis of Moses dates from the liberation of the Hebrews. its civil and religious laws. The legislator had seen the faults in which had fallen the people of Egypt, representing by Visible signs represent immaterial ideas; it goes back directly to the simple, yet profound ideas of the first Indian Genesis;
He will evoke Valmiki from the dust of his tomb. His cosmogonie will rest entirely on the pure essence of principles taught in the mysteries. His supreme being, his Jehovah, is the creator of worlds, whom Valmiki calls by this great name:
HE; he is the Ormusd of the Persians, the one god of the gymnosophiststes. The dogma of light and darkness will be reproduced in the doctrine of Moses, less pronounced, it is true, than in the primitive times, yet well characterized; from them will be born

still good and evil; the Persian and Egyptian myths will not have
The fact that they changed their name. The Magi of Persia had represented-
He saw the world under the symbol of an egg; Moses adopted this emblem; the egg, like the zodiac, is divided into twelve stations

the twelve months. For six months, the light prevails over the darkness; for six more, she is overcome by it; thus, the

(1) See Quinet, Des Religions de l'antiquité; Salvador, Jésus-Christ et ses doctrines; the Jews.

— —

ee

FREEMASONRY, 131

Two equinoxes again mark the duration of time, and will be celebrated with festivals that have been perpetuated to this day.

It is neither in the division of time, nor in Genesis, that he
We must ask Moses for an originality he doesn't possess; he found a
A complete system, an ancient cosmogony suited to his ideas
He adopts them; it is not in this that his personality should truly—how to appear. But the Hebrew leader saw the monstrous errors—false, degrading things that the crowd, in its ignorance, substitutes for was killing them, in truth; he will fight them, try to destroy them, and especially to prevent his return by an act of his will then—health. One of the articles of the law that he claims to have received from God forbids, under penalty of death, of worshipping images, even when they represent the divine.

Obtaining obedience to such a command was a step immense for a people who had lived among the Egyptians, had partly adopted their religious ceremonies, and the struggle that Moses had to defend this, which proves quite clearly how much this precept offended people received habits (1). But this is not yet where the initiate Egyptian who became an initiator, that the Freemason heir of secret doctrines will be fully revealed; we we will see it at work in the social and political organization of his people; the teachings of the temple will be applied to civil life, the principles put into action.

The law was proclaimed at the foot of Sinai and Horeb, the constitution Political tuition is in effect. Moses has established the government.
which was bound to result from the rigorous application of the Principle of initiation: unity of God, national unity, equality people, election of leaders. No distinction of castes, of differences in condition, no privileged group enjoying self-Rity, no nobles; work is imposed on all, the law is for all. Religious thought will dominate the work; Jehovah will be the key.

(4) The sons of Jacob had combined most of the wise thoughts of their ancestors Egyptian superstitions; the servitude that had weighed upon them for so many years had, as much as superstition, enervates their souls; for a long servitude is like too long a sleep which, far from reviving the man, disposes him to sleep again.

Sacvabur, /nstitutus de Moise, 1. L., p. 28 and 29.

me

132 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

of the vault of the social edifice; listen to his words: "It is I who:

"The one brought out of Egypt, from the house of slavery (1)." Thus, the the first effect of this Dicu's will, the immediate consequence

The fundamental principle is, after common equality, the principle of liberty (2). Individual unity, the right to

For each person, the law is not limited to punishing theft; that would not have been there a sufficient demonstration, she forbids coveting the woman, the field, the servant of the neighbor (3), thus wanting to establish and clearly convey that oppression is prohibited in any form whatsoever. This is not just a
A religious precept is a political and social thought.

Thanks to the implementation of these principles, which are those of the temple, a nation that cannot be compared to these great powers manage to establish themselves between Egypt, this wonderful empire of science, of civilization, and Arabia, this land which produced the reformers, on the shore facing Greece, the homeland of beauty, of the arts raised to their highest expression, etc. without any literature other than that of its prophets, without perfection In these arts, the glory of her neighbors and rivals, she lives, she maintains itself through the sheer force drawn from Masonic mysteries-questions, but this time clearly applied.

At the same time as Moses was initiating the Hebrews into a new way of life Orpheus transplanted the mysteries of Memphis into the

to which he gave wheat as an aid; an echo of the old Egypt resounded in the Ionian Sea. It was neither the trees, neither the rocks, nor the ferocious animals that are stirred by the sounds of The poet's lyre is made of savage men, without religion.
without connection between those, inhabiting caves, forests, that, by its Powerful words, they attract and unite people in society, a miracle less strange, but more fruitful.

Orpheus was born in Thrace; he came to Thessaly, where he married

Eurydice, daughter of Talaon the Titan. "One day Talaon and Eurydice

(4) Exodus.

(2: Salvador, Institutions of Moses, vol. 1, p. 79.

(5) Exodus, Deuteronomy.

eq EE me

ee ee ne 2 A –

born

ep A0 <q

| OF FREEMASONRY. 155

had stopped on the tip of a rock battered by the waves threatening. The sky suddenly became covered with clouds; one night anticipated spread over the waters, and from the heart of that night emerged | "terrible flashes of lightning. In the sinister glow of dreadful meteors, they
They saw a frail skiff tossed about on the roaring abyss. Gods

"Immortals! in the skiff so miserably lost among the waves"
In Wrath, will you save this fearless mortal who fights alone?

against the storm? Talaon summoned his servants and had himself brought to him.

He lit torches of resinous pine. He immediately set fire to a

"A bushy oak that dominated the shore; an ancient tree, a retreat"

"Accustomed to a thousand different birds; sacred, fateful tree"

"like those of Dodona, and which the Titan cherished above all others"

"the others. Thus, the old man obeyed against his will a sudden

5 3

ÿ

e

"Inspiration: the tree condemned by fate will no longer bear fruit"

"oracles of the old world; the new man will escape the Shipwreck. Soon the ablaze oak, sparkling with a murmur

"Just like tumultuous voices, throws a faraway

"Great light, and the unfortunate man who was suspended on so many..."

"chasms ready to be swallowed up could direct its efforts towards the "Helpful clarity. Indeed, the skiff was approaching; it was rolling,

"rushing from wave to wave, and crying out in its disjointed wings.

"Then one could distinguish the noble figure of a young hero who

"He was forcefully and calmly stirring his half-broken oars. His soul,

"remained peaceful amidst this formidable chaos, her soul

"seemed to dominate the elements and command the waves. One

The lyre was at her feet. Finally the storm subsided, and in a few

"In those moments, the courageous stranger reaches the shore. With a gesture, he salutes.'

"the old man who had steered his course across the stormy sea, and,

Taking his lyre, he offered it, smiling, to Eurydice a thousand times.

| » moved.

| » Eurydice, who had gone through all the anxieties of worry-

"tude, and who was barely reassured, cast a gentle glance

"on the bold navigator, all radiant with youth and beauty.

"He, with no other emotion than the poetic inspiration that swells his

| » generous breasts, which inflame all her senses, which is her

"soul and life," he swiftly moves his fingers across his lyre

154 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

He was aware of the civilizing mission that heaven had entrusted to him.

Given this, he knew what persecutions, what pains, what

Moral storms threaten the initiators bringing to the people

new ideas, institutions, through what territorial trials

the reformers must pass, he dared not link the fate of Eury-

dice to his own; love, too, did not have enough power over this powerful Soul to restrain him and tie him to the ground, he is intimately associated with the class of mortals who must be raised to rank of men. "Old man," he said to Talaon, "the gods will not have

"not vainly placed in my soul the desire to tear out

"in a silt. I reaped no fruit from my first "attempts; but what good would courage be if one had no action to take."
"Only the easy path to success? I want to take the scholarly one."
"Egypt: there, I will learn all the great wonders of the "morality and poetry, and I will be initiated into the mysteries of Isis,"
"Holy mysteries where human thought seeks to unite with the "Divine thought. It is there, in this blessed land, that the "religious genius of civilization (2)."

Talaon thought Orpheus too young for such bold designs.
and yet did not blame him, knowing that God places within us the advance knowledge of the things we need to accomplish or that he wants to accomplish through us; he understood that the poet wanted to flee so as not to cause turmoil in his daughter's soul.
But he realized it was too late. "Stay with us, him."
"He said; wait until the storm season is over. Why
"Would you banish love from your heart?" – I have nothing to offer Eury-
"It says that the pains of exile and the premonition of I don't know
"What glory, I fear she herself might be seduced by," replied
"Orpheus." "Eurydice will be your wife," Talaon replied; "she will follow you-"
"True, wherever you wander, the

|

"divine, and brings forth ravishing sounds, streams of har-

(1) Ballanche, Orphre, p.127-:98.

» Monia (1). »

Orpheus, taken in by the Titan, inspired love in Eurydice;

(2) /d., id., p 140.

ES EU to =

OF FREEMASONRY. 155

"Solitude will walk with you under the sun. – And your Eurydice,"

"Where will she rest her head?" –"On your breast," said the old man (4).

The two spouses embarked for Egypt; but, in his
It was a difficult mission; Orpheus was not to receive any consolation.
of love, to savor the joys of family; his apostolate would
It begins with suffering and ends with martyrdom.

on the journey from the port to a hotel located outside the city, Eurydice was slightly stung on the heel by a venomous creature. and expired a few hours later (2).

Soon Orpheus asked for initiation, came to draw from the lessons from the temple the strength he needed, to complete his thought civilizing in Masonic teachings. It is said that he undergoes the physical tests described above, minus that of the bronze ring, which he did not even think to cling to, which the priests forgave him, not because of his beautiful voice and harmonious verses which he sang while accompanying himself on his lyre, as the author of Sethos says (3), but making an exception for genius, anticipating the era in which the material hardships were expected to diminish, to fade away in the face of the moral trials.

What was the need to ask Orpheus for proof of a counter-instinctive rage, when he had already undertaken a very different task—It is a difficult, and far more perilous, process to civilize men. to create a society where only barbarians existed, only... savages? Initiation could not be for the bard of the Thracians what it was to ordinary novices; it is not to him that the Egyptian priests would have proposed riddles to solve; they would not have offered to teach him, without a smile. reveal three great secrets: one for making gold, one for extending life, one to exalt the imagination and make it produce things exciting the admiration of men (4); they knew very well that he would not have bothered to reply like that other aspirant:

(1) Ballanche, Orpheus, p. 141.

(2) Sethos, Book II.

(3) {d., id.

(4) Ballanche, Orpheus, Book VI,

++ 2 20-202 002 000

| 156 | PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"The secret to making gold is to live free from wants;
"The key to prolonging life is to make good use of the time that..."
"is granted to us by the immortal gods; that of exciting
"Men's admiration lies in giving them good » examples. » .
The poet, initiator, reformer, who had already begun his great mission, which would give laws to his country, brought his

the results of the social organization they created, and it came in to study the details, the secrets; it was an equal speaking to equals, seeking their goal, and they could answer him:

"The priest is man himself."

"The poet is the likeable man."

"The king is the people (1)."

Sublime words whose application we will find among the Greeks and among the Hebrews!

Orpheus did not have to ask Egypt for an explanation of the Phe-

* symbolic nix; he had well understood that, in his death and his Resurrection, the mysterious bird is none other than humanity.

which always survives when societies die and are reborn, the

The first group prepares the elements that will be used by the second group.

But the priests of Memphis could say to the initiate:

"We are approaching this era of endings and renewal of the "Human societies. The reign of divine kings will end here; there it is

"The reign of heroic kings; elsewhere it is that of pastoral kings."

The world of humanity everywhere begins, or everywhere undergoes a

"A huge transformation. Here comes the funeral of the bird."

"Symbolic events will begin. Woe to the princes who fail to recognize--"

"The very nature of man would be born, which would be without "Sympathetic for his successive destinies! It will not be for them"

"Given the opportunity to witness the mystical death of the Phoenix, they will not see"

"Once he has resurrected himself in glory, they will no longer be able to reign over"

"Islands and peoples (2)."

Orpheus, upon leaving the temple, SR" therefore the secret of

(1) Ballanche, Orpheus, book VI.

(2) Ibid., id., id.

mm mm mm

mysteries, the great thought of human perfectibility; if, in it Upon entering, the horizon of the future was still, in his eyes, fraught with some cloud, covered with some veil, cloud and veil had Once gone, the doubt was dispelled, the goal appeared in the distance.
bright, he was going to walk there without hesitation.

Back in Greece, Orpheus taught men how to dress and to to shelter from the harsh weather of the seasons. The initiation begins--

OF FREEMASONRY. 157

Made by the trials of the body, it follows the same law. By bringing lessons of intelligence; indeed, he soon taught them one:

The new language, that of the Greeks, gave them the institution of marriage, that is to say the family, then the cult of tombs, thus linking the past to the future through love, the sweetest of links, like the most powerful emancipator to confound the classes and orders. After establishing social institutions, he
He organized the political institutions. For him, there were no castes.
Like Valmiki, like Buddha, like Moses, he declares the equal men; royalty cannot be transmitted by the birth, it is not a right granted by chance; the franc-Freemasonry has broken the dogma of destiny; it pursues it to the very end.
on the throne; kingship is merely the handing over of the scepter by the
the people in the hands of the most worthy; finally, to crown Through religion, Orpheus established the cult of mysteries based on the unity of God, the great festivals of Ceres and Bacchus, symbols of plebeian emancipation.

Osiris and Isis changed their names; the former became Bac-Chus, the sun god; the second, Ceres the fertile one who will give to The people harvest the crops. The myth is exactly the same. Pluto,
The king-god of darkness snatched Ceres' daughter away, just as Typhon had taken from Isis, her husband. Like Isis, Ceres sets out in search of the property that was taken from her; she arrives at Eleusis in Attica, as Isis at Byblos, and, like her, sits by a fountain, the Callichore's well. King Frost's daughters, leading two goats
They find them in the pasture, just as Astarte's wives had Isis's actions, and they inform Queen Metania of this encounter. Ceres is summoned to the palace, and the son of the king of Eleusis is entrusted to her for to feed him, as the king of Byblos's son had been fed to Isis. Ceres, 10

—

138 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY:

—

During the night, he would pass this child through the fire, in order to to consume what was mortal within him. The queen surprises her during this operation, the purpose of which she does not know, and she cries out; the charm is broken, the child dies, Ceres reveals herself, gives to the eldest sons of Metania, Triptolemus, a chariot drawn by dragons, and the art to cultivate the wheat which he will teach the whole earth by traversing it riding on a winged chariot. As for Proserpine, Jupiter ordered Pluto to return her; but she consented to remain every year the darkness.

In Egypt and Greece, the myth is identical; but the thought social progress has been made. On the banks of the Nile, there was a desire to dedicate to Marriage, Osiris and Isis are united; this conquest completed, it is necessary to establish family ties; it is no longer her husband but Ceres- Isis will search the world; she is his daughter. Thus, the thought Freemasonry continues its work through the ages, by modifying sometimes the form it takes.

Orpheus does not have the same advantage as Moses; his principal books are lost; its genesis entitled Origins of the 1nondes and of the gods, his initiations into the mysteries of which barely a few remain Words scattered throughout the old texts, unfortunately, did not come. until now, and thus we are missing one of the most curious monuments points of comparison in the history of developments of the human mind. Two men almost leave together Egypt; both drew from the same sources of the temple, all two will regenerate their nation, and it would have been as useful as curious to judge the differences that the particular genius of the two The people would imprint their work on the laws of their legislators. We do not we will see in a complete way that one side of the picture; of the chan- of the Thraee we have only a few pages left, and, if one can compare monuments of the mind to monuments of matter- nels of art, it is through the mutilated ruins of Or-'s work the pheus that we must seek the thought that tore the Pelasgians from the barbarity.

'The poet-legislator proclaims a supreme god, superior to everything. "Ouranos, father of all things, eternally part "Acting force of the world, beginning and end of the universe, you who make

2 mt me

- ———_— 9 ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 159

nt

"rolling the earth in immense circles, celestial god and 1st:"
"Resistant one who guards and dominates all, who summarizes the laws within yourself"
"Eternal beings of nature, hear my prayers and preserve life at "young child who serves the mysteries (1)." He proclaimed the exis-the tence of a god who hovers over humanity, he continues the application of Masonic belief by declaring that only one god presides

"The only divinity is the vast sky that surrounds us with its light."
"He alone created everything; in him flows creation, fire, water and the
"Earth (2)." –

He naturally began with the being superior to all, he descends back into the earthly realms, looks around him, feels the need to impose a law that would be the immutable rule of citizens, who, equal for all, obtain respect and obedience of all, without regard to wealth and power, "I
"Invokes her divine law, genius of men and immortals, goddess"
"Celestial, common sign of all things, foundation of nature,"
"preserving the immutable laws of heaven in its revolutions, you
"who governs all that breathes, who directs all with equity;
"Goddess favorable to the righteous, severe to the wicked, remember
"of us, and may our names be friendly names to you (3)."

The bloody struggles fueled by desires for revenge or punishment must cease before the courts established for
to judge crimes as well as disputes; the love of virtue,
If the commitment to moral duties is not strong enough, it
We must suspend the threat hanging over the head of anyone who might be tempted to to give in to the inspirations of a guilty thought. "The eye of "Justice embraces all; she sits on the holy throne of God,"
"From where she watches over all men. An inexorable avenger, she
"Punishes crimes, and no one escapes its action (4)."

It is not enough for the law to regulate, for justice to strike,
He tries to make citizens understand the spirit of fairness
must guide them constantly. "A good advisor to men,

- (1) Hymn II.
- (2) Fragments, I.
- (3) Hymn LXI.
- (4) Hymn LIX.

me met ee St From R me + + 6 ms _ ee + 0 – en + 2 + ee ee = © me mn om my me | molt author

140 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"Opulent virgin, venerable goddess, Equity, through wise decrees,"
"You share equal rights among all; you crush under your +"
» those who refuse to submit to your law; you hate what is |
"False, you love what is true. Goddess who breaks injustice, that "Those who enjoy [the blessings] walk in a straight path through you" |
"Gifts from the earth, those held captive on the seas by |
» the winds, all those that breathe on the surface of | "The universe (A)."

feared by barbarity, and which could not be transformed in a day; it |
 We must instill in men's minds this idea that the
 A hidden crime, if it evades human justice, will be prosecuted by the remorse, a great and beautiful thought that gives justice an auxiliary
 a more terrible liar than herself. "I invoke you, Eumenides,
 "Dreaded goddesses, horrible goddesses, Alecto, Tisiphone, and you,"
 "Megeria, goddesses, friends of the night, who dwell in dwellings"
 "Underground goddesses on the banks of the Styx, terrible, avenging goddesses—"
 "His inexorable daughters of Orcus, aerial goddesses, invisible,
 "Lighter than thought. Neither the swift pursuits of the sun nor of "June, neither powerful virtue, nor amiable old age, nor youth—
 "A radiant presence of strength and beauty, will not inspire joy in "Our hearts if you refuse it to her. You govern the generals—"
 "tions, you do them justice (2)."

Religious law and civil law are established, the initiator rises returning to philosophical ideas; he received in Egypt the dogma of light and darkness, of the predominance of This one, 11, transmits it to the Pelasgians. "Mighty Vulcan, flame
 "Eternal, god of light, shining god, endless god, pure"
 "Element, portion of the world that rises above everything; the sun, the
 "June, the stars, do not shine in the eyes of mortals, O Vulcan!"
 "like the inflamed members of your body. You illuminate"
 » all houses, all cities, all peoples; preserve
 "Within us a generative light (3)."

The time has come to focus more specifically on interests

- (1) Hymn LX.
- (2) Hymn LXVT.
- (3) Hymn LXIIT.

ED
 ee ee en none OR nement

OF FREEMASONRY. 141

materials that a new people needs to develop. Orplied tries to tear the Greeks, who until then had been intoxicated by the fighting, away from t
 war, to substitute the plow for the sword; he did not give them the wheat to see the ravaged fields, the destroyed harvests, trampled underfoot horses' feet or under the wheels of war chariots; the War, in his eyes, is not the law of humanity. "Mars Magna—
 "Nimbus, terrible, indomitable, leading the tumult, dripping"
 "blood, and you always thirst for it, who delights in the sound of swords, of "Quarrels and struggles, suspend your battles, make a truce to "frightening tumults; surrender yourself to the charms of love and"

"of peace which gives abundance and wealth (1)."

Trade, in turn, must bring its benefits to the nation;
The legislator wants the ships to set sail on the seas, to go to establish relations between peoples; it provides a protector to the boatmen. "Be favorable to us, Leucothea!" Dominatrix
"Azure waves, playing on the waves and protecting the sailors."
"Through the dangers, hearts rise from all ships"
"to you; you come to the aid of men in peril, you
"Aid in the turmoil. Be favorable to the ships that sail-"
"They sail the sea at full speed (2)." These are the fathers that we will later address to the mother of Jesus.

Thus, by introducing the doctrine of sites into Greece
Egypt, the initiator embraces everything with his profound gaze, since the throne of God, which rises resplendent in the midst of the sublime from the brightness of the heavens to the crude ships propelled by oars and who only dare to half-open their sails to the breath of the winds.
Religious worship was superseded by civil laws. What would ceremonies have meant?
Brilliant, but an initiation with no tangible results for the people?
Intellectual improvement had to be accompanied by emancipation.
politically, to faithfully fulfill his mission; he did so. [He wanted, by establishing liberty, that it be based on justice, and that the inequality of forces among men was compensated by equality of rights. The horrific practices of cannibals existed.

(1) Hymn LXIT.

(2) Hymn LXXI.

tee em + mes dan ee ce mme eee =

1
|

Re mr me

149 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

still in his homeland; he taught his fellow citizens to respect the blood of their fellow human beings, to feed on more worthy foods of them, and, by preaching unity to them, strove to distance them from internal wars, at least made them renounce the custom -of
They devoured each other. Society formed and cities arose.

The poet had imitators and supporters; kings, warriors

Danaus also established the mysteries and institutions which depended on various points in Greece; already the Egyptians, For their part, they sent colonies to Europe which carried by emigrating their gods and their religion; the peoples were going to mingle at the same time as the intellectual Orient overflowed onto The West. In both countries, the mystery ceremonies were the same, the myth was maintained, only the names were changed (4). Osiris called himself in turn Bacchus, Jupiter, Hercules, depending on the regions where the altars were erected, where initiation penetrated Isis became Ceres, as we have said, and the Pamilia Egyptian was the Greek Dionysia.

We saw the priests of Memphis dedicate to Osiris a
A team of four white horses; Palamedes, among the Greeks, demands that a young white horse that has not
not yet subjected to restraint; the Massagetae make the same sacrifice—

The sun had its statue, the moon its sacred fountain at Thälma, in Laconia; statues were erected to both of them at Elis;

Finally, Alexander the Great sacrificed to the sun, the moon, and the earth.
the day before a lunar eclipse. We can therefore repeat with Plato that Greece, civilized by the Egyptians, initially had no other gods like those of the Egyptians, and that these gods were the sun,
the moon, the stars, the sky, the earth.

The goddess Ncith, before whom Cambyses had knelt and had momentarily ceased its devastation, took the name of Minerva in Athens, which had been founded by a colony of Egyptians who had left of Sais, the city where the great festival of lights was celebrated.
Greek tribes still barbaric, half-savage, despite the efforts of Orpheus and other legislators, finding themselves entangled in

(1) Diodorus Siculus, book 1.

eme ee mn men

where she received a cult jointly with Proserpine, and in

OF FREEMASONRY.

Civilized men from the banks of the Nile settled among them,
more readily accept from their national initiators the religious dogmas to which they saw foreigners obeying, but

boles. | L

Orpheus, by preaching the secret doctrine, had established the festivals of Eleusis; the daughters of Danaus instituted the Thesmophoria in the honor of Ceres the lawgiver, and these festivities were celebrated by the daughters and wives of the Athenians(1).

Isis bore the surname Pelasgian in Corinth; the honorary Boeotia-Ceres the Great, or Cabirique, would have planted a sacred grove there.

which only initiates could enter. The Celeans and the The Phliasians also celebrated the mysteries of Ceres, but the pre-The Phaeneates had been among all the islands for only four years. fully embraced the mysteries of Eleusinian Ceres; the The Argives revered Hermione as earthly Ceres; everything happened in the temple in a rather mysterious way so that the Only priestesses were instructed in this matter; in Samothrace, the Cabiric mysteries were celebrated in honor of four Deities: Ceres, Proserpine, Pluto and Mercury (2).
“But whatever the ceremonies, let the initiates give themselves over”

to dances, to songs, let them hold magnificent trials
Let them throw down, like the Argives, burning torches
in a deep pit, everywhere we find the same myth of a god who died and rose again, which will be perpetuated in Christianity nism; everywhere another is linked to the establishment of the mysteries an unforgettable memory, and the Greeks never forgot that the e-that these institutions dated back to that of their civilization, that they owed them the most precious goods of social life and of liberation from barbarism (5).
To make their lessons more enjoyable, Orpheus and the others

(1) Herodotus,

(2) The names of the four Cabiric deities are Azxieros, Axiochersa, Axiochersus and Casmillus; Apollonius of Rhodes asserts that they were Ceres, Proserpine, and Pluto. ct Mercury.

(3) Dupuis, Origin of Cults, 1. H, p. 6.

«#0 One Ge ne co pe Re A OP à – re to RS nc RE mo mo mo oo mo Oo takes nu 7 “ne Gcenen een <ocnREnERR RRRERE IRD genre

144 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The initiators adopted the symbols, limiting the influence of the Indians.

enigmatic form thoughts, and did not state them openly ly (1). Religious poetry at that time was full of concision and by force: these were the harsh accents of a sacred cantor laying down his name.
in a transparent image a profound word which commands memory, will, and disdains vain pursuits seductions by which a poet enamored of beauty captivates the imagination nation of peoples (2).
Orpheus had been great but simple in his mythology;
Homer invents a new heaven, and, at the sight of this brilliant

Olympus, Greece somewhat forgets the sublime lessons it received from the first initiator and the priests of the East. The beliefs, poetry, sculpture are all governed by this model which has become national; every other light pales before its own. The anthems ancient sounds, however, continue to resonate in the mountains of the Thrace and Phrygia; the cult of Syria and Phoenicia

It continues to prevail in the Greek cities, but the people do not understands more well the meaning attached to these divine songs and the
The secret of these august ceremonies. Daedalus awakened from their long rest from the old idols of Egypt; sensible, human action, purely external, it replaces contemplation; the background and the senses are sacrificed to the pleasures of imagination and taste, to the beauty of forms (3).

As in Egypt, during the days of madness which we have recounted
The painting, the prayer degenerates and seems superstitious to the crowd
The power to compel, to bind the gods. The secret doctrine remained uninvolved in this error; from a political standpoint, his thought never ceased to dominate: at the same time as the genius of Homer prevailed, subdued imaginations, seized the minds of Greeks and chained their religion in its bonds, the ancients Families of kings were disappearing from the soil of Greece; they were dying out-gradually gave way, or yielded to republican constitutions caines who opened up a vast career in public life. Alongside

(1) Pausanias.

(2) Creuzer, History of Religions.

(5) Ibid.,

—
—— _ men

— 2 —_— 2 ——— ——— A — << — ————— ———
—_—_—_—

—— —————_— — —

From the feeling of beauty arose the feeling of freedom; and from this noble alliance, sealed by both civil and religious institutions religious, resulted in the most decisive, the most original character, the the most poetic and the greatest (1).

Theseus is credited with establishing the great festival of Pauathenes and that of the branches in honor of Bacchus; but the tradition preserved about this initiated prince has quite another importance. After these foundations, Theseus united into a single body political all the inhabitants of Attica, scattered under the empire of petty chiefs and petty tyrants waging war among themselves; tried to raise the soul of the people by passing through his hands the authority, by proclaiming the sovereignty of the people (2). Theseus traveled through the towns, visited families to get them to accept the new form of government; ordinary individuals and the poor accepted eagerly; he found resistance

In rebuke to the richest and most powerful, they gave in. However, following his example, he then abdicated and relinquished his authority. royal court with which he was invested (5), established democracy (4) by don-

giving to the government liberty, equality, fraternity for bases, thought only of regulating and policing the republic, called for foreigners; granted them the same rights as others citizens, and finally reserved for himself only the stewardship of the father ct the maintenance of laws.

The Eleusinian Mysteries had two levels: the lesser ones... were in reality the preparation and purification of neophytes, The great mysteries were the initiation. The institution of the little ones mysteries, or rather the origin attributed to it, was itself a symbol. Hercules, having received from Euristheus the order to drive out Cerberus of hell, but unable to be admitted because he He was not initiated, went to Eumolpus, and begged him to give him

However, he did not dare refuse it, for he was a friend of the Athenians and had rendered them some services; to reconcile everything, Pylus

(1) Creuzer, History of Religions.

(2, Isocrates, Encomium of Helen.

(3) Id, id.

(4) Pausanias, Description of Attica.

+ of,

146 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

adopted the hero, created the little mysteries for him, and there he was admitted (1).

The little mysteries were celebrated in Agra and on the banks of The Tissue, in a small temple; the great mysteries, on the contrary, in a vast temple, and only at Eleusis. The initiation had it took place during the night; it was amidst singing and dancing, then that fear and astonishment were at their peak, that suddenly The light shone brightly. The initiates were crowned with myrtle. and wearing a jacket which later served to identify them, and that they should never leave, except when she was torn to shreds, fallen to pieces (2). The ceremonies lasted several days, and the fourth took place the procession of Calathus, which was led on a chariot drawn by oxen, and that the women follow—they went about carrying baskets decorated with red ribbons and of a particular shape.

Purity of morals was a condition of initiation, and the Even unintentional murders were excluded. The secret was then viewed as so necessary that the death penalty was pronounced not only against those who revealed the mysteries, but also against those who listened, who received this revelation. The initiation was given for a long time free of charge. to those who were deemed worthy and who had undergone suitable treatment The preparatory tests. Aristogiton, the first, established the obligation to pay for initiation (5). | |

This new condition had the most unfortunate consequences. Nothing The magnitude of the goal was undoubtedly unchanged, but an element—and was bound to bring about sad results. It was a poisonous seed—a plant destined to bear poisonous fruit later on. Let us one can indeed imagine what must have happened then: from the moment that Initiation was taxed; those who could not pay it... were naturally excluded, and the association was deprived of men.

who could have been worthy apostles. From the day when virtue, the

(1) Meursius, Eleusinia, Various scholiasts of Homer and Aristophauc.

(2) Id., id. Id., id.

6) dl, id.

OF FREEMASONRY. 147

patriotism, attachment to moral and political principles of the Greek Masonic union, ceased to be the only conditions from the reception of the neophyte, that the payment of a certain sum of money became mandatory, who could answer that Wouldn't the accessory be considered the main one? By...
By generating income, the initiation would also create expenses that it would be necessary to cover, and therefore was it not to be feared that Initiation, far from being a reward, is a mode of propagation of the generous ideas that had created it, was now nothing more than a means to mint coins?

This innovation, moreover, clashed with ideas of equality, and, if it did not destroy them, but it altered them, since it left in outside, an entire class of men deprived them of the benefit that initiation was supposed to bring them; the circle of those on whom his The influence that could be exerted was restricted; she lost part of its influence on society and diminished the strength of its followers by imposing an unusual condition on their receipt. It is noteworthy—that many men driven by an idea, all ready to to make the sacrifices that his triumph demands, or only that his expansion order, however do not always want to buy the right to devote themselves to her. Sometimes that is for them a It's a question of dignity; it's an assessment that can be made to disagree, but who nonetheless exercises it very often a powerful influence, and one that deserves reflection, because of this even though she had to remove people whom society had counted with pride in her bosom.

This new condition was to act in yet another way method: by making the novice pay for his certification, by requiring a purely material sacrifice, the body seemed to take the moral commitment to provide him in turn with a material benefit riel; from then on, great ideas were stifled or could The being, the original purpose, was veiled, and, in place of the general spirit, universal, of the great association, the personality threatened to

Aristogiton's innovation has been, throughout the centuries by masonry, abandoned and resumed several times, following the circumstances; but it should be noted that it was not the rule

"3

sx — in co em ms ne ee ce tm te nee en "00 —

as me

— ge « D + mp MG co Eu on On de

148 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

common only in times of decadence. It is accepted today—today, if not in an absolute way, at least in a way general, and the attacks to which it has often been subjected in the The lodges bear sufficient witness to the ideas that are attached to them.

In the early days of the institution of the mysteries in Greece, and under the influence of colonies from the East, the priests for—some colleges are trying to revive it on another the customs of Ethiopia and Egypt; but the spirit of The inhabitants were ill-suited to this constitution of the priesthood. The priests, scattered and isolated, exerted only a mediocre influence on the people; some priestesses were married, but their jobs were not hereditary. Kings and chiefs armies were invested with priestly functions, and assembled—thus held in their hands both spiritual and temporal powers rel. The same system was followed when the republic was established; Furthermore, the elective element penetrated the temple of the divinity national, and the chief magistrate of Athens, the archon-king, received of the people the sacred mission that was previously fulfilled by monarchs; he was in charge of the mysteries, ensuring their observance tion of religious laws, and, after the celebration of the festivals, convo—quait the sacred senate in the Eleusinium, where it dealt with offenses committed against religion during this celebration.

But this archon, although his functions were higher, was subject to the common rule, a guarantee for citizens against any ambitious thought; chosen by lot from among his colleagues, He only held the religious magistracy for one year. What— which families had, it is believed, preserved from the times seems to indicate that, even in this case, priestly jobs were not given to them for life (1).

The various aggregations of citizens that made up the empire Greeks had different religious institutions, depending on the localities, and everywhere in general, priests exercised functions only temporary. Their nature did not exclude them from civil offices and positions; far from it, they are magistrates.

(1) Creuzer, History of Religions.

= – no, OR

FREEMASONRY. 149

freely elected by the people, undergoing an examination which must to establish their knowledge and morality, becoming citizens again when the the duration of their mission is complete, or rather, it continues to be citizens, when going up to the altar, not forming a special body, lacking any particular organization, unable to steer by a caste mentality. The Buddha's thought is applied in its fullness, and later the first Christians will borrow

The Greeks had the wise custom of electing their bishops.

However, the priest-magistrates of Athens can be criticized to have established a tribunal charged with prosecuting what was called the crimes of impiety, and one understands to what deplorable abuses The existence of such a tribunal could give rise to... Happy- his mission was limited to giving instructions against the accused; the senate and the people pronounced, as follows results from the trial brought against Alcibrade and his friends who had played the Eleusinian ceremonies in an orgy.

The great men of Greece paid a splendid tribute both to the philosophy taught in the Masonic association,

From the earliest antiquity, says Pausanias, who was initiated, and who often stops in the middle of his stories, admitting that he doesn't have the The Greeks, having the right to say more, considered the mysteries of Eleusis as the most suitable place to carry the men my to piety (1).

Aristotle regards them as the most precious of institutions religious, and notes that they were called the mysteries par excellence; the temple of Eleusis was, in the eyes of the Greeks, the sanctuary of all the earth.

Isocrates revealed the thought of the immortality of the soul which was there professed: those who have the good fortune to be admitted to the mysteries carry away in dying sweet hopes for eternity (2).

Aristides transforms this hope into a certainty: The mysteries, he said, they not only provide us with consolation in life present, means of freeing ourselves from the burden of our ills,

Sr hre Fe EL

(1) Pausanias, Description of Phocis.

(2) Isocratic, Pancyyrics.

ee meme tue amer

To up qq

ee Rs nn -e + 0e 2 nec

600

4

4

4

!

0

$

he

,

150 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

but also the precious advantage of passing after death to a state happier.

Long before them, Homer had said: Ceres entrusts Triptolemus, to Polyxena, to Dorle, the sacred mysteries that it is not permitted nor to penetrate, nor to reveal; the fear of the gods must restrain our voice. Happy is he among mortals who witnessed these mysteries! But he who is not initiated, who does not take part in the rites death (1).

Plato lived in the union of politics and philosophy the only remedy for the ills that plagued the states, as well as for those of all humankind (2). This thought was that of the societies secrets that the Greek philosopher merely reproduced, that who had led the Egyptian priests; the initiates into the mysteries in Greece they adopted it as a principle, but implemented it in a more complete manner, and raised from that moment a one of the most serious and important questions in order policy.

Moses, for his part, applied himself to the government of his nation the principles drawn from the temple, along with Orpheus civilized the Pelasgians, and this moment must be marked in history. history of humanity as one of its great epochs; it is a era of intellectual and political emancipation. Of these two men— my so different from each other, and yet which work together same goal, as if obeying a mysterious decree from the Provi— one adorns himself with the charms of poetry; the lyre is his secret. Tre, the beautiful ideal sound; the charm of his voice attracts, then his speech captive, and he addresses the intelligence that had lain dormant until— there, and which he seems to be causing to blossom among the barbarians of whom he is— Louré; it is a true creation of the mind.

Moses, on the contrary, presents himself as the liberator of a a people enslaved and enraged by degrading captivity, of virtue

- (1) Homer in Hymn to Ceres,
- (2) Plato, Republic, Book V.

OF FREEMASONRY. 151

which he doubts, and which he believes useful to frighten. A poet too, but A poet as grand as the desert, as harsh as its mountains As severe as the destinies of his people, he always has the threat on his lips. He hardly ever speaks of love, and when he does, it is of God's love. only; no sweet accents, nothing to touch the heart, everything it speaks to the mind, and if it captures the imagination, it is through Terrible images.

We saw, in the first chapter of this work, the Freemasonry, after having proclaimed the existence of a God unique, architect of worlds, immediately report his pen— directed towards man, dedicated to his moral and material improvement rielle his constant efforts, demanding laws for him in in harmony with the grandeur of its mission; this trend will is not a punishment, but a goal; the existence of peoples on The earth is not the punishment for a fault, for a fall, it is a nobler, more worthy destination; they must subdue the land and reign there (1). He gives the law, and the precepts which he will subject All of this primitive idea will stem from the nation's sanction.

Valmiki had made men equal at the moment of creation. Manu, the first legislator of inequality of conditions, the the first representative of the patrician element, distributes them in Castes by having them born successively from the head, the arm, the the thigh, from the foot of his god (2). Moses clearly returns to Valmiki's principles, and, so that error cannot occur To reproduce, Jehovah creates only one man. Why the race Did humanity emerge from a single man and not from several? Jewish doctors ask. If man was created unique, they reply, it is in the future interest of general peace, and in order to that no one can say to another: I am of a nobler race than you (3). 11 It was impossible to pose the thought more radically of equality proclaimed by the first initiates.

This line of thought will be pursued in its application to legislation:

(1) Salvador, Jesus Christ and his doctrine, 1. 1, p. 71,

(2) See our second chapter.

(3) Mischna, De Synedriis, t. IV, chap. IV.

ms

+ mm

os oo —

1592 PHILOSOPHICAL STORIES

This establishes, in effect, as superior to any person, to every class, to every public authority, a moral being, always present, from which all individualities emanate, in which all are absorbed, THE PEOPLE (1).

The law is one, equal for all. Oh, aggregation! You will only have one same law, same right, same regulation, same justice affiliated or not. You and he will be equal before your God, and you

You shall love him as yourselves; for you too were strangers
in Egypt, and I, Jehovah, am your Elohim (2).

No one will have the right to change the law at will, according to their whim.
according to his personal views; made by the nation's delegates,
It is mandatory for everyone (3).

In all societies, whatever their form, there are magistrates
They must ensure the enforcement of laws, carry out the administration administration of justice, tax collection, recruitment of the army, in the census of citizens, finally fulfill the duties that any gathering of men requires. Moses knew with what Greed drives ambitious people to vie for public office, com-
how they were pressuring the people who had no participation in their nomination, nor influence in their choice; they had seen them much more eager to seek the favor of princes than to to render good and prompt justice, he established the free provision of charges; the people were sovereign, it belongs to them
as such the appointment of civil servants: "Take," he said,
"In your tribes, there are learned, prudent, and respected men,"
"I will put them in charge of you. You will appoint judges and..."
"Men of authority in all your tribes (4)."

We must provide these people with the means of subsistence, the

(1) Salvador, Jesus Christ and his doctrine, vol. 1, p. 77.

(2) © congregatio! statutum unum vobis et peregrino peregrinanti.... Your sicut, sic peregrinus erit ad faciem Jehovah; lex una, iudicium unum erit vobis et peregrino. If habitaverit advena in terrd vestrd et moratus fuerit inter vos, sit inter vos quusi indigena; and diligetis eum quasi vosmetipsos. Fuistis enim and your adrenaline on earth
Ægypti. Ego Jehorvah Elohim tuus. (Vuicate)

(3) To Senatu ccreditur lex omni Israeli. Mischna, De Synedriis, chap. x.

(4) Deuteronomy.

ec ee
See

OF FREEMASONRY. 155

L

The Promised Land is divided in advance between the Hebrews and: the

of functions, of origin: "You will divide the land by lot by »families and by tribes, so that one gives a more
"A large portion to those who are more numerous, and a
"less to those who will be fewer in number (1)." That is what Moses wants; the prophet will later add: "In each tribe
"Where there is an angel, you shall give him his portion, God has..."
"said (2). p Fe. +

The Hebrews are free, but the ambitions that will emerge, preventing the nation from falling asleep in indifference which allows tyranny to take root and grow; Moses writes this principle: "There is no people except where there is a law, and for

"To give birth to law, there must be a general will, an assembly-

"General information freely and clearly explained."

The Hebrews are equal: the earth is divided among all; the Work is compulsory in Rome for everyone; everyone is required to work from the age of twenty years.

Liberty and legality are therefore proclaimed; the Decalogue is a code of brotherhood, and for the first time the three terms of the Masonic mottos are clearly enshrined in the laws of a a people whose leader drew his inspiration from among the initiates.

It is important, in order to ensure the preservation of these laws, as much as
This is humanly possible, to give them popular sanctionlaire: surrounded by seventy elders forming the provisional senate, Moses appeared before the Hebrews and explained to them the words of Jehovah, and the Hebrews, after having listened attentively,
They unanimously replied: We will execute them!

Immediately Moses wrote these laws in a book, then, having drawn up at the foot of Mount Sinai, an altar made of twelve stones to represent the twelve tribes, he took the book, read it again, and proclaimed it.
sea before all the people, word for word, and the people cried out:
We will obey this law (5)!

- (1) Numbers.
- (2) Ezekiel.
- (3) Exodus.

pe

On only one point does Moses depart from Masonic precepts, of the principle proclaimed by Buddha in the reform, in the revolution the solution he implemented, adopted by Orpheus to whom it had been transmitted by Egyptians; it seems that man can never free himself completely of his earthly nature, that he must always pay a tribute to humanity, as a token of its weakness. In its struggle Buddha had directly attacked the caste system, all of a sudden on the edge, the most influential of all because of her intelligence, the most powerful in the moral order, and he had achieved a true conquest by making the priesthood accessible to all; there was no longer of intermediary between man and God, and, if all were equal before the divinity, how much more should they be before the princes, before the law.

What are we talking about regarding the priestly class of Egypt! The initiation He comes to break down all barriers; the god chooses his priests from among all the followers; he does more, foreseeing, across future centuries, what will the royalty of the future be like, he distributes to the neophytes the various degrees of affiliation, the various functions of the sanctuary, because of their level of intelligence.

Moses, in this respect, took a step backward by consecrating especially to the worship of the tribe of Levi, by endowing it with the privilege priestly to the exclusion of others. In vain, to mitigate the danger of a disposition out of harmony with the rest of its code, he subjected the priests to the common law; in vain he wished that their leader was appointed by the senate and confirmed by the people: a powerless palliative to a fatal return to the castes of Manu, of an aberration that had the saddest results!

The desire to preserve in all its purity, in all its integrity, religious unity, by placing it under the protection of a can the legislator justify this tribe being scattered throughout the others? Hebrew of this derogation from one of the most important principles of initiation? If the lighthearted nature of this people, which was not still regenerated, which the memories of Egypt carried away still worshipping idols, inspired serious fears and legitimate to Moses, the preventive measure he adopted was unsuccessful; Events proved him wrong; the masses did not were neither more faithful to Jehovah, nor more devoted to worship

don't —

eq OF THIS

preserved by a privileged tribe; they were seen wandering from one altar to another. the other, denying what they had adored, adoring what they had denied, and the institution of Levi was nothing but an unfortunate deviation from Buddhist reform.

Once again, the insiders voiced a protest. powerful, and the men who, since Moses, held the first rank among the Hebrews, their public orators, called prophets. Your people often speak out against the creation of a priestly caste. on which they cast the most serious accusations, they call the most terrible anathemas; Jeremiah himself, although he appeared attached to this favored tribe, he voiced his complaints against the Levites (1), and all those resounding voices that thunder over Israel sufficiently demonstrate how many men rejected the character exclusive rights granted to a family and they asserted the principle established by Buddha.

This is the only exception to which he can be reproached; the Egyptian initiates rejected the dogma of fatalism accepted by the ignorant masses, who in this way he shackles his freedom, his initiative, and denies his responsibility; Hebrew also rejects it.

With Moses, the symbol of the struggling light appears once again. against darkness, as he appears on another earth with Orpheus; thus, Jehovah reveals himself for the first time to the pastor of Jethro's flock in a burning bush that burns and does not. It does not consume (2). When the fugitive captives take up arms from land of Egypt (3), the Lord goes before them, during the night, in a pillar of fire, so that they do not stop; it is still at amidst the lightning of Sinai, he gives the law to his people.

We have seen, we have understood Moses' political thought; also for a long time it will prevail, that the Hebrew republic will be able to maintain itself, the people of Israel will resist the enemies who they surround it on all sides and besiege the ramparts of its cities; He will retain his nationality amidst the attacks that... threaten a new form of slavery. But division will arise; the

(1) Jeremiah, chapter 1, XIX, etc.

(2) Exodus, chapter II.

(5) Ibid., chap. XIII.

of the nation; this will divide into two kingdoms, it will have two capitals, two kings; a portion of the people trampled underfoot National unity is at their feet, while the other crowd is focused on religious unity. Both succumbed to wars with their neighbors; the The people of Israel are transported out of their homeland, into captivity. Babylon begins; it will have only a passing independence. conquered in a desperate struggle, until finally he is swept away in the irresistible torrent of the Roman Empire! Thus, Three phases mark its existence: under the government Under a democratic state, it is powerful; under a king, it is oppressed; under Two kings, he is enslaved.

In the early days following the Exodus from Egypt, we We find few traces of particular societies among the Hebrews; One can barely glimpse a distant glimmer, shining along a path, and indicating the school of the Essenes. What would have been the action of the societies when the secret doctrine had become general law had become the basis of the national code? Joint efforts should have aimed to preserve it, and for that there was no need of symbols, because religious thought had become something else entirely. more lucid than in Egypt and Greece. Moreover, the people all whole, by receiving and swearing to his law, had received initiation; so much that he will be faithful to the sworn oath, that he will obey the pact made between him And Moses, in the name of the creator of the worlds, no underground temple will not open, no incense will rise secretly to the throne of God, the word will not veil its brilliance between the walls of a In the narrow enclosure, the sacrifice will take place in broad daylight, the voices of a A people will sing the sacred hymn at the foot and on the slopes from a mountain that will serve as an altar. But when this people has He forgot his god, when he had married the daughters of the vain nations— cues and adopted their idols, when kings have replaced the democratic magistrates and that Solomon will have built a temple to the Most High, who had the whole land as his temple, we we will see the emergence of powerful societies that will restart the struggle in the name of independence and in the name of ideas.

But before developing their constitutions, the thought that...

OF FREEMASONRY. 197

serving as a guide, let's pause for a moment to consider the construction of the Solomon's Temple, the general date adopted by Freemasonry modern, which borrowed its second grade, and gave to hero of Egyptian myth, origin of the third grade, the name of one of the builders of this temple.

At mm +

158 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

CHAPTER SIX.

Temple of Solomon; new date for Freemasonry. – The Jewish temple is the temple of initiation; it resembles that of the sun – The seven branches of the candelabrum. – The twelve drinking from the brazen sea. – The two columns. – Steps of the temple; grade of companion. – Myth of Hiram; Master's degree. – The primitive symbol of Osiris, of Eleusis is complemented by Hiram. In addition to its great significance in the struggle of light and darkness, it represented marriage in Egypt, family in Greece, it will represent in Judea the association, and thus encompass a magnificent trinity. – Guilds. – Secret societies. of the Hebrews. – Mysteries among the Romans. – Christianity; he proclaims the thought of secret.

around the 9th century BC Christian, a little less than five hundred years after the release of Egypt, and fifty before
 the era in which we place
 generally the birth of Homer, while Orpheus' institutions had not yet
 come. a. were modified by the proclamation of new gods, Solomon arrived amidst the inflamed civil wars
 a. parses brothers, on the throne of David, and was preparing to enhance the brilliance of initiation through the building of the famous temple to which he gave his name. In the centuries–
 In previous times, the Hebrew people had not distinguished themselves by their wealth and magnificence, neither by its riches, nor by manifesta-artistic tions. Inevitably brought back by his situation particularly special, due to the battles in which he was constantly engaged.
 On the positive side of life, he seemed trapped in an intellectual sphere.
 a rather narrow readership, and, with the exception of its literature, religious and political at the same time, the arts of the imagination had cast upon him little brilliance. David transformed it, and under Solomon its conquests of this kind had been quick and large.

|

ù
C-
THE

(ill

2)
| -

This

j

AA D,

LS
HAS
|

.

NEITHER

ER
172 U -

HAS RS

mm me

OF FREEMASONRY. 159

If we refer to the descriptions of the temple and the ornaments-splendor, what sumptuous extravagance in the construction of the House of Jehovah! Should we believe in this army of seventy? a thousand workers responsible for transporting materials, to the four-twenty thousand carpenters busy cutting timber, at thirty a thousand masons who laid the stones, hewn from afar and brought on carts, to those golden rings holding the curtain laden with embroideries that concealed the tabernacle, to those heavy candlesticks, those hanging lamps, these finely carved censers, these elegant bowls, these basins, all carved from gold; these doors rolling on golden hinges, to these palm fronds, these blooming flowers, these grand figures of cherubs, all things carved in the cedars that reve-were the walls covered and also covered with gold (1)?

What treasures would have sufficed for these fantastic creations? What
The spoils of vanquished nations should have been piled up! What taxes!
it would have been essential to levy a tax on the people, and that he had The luxury bestowed upon the dwelling of his god was dearly paid for! Let us leave these exaggerations of the Bible, its commentators, and perhaps also to the vanity of national historians; the importance of the temple is not for us in its richness, but in its foundation
even.

The Masonic origin of this temple is revealed in all its parts; everything is borrowed from previous ages, from the mysteries ancient; the magnificence of Thebes and Memphis will reproduced in Judea, to the glory of the Great Architect of the Universe.
Everything in the construction of this temple relates to the system of the world, represents its order and harmony, offers the Pictures. The sun, the moon, the planets, the zodiac, the various elements, and finally time itself, in which everything moves, have their emblems displayed for the nation to see, this great initiate.
The temple, in its details, resembles the temple of the sun; the
The seven branches of the candelabra represent the seven planets, on the
the very arrangement of which is regulated that of the branches (2);

(4) Kings, book 1, chapter VI, chapter 11. Joseph, History of the Jews.
(2, Clement of Alexandria.

160 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the twelve bulls drinking from the brazen sea, and lined up three at a time, so as to form four groups that watch
The four cardinal points are the emblem of the twelve months and of the four seasons composing the unchanging year of which this bronze is the image. At the four sides of this base formed by the groups
The four figures of the zodiac are sculpted, which fix the four points of the firmament: a lion, an ox, a man and a wolf tower. The two large cherub figures are the emblems with which time flies away, circulating in the zodiac (1).

Pontifical ornaments worn by priests in the grand ceremonies, one representing the earth, the other the sky, of which he borrowed the shade; the most important of all, at least which has most exercised the imagination of writers, the rational (2) is laden with precious stones, representing the heavenly Jerusalem, are the symbol of diffuse light in the zodiac, the same stones which elsewhere adorn the statue of Isis (3).

The lineage is obvious; it is the temple of Initiation that Solomon had it erected, as it was also the monument of political centralization.

Through a singular chain of events, the physical structure was to experience the strangest vicissitudes and disappear from the ground, while the intellectual edifice, which was linked to the first, which borrowing a new date from him, was instead going to strengthen itself.

The Temple in Jerusalem was indeed alternately filled and abandoned given by the fickle crowd of Hebrews; a king of Egypt plundered; a king of Israel found that the example deserved to be followed and Pimite; another closed the doors and called other deities on other altars. Hezekiah restored its splendor for a time, but His son Manasseh broke down the tabernacle of Jehovah. Then, after After four centuries of existence and varying fortunes, it collapses in

(1) Philo and Clement of Alexandria.

(2) The rational is a square piece of cloth with which the Jewish priest adorns himself in ceremonies. Each of the twelve precious stones that were set there bore engraved the name of one of the twelve tribes of Israel. Those who appreciate the marvelous gift of pronouncing oracles, of casting flames.

(5) Dupuis, Origin of Cults.

OF FREEMASONRY. 161

the fire started by the Babylonian army. Rebuilt after the captivity, having become both temple and fortress, it was overthrown by razed to the ground on August 10, 71 AD by the army of Titus. On its ruins other sanctuaries were built, including a tower at tower churches and mosques, depending on which dominates in Jerusalem fortune of the East or that of the West.

Let us not seek to determine the number of workers employed in the construction of the temple, that could not have any interest neither in Freemasonry nor in science; this number and these workers would gather, according to their type of work, to receive their salary, near the two columns placed one at one to the north, the other to the south, that is to say, to the right and left of the door of the main one of the temple. The one on the right was named Jakin, the one on the left Boaz (1), or Booz; which became a symbol that has been perpetuated—killed, they are now reproduced at the door of every temple. elements of modern Freemasonry.

Not all the workers were Hebrews, a large number had come from Tyre, affiliated with the mysteries that for a long time had entered their homeland as a result of frequent reports established between her and Egypt; already, united in association, they had erected other temples, and they offered the first example of these large workers' corporations that we will find in the Middle Ages, doing identical work, and which will come down to us, without too much alteration.

In the construction of the temple, they were necessarily separated in groups, according to the nature of the work, divided into carpentry third parties, stonecutters, masons, these various subdivided groups themselves as apprentices, journeymen, masters, and they had to recognize signs and words which, according to opinion In general, they are still the same among us.

For the first time we glimpse the origin of the second grade of current Freemasonry, which until this time had slipped away from view. According to the tradition of the symbol, the companions could not enter the interior of the sanctuary,

(D) Kings, Book I,

162 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

reserved for masters, and it is for the construction of the five degrees exteriors of the temple to which their 'grade' is attached today. Each of the tools and materials they used received a meaning, and those stages they necessarily had to pass through to reach the peristyle became an allegory.

The raw materials are scattered in front of the companions, and for To work them, they are given the chisel, the mallet, the trowel, the ruler, lever, square and compass; chisel and mallet which they cut, the trowel that cements, the ruler that directs, the lever that lifts the set square and compass which determine the proportions, the square that levels all the parts; with the help of these instruments, They obtain the cubic stone from the rough stone, and they build—feel the steps of the temple.

sixth COURAGE, the fourth Prudence, the fifth Awakened De HUMANITY. Through this gradation, the companions will ascend until-than to the two columns Jakin and Boaz.

But here we must leave the realm of material ideas and rise above them.
higher up in a more fertile and expansive region. The ordeal
The journeyman's initiation is the second rite that the initiate must undergo before...
enter the temple where he will be taught the great myth of Hiram, that is to say the thought of initiation; the first condition-tion is intelligence, because Freemasonry does not want blind soldiers, who march when they are told: March!
who strike if you tell them: Strike! All his followers have a mission to be accomplished, but they must understand it and they
They should know for sure whether they want to dedicate themselves to it. It's not fanaticism
What we seek to develop in them is a sense of duty.
based on reason.

The second requirement is integrity. No detours.
born, no acts that conscience can condemn; the goal is Noble and great, one must walk towards him without ulterior motives.
nobly and grandly. No capitulations with the cons-Cince, no mental restrictions; be fair, be rights, or don't go any further: Freemasonry doesn't want of triumphs bought by illicit means. Uprightness in the Private life, integrity in public life, that must be the rule.

OF FREEMASONRY. |

invariable for the initiate on all occasions, in all the circumstances.

The third condition is courage; why would anyone conceal-
We warn the followers of the dangers they may face, the hatreds they will raise the issue of persecution that may have to be faced?
In the struggle, always fierce, sometimes bloody, that they will have to
To support them, courage is essential; they will leave enough of martyrs on the road.

Prudence is the fourth condition that was imposed on them; if Courage is always necessary, but prudence is no less so.
Because, if one has the right to gamble with one's rest, one's fortune, one's life,
One cannot, without being guilty, compromise peace and quiet.
fortune, the lives of his brothers. Freemasonry does not want of boasting, of useless or vain displays; she has need for that thoughtful courage that always goes to the intended goal, but who doesn't rush headlong into crazy ventures. So nurture the idea, always, tirelessly; when the time is right Come, rise up to make her triumph; but do not sound the bells of
The trumpet before its time!

The fifth required condition of a companion is love of humanity; this is not the beginning of the edifice, it is the last of the five symbolic degrees he must build. Love of Humanity! It is indeed to humanity that everything must ultimately lead. Back Selfishness sets aside personality thoughts! The Freemason must bring everything back to the general interest. He was told this during his initiation, when he saw the swords glimmering, that he must be... days quick to rush to the aid of his brothers, as he would always find them. Ready to defend him in peril; they would find him learns here that every individual feeling must be absorbed into love for humanity, that the happiness of humanity is the goal constant efforts of the Freemason.

He will finally touch the temple columns, but 1] still has to build the paving that will cover the space between them and the last degree; this pavement is a mosaic made of small cubes and cement, and this aggregation, which becomes unalterable, which will defy the ravages of time, which will withstand the centuries, teach him that Union alone will give it duration. He arrived between the two columns, Jakin which means Strength, Booz which means the srasiliré. It is upon them that the pediment of the immaterial temple rests that the A Freemason must strive to build, and he will not complete, if he does not contribute His work demonstrates intelligence, integrity, courage, and prudence. and love for humanity.

104 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Such is the symbol of the companion; it will be completed in the temple, when, his trials completed, he will be able to enter it and to witness the bloody drama of Hiram.

Osiris, murdered by Typhon and his conspirators, was found by Isis. then brought back to life, he was, in Egypt, the hero of initiation; he She was replaced in the Greek mysteries by Ceres; the hero will change the name once again; the myth will get closer to the primary tradition which cannot be ignored in its transformation information, but it will be much greater; it is the social drama which, for the first time, will unfold clearly. This modification- tion of mysterious thought, or rather this complement of the thought which until now could not be fully understood under the veils with which the initiated writers surrounded him, perhaps officiates the most powerful interest that initiation has yet presented.

Solomon had asked Hiram, king of Tyre, who had been the friend from his father, wood from Lebanon to build the temple, and he had said: Send me now some man who understands to work in gold, silver, bronze, iron, scarlet, crimson and purple, and who knows how to engrave, so that he may be with

The king sent him a skilled man bearing the same name as he, who built with Solomon the house of Jehovah (2).

The architect who directed the works was therefore Hiram, according to Some, Adonhiram according to others (3). He drew the designs, followed

(1) Chronicles, book U, chapter II.

(2) Id., id., chap. and IV. Kings, book. I, chap. VII.

(3) The details given in the first book of Kings and in the second of Chronicles do indeed seem to imply that the director of works at the temple of Solomon was Hiram; the name Adonhiram is also found in the Bible. as an officer in the conscription of the thirty thousand workers that Solomon raised from (Book 1, Chapter Y.)

Men who wanted to divert Freemasonry from its path, to occupy it with These trivialities, intended to deceive her about her goal, have sparked lively discussion

om D moon

OF THE FRENCH NATIONALITY. 165

the execution of the plans, imprinted order and activity everywhere, made to cut wood, stone, gold, silver, bronze, iron, ensured that the workers were paid regularly, had For them, the care of a father was essential, and they were loved by him. However, three bad companions, jealous of both his talent and his authority, convinced, like all proud ignoramuses, that their science equaled his, aspiring to replace him in the management of the workshops, to share the power he wielded, formed a plan to wrest from him the master's word, that is to say—to say the secret word by which the masters recognized each other them, as if the password provided the missing knowledge, and and then assassinate him.

One day they positioned themselves at the three gates of the temple and waited—rent the passage of Hiram; the master appeared at the eastern gate; One of the assassins asked him for his master's word, and, on his Refusal, he struck him with his mallet; Hiram fled, pursued by the assassin, towards the south gate, where a second companion knocked again; he was still able to reach the door of the west—tooth, where the first two followed him, and where the third companion—Gnon laid him at his feet with a blow to the head from his mallet. Three assassins then jumped on him and covered his face. veiled in black, they carried him far away during the night, the neck—they fell into a ditch, covered it with dead leaves, and planted—to recognize the location and to know if the body would be discovered.

The next day, the workers waited in vain for their master. Then, filled with worry, they searched for him, and, unable to find him to find, began to run in all directions, calling and crying, and The assassins, combining hypocrisy with crime, mixed their tears and their cries mingled with the cries and tears of the crowd. The workers, increasingly saddened, then designated nine of them to know if the architect of the temple, the master of the works, was named Hiram o1: Adonhiram; there is no kind of effort that has not been made to divide the workshops on th Not an important point, the myth is accepted everywhere, and therefore it is at least It is childish to argue over two more or fewer syllables in the name of the symbolic hero. sensible people understand us too well for us to have We need not elaborate further on this subject.

In

+ -

{66 | . PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

They wanted to continue the research, but the frosts, the PAues, The darkness halted their steps.

However, the three bad companions had shown up to succeed the master in the conduct of the works; rejected Some, welcomed by others, had created disorder to replace the activity everywhere. However, most of the workers had not lost all hope; since Hiram was no longer at their heads, his absence had left such a great void, the lack of a skillful management had led to so many mistakes and errors that they understood that the master was one of those intelligences destined to lead men, and whose greatness, elevation, are They appreciated them especially when they missed them. They felt, at amidst the chaos, they no longer had a guide, no flame- beautiful; in the exaltation of despair, Hiram appeared to them spirit as a superior being, and they began to shout: There is not not dead, he is the god of light and truth, and he cannot not to die! The nine delegated companions actively continued- their search; they arrived in a deserted and secluded place; the acacia branch, that branch of the initiates, attracted their gaze; One of them reached for it, and it bowed under the pressure; he They lifted it out of the ground; they then realized that it had no roots, an involuntary shiver ran through their limbs, ct, driven by a sad premonition, they cried out: It is there

They trembled as they parted the dead leaves, uncovered Hiram remained motionless and made a gesture of terror... One one of them, however, tried to lift him, and, as the arm he had seized it, it was slipping from his hands; in his confusion, he believed that he detached itself from the body, and cried out: M... B...! The flesh is leaving the bones!

The companions' premonition had not deceived them:
Hiram, stunned by the blows he had received, had fallen bloody glant, but he was not dead; rest had healed his wounds.
He stood up and said to his companions: Do not weep anymore, you have me found... and his face became radiant like the sun. He
He went towards the temple, where all the workers recognized him, greeted him with cheers, crowned him with flowers, burned
They sold perfumes and swore never to have another guide.

AANOUIAN ZIAVAN SN

HAS
\

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

mm —

OF FREEMASONRY. 167

The master, in turn, promised to complete the sanctuary with them.
of Jehovah, the Great Architect of the universe, and the workers
they clapped their hands.

Such is the Hebrew myth in its grandeur, imbued with of touching simplicity. By referring back to the origin of the mysteries-res, one thinks one senses a ray of Indian and Persian poetry; one recognizes that Master Hiram is the Egyptian Osiris, the Proserpine Greek; we follow the symbol, always the same in its transformations successive matations. The three bad companions who strike Hiram, cover him with a veil, hide him from view under
The fallen leaves from the trees indicate the three winter months.
during which the sun moves away, like the nine companions sent to search for him, who bring him back, and crown him with flowers, represent the other months of the year. The work has been sustained.

of the dead and resurrected god, of the struggle between darkness and the light, of the sun that disappears only to return. The Hebrew myth does not include the poetic details of the Egyptian myth, the grace and the sentiment of that of Eleusis; it is severe and serious as the people among whom it originates; but it contains a broader, more complete thought, a social thought that manifested for the first time in the mysteries with a clarity, a precision previously unknown. It is a statement of a revelation that can be heard between the columns of the temple of Jerusalem, and whose echo will resound in future ages; it is a flag raised over the immaterial temple of Freemasonry; when, of all the immense riches amassed by Solomon in the house of Jehovah, nothing will remain but a vague and a distant memory, when even its ruins have disappeared. swept away to dust by the feet of conquerors, we will rediscover, more fruitful than treasures, this thought always vibrant; larger than pilasters, higher than pediments, this flag still flying!

Let us explain this profound thought of the Hebrew symbol which is became ours. In Egypt, when Osiris disappeared, imprisoned in the tomb where Typhon threw him, Isis alone will ask again to search for the husband abducted from his love. In Greece, when the king

%
S ee Re ee ms

168 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

dark kingdoms led the enraptured Proserpine into the midst of her young playmates, Ceres is still alone in traversing the spaces to find his daughter; although they proclaim it thus One is the law of marriage, the other that of the family; they have not However, both were isolated actions. It was already, we As we have said, a great conquest was achieved over barbarism, which double proclamation of the myth which had placed under the aegis of heaven Marriage and family; but the scene will change, the horizon to expand; civilization will take a new step, and it is to the secret doctrine, to which Freemasonry it will still owe it. Marriage and family rest on solid foundations; Moses has proclaimed Island of Work as a general law, as an obligation imposed on all men, and, this is the important point, the hero of The symbol modified by insiders is a worker, a laborer; A foreman, a man of intelligence and hard work.

Osiris was a warrior, a hero; Proserpine a goddess, daughter of Jupiter, wife of Pluto. Away with the sword, away with these chariots! Winged creatures flying on the clouds! Behind this intervening Mercury To mislead Ceres! There's no longer any need to resort to those dynasties. of princes and gods who reign over the world; Hiram is a an artist, an architect, a metal founder, a dyer; he Seriously, he draws, he works with gold, silver, bronze, iron; he makes scarlet, crimson; in short, the common man, the ple- Beia replaced the upper castes and Olympus itself. What a transformation! What deeper thought could there be? offered to the serious studies of the future! Glory be to you! You, ancient mysteries, who produced it and cast it into the earth! You, new mysteries, who have preserved it!

There is another, no less significant, meaning in the symbol. important, no less fruitful, which will have in the future a equal power, which opens a new path for humanity con- damned at work. We saw the isolated action of the wife, of The mother, tearfully searching for the hero she loves, The other, the young girl, captivated by his tenderness; now comes the action. simultaneous, general, of a workers' association who have Having lost their leader, both their guide and their light, they strive to find the one who led them. No more long-distance races. where the woman ventures out alone with profound devotion, under the aegis of his love! No more stopping by a fountain where the The woman, though exhausted by fatigue, had lost none of her grace. No more stays in royal palaces where one is given to travel Having a child to raise! Now everything is simple, modest. as befits working men. The first research- The workers' efforts are unsuccessful; the association delegates nine of its members to continue the work that matters to everyone, which of interest to all initiates, and when the master was found, returned to life, his first words" were these: "You had left me "Alone, and the wicked struck me down (1)." Profound words which seems to complete the symbol.

RE Re Re

FREEMASONRY. 161

We are entering a new world, it is a sphere completely different from those we had experienced up to that point Let us now explore. Farewell to the poetic images, the moving paintings of marital pain, of anxiety Kindergarten! Social thinking has replaced feeling. How many Young women had shed tears over Osiris's passion. on the unfortunate Isis traversing the banks of the Nile, sounding the beloved, removing the tree that had enveloped the grave where he rested

What tender interest did not inspire the unfortunate wife, when, Transformed into a dove, she would flutter around this tree which, having become a column, supported the palace's paneling! How many tears again, as she gathered the scattered members of the one she loved]

The wives pitied Isis, the mothers wept for the torments of Ceres calling for her daughter, questioning the heavens, the earth, waters, and the dark abysses of the kingdom of darkness!
How many, a few centuries later, will be moved by the fate of Mary collapsed at the foot of the Calvary cross!

The Hebrew myth renounces all these means of charm, to move; he is severe, and neglects to speak to the heart, so as not to

(1) Master's degree notebook.

12

even

has

TR 0 ne sem one (pe = © nn, ne RE pm pm

170 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

to appeal only to reason; the genius of Moses seems to be reflected in it, there to relive.

We heard the astrological explanation of the symbol of Hiram; ask modern Freemasons what they are in
In reality, the three bad companions who wanted to assassinate the Master, they will answer you what they tell all initiates:
Hiram is the eternal reason from which justice and freedom; the three companions are anorance, liar and PanBirion; the nine companions who go in search of the master
These are the virtues, study, and science that serve and honor
humanity (1). |

Ambition drove the plot; lies struck first.
Ignorance cast a veil over the master's head; then all three tried to train the workers, that is to say the men, and All misfortunes came to afflict humanity. The lie denied the
the right of all to liberty, preached bad doctrines, made trouble in relationships; ambition, relying on it, broke This freedom, which he undermined, established the despotism from which were born the misery, slavery, proscriptions, religious intolerance which has shed so much blood, and ignorance, in turn, became its accomplice ardent, armed with the sword, marching at his command, slaughtering those that she pointed out to his blind fury; by turns he fell asleep in a stupid indifference that she decorated with the name of tranquility and rest; tranquility of death, rest of the grave!

We're skipping these details, because we too, like the initiates who have dealt with the ancient mysteries, we do not believe It's useful to write everything down. What we've said will suffice.
to understand that Freemasonry is a perpetual struggle against ambition, lies, and ignorance; let no one be astonished then the number of enemies she had to fight at all the eras (2).

(4) Master's degree notebook.

(2) The various journeyman societies that exist in France trace back their origin in the construction of Solomon's Temple; most of them, all Perhaps, we don't know, they adopted the myth of Hiram, although they give themselves

OF FREEMASONRY. 171

With the exception of the Essenes, secret societies had had had little influence until then; but after the division of the Hebrews in two kingdoms, in the wars they waged against each other or that they had to defend against neighboring nations, during the Babylonian captivity, under the rule of various masters who
They fought over the land of Judea and took turns seizing it,
They gradually underwent significant development. Don't ask them not unity in the midst of this general conflagration, of these incessant struggles that shake the very soil of the homeland, threaten constantly threaten national independence, sometimes destroying it.
create opposing interests, change customs and worship itself
Even so; the idea of Jehovah, of a single God, will always shine forth upon it; the great Masonic principles will not be abandoned by none; but the means employed to achieve the application of these principles, in the deplorable circumstances in which the nation, will not be the same, in the sense that each, acting within a small circle, will focus more specifically on one or another point of general doctrine, and will limit its action to its application restricted.

The Pharisees strive to uphold the letter of the law, particular chiefs. Some of the stonemasons call themselves master's children

Father Soubise attributes to him a life and death quite similar to those of the latter. also employed in temple work, he is the patron saint of carpenters.

Almost all of them, as we have said, adopted the myth of Hiram; badly-
Fortunately, the meaning of this symbol, so grand, so profound, from which an era dates
This news for workers seems not to have been well understood by all those who have accepted; many saw in the symbolic murder a true event, a real crime which they attributed to one of the divisions of the journeyman's guild. One day when we:
Let us strive to make our companions understand that all men are brothers, that work being the general law, all have an equal right to work, and that a great and beautiful association could only be powerful and useful on the condition to renounce the hatreds that divide different societies, only on the condition of renounci forever, to the bloody struggles that dishonored them, it was clearly replied that the carpenters would never forgive the... (we believe we must
(to keep the name secret), that they would never fraternize with them, because they killed

This is what had been done with an admirable symbol; fortunately these ideas have modified today; the journeyman system has entered a path of reform, and this This remarkable progress is due in large part to the efforts and book of Mr. Agricol Partridge tree.

cn. en

se

– nee met ee in nn een eee for sale in

172 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the observation of religious practices, the doctrine of immortality of the soul; this society is animated above all by an ardent spirit of proselytizing towards foreigners, whom she initiates on a large scale number to its beliefs (1). It is a school that is both religious and a policy pursuing the triumph of the Jewish people

The Sadducees adhered much more closely to the spirit of the law than to external practices, and believe that it suffices for all the hopes. They do not admit the existence of spirits and of angels, which seems to them likely to lead to polytheism, no more than the individual perpetuity of souls; they reject energetically rejects fate, and proclaims the doctrine of perfechuman stability and human freedom.

The Zealots aim to shake off foreign oppression in whatever the price; purely philosophical questions seem to occupy them little; the nation is enslaved, they want

Dante, and they shed their blood to achieve triumph. To their advice, the first duty of men of energy and intelligence, It is about rebuilding the homeland; they will then see to throwing themselves into the field of metaphysical discussion. Whatever opinion one may have professed on human fraternity, one cannot ignore this that there is something great about giving freedom to one's country, about looking at this mission as the first of all.

The Therapists are the successors of the Indian monks, the predecessors of the Thebaid fathers; they are given over to life contemplative, rather useless to nations, and not attached to the Masonic tradition than by the absolute proscription of slavery.

Equality is the law of the Alexandrians; they seek to initiate the educated men from foreign nations, in order to spread everywhere and more promptly their doctrines. Questions of nationality or locality do not concern them, and, unlike in this respect the Zealous, they seem to consider all men as one the one and only family that they want to link to the thought of Moses. It is to men of this school that the version of the

(1) Salvador, Jesus Christ and his Doctrine, vol. 1, p. 109 et seq.

mo om mm MS ne CU qe om
nn

ER EEE

OF FREEMASONRY. 175

Septante (1). One of the heads of this great school, to which the Christianity was soon to borrow one of its most beautiful maxims, strives to combat the thoughts of false nobility which men boast of. Listen to his memorable words:
"Those who exalt nobility as a great good and as "A cause of great good, are strongly to be resumed, if they
"Men descended from illustrious parents are called nobles"
"or very rich. True distinction belongs only to the "People endowed with intelligence and justice, even if they
"born to enslaved parents, born in our homes, or purchased"
"Cash. The blind man, embarrassed by his..."
"His tongue, dried up by a long illness, he ever drew"
"part of the piercing eyes of his ancestors, of their eloquence or
"of their athletic strength? What about justice, temperance, the Would the public and private virtues of their ancestors serve the

'If it pleased God to give true nobility a form and

"a human voice, what would not be its speeches"

» tions (2)!

Elsewhere, he proclaims the good that equality brings: "Life

"The longest life of a man would not be enough to tell the story of the

"The benefits of equality. It is the source of justice; it produces"

"in the cities the best and most legitimate form of » republic, democracy or administration by the people;

* It gives strength to bodies, courage to souls (5).

We believe we hear in these heirs of initiation, in these apostles of the law of the temple, the philosophers of the eighteenth century; the thought is the same, only the eras are distant,

but identical needs bring them closer together and confuse them.

Among the political and religious societies of the Hebrews who shone with some brilliance during the five centuries of fighting,

pains and enslavement that preceded the birth of Jesus,

(1) Joseph, Jewish Antiquities. Ihlion, On the Life of Moses. Salvador, Jesus Christ and his Doctrine.

(2) Philon, Fifth on Nobility.

(3) Philo, On the Creation of the Principle.

en me nee ee pee 2e

174 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

It is especially important to distinguish that of the Essenes; it must ins-

indeed, to arouse the keenest interest in the socialists, to whom she offers a subject for observation through the way in which she applied the principles of initiation. She was born in the midst of war, while the Syrians invaded the soil of Judea (1), pillaging its temples imposed beliefs on the people by force of arms that Men never openly accept the victor.

wanting to submit neither to the laws nor to the gods of a foreign land, several

Families sought shelter in the steep mountains,

took refuge in the desert, transported their altars there,

established a form of government suited to their customs,

to their customs, to their needs. It wasn't just equality political, but also the civil equality that they proclaimed between them; in a necessarily restricted society, always threatened by the sword of the conqueror who sought to break all resistance, peril made a law of community property for them, and they adopted- They were silent. The precepts of the secret doctrine imposed on initiates the obligation to help each other on all occasions where they have they needed each other; in their mountains where they were entrenched against the enemy, they wanted this law to be never raped, and this thought led them to create an interest common.

This institution persisted after the war that had created it to blossom, through the vicissitudes that marked the destiny of Hebrew people; the Essenes showed themselves in the city what they had been in the desert. Work and mutual charity were their rule; they disapproved of all forms of servitude, condemning in principle of all combat, and yet, putting the independence of the homeland above philosophical theories, they ran to the defense of the threatened country, and their indomitable courage will not not denied for a moment in the fight against the Romans (2). Well Although they were numerous, they retained their original law (3).

(1) Salvador, Jesus Christ and his Dogtrine, vol. 1, p. 129.

(2) Salvador, Jesus Christ and his Doctrine, t. 1, p. 122.

(3) Joseph, Jewish Wars. Anyone who wanted to become a member of

<< m #

Rs to oo 9 Eee COR: CR <a de en ee de qe mean That

rm 0

OF FREEMASONRY.

The Essenes were distinguished by their loyalty to their least commitment, so they regarded oaths as useless and | did they never do so; the neophytes themselves, on the day of their initiation, they merely declared aloud their desire to to participate in the institution. They promised not to harm anyone, to avoid associating with bad people, to help people good, to communicate without alteration and with fidelity, to those who They would later be initiated into the most secret books and mysteries of the association, but at the same time revealing nothing about it to foreigners, even if one were to try to force them to do so by violence. The morality of the Essenes was based on love of God, the love of virtue, the love of humankind. The love of God

Virtue implied frugality, modesty, constancy; love men embraced charity and the most complete (1).

These are the societies among the Jews that preserve the tradition of the primitive initiation, take it upon themselves to transmit it to the gen-future rations, thus fulfilling the mysterious duty imposed on followers, and whose accomplishment must have such great influence on the destinies of humanity. However, of the double of the goal they are pursuing, they will only achieve half; the courage they demonstrate, energy they deploy in The struggles against the external enemy will never be able to compensate the weakness of the people, to whom its internal divisions leave no room
no expansion force, do not allow resistance effective. Masonic doctrines will be preserved by them.
scattered across different schools, to be summarized later,
united into a bundle by Christianity; but the triple enclosure
which encloses Jerusalem, the towers that guard it, the two armies |
Those who defend it will not save the nationality; it will disappear.
No turning back.

|
|
lo: ad
h
\
|

The association delivered its assets to the common treasury; a number of chosen stewards
They received the product of everyone's labor and distributed it to each person individual according to its needs. Land cultivation and all professions applicable to the scheme peacekeeping constituted their general occupation. (Book UE, Chapter XII.)

(1) Philo and Joseph.

1476 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The Hebrew cult will persist even in the midst of the vanquished.
those who proscribe it; these rulers who have themselves fallen,
Their empire broken and dismembered, it will still survive in Asia and in Africa, under the heavy yoke of the Turks and the Arabs; he will live in Europe, despite the torture and persecution of Christians, but Nationality will not be reborn. Twenty centuries later, we may be able to...
to attempt the restoration of Hebrew thought; the Jewish doctors will tear away the veil that covers this outcast people, the rehabilitator in the eyes of the world, but they will not rebuild a people.

In the interval that elapsed between Solomon, the material king of wealth, splendor, magnificence, voluptuousness, the king crowned with myrtle and roses, into whose arms they throw themselves, Full of love, the queens of the East, and Jesus, the immaterial king of poverty, the emancipator from slavery, who dies, the front crowned with a wreath of thorns, with a cross on his arms, he had A tiny people, arose on the shores of the Sicilian sea, a commune, a municipality, which, as it grew, was bound to stifle the freedom of other peoples, to unite the vanquished and the captives, to give them the title of Roman citizens to console them for the nationality lost.

The Hebrews, like the Egyptians, the rulers and the defeated, the captives from the banks of the Nile and those who had driven them there Those who rode up before them, full of pride, were like a flock of sheep. on the triumphal chariot and those who followed it in chains, would fall one after another before this new power, to bow under the same yoke, to merge, henceforth without rivalry, in a shared destiny, "in equal misfortune, among the subjects of Rome, that great victor.

That one too must have its mysteries, both heritage and reminiscences of the Orient, transmitted to Italy from two sides, by Egypt and Greece, which mark the transition between the The old world and the new world. This dual origin, of which we find the perfectly indicated path, will have a singular influence on the mysteries of Rome; the genius so different from the two The peoples who inscribe them appear quite distinct. The cult of Ceres, from Proserpine, from Bacchus, borrowed from the Greeks, to whom It has been said: You Greeks, you change everything by the fantasies of your imagination, are destined to undergo alteration profound, giving rise to incredible abuses, engendering the most sad aberrations. The Egyptian myth, on the contrary, has been preserved with all its purity in the sanctuaries of Etruria (1); it is accepted in Rome along with the cult of Mithras, which we must seek the ancient remains in Ethiopia and Egypt (Q). lei, as Here, everything is serious and rigorous; initiation always has a purpose. the same, the one proposed by the secret doctrine, and four- Twenty tests precede the reception; among them, we Let us count the baptism and the chalice of bitterness, an adopted symbol stupidity (3).

OF FREEMASONRY. 177

In the ceremonies of initiation into the mysteries of Mithras we find yet another use that sheds a bright light on these ancient times, which clearly marks the lineage Egyptian. Thus, all receptions end with a discourse on justice; it is not about the particular law serving based on the Roman code, but justice considered as general principle that encompasses the highest questions: the social relations, the situation of citizens in relation to one another others, the political and civil organization of the State, the patriciate, the Plebeianism, slavery, property, this great debate Always renewed, never settled, the criminal law, the law on debtors, the source of so many struggles, war, conquest, the division of lands given by victory, the rights of foreigners, religion and its outward forms.

What greater celestial body could encompass the imagination! What an event that suddenly arises and takes nations by surprise, what principle, old or new, of interest to humanity to what extent? Whatever the title, it did not fit within this framework!

In the midst of this society where so many burning questions are in turmoil, where so many struggles erupt, subside, and then begin again, where two opposing elements are always present, alternately

- (4) Ballanche, Orphue. ;
- (2) Creuzer, History of Religions, p. 367.
- (3) Id. id., .. td, p. 359 ct 560.

| bronze.

178 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Triumphant and defeated, there can be no imposed limits. to the speakers' investigations; nothing can silence their voices, and the great ideas sown from the beginning continue to be pre-secrets kept for initiates. These mysteries, thus reproduced from antiquity, Cicero, who was initiated, could say: They drew us from life savage, made us participate in the life of humanity; no- They only spread happiness throughout our lives, but they cast a ray of hope upon our deathbed (1).

The cult of Mithras is not the only one that is surrounded by cere-mysterious monasteries; the Athenians gave Rome the cult of Ceres, she will reign over the Italian peninsula. Sicily, too. the entire place is dedicated to this goddess and her daughter who, according to the

It was in the middle of these fertile fields, while she was playing under flowering trees, that Proserpine was abducted by the king of Hell, in the forest of Enna. They show the deep cavern there, in which the kidnapper hid, waiting for the opportune moment to throw himself upon her; it was from there that he sprang forth and carried her to Syracuse, where he went underground with her. Poetry comes to mingle his voice with the complaints of the poor mother, and it is to the fires of the Mount Etna volcano, which Ceres lights with torches that are meant to illuminate his race in search of his daughter. Temples rise at Enna; Ceres and Proserpine have their marble statues there and in

Syracuse also has its temple dedicated to the same goddesses (3); They are the protectors of justice and laws, and it is at at the foot of their altar, where the most formidable of oaths are sworn, by donning Proserpine's purple cloak, and holding a lit torch (4). It was there that Callipus, at the moment when he conspired against Dion, took this terrible oath to ward off all suspicion, and raped him by murdering him, on the day of the feast of the goddess whom he had called upon as a witness to the purity of his intentions,

(1) Cicero, On the Laws, book. NH, 8 56.

(2) Cicero, Oration against Verres; On Statues. Plutarch. Ovid.

(3) Ibid., ibid., ibid., ibid.

(4) Plutarch, Fie de Dion,

= Re Re

OF FREEMASONRY: 179

This same Dion who had once initiated him into the mysteries. It is the This is the first example of betrayal, but the perversity will not stop. Not here.

Catania, too, built a sanctuary to Ceres which becomes famous and staffed only by women and girls; there In this chapel there is a famous statue that women alone can see, including men: they don't even suspect existence; the moneylender Verres hears about it and steals it the altar. (1).

Rome also has its temple, erected by the dictator Posthumius. victor over the Latins, to Ceres, to Proserpine, and to Bacchus; he It gives a tenth part of the booty taken from the enemy. Superstition begins to cloud reason; the harvest is poor, we make new temples are built; the gods are celebrated with fasts, offerings; the proceeds from fines are dedicated to them; more is done, thanks to lying priests, the divinity is invoked in human passions, we try to sanctify proscription in giving the property of the outcasts to the temple.

We are in a time of decadence: the Roman festivals in honor of Ceres and the nocturnal ceremonies that accompany them companions become occasions for debauchery (2); women wear white clothes in these celebrations held upon the return of spring, and this symbol of purity does not prevent them from indulge in lewd orgies (3). One of them, Pompeia, a woman Caesar brings his lover, disguised as a woman, to the celebration mysteries.

So blame women for these lapses, when society Roman, thoroughly corrupt, was itself conspiring to overthrow him the sement of his powerless gods, seemed to call for a new- a cult calf that will soon divide it, and against which a Part of the nation will fight in vain. These mysteries of Ceres celebrated in Rome, and which we only mention for

(1) Cicero, Oration against Verres; On Statues.

(2) Plautus.

(3) Juvenal.

180 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

to show how far human weakness can sink, had not nothing of ancient Freemasonry. Cicero, in the praise he In fact, in his attacks against Clodius who had desecrated them, does not say a word that recalls the thought and purpose of this (1) close to being reborn entirely in Christianity. Suddenly, like the prophets in action, the over- knowing much through thought, not limiting themselves like them to groan and threaten, but animated by this spirit of the future, alone regenerator, Jean-Baptiste, who belongs to the Essene school (2), raises a cry for reform, calls on the people Jewish women, baptize in the waters of the Jordan the disciples who dedicate themselves to the spread of his doctrine and the crowd that flocks to his voice. This is not the Jewish baptism of proselytes, which will not be established that later; it is one of the trials of initiation of the society to which the apostle belongs (3), it is the symbol of purification cation of the soul. What does this unknown prophet, born in a poor family, emerging from the crowd to summon the people on this arid, rocky land, without trees, without greenery, on the banks of this torrent whose waters the sun has drunk, where will remain barely any puddle, some small spring hidden in the sand,

Is it because he didn't see all this desolation? The prophets,
Until then, they had shouted their predictions through the city streets,
in public squares, at the gates of temples; why
Now the desert? Is the new doctrine really so threatening?
for the sake of public order, it cannot be issued in the midst of these populations subjected to Roman rule? Is solitude

(1) "No one, within living memory, before Clodius, had ever profaned this sacr-
| "August fig; no man has ever approached it; none has been guilty"
"of an insulting contempt; there is no man whom religious fear has not driven to
| "It is a sin to look at it. The Vestal Virgins are its priestesses; salvation
The sanctuary is the house of the chief magistrate, and its majestic ceremony honors a goddess whom no one is allowed to
"A man of knowledge, even the name."

(2) See in this regard Staüdlin, Paulus, Creuzer, Strauss. The affiliation of Jean-| Baptiste at the Essenes' school, once beyond doubt, the purpose of the letter he has
| the company, the spirit that guides it, are understood.
| (3) Schneckburger. Strauss.

ee me
ie -

DB FREEMASONRY. 181

a precautionary measure, and should we escape the watchful eye of the Dominators? Or, this desert, between a sea and a river,
Is he too merely a symbol? Isn't this a call to action?
new faith, that is to say, to renewal, to resurrection, all
the peoples whom the Romans enslaved, and this solitude immense, without barriers, without civilization, without laws, nothing that stops, or monitors, or constrains, wouldn't she say?
that all are called to regeneration?

John was saying to the crowd pressing behind him: Give a
A robe, when you have two, to the one who has none.
and share your bread with the poor. He shouted to the soldiers: Don't use of violence or treachery towards anyone, and be content with your balance. He added to the clerks, the tax collectors on behalf of the Romans: Demand nothing beyond the taxes that you are responsible for collecting (1).

These doctrines were those of the Essene school, but the
The reformer did not limit his preaching to that; many others before him at that time of misfortune, it would have been too vulgar; and to make Having heard these principles proclaimed so many times, there was no need nor from the solitude of the desert, nor from the waters of the Jordan.

The Hebrew people, defeated, governed by their oppressors, divided by the national spirit that lives on memories and by the interest that clings to the masters of the fatherland, secretly awaiting a messiah promised by the prophets, that is, a liberator who will break the yoke of foreign oppression, will ascend the throne of David and will found an endless kingdom (2). It is not just the nation Jewish woman who must be regenerated, reconstituted by the Messiah; all
The nations will rise up at his word and become one people
I brothers (3). The political element is essentially mixed here with the religious element; the worship of the gods of Rome must disappear with his dominion; the whole earth will be united in the law of Moses

(1) Gospel according to Saint Luke, chapter I, verses 11, 13, 14.

(2) Gospel according to Saint Luke, chapter 1, verses 32, 33, 68, 69, 70, 74. Acts of the Apostles, chap. 1, verse 6. Strauss, 2nd section, chap. IV, & LXIII, p. 515. Salvador, Jesus Christ and his Doctrine.

(3) Salvador, Jesus Christ and his Doctrine.

182 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

proclaimed again by the liberator. The humiliation of Israel is only temporary; the Jewish nation will rise again and never die again.
This is his thought, his hope, his deep faith, hidden in
The setbacks, never extinguished; but the time foretold by the prophets will only happen when the purified tribes are worthy to see the messiah; therefore the reformer begins by preaching the penance to those around him, and does he present it as a an essential condition of baptism, which will be the material sign of The purification of souls. This will precede the one who is awaited.
by the Jews, in which they hope for independence for CÉEOHQUERE Lost dance.

It is therefore an association that is both political and religious.
that Jean-Baptiste undertakes to found based on the ideas of the school from which he drew his principles and from which he intends to see emerge the liberator of the people, the messiah. This Essene school has its followers, her assemblies, she spreads her doctrines; but John believing the time has come to move on to the application, he throws himself into
He moves through the crowd and is followed by them. The dual nature His mission is manifested in all the apostle's actions; he clearly emerges from the era, the circumstances, the beliefs these same ones adopted by the nation on the faith of its prophets.

political law and religious law were reborn, one broken, the other obscured by the victors; the thought of the triumph of the Hebrews is so clear in her mind, it's so clearly something else entirely than a philosophical struggle, the interests at stake are so exclusive—those of the Jews, whom he refuses to baptize foreigners; It was only after his victory that the people of Moses associated them with its liberation; their hopes are not those of Israel, He will invite them to share, to the feast of freedom, but he will not He is not calling for battle, because he does not yet know which side they are on. would tidy up.

Modern Freemasonry was not mistaken about Îa thought that guided John the Baptist's mission; it seems to have wanted to proclaim its character loudly, when, modifying the name of its forms and giving a Christian name to ancient ceremonies, combining memories of antiquity

OF FREEMASONRY. 185

regenerated, it has, in both hemispheres, established its solstice festivals annual meetings under the patronage of the reformer. History is coming, Moreover, to bear bloody witness, and violent death The apostle's words alone would suffice to establish that he was guided by political thought was not the blame expressed by the preacher on marriage of Herodias who led to his arrest and was the cause of his assassination sinat; the real motive for this execution was the fear of unrest popular that the party created by John could excite, or that could arise from the excitements he directed at the crowd, and, if Some personal resentment hastened her, he made her ashamed—seam, in the shadows, taking the precaution of covering himself with cloak of politics (1).

Jean-Baptiste, in fact, drew a large number of followers. of men, those whom he had baptized, and among them disciples whom he had specially trained, instructed in his purpose, initiated into his thought; he could put weapons in their hands. Herod Antipas feared that the Jewish people would make some efforts to to escape Roman domination; he struck the one whose voice invited people to freedom (2), and opened the long list of martyrs.

The preacher's death was not to stop the reform, his His words had echoes beyond those of the desert. He is in the history of peoples from eras that seem indelible marked for regeneration, and nothing can prevent it; the John the Baptist's voice was still ringing out when another voice rose up more ardent. Jesus had come to ask the apostle for baptism. from the banks of the Jordan, and immediately he himself had begun to To call the crowd. With a more active mind, driven by a more thought Boldly, Jesus first leaves far behind the man who had to receive him; Jesus exclaims that he himself is this long-promised messiah, long awaited, and in turn it announces the trans-shaping the world, in the name of the great principles of freedom, of equality, of fraternity.

(1) Strauss, 2nd section, chap. 1, 8 XLVI.

mysterious to the glorification of interesting eras of the world

(2) Joseph, Jewish Antiquities.

the coming of the messianic reign, and inaugurates his role as liberator through his entry into Jerusalem. The deeds of his short life. and so pure are all the developments of one of these principles maintained by secret societies, which the people keep preciously deep in their souls, and from which they await the triumph, which will also be theirs. It is a grave mistake to to believe and to say that Jesus, encountering sinners, said to them: Follow me! And they followed him blindly, without knowing or what what he wanted from them, nor where he was leading them. Jesus preached the social reform is always invoked by those who suffer; it seemed to be fulfilling the sweetest hope of so many generations extinguished, vanished in this endless wait. His voice shouted the magic word of freedom to the slaves, to the poor equality, to all men fraternity; he too, like the The Masonic myth of Hiram, he proclaimed the reign, the superiority of intelligence by choosing its apostles from among the most insignificant, and when he said to the fishermen of the Sea of Galilee (1): Let There are your nets, and follow me; you will now be fishermen. of men! These followed in his footsteps, with the awareness of the mission they undertook, full of zeal for the cause, full of confidence in the word of the master.

These are not fanatics who obey without understanding. These are soldiers who follow a leader, who march with him to a conquest whose full extent they have probably not foreseen distant results, but ones which they certainly appreciated scope with regard to the generation to which they belong and those who must follow her immediately down this path of life where everything will be changed. Let each have their glory, and let us not forget Let us not forget that after the death of the master, the apostles scattered in order to spread his word on the earth.

The people's eagerness did not match the zeal of the disciples. ples; some ardent men had attached themselves to John the Baptist and to Jesus, but the crowd, either too ignorant to understand, or

(4) Evansile according to Saint Luke, chapter V, verses 1, 10, 11; according to Saint Mark

mn D PR ED = ME

184 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Disciples followed him, and he sent them out to preach throughout the land.

OF FREEMASONRY. 185

too carefree and incapable of becoming passionate about a doctrine which demanded some sacrifice, the triumph of which was to cost with effort, let the voice of reformers. This portion of the Jewish people who had forgotten the Abraham's god during the captivity, murmured against Moses and against Jehovah in the desert, she had knelt before the calf of gold, while its liberator prepared the law amidst the storms from Sinai, this portion of the people, after so many centuries, was always the same, without enthusiasm, without dedication, and disposed only in favor of beliefs that did not give her no difficulty in conquering or keeping it.

All reformers will have to overcome this deplorable apathy. which always seizes the masses, this love of rest which lulls us into complacency, this instinctive fear of the unknown which restrains their arms, apathy, love, fear, which cannot be destroyed, or rather subjugated, by the most energetic efforts, and especially by the initial successes that transform them into coaches lie and give to passion the triumphs that seemed reserved for reason alone.

John the Baptist n1 Jesus did not find their nation prepared for the a struggle from which a triumphant Jewish nationality could emerge; it had readily accepted the first one as one of those prophets that she was used to seeing and hearing in all important circumstances, but she rarely followed the inspirations, judging by their cries of despair, their prophecies of ruin and resounding sorrow against Jerusalem. But when Herod had the one who announced the coming arrested of the messiah, this crowd that he had believed he was regenerating through baptism remained silent and indifferent; no voice was raised to demand the freedom of the prophet, as no arm had been raised to protect him from the tetrarch's soldiers; he is killed in prison, and no popular emotion, no public tears, no expressions of regret or sympathy are protested against judicial; only his disciples came after his death.

they take away his body and bury him (1).

(1) Gospels according to Saint Matthew, chapter XIV, verse 12; according to Saint Mark, ch

-

Ce nee DR nt MR UN LR ee 20 ne ln
ES

186 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Indifferent to John the Baptist, this Jewish people showed themselves defiant and cruel to Jesus. The inhabitants of a town go to pray to him to withdraw from their country (1); he signs in a synagogue, and the assistants not only do not regard him as the liberator—they worship the messiah, but refuse even to believe in wisdom. that he manifests: "What is this wisdom that is given to him P "Isn't he the carpenter, son of Mary, brother of James, of "Joseph, son of Jude and Simon? Aren't his sisters here among » we (2)P » |

The indifference of these people deeply offended Jesus, his sorrow burst into threats: "Woe to you, Corazin! woe to you, Beth—" "Saida! And you, Capernaum, who have been lifted up to heaven, you will be..." "Lowered to hell (5)!" The Pharisees say: "He does not hunt "the demons that by Beelzebub, prince of demons," and Jesus he cries out: "You are a brood of vipers whose mouths cannot "Speak well, for the heart is corrupt (4)."

Jesus did not receive from the upper classes of Jewish society a more favorable reception; foreign domination had angered these populations; scholars and doctors remained deaf to the parables he addressed to them; dry complaints on this subject are mixed of bitter sarcasm and ineffable sweetness: "I remember you." 6 "My father! Because you have hidden these things from the wise and the..." "intelligent, and that you have revealed them to little children. To whom "Will I compare this generation? It is similar to the little ones" "children who sit in the markets and shout to their companions" "gnons: We played the flute, and you did not dance; "We sang mournful songs, and you didn't rain—" » re(5).» Sometimes he lets himself be carried away by an outburst of indignation in reproaches and threats, sometimes he abandons himself to the fate he anticipates, with admirable resignation.

The death of John the Baptist seems to have exerted a great

(4) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter VII, verse 54.

(2) Gospel according to Saint Mark, chapter VI, verses %, 5.

(5) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter XI, verses 21, 25.

(4) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter XII, verses 24, 54,

(5) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter XI, verses 16, 17, 25; according to Saint L Chapter VI, verse 52.

OF FREEMASONRY. 137

influence on the mission of Jesus; until that moment he had revealed the role of a political liberator, and the distance he manifested and through his apostles to those who do not belong to the nation Jewish law clearly indicates their goal; but seeing the inertia of this a people who allow the prophet who wanted to be imprisoned and killed When Jesus freed him, he was struck dumb; he no longer wanted this crowd that follows in the footsteps of the preachers and allows them to be assassinated

sine; he takes a boat and flees to a deserted place, where he desires to be alone (1); he takes his apostles with him, and wants them to rest (2). A deep sadness seems to have settled for a moment compared to her soul.

Only political struggle can revive the kingdom of the Jews. to give a free homeland to the sons of Moses disinherited by defeat of their nationality; the reign of the Messiah will not be established only by word, it must be founded by arms, by triumph; These are not the orators that the prophetics call upon to be raised up David's throne is made up of soldiers. Vain hope! Vain predictions of prophets inspired by the love of independence dance, and who cannot find a land in which to germinate! The struggle is not possible at that time, with this degenerate generation, this generation of little children molded under the yoke. The [Hebrews await a messiah; they don't understand that they must pay, that they must accept the thought without considering the man; they do not want him recognizing Jesus, they initially welcome him without enthusiasm. They mock the reformer's preaching, particularly his birth. They ask if the carpenter's son is indeed from the family of David, and Jesus casts his first bitter words to the winds, exclaiming that no prophet is honored in his own country (5).

Discouragement, however, has not yet come; Jesus hopes, to awaken dormant feelings in the hearts of these blind people,

to push them against their will to conquer their freedom, and soon
the indifference he encountered, the mockery he provoked Make way for hatred, an implacable hatred, the hatred of selfishness.

(1) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter XIV, verse 15.

(2) Gospel according to Saint Mark, chapter VI, verse 51.

(5) Gospel according to Saint John, chapter IV, verse 44,

PRES – mme um – nee me ne men ee 2nd ME 20 7 SR MSA A

+ -m- tm "me to alone, (<

eee ee me

= ee me me ee ee ms mem

ee ee 0 mo

188 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

pe

self-proclaimed guardians of religion, the priests, the doctors, emprisoners within the text of the law, whose letter kills, whose spirit vi-Vivie, are irritated that Jesus baptizes, that he is followed by numerous disciples; they utter threats, the storm com-begins to gather, Jesus moves away, they are still pursuing him when He put the lake between them and himself, and withdrew to Galilee.
are considering having him killed under the frivolous pretext of non-compliance
of the Sabbath (1).

A noteworthy point! Jesus' mission is actually Directed against the Romans; against their domination, it is entirely favorable to the freedom of the Jews, and it is precisely those whom she wants to free those who rise up against it, strike the one who aspires to be their liberator, leaving the Romans with the best role in this generated that nothing can wrest from subjection, which accompanies will now fulfill its sad destiny!

This moment is filled with terrible anguish; it is decisive in the life of Jesus, it marks another period; the thought of a
The messianic, true, material reign fades away; hope disappears.
It flies, barely a glimmer of it remains, still emerging from afar.
far away in that darkness, drawing a sigh; this people is not
Not ready, the time for liberation has not yet come, now Will it ever ring? The spirit of Jesus turns to thoughts news, he only embraces them reluctantly, but finally he embraces them
He becomes attached to the breaststroke; he will only be a suffering, resigned messiah.
He now only thinks of building a purely spiritual kingdom, and of

'To those who ask him if he is king, he replies that his reign is not not of this world. However, as one feels the pain of his

A wounded soul, angered by the blindness of this repulsive people those who wish to free it from foreign domination, by-She slept, without dreams of the future, in the chains that burdened her! She overflows and exhales in terrible predictions, in curses:
"Woe to you, Pharisees, who roam the earth and the sea for
"Make a proselyte, and throw him into hell (2)! Woe!"

(4) Gospel according to Saint Jehovah, chapter IV, verses 1, 3; chapter V, verses 16, 1 K
(2) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter XXII, verse 15.

There
RE, 9 2 2 2 D Es

me _ D ee
|

om +
+
i

HAS

OF FREEMASONRY. 189

"To you, whitewashed sepulchers, beautiful on the outside, and within"

His grief is even more touching, and as one might think one sees the tears streamed down his cheeks as he cried out with such deep sadness: "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who kills the prophets, who
"Stone those sent to you, how many times have I wished!"
"Gather your children together like a hen gathers her chicks"
"Under its wings, and you did not want it; your house will » become deserted (1)! Of all this, not a stone will remain on "stone (2)."

But at the same time as the pain oppresses him, tears away from him cries of anguish, his actions change, his preaching seems to have another motive, another goal, his mission takes pro-larger portions; it anticipates the important role that the barbarians in the establishment of Christianity; he could not sustain-He raises his nation against Rome, he summons other peoples against his weapons, against his gods, against his laws; already he is addressing himself more He willingly welcomes the pagans, wanting them to participate in the new life.

and to make his thoughts clear, to protest a last-
For the umpteenth time, he denounced the apathy of the Hebrews, crying out in the presence Centurion of Capernaum: "Many will come from the east and the west
"They will happen, and will be at table in the kingdom of the Cicux, and the children"
"Of the kingdom will be cast into outer darkness (5)!"
Elsewhere, on the very steps of the Temple in Jerusalem, the af-
the fuss he feels at the reception from the principal among them Jews exhale in this significant threat: "I tell you, the
"The kingdom of God will be taken away from you and given to a nation that will inherit it "will bear fruit (4)." Later, the thought that has just arisen-
To behold him, who animates him, directs him, becomes even clearer-ment; ik first told his apostles: "Do not go to the people-
"They and do not enter the city of the Samaritans, but go instead-"
"1st towards the sheep of the house of Israel (5)." Now

(1) Gospel according to Saint Matthew > Chap. XXIM, verses 37, 38.

(2) Id. id., id., chap. XXIV, verse 2.

(3) Id. id., id., chap. VIIT, verses 11, 12,

(4) Id. id., id., chap. XXI, verse 43.

(S) Id. id., id., chap. X, verses 5, 6.

HAS -----

|

Everything has changed; he himself enters Samaria, converses with the Samaritane chose the Samaritan as the subject of one of her most memorable poems. He sings parables, and finally sends his disciples to preach his doctrine among the pagans: "Go and teach all nations (1)!"

It is therefore impossible to ignore the thought of Jesus was first, like that of John the Baptist, like that of the Essenes, like that of secret societies, at once political and religious. If she is not given the opportunity to apply it, she after him, it was to be accomplished on a larger scale. His enemies. If they prevail, his mission is over; he is condemned to torture. bound to the cross, and the crowd that followed him did not dare to attempt a movement to snatch him from death; the mockery, the cruelty continue until the final hour; only the women protest-tempted by their tears, and still filled with that bitter thought which It awakens in him the blindness of the Hebrews; he cries out when he sees The women wept for him: "Weep for yourselves and for your "Children!"

Indeed, this Jerusalem that kills him will be destroyed; greedy pro-Rome's curators will incite the people to revolt and the will crush; the lost opportunity for the Jews will not present itself again more, but, in the destinies of humanity, it was a matter of good something other than Jews. Materially, the reign of Jesus was limited from the outset, the liberation of a small nation that had not a great weight in the balance of the world; spiritual, it will continue to bring the whole earth to the new faith; material, and consequently Politically, he would not have found any sympathy at that time among the other peoples; spiritual, he had to resist persecutions and to find confessors even among executioners.

The reign of Jesus began in the shadows, invisible, ignored by his contemporaries, but it will continue, grow in the centuries to follow; his glory will shine upon a part of the world, his doctrine will call all men one after another, his part. This role will resonate throughout all empires populated by civilization. in the vast steppes where savages roam without laws and without

(1) Gospels according to Saint Matthew, chapter XXVII, verse 19; according to Saint Mark, chap. XXI, verse 15; according to Saint Luke, chap. XXIV, verse 47.

brake. When a scaffold was erected, when a man, in revolt against the society of his time, expired in the public square, at eyes of the crowd he once stirred, now silent and cold, the judges, and the power in whose name one con-damned, they breathe more freely, they fall asleep more peacefully; he
it seems that a weight that oppressed them has fallen with a head;
But in the realm of intelligence, ideas do not die.
with the one who propagated them, presented them; as soon as a thought has
It resounded, it was heard, it became immortal, because it is at this very moment the inheritance, the property of the generations.
When Jesus succumbed on his cross, a voice uttered this word Terrible: Consuminatum est! It's all over!... Profound error.
Nothing was over, everything was starting again. This mistake, which moreover was that of all times, of all societies, is the eternal cause
one of the political and religious murders that bloodied the world, ever since material and intellectual interests-
They have entered into conflict; they believe they can stifle thought by killing the body; they freeze the prophet's tongue, they close his mouth, A useless precaution! The executioners came too late, the word has already vibrated, and, from echo to echo, it will be transmitted, without us may stop it.

At that time, as we saw from past history, all great Religious thought was shrouded in mystery, hidden beneath the veils of myth, of secret symbol; the political goal was confused with her in the same conventional obfuscation; the truth does not revealed that to the followers, and always remained in the eyes of the crowd in a misty cloud that prevented him from seeing her entirely; also, scarcely had Jesus ceased to live than the

A mythical legend takes hold of him, making him the hero of a new initiation. He was born from the union of a virgin and one of the three persons composing the divinity, like the Indian gods;
He was worshipped by Magi from the East, guided by a... star, like Buddha, with whom he also bears a resemblance striking white; like him, he discussed with the doctors of the law and astonished them with the wisdom of his answers; he withdrew in the desert, like Zoroaster, in order to prepare himself for it, like him, to the apostolate. He is resurrected, like Osiris, like Hiram; he has

RE nn nya

has

this mm

+ me

1992 | PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

disappeared, like the sun, only to reappear brighter, like He. He defeated the spirit of darkness in the struggle against dualism. like the god of the Persians, and he must return one day, like him, to inaugurate a victory that will never end. But an idea arose, no not entirely new, we've already seen it in India, but more clearer, more precise, perfectly in harmony with the Genesis of Moses and the fall of Eden; it is because, through his death, Jesus has redeemed the world, reconciled the guilty earth with heaven; this thought will powerfully contribute, along with the other elements of success that circumstances provide him, to the triumph of faith new.

When, scattered across different lands after the death of Master, Jesus' disciples began to preach, that the The Christian legend spread mysteriously, silently. men who, forming the Freemasonry in Judea At that time, they had lived spiritually according to secret doctrines. some had religiously preserved them until then; others were discouraged, as always happens in parties to which the triumph is long overdue; the others, on the contrary,

were filled with that ardor which gives to energetic minds certainty of fighting for the truth, in the interest of humanity entirely, and we would find proof of this ardor in the number of companies scattered across all areas. This this dual arrangement was to serve Christianity admirably by immediately placing him in these two camps, which are not opposed, but different, members and auxiliaries.

The spirit of proselytism was lacking in the Masonic religion; we saw it with the Essenes, its highest representatives in Judea; the discouraged would therefore embrace Christianity

precisely because by realizing the thoughts of Freemasonry

Nonsense, he gave them hope of seeing them triumph. thanks to this zeal for preaching which they did not have, but which they ardent had nothing to deny in welcoming the new le-genre; they found an element of activity, a satisfaction in

. their impatience; for both groups, Christianity was a triumph, since in Judah the spirit that had inspired them was revived

—

OF FREEMASONRY. 195

guided, since they found there all the Masonic principles;
So they rushed towards him with enthusiasm.

All serious historians who have written about this great era of transformation, researched under what circumstances began the establishment of the Christian belief, they unanimouslymementreconnu, noted, without explaining this mystery, that an idea general [religion] had, long before Jesus, taken hold of society, of the Greece, like Rome, had gradually undermined polytheism.
had rendered him powerless. The danger was so great, so imminent
It is for this paganism, teetering on its foundations, that its most ardent Champions tried to restore Jui's strength by modifying him, by...
Spiritualizing. A futile attempt! He couldn't lend himself to... new needs of the people; it was too late, everywhere already the society breathed a kind of Christianity: which seemed no longer waiting for a personality to sit on the altars, at the place of the ancient gods.

Who was responsible for this spreading idea? Who had conceived it?
Where did it originate? Who spread it? That was the idea-mother of mysteries, the spirit of secret societies breathed into the world by the followers, transported by them to all points.
A breeze from the East, which slowly traveled across the earth to the
to fertilize, to make it green! ray of sunshine that grew and advanced-was, heating up and preparing the harvest!

Freemasonry, in its Asian cradle, had pro-proclaimed the unity of God; the Egyptian people had failed to recognize, under the symbols that veiled it, the thought preached in the temples, sanctuaries collapsed under the conquerors' axes, buried now beneath the sand, beneath the grass and the moss of time; the Greece, by adorning it, by clothing it in the most brilliant colors-
His poetry had smothered her; Rome had disguised in the linen garments of her young priestesses, and
And then suddenly she appeared, she burst forth like a burst appeared unveiled; it resounded along the riverbanks,

at crossroads, on hills, in cities, in the middle of people who were the last to have the tradition in the Islands pains of political annihilation:

| RS _ |

104 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY |

It is a thought of equality, of liberation, preached to a
A defeated, subjugated nation, but trembling under the reins; it is a
A thought of brotherhood inviting all men. While, stemming from the Masonic idea widespread throughout the world and beginning to predominate theoretically, philosophically, Christianity was spreading, and suddenly, by the most singular reactions, irrefutable proof of the uncertainty in which floated human thought, the highest minds
among the pagans are attached to the elements of the primitive religion
distorted by forms, forgotten, erased in ceremonies
They delve into memories, awakening a buried thought.
deep in consciences, they search in the mythology of the Samothrace, Athens and Rome, the remains of a more pure, strive to rebuild a cult that they trace back to Orpheus, the initiate of Egypt, the founder of the mysteries in Greece, one of the greatest apostles of secret doctrines, and they rely on
on this cult to prove that paganism can satisfy everyone
the needs of the soul. They embrace spiritualist thought that they feel hovering over the world as sovereign, they seize it-driven by the interests of a crumbling paganism, they strive to...
to revive an outdated religion, to stop the march of time by means of it;
but they could not transform it, make it deviate from its route, to give it as an auxiliary to that which it must destroy.

Thus, the Masonic institution offered an unknown spectacle hitherto in the annals of the philosophical world: the christia-nism, which stemmed from it, proclaimed its purest truths.
with clarity, with lucidity, with a rigidity of expression that had not yet been found in philosophical schools preaching publicly, and people came to fight him at his appearance
tion precisely in the name of these same Masonic ideas long overlooked, and resurrected at this moment for
to save outdated forms that had veiled the ideas, had smothered.

The Neoplatonist philosophers of that era, Porphyry, Plotinus, Iamblichus, Proclus, profound writers, Julian the Emperor,
in reality adopted the great maxims of Christianity,
but they clearly saw the political side of this religion, included the danger now hanging over all the powers-sessions, and were much less frightened by a proclamation of principles acknowledged by their reason than a change of name and forms in popular religion, which was to bring about the fall of thrones, transfer of power into other hands, at names of principles that were to have all their consequences. From this assessment arose the struggle that marked these early years time of Christianity. But, once again, it was too late; We had been unable to delay him by grasping his thoughts, last effort of a dying cult, supreme testimony of powerlessness rendered by deposed priests! Persecutions will cease!

Barefoot, staff in hand, a few apostles will go and proclaim this thought; the virgins will stain the sand of the arenas with their blood; It will resound in the echoes of the tiered stands, the vomito-places where the people throng; she will stir up this crowd that has come for to see the tigers and lions tearing apart the victims; the martyrs achè-will witness the moral conquest, like the barbarians who flocked from the North, with the framee in hand, they will complete the material conquest by the overthrow and the sack of Rome.

Masonic thought triumphs in Christianity; it triumphs entirely; the doctrines that Freemasonry ancient embraced, preached, will pass completely into the new law; after centuries of struggles and varying fortunes, Never had success been greater and more beautiful.

Jesus did not create a cult, prescribe forms, or subjugate his disciples at ceremonies; far from it, he had often risen up against the external practices of rigid law-abiding citizens of Moses, practices which, in his eyes, did not constitute the true wisdom; he had wanted to free the mind and body from all the unnecessary links had been removed, leaving only those of the morality and brotherhood; thus Christianity was first a simple initiation, a communion of thoughts; retreats hidden from the crowd, deep caves, hollows in the rocks, The dome of trees, were the temples. There wasn't really of ceremonies; the legend of the master was recounted in private; The preaching stirred up the disciples, who were animated by thoughts social which form the basis of the doctrine of Jesus. However, before arriving at material power, in the struggle of the two Thoughts that were vying for attention, Christianity was making in the forms of the numerous borrowings from paganism; a fusion. The first Christians, in order to escape persecution, attributes of a pagan character, and, as if to show com-Although the Masonic idea was alive and well, it was precisely under the

196 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the cult of Orpheus which they were hiding, the cult actually given to Jesus.

The spirit of proselytism had seized the first Christians, and the evils that afflicted humanity paved the way for them, were pushing society towards them; their numbers were growing, because the oppressed, deprived of the goods that charm life were numerous; the hope of freedom and equality was offered to them,
not vague, not limited to laying down principles of fairness whose realization was distant, she presented herself as active, radiant, shaking its golden wings from which courage and the dedication. To conquer, to fulfill his promises, he does not
It was necessary for men to love one another; as a result of so many battles, heartbreak, crimes, a law of love had to Governing the world, society would finally be able to breathe.

Social thought, which is the essence of Christianity as secret societies extended their conquest without violence, without material means, without the splendor of ceremonies and performances which seduce, captivate, but only through persuasion, by the conviction that arose from the true state of humanity. A
A fully democratic organization was created; the rich among Christians formed a social fund from their surplus wealth which applied to the poor; thus the basic needs, the source of So much moral misery, so much disorder, so much abjection, were firstly satisfied by an ardent and intelligent charity to the times, not imposing on the unfortunate the obligation to beg for help, humiliation which is often the first step into an abyss of mud.

Every well-organized society must ensure that its members suffer no harm to their person, their fortune, their rights; it is then called justice and extends to all citizens

an aegis that covers them; she carries a sword with which she strikes the

OF FREEMASONRY. 197

mm

guilty, as in her scales she weighs the claims opposing parties and adjudicating disputes. The company operates there simultaneously an immense right and duty; the citizens whose justice is the guarantee bows before it with respect, but it is a
the heaviest chains that bind vanquished peoples, or prevent the development of new thought, whether political

Regeneration. The Christians did not want to receive righteousness. Romans, Jews, pagans who imposed on them oaths that contradicted their beliefs, and they didn't think be bound to strict fairness towards men whose doctrines were threatening to the social order. It was, in fact, a matter of Furthermore, to establish a company within the existing company, of to give it specific rules, laws, and organization, and The Christians began by taking away justice for themselves civil.

The community, guided by love, devotion, selflessness tion, saw few disputes erupt within its ranks; it had interest in showing itself to its enemies as well united and compact; However, if any arose among its members, they did not have recourse to the country's courts, but they appointed themselves among themselves arbitrators whose judgment they deferred to. It was the most energetic protest that could be made against the dominations foreign leaders and against national leaders who had not embraced Christianity; it was in reality shaking off their yoke, not by force, not by uprising, but by emancipation powerful and expected to have immense results. The leaders of nations to which the Christians belonged saw their power-political session seriously compromised, and therefore explains the fury of the persecutions. Recruited from all peoples, the Christians threatened to incite them all to revolt, and for the powerful It wasn't just their ancient gods that were at issue, gods half overthrown by philosophy, but of their own thrones, because the master's disciples were not limited to one sterile adoration, they aspired to the conquest of the world, and Apostolate was their means, their weapon.

Soon secret societies ceased to exist; the association was no longer ee Ste ee ne Re 0 nn

a ré me 0 0

198 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

other than Christianity, it no longer holds any mysteries; its | doctrines are preached by resounding, avowed voices under the executioners' swords, discussed in public with doctors of paganism; the baptism that John the Baptist gave on the banks of the Jordan, to which the apostles invite all men, nothing could be hidden anymore, initiation is still the even the trials through which one prepares for it exist Newcomers must always submit to it, but they do not call-

is engaged in the face of the nations, it continues brilliantly, in full sun, until finally Christianity, the religion of the poor and oppressed, the philosophy of secret societies in its primitive simplicity, flag of the ancient followers and on which are written the sacramental words of their motto: liberty, equality, Fraternity prevails over the old civil society that held the peoples imprisoned in its bonds.

But this religion, so gentle, so pure, this religion of love, which finally spoke to the soul, putting the spirit in place of matter, responded so well to the needs of the people whose needs it proclaimed the emancipation, was soon to forget its origin; as the apostle, she was going to deny her master, borrow from the religions of the past the rites, the ceremonies, all these forms linking the thought, this narrow mind of observances that Jesus had so many times vehemently reproached the Pharisees and the doctors of the law, and which had given birth to hypocrisy and persecution. She was going to shoot taken from its sheath, the sword that Jesus had put back in, to strike with the sword whose use he had condemned.

Formed on broad foundations by those famous councils where the philosophy stirred up the most burning questions, the most of interest to humanity, adopted by the leaders of nations who placed the cross on their banners, led by etc. a spirit of conquest manifested from the beginning, which became its very essence, his particular genius, which will shine forth in all eras, and that Eighteen centuries have not yet cooled, she will become oppressed oppressive, she will take on the role of her persecutors. Until then She descended into the circus as a martyr; she too will slit throats. men who will not accept it, or who, having

00 00 +

fi = ER

—_—_—_—

—

OF FREEMASONRY. 199

embraced in good faith, will not be able to understand the subtleties—new beds.

The evangelists Matthew and Luke had attributed these sad words to Jesus.

if they were to be taken literally: "It is not peace that "I brought to the earth, but the sword. I came to separate"
 "his father's man, his mother's son, his stepdaughter-" » mother; a man's servants will be his enemies (1).
 "I bring the fire and I want it to light. You had thought that I came to bring peace to the earth; no, I tell you, it is
 "The division. When there are five people in a family,
 "They will divide, three against two, two against three: the father" against the son, the son against the father, the mother against the daughter, the "Daughter against mother. If anyone comes to me and does not "Do not sacrifice your father, your mother, your children, your wife, etc."
 "brothers and sisters, and even his own life, he could not be
 "My disciple (2)."

These words, which had a symbolic meaning, which signified the profound selflessness that the reformer expected from his disciples, the absolute devotion which alone could bring triumph phe, will be taken literally by fools; they will realize the deplorable divisions that they seemed to predict, without worrying
 If they have truly understood Jesus' thought, they will separate what the Civil law had united what religion had blessed; they will bear the Trouble within families, in the name of the one who preached love, Brotherhood!

Human passions, or those aroused by religious zeal,
 or using it as a pretext, will make a veil of it that will cover-
 Many crimes will occur. Sects will arise from this religion.
 of unity that invited the whole world to a communion of thoughts,
 will dispute the baptism of initiation, will hurl anathemas at each other,
 They will tear each other apart, slaughter one another. The altars
 From a god of peace will flow human blood, and, as in Egypt's dark days, the throbbing limbs of the victims

(4) Gospel according to Saint Matthew, chapter X, verses 54, 55, 56.

(2) Gospel according to Saint Luke, chapter XIT, verses 49, 51, 52, 53; chapter XIV, v. 26

200 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

bound to the pyre will writhe in the blazing furnace; the voice of priests will drown out the cries of the condemned by singing pretensedue praise to a god who recoils with horror from such offerings, and the dreadful smell of burning flesh will mingle with perfumes which, rising from the censers, will be lost in the clouds and will not reach the throne of divinity. Extravagance of Man! Folly of humanity! Blood will cry out for vengeance, and his
 His voice will be heard all too well!

That is when the master's word will be lost... Then too in the temples of modern Freemasonry; it will produce new miracles, it will be engraved in hearts, so deeply—that no earthly power will ever be able to erase it.

— 0 — — @ — ee es mm —
eo . — me

ss

— _ 0

— = =. — — ms — Æ es ee D = à = =
— Eu

EU FREEMASONRY. 201

D

CHAPTER SEVEN.

Freemasonry did not appear during the first centuries of Christianity; the lodges, the troubles, the conflicts of the Roman Empire, the insurrectionary movements in Gaul, the Barbarians, the misfortunes that followed, the triumph of the Christian faith, prevented Europe to see its actions, to hear its speakers. — The East, cradle of Freemasonry, No trace of it remains at that time; the Secret Doctrine founded after the death of Muhammad has no identity with it, has nothing in common with the principles, the goal, the means of ancient societies from which it originated. — Transformation of Freemasonry; Freemason brotherhood in France and in Ireland: the name Freemason is written for the first time in the documents; Associations are being organized. — Establishment of lodges. — Foundation of the Grand Lodge, Hierarchy, Masonic code. — Conduct of the clergy in France and England at the time when The association reveals itself. — A Masonic organization has emerged in Normandy; its purpose, battles, his defeat; tortures, mutilations of his followers. — Leaven that remains in the Unnoticed for over a century, the copfraternity gained some prominence in Augleterre in 1066 in 1066. — His works; his meetings. — Crusades. — Their influence on Freemasonry. — The Templars.

t: ,

.
æ 2 ..._ <<. 1» _
=" . 22 D) AN PA ù ?

-$5 8% OMR © LusiEuRs centuries pass

=s#7 sic after the death of Jesus, without
2) that we find the traces of pre-NR to the scissors of Freemasonry
è | .. which will however trans-
To put oneself from one era to another; Christianity

My primitive contains it all, and if it is,
< S in these early days where the transformation
g- of society is fulfilled, of men who do not 7 do not want to change the name of their cult, including the
(The principles are identical to those of religion)
new, and still meet in assemblies
'secret, who would think of them amidst the preoc-VS the appropriations with which the world is besieged? Who would hear the voices of their speakers through the crash produced by the collapse-
the death of this departing society, through the efforts of this other one which is established on ruins whose downfall it accelerates?

the L

44

me me ne 7 -

ee 0 +

born

202 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Rome, still standing, was struggling against itself, collapsing in inner struggles, he fought against his vices, against her own weakness, before being shaken by the enemies who came From the outside. Caligula occupied Gaul with his mad expeditions.
on the banks of the Rhine and on the Ocean which he had to cross to
To throw upon Great Britain, from his ridiculous triumphs of Lyon and of Vienna, then died by the sword of a Praetorian soldier whose
The companions were looting the imperial palace. Gallic Druidism sheltered behind the rocks of Armorica, struck to the heart by

as if an order given by an unknown power, sup-Laughing, he threw them one against the other to break them both, the forced one to prepare the ve'. for another belief.

Claude, driven by a feeling that surprises, at the time, more than he is not understood, and in which a strange coincidence manifests itself with the nascent social thought, slaves were raised from a long stupefaction, entrusted to the liberators< the government of the provinces. Great Britain was subjugated: -. and the remains of the dru-
The dim that had taken refuge there was buried: dependence of this nation; Gaul was in revolt, divided into: + Nero and Galba fought for the choice of his masters, before + ja er against Rome, shouting these terrible words to Europe: "Lu. re
"Roman empire ends, the Gallic empire begins; the time has come: *"
"Domination of men and possession of the land will pass"
"into the hands of the Gallic and Cymric nations!" Then she fell back-Once again disappointed, the empire crumbled almost as soon as it was formed, and,
as if to shed light on these events, these struggles, this full-blown drama of blood that holds the world breathless, Rome and Lyon were, at a few years apart, consumed by a nighttime fire.

Other, even more serious events were about to occur, which were to attracting attention exclusively: the nations had mingled the noise from their broken chains amidst the clamor of the empire's internal struggles, had risen up, armed, and formed in the light of the fires,
and, from all points of the old world, they advanced, hell-trapped in a circle that was always tightening, this Rome of yesteryear mistress of the people, today no longer knowing what her

OF THE FRENCH-NACONNERIE. 205

emperor among the chiefs to whom the praetorians sell the scepter and those proclaimed by the legions.

A confederation of Germanic tribes, who came to occupy their rank in this great army of peoples, appeared to banks of the Rhine, and, for the first time, people heard people pronounce
The name of the Franks, which will soon resound and shine. From this
At this time, these tribes will harass the empire with their invasions.
Days renewed until he succumbed. To the East, Thrace and Persia were stirring to shake off the yoke, and Lips on their territory of the Roman legions.

Everywhere the voices of Christian martyrs rose to heaven in glorifying the name of Jesus; the new cult was no longer hiding in the bowels of the earth, in the crypts, in the rocks;
He erected the cross on the hills, in public squares, mutimilk the statues of Jupiter pure to transform him into Jehovah, of Apollo
They were making Christ, and the altar of the overturned taurobolium; a struggle

Roman, armed and bloody; the temples and churches it collapsed in turn under the blows of the two rival religions who were still fighting over the remains; then, by one of those inspirations rations which sometimes originate in genuine faith, sometimes in an ambition coldly calculating the means of victory, Cons-Tintin adopted the cross as his battle standard, and the Christia-nism made the West and the East resound with the songs of its triumph.

Incomplete victory! Amidst the heady rush of success,
The Christian church was shaken by the schisms that divided it its thinkers, its philosophers, and filled all the sanctumults of cries, complaints, invocations, and anathemas. The councils, summoned, by the most singular of usurpations, to de-cider of the divinity of Jesus, stirred up the people in the name of a abstraction.

The nationalities were trying to reconstitute themselves by force, to to escape this chaos into which the conquest had plunged them Roman, then fell back, and barely any traces remained of their struggles in the obscure history of those turbulent times, where everything is written in a rush, where events follow one another with such speed

Ds mme de en nee

ee 0e ee Go ee 6 ee oo ere 0 eme nn ne mettre dé Ant MD een M et eu à
has --- .

eme em ee to 0 ee soul of + of

Se Re et es me me

ns ne ne ms =
_ Re Sr an em

204 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the speed at which they soon lose their distinctive appearance, ct that they could not be distinguished from any distance.

Gaul, always in revolt, always crushed, pillaged, ravaged,
only the sound of weapons could be heard, and, to cover everything
This uproar, these cries, this crash, a terrible creaking sound was occurring.
In other words, the Roman Empire was splitting in two; the scepter was Indeed, the great Barbarian uprising was spreading everywhere

both sides at once; it was no longer a question of contesting the empire of poorly defended borders, remote provinces, landlocked in untamed domains, lost in some distant sea; the nations were about to deliver the final blow to the heart of Rome;
The East and the Northeast, joining hands, rushed towards—seems to be on the West, and they surrounded it with a circle now impassable.

The Franks, the Saxons, the Alemanni, whom Rome had since a few nice things, so many times experienced with dredging, formed a a kind of avant-garde entrenched on the fringes of the in, where it attend—
The bulk of the army was there, and the time of the attack had arrived. Behind them was... pressed the Picts, the Scots, the Burgundians, 1: . Varailles, the Herules, tumultuous like the waves of the Ocean that surrounds them, then the Sarmatians and the Gepids; in the background, the Go'!'<.
divided into westerners and easterners, or Visigoths and Ostré—Goths occupied a vast line stretching from the Baltic to the Pontus Euxinus; in the rearguard were the Alans and the Huns rushing in from northern Asia.

They all seemed to be obeying an order that no one had heard.
and which, however, was transmitted to everyone through an unknown mouth naked; the last arrivals, or rather those who walked from the most distant lands, the first ones grew before them that they encountered; these, in turn, advancing upon those that they touched more closely, pushed them back onto the first ranks that were stirring, moving forward, tightening the circle which was to encompass the two empires of the East and the West. The 'conquering nations had carried out this movement with regulation—

rite, slowly; several generations without a homeland had been born and had died out during this long march; but the term of ne me — ee em Er eee, 8 > : =

. — = re _ & — — —

o

2 – Re ee ee Se ee ee mm rem from EN mm to Mess nm ms +

OF THE FREEMASON (E. 205 |

|

Their race was about to be over, and Alaric was already camped in front. Constantinople before rushing into Italy.

The tide of Barbarians, awaiting the great day, spread out dait in both Germanies and both Belgicas, invaded— knows the great Sequani and Helvetia, covered the two Aquitaines, the two women from Narbonne, and came to break against the foot of the Pyrenees. These terrible armies marked their path, mar— their journeys took them through the ruins of entire cities; Strasbourg, Speyer, Tournai, Arras, Amiens, Saint-Quentin, Reims, Langres, Besançon and Basel had fallen one after the other, without being able to _to halt their steps. Marseille was not saved by the mountains who defended it, nor by sea; it succumbed and was destroyed. The lava from this volcano only stopped before the ramparts of Toulouse. which the ram tried in vain to shake. In the midst of these successive invasions, when provinces, empires were Reduced to ashes, the populations that the war had not exterminated, they were ravaged by famine and plague. Finally, blending his latest melodies with the sounds that were passing over the world, dominant var the magnitude of his misfortune all those who afflict humanity; Rome was invaded three times by the Parlares; she who had received the spoils of so many peoples, | adorned with their riches, that one was in turn taken and | ravaged; the crown was falling from the brow of this empress | and rolled in the blood.

The Gallic Empire was fracturing, and the Barbarians were taking their share. | part; the classification of peoples began, and the Franks spread out— | were stuck on this land that they were never to leave, where the three elements—Gallic, Roman, and Frankish—were going to mingle, to confuse, to produce a new civilization, based on the Christianity. The Huns and their fearsome leader, Attila, were rising up | the Danube valley, crossed the Rhine, rushed onto this Gaul, the object of so much covetousness, so many attacks, so much dismemberments; this Gaul which was shaking for the last time the yoke of Rome: of which it had been the last bastion, and from which | The Franks now had to set off, as before the | Gauls, to bring the war into the heart of this Italy which had thrown | such a long challenge to the world. Rome fallen, the Western empire

ol

ai PP TS 20 mm

+

+ menu e- ee Re mn

200 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

it collapsed amidst the debris that littered Europe.

In the East, Muhammad came to rival Jesus, to found his religion a region favored by the warlike instincts of the peoples he called to him, and found a powerful ally in the schisms of the Christian church.

Amidst all these repercussions, this immense work of the disintegration of the two Roman empires, of the formation of new nationalities formed with great difficulty from such diverse elements, If they are so opposed, no ear can perceive the sound of the words spoken. in the pulpits of secret societies; no one descends far enough to- fundamentally towards these obscure, hidden workshops, lost in the shadows and the depth of the woods, behind the cracked walls of the ruined cities, to observe their actions, to follow their threads. In vain does Masonic chronology indicate that the island was in England, around At the end of the third century, Albanus became the leader of the brothers masons; in vain does she trace their works in the middle of the sixth century (1); it is impossible to see there again: the real force, a true power; one does not perceive, in the problems meetings of these two eras, nothing that indicates k: -ouvcnir precise of the Freemasonry of the past, the goal of Freemasonry of the future.

Its trace similarly disappears in the Orient, its cradle, or ü1°

The less we can follow him there, the less we can grasp him there. After the death of Muhammad suddenly breaks the great schism that divides into two The enemy camps, the followers of the prophet, armed some against others, it sheds rivers of blood; then men who claim to have preserved the original faith combined with the dogmas The democratic principles of the Persian Mazdakis established what is called the secret doctrine, and seek its triumph without looking by means (2). In the organization of this society, the remains still exist, some parts bear a strong resemblance to white with certain particularities of Freemasonry; they have similar names, identical functions, thing inevitable in associations formed for a secret purpose,

(2) De Hammer, History of the Assassins.

7

ee + me ee A

oo

r

HAS

oo

EE

OF FREEMASONRY. 207

but there is no connection between them; one would search in vain for a common thought. In all parts of the globe where Freemasonry-Modern Christianity has founded a lodge; the Freemason of all countries will be welcomed, everywhere the temple will be his homeland; none of the men belonging to the secret doctrine of the Orient founded in Egypt, after the death of Muhammad, will not, as such, see the opening For him, the gates of the sanctuary. The two associations have not The same mobile phone, but they don't work towards the same goal.

Towards the end of the ninth century, and during the first In the tenth century, the brotherhood of Freemasons began to to shine brightly. After the completion of Solomon's Temple, the Construction workers, already organized into an association, are necessary- inevitably led to separate; but they do not leave in isolation, at random, looking for work, each for themselves, as they do today the stonemasons who laid the last stone to a building, the pioneers, the miners, the earthmovers who have dug the trench, raised the ballast where the outlines will be drawn on the iron rails 1:5 large curves of the paths intended to unite between They all: |; nations, to erase all border demarcations, to withdraw the impossible war. They divide the world, workers toui; |: time of thought and hand; some return in Africa, in Asia, where they come from; the others are walking towards

Europe; but they all go in groups, asking the princes and to the people of enterprises, erecting buildings, sowing their a route of palaces, bridges, and aqueducts, as later they adorned it-cathedral square.

Strange destiny! In this distant era that we are looking at with pride as being far inferior to ours, and which was so in effect in terms of discoveries, positive sciences, of the welfare state, the workers are organized, forming a kind
They are family members, have common interests, and support each other.
the others, count in the State; far from fighting these associations
In response to these changes, governments recognize their right to exist.
call them, employ them, honor them, grant them privileges in keeping with the spirit of the times; and today,
After so many centuries have passed, so many lessons have been taught by the exc-
So much suffering laid bare, so many revolts

oo mm & - adm

tes me metre. Ce: mt 2

,

en er een 0 ee D ee

.

ee ne - OR

208 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY.

which followed, any association of workers was for-followed with a kind of fanaticism; people wanted to see a danger in it.
incessant for society, when it was only a means of re-to regulate certain forces. What has not been destroyed is the legacy of those earlier times; thus, not only has our era not nothing of this kind could be constituted, but this remainder was deprived of energy dynamism, vitality, initiative. Europe is entering a major phase of his historical life, at a supreme moment when the face of it will changed; the nations that compose it will unite, and it is condemned precisely the men from whom they are trained to have only isolated interests, fortunate when they do not become opposed precisely because of this isolation, humanity cannot walk.
Going backwards, she might get lost for a while, she must soon to return to the path of his destiny, which is progress; also that Will he get out of this problem today, noxious?

children, successors, heirs of the e...-tructeu.; of the temple of Solomon, in their races through the mountains; you. : of monu- Things had been thrown to the ground! So many ruins remained! ravaged ground! They went where the need for "efei"ion led them. first, then the need to satisfy the thoughts of a civia- tion new; the material work thus excited from two ect's to 1 This time was not to be missed, and indeed it was he who was the first. This era of Freemasonry allowed its works to flourish. sun, while waiting for the intellectual work to show itself and reveal his own.

During the seventh and eighth centuries, we see the corpora- tions to act, erect buildings, hold meetings which indicate, rather than specifying, interests other than those of work; but it was in 856 that, for the first time (1), one found in England the name of Freemason or Freemason written in the records of these associations; they exist at this time on the same basis in France and England, living in a perfect harmony, and calling workers from one country to another, where their presence is necessary, as had already been seen

(1) Picart, History of Religious Ceremonies, supplement. Acta Latomorum.

PARTS ne A LÉ US 2

—

tt,

OF FREEMASONRY. 209

long ago (1). For three-quarters of a century, these cor- Porations spread and organize themselves on a larger scale. and admit a greater number of men into their midst strangers to the art of building, who had been there for a long time already received, but which until now seem to have been received only in a small proportion; they become a fairly powerful force considerable enough that kings would appoint overseers for them, supposed marks of honor which are merely precautions cleverly disguised; lodges are being founded, not in France, but in several cities in England; finally, with the aim of regul- to streamline the association's operations as completely as possible, the The Grand Lodge of York was established in 926, under the Grand Mastership of Prince Edwin, the first modern Masonic power. One can clearly see, without a cloud in the sky, from where all the others, and for the first time also the hierarchy appears

Several sovereigns and princes were received in this Grand Lodge to which members paid a fee.

The construction companies to which we can immediately | | this Mmorucot gives the name of Freemason corporations | already enjoyed considerable privileges, undoubtedly due to their | works, as well as their persistence in the association, and which had been granted to them by the various dominant powers in turn in Gaul and Great Britain; the popes protected them openly admitted, fully acknowledged their immunities, | probably to reward them for what they were building | churches and monasteries; the King of England, Athelstan, in | appointing his son Edwin as Grand Master, granted them a | | patent which in reality placed them outside the common law, by allowing them to judge their disputes amongst themselves, to make regulations to which every Freemason would be required to adhere to put, by placing the public force at the disposal of the magistrates authorities responsible for punishing violations of these regulations (3). The

eee cg

(2) AI, id,

|

(4) Acta l'atomorum, 1. 1, p. 3. |

(5) Id., & 1, p. 2, from the manuscript of Elias Ashmole.

210 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the same patent allowed Freemasons to convene general meetings (1), and it is by virtue of this important concession that the brothers met in York, brought there their authentic titles written in Greek, Latin, French and other languages (2), and, after verifying them, having constituted themselves, formed a code containing the obligations that would henceforth- but to engage all the brothers in England and serve as a model to those of other nations.

From that moment on, as we can see, the Freemasons have an influence distinct in modern society; they build many palaces, basilicas, city walls, but there really is erect something other than physical buildings, and if they had not than drawing up plans, cutting stones, squaring pieces of wood, combining the forces of the timbers.:t":, what would be the use of admit- Are we to be part of the corporation of men unfamiliar with the art of building? These men have a role to play, which will be "hidden beneath the functions"

veiled by the very importance of the ordinary work of the corporation ration. .

From the date of this enthronement, we distinguish clearly in modern freemasonry the purpose of freemasonry
former; until then, through the regulations of the Macous brothers,
We can clearly see something other than the statutes of a corporation-workers' ration, but one understands rather than sees; there remains in the mind some obscurity; at this hour the transmission, the
The lineage of ideas is clearly traced; we find the trace lost.

It is curious to investigate what, at this time when the Freemasons are once again showing themselves on the world stage, the
The moral situation of the states where their presence is revealed. In the
In Gaul, the Christian bishops had acquired considerable authority.
health in the final convulsions of the Roman Empire which he put what little energy he had left at their command; they were de-came the plenipotentiary islands of the cities between Rome, which was moving away, and

(1) Acta Latomorum, 1.11, p.2, from the manuscript of Elias Achmole.

(2) Ibid., ibid., ibid., ibid.

ee

nee mé om

OF FREEMASONRY. 211

the Franks who were approaching (1). Continuator of the empire collapsed, they held back by religion those whom the conquest could not could no longer maintain, and still subjected them by this link to the Rome, which stood upon fallen Rome. Among the Barbarians who had launched attacks on Gaul from all directions, many were Christians, but professed Arian doctrines, such as the Huns and the Burgundians; it seemed quite natural that a rap-close ties took place between the Gallic Christians and the Christians conquerors, and that the identity of religious faith became a guarantee of alliance; the interest of the bishops ordained otherwise.

The church turned to the Franks, who were devoted to the worship of Odin.
completely foreign to Christianity, and whose leaders
The skilled ones soon understood what advantages, what strength could to give their conquest a close alliance with men whom they saw reigning supremely over the popular masses.
Skillfully entwined by the "wedding, by love, by chance"

Merovig (2), Clovis or Chlodowig (5), and with him some Thousands of soldiers, eager to please their leader, received the baptism—instead of brilliant ceremonies whose splendor astonished the Barha:cs. From that moment, the conquest of the Franks was assured, fiiiiiii that she was by all means at the bishops' disposal—
They wanted to be able to dispose of it; garrisons allied themselves with them, cities pas without fighting under their obedience; in turn, the Frankish Islands mar—
They heeded the voice of the bishops; their swords, always raised, were always ready to fall on the head designated for their blows; their armies, always prepared for invasion, went, drawn by the love of plunder, where religion seemed to call them in the name of God.

Thus the Arian Burgundians were struck down and subdued, and the cities
the banks of the Rhône and the Saône recognized the divinity of

(1) Sidoine Apollinaire, Scriptores rerum gallic. and francic., t. 1, p. 798. Augustin Thierry, History of the Conquest of England, 1.1, pp. 58 and 59.

(2) Spelling of Frankish names, according to Augustin Thierry, Letters on History

_ of France, 6th edition, p. 463.

(3) Spelling of Frankish names, according to Augustin Thierry. Letters on History of France. °

ee

to this 0 – mens me ee – me A lt

2 00 oo M om ee Qu Ge One come Om ee ee 00 DR ec pm memes

in ee me ae eq mn = pe + – nee mn in CAR ee me ee

ns 2 Em =

ee um, + me ee ee men Re cent nt ne ONE 0 “R0 JU 0 ee to OR eee ce ue of 2 Re had one to 3

⌘ 212 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

|

—_— ne de ann me = Sets _ _ _ +

Jesus; thus all the fires and all the devastations took place, Islands, city bags mentioned above, and everywhere you find the members of the clergy secretly in league with the Franks, conspiring in their favor against the Gallic, Gallo-Roman population, or descended from other conquering races; everywhere they are seen besieging the camp of the victorious leader, surrounding him with tributes and adulation,

to receive in exchange rich gifts stolen from churches.

Arians (4); a bishop goes so far as to write to the Soldier: "When you fight, we are the ones who triumph (2)."
While the nation was subjugated, while the races were subjugated

tochthones or successively implanted on the ground by the _ conquest were reduced to a state close to serfdom, that the Free Gallo-Roman landowner, he was assimilated to the lite, Germanic of the last condition, cultivator drilled from the estates of the warrior class (3), the priests, on the contrary, took their place with the conquerors within the workings of the governmental system which was being created.

The clergy were not satisfied with fleeting gifts which could They may provide wealth, but they do not establish real power. sustainable; he wanted to establish his domination over territorial property riale; he obtained allodial lands and benticies from the Frankish kings; The bishops did not limit themselves to receiving, they often employed... violence to seize property; various kings, and Charles-Magne, among others, had to repress the invaders several times. acts carried out by them, weapons in hand (4). Several these means further contributed to enriching the clergy: it acted sharply on the crude spirit of the Frankish warriors, tore them away numerous and significant donations in exchange for promises of paradise and other similar benefits. The laws at the editorial office tion in which the priests worked, because of their knowledge, together with the heads of state, they argued against bringing any hindering the donations that were intended for them; later, they they even regulated the forms of these donations according to the motive that...

(1) Scriptores rerum gallic. and francic., t. II, p. 586.

- (5) Augustin Thierry, Letters on the History of France, letter VII, p. 109.
(4) Guizot, Essays on the History of France, 5th edition, p. 86.

me 7 ne me

ee ne men en me ee mg nee RE +7 "ed ee Use en ==
ee on ose "me 00 de ne ce tr mt 2 - + 0 ne + on COMM Se

RSS D Se mm 0 = = =

ee +

_ - ee mme RE + "de ne ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 215

determined, for the remission of sins, for the salvation of the soul,
to lay up treasures in heaven (1). nn

The clergy had monopolized such a large portion of the wealth of the nation from the beginning of the eighth century, that Chilpe-Eric II (2) exclaimed: "Our tax system has become poor; our wealth » have been transferred to the churches :: the bishops alone reign;
"The splendor of our throne has vanished, and the bishops of the cities are..."
"invested (3)." A century later, Charlemagne, then Lothair were forced to resort to severe orders to prevent-dear to the abuses that arose from donations made to churches. He
It sometimes happened that the mayors of the palace or the kings, yielding to

The necessities of war temporarily took over the churches.

some of their domains; then it was a concert of complaints arose from all sides; so they invented miracles keys to understanding the need to restore to the clergy what had taken it; the land was being farmed in the name of heaven, and the (viques wrote in 858 to Louis the German a letter, : uricux monument of the spirit of the times, in which they
They listen to an ecstasy of Saint Euchère, Bishop of Orléans, who,
While in prayer, he was caught up into eternal life, and to whom the Lord showed Prince Charles-Martel subjected to the torments of the damned as a result of the judgment of the saints whose possessions he had stolen; the

but for the sins of all those who had given their possessions for the needs of Christ's servants and the poor, in order to redeem their souls. They added that Saint Eucher, having regained his senses, sent someone to visit Charles's tomb at Saint-Denis; they saw A dragon was brought out, and the sepulchre was found all blackened. inside as if it had been consumed; and, as a price for this Historically, they obtained the restitution of everything that could be recovered usurped ecclesiastical property (4).

In England, where the only Christians were the remnants of the Vanquished Cambrian nation, now relegated to a corner of

(1) Marculf, Formulaes, book. I.

(2) Hilperik, according to the spelling of Augustin Thierry.

(3) Gregory of Tours, Book VI

(4, Capitulaire of Baluze, 1. II, p. 109.

not ©

ee ee ee me 0e 0e

a me qe ee ne même

214 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

their former homeland, Pope Gregory the Great had tried, at the end

– from the sixth century, to make Anglo-Saxon kings and lords instruments of triumph, as the bishops had done Franks in Gaul. By his orders, young men of noble lineage Anglo-Saxon women, aged seventeen to eighteen, had been bought in slave markets, located in convents with the obligation to learn about Catholic doctrines in order to teach them in their country and in their language (1).

This method did not succeed, and the Pope, without being discouraged, had sent Roman missionaries to England, at the head of which was a monk named Augustine, initially quite unhappy with a such a mission, and accepting it only out of obedience. We find, From the earliest days of Christianity, the trace of the covenant the intimate relationship that develops between the Christian priest and the women, and wh It still lasts. The Saxon king Ethelbert, like Clovis, had married to the monks (2). He, who had initially received them with suspicion, He eventually allowed himself to be persuaded, was baptized, and made a gift to the pre-lots of houses and land, pledges of faith that they were accustomed to to ask. "I beseech your greatness and your munificence," they said—"They asked the king they were baptizing to give me land with you." "SCs returned, not for me, but for Christ, and to me from "to make a solemn act of transfer, so that in return it may come to you "A large number of possessions in this world, and yet another "Bigger in the other (3)." And things went on like that.

Augustine had taken the title of Bishop of Kent, but he aspired to be the primate of England and Gaul; the Pope, who could only restrain his ambition with difficulty, indeed granted him authority over all the prelates of England and denied him authority over the others. Thanks to the instructions he passed on to him, the monk proved easy for the pagans, merely changing the destination of their temples, and allowed them to continue in honor of Christ the sacrifices they made in honor of their gods; less

(1) Scriptores rerum gallic. and francic., t. IV, p.17. Gregorii papae epistola ad candidum presbyterum.

(2) Augustin Thierry, History of the Conquest of England, 1.1, p. 85.

(3) Gregory of Tours.

OF FREEMASONRY. 215

tolerant of the Cambrian bishops and archbishops who, without: ambition, without a desire for supremacy, had no fixed seat," they went preaching from one place to another, not however believing in original sin, and not damning children for their sins that they had not committed; Augustine had written to them to have to to recognize him as archbishop of the entire island, under penalty of incurring the anger of Rome and that of the Anglo-Saxon kings, and had assigned a conference on the banks of the Saverne. After two In interviews where he offended them with his pride, they refused to submit to him, not to change anything in their faith, and he rose up exclaiming: "Well then! Since you do not want peace "With Dr. Lières, you will be at war with enemies; since "* you refuse to teach with me the way of life to "Se: ns, before a short time, by a just judgment of God, they "They will be ministers of death to you (1)."

Shortly afterwards, an Anglo-Saxon tribe still pagan, led by her king, descended from the north towards the place even where the last conference had been held, defeated the leader of the province, had the bishops and monks massacred. The monasticwith Augustine, was completely destroyed (2), and the tradition national has since reiterated that the head of the new Anglo-Saxony had provoked the invasion and designated the convent to the Danes of the north.(5). ;

These men who slaughtered the monks of Bangor they themselves were soon to become Christians; this was yet another woman, Ethelberghe, sister of the King of Kent, who, married to the chief a pagan from the region north of the Humber, came to an agreement with a Roman priest extracted a secret from the confidences shared in the bridal bed. whose revelation to the priest allowed him to capture the imagination of the king and to make people believe in a miracle (4).

In the south of the Humber and north of the East Saxons, religion Christian beliefs and the old Teutonic faith coexisted.

(1) Bedæ Presbyt. histor. ecclesiast., book. NH, chap. NEITHER.

(4) Id., id., id.

(5) Augustin Thierry, History of the Conquest of England, 1.1, p. 97.

(5) I., id. id. 1, p.101,102, 105, 104.

A – Re mm mu

216 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

'friends enough to each have an altar in the same temple where

The king prayed in turn. It was [yet another woman who converted] to Christianity the head of the country HE enans of the Humber to the Thames.

England was subject to the Christian faith; the kings looked– they considered the best of their days to be the one where they could to found a convent to which they donated land, marshes, and ponds and waterways, which he held and possessed entirely, and of a royal manner (1). But there came a time when good intelligence The alliance was broken; it was the day the priest's superiority became established. to feel too heavily, where politics showed itself beneath the clothes priests. Then some of the kings of the country thought they saw the foreign law disguised as Catholic faith, and the some vigorously rejected him; others remained loyal to him; but Soon, swayed by public opinion, they repudiated all dependency of Rome, and limited themselves to surrounding it with marks of a respect that was insufficient for his ambition. From that point on enemies until the day she sent to William of Normandy

a banner and a ring, a double symbol of military investiture and ecclesiastic of the kingdom of England, and allowed him to do so center to reinstate there at dd the tax of the saint's penny Picrre (2).

This is the context in which Masonic societies appeared
They arise in France and England, and organize themselves in the latter country in a sustainable way and in a way that conquers a certain force. Without claiming that there is an absolute connection, a rel-While a direct link between these facts is important, it is not without interest to
to bring them closer together by shining the light of history upon them.

When modern Freemasonry begins its role, the Christianity had proclaimed the great truths taught before
He, within secret societies, had preached them more openly.
But in attacking evil, he had not destroyed it; slavery

still existed within Christian society, which did not

(1) Saron Chronicle, Gibson edition, p. 36.

(2) Chronicle of Normandy, Collection of the histories of France, vol. XI, p. 227.

mt: ENT

ee ne nn ne mnt ne Me ee

ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 217

= Mr

was astonished and not too irritated (1), and the bishops showed themselves were quite easy to deal with in this regard. The principles of Jesus and the pre-
The fundamental conditions for the existence of Christianity were forgotten.
in this respect; however, the church in general employed its influence to destroy an institution that was both a disgrace and an injustice; the formulas of emancipation are based on most of them for religious reasons, and he himself is always spoken while invoking religious ideas, the equality of men before God, the hopes of the future (2); but one does not find not in those early days the zeal to undermine slavery that one done ailier to the triumph of humanity.

However, it must be recognized and proclaimed, the Christia-uism should not be accused of the fact that the results obtained by they had something incomplete about him; it was in his essence to push the world in a different, radical direction, and, if society in which we will find Freemasonry would have passed naturally, peacefully, without external disturbance, from Roman paganism to the Christian faith, the end of persecutions brought with it, of all necessity, the complete triumph of the doctrines upon which this faith was based, slavery succumbed and went off with the pagan gods; but it was not only the conscience that was troubled; the empires were engaged in a fight to the death; the Barbarians who so readily accepted the baptism, perhaps obeying more in this respect a thought of opposition-tion than to a deep conviction, the victorious Barbarians bring-were fairly significant obstacles to the immediate accomplishment of the promises made by Christianity, which they did not understand without

They probably didn't understand, and it was in their best interest to understand correctly
if we consider the goal of their efforts.

The tumultuous entry of the Franks, the Vandals, and the Visigoths and other conquerors within the Christian church were delayed naturally, the application of the ideas she had proclaimed

First, it even had to modify them somewhat. Christianity.

- (1) Guizot, History of Civilization in Europe, 5th edition, p. 173.
- (2) Ibid., ibid., ibid., ibid.

Tree me

+
ee oo CORRE OR ee nn de ne

– ee mmm me PE

Sn mnt me au à

was not for them what it had originally been, the faith of the poor, the oppressed; it was, on the contrary, the religion of the victory.

They held different views on the social order. those he had uttered; their customs had nothing in common, identical to the customs of the Christians of Rome and Africa, and with those of the Gallo-Romans; they were, moreover, dominated through the pride of conquest, which begins by imposing its views and only eventually accepts the ideas of the conquered people, and the bishops, having acquired considerable influence over them, used them too often for the purpose of temporal domination and self-interest worldly.

If we do not separate the Masonic institution from its cult for the Great Architect of the universe, if we look at it, as well as We did it, like a religious school, you'll understand. Even better, his reappearance at that time. He was no longer: it the time of the Church Fathers, of those men of enthusiasm and genius, of these great poets of Christianity, stirring the questions—the deepest things, causing the flow of eloquence to run forth magical; the priesthood was in the hands of simoniacs; the high dignities were occupied by ambitious people, the inferior functions laughter delivered to ignorant people, speaking a barbarous language, not understanding the Latin prayers they were reciting, not knowing not even the formulas for the sacraments they conferred. Listen the judgment that contemporary writers pass on them:

a At the end of the ninth century, there was no Humber to the Thames, a single priest who had any idea of his service, nor who understood the liturgy, nor who was able to translate from Latin In English, a part of the Holy Scriptures; it was the same. beyond the Humber and south of the Thames (1).

"What a horrible sight the holy church must have been at that time!" Roman (in the tenth century), when infamous courtesans they disposed of the episcopal sees as they pleased, and, what is also terrible to pronounce and to hear, when they placed their lovers on the very throne of Saint Peter! Who

S 5% 5

(1) Alfred the Great, King of England, Heardman's book. Preface.

has -----
mm

OF FREEMASONRY. 219

could call legitimate pontiffs intruders who owed everything to Women of ill repute? Because we were no longer talking about electricity... clergy tradition: canons, papal decrees, the ancient "Traditions, sacred rites were buried in the deepest
"Oblivion; the most unbridled dissolution, worldly power,"
"The ambition to dominate had taken their place. Christ assured–"
"ment was then asleep in the bottom of his boat, while the Winds were blowing from all sides and covering her with waves of "Sea... and, what is even more unfortunate, the disciples"
"of the Lord slept more soundly than he; they could not–"
"They would not wake him with their cries or their clamor (1)."

This is the context in which Freemasonry emerged from the
A long period of oblivion had weighed upon her for centuries. She reveals herself almost simultaneously in England and in the north of the France. Its doctrines, and this is important to note, had,
in antiquity, spread to Asia, Africa, Greece, in Italy had penetrated into northern Europe, thanks no doubt to to the migrations of Asians around the Caucasus Mountains, but we find nothing in central Gaul that reveals the lineage of our ancient mysteries. It is therefore quite natural that its reappearance rition took place among men of the North, for we see it active in Normandy shortly after its establishment in the Great Britain. However, the difference in customs between the two
The people made their presence felt from the very beginning; in England, it was founded Methodically, she seems entirely peaceful; in Normandy, she manifested by vigorous actions, its first steps are com-Bats, the first question she raises is a social one.

The descendants of the first Franks lived in Normandy, separated from the native Gauls by social status (2). Little to However, customs, language, and interests gradually became intertwined;
This fusion took three centuries to occur. "Then there existed between the
"The Rhine and the Ardennes forest, in the territory that the Franks"
"They called it Oster-Rike, or the Eastern Kingdom (Austrasia), a » population in whom the Teutonic character had best withstood

(1) Baronius, Annals of the Church. From Potter, History of Christianity, t.1V, p. 33.
(2) Augustin Thierry, History of the conquest of England, L, 1, p. 177.

um me - ++ -

es ue = A mm

2

0 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

|
|
|
|
|
|
|
|
|
|
;

[L t
{

|
|
|
|
|
|

2 0 2 es nt es 3

»

»

»

2 + om in — m -e + e-e L
LD + + ee + ee ee RU ee ee ee ee ee
n.
PP GC Cm nee

influenced by southern customs. Arriving last at the conquest of Gaul, excluded from the possession of the rich provinces of the North, she aspired to usurp their share, and even to supplant the Franks in their domination of the Neoster-Rike or the western kingdom (Neustria). This bold project, pursued for a long time with varying degrees of success, was finally accomplished in the eighth century; and, in the form of extension, Far from a palace revolution, there was a real invasion of Austrasian Franks over Neustrian Franks. A second land division took place in almost all of Gaul, and arose a second race of kings, foreign to the first; the empire, by renewing itself, took on a more lasting character.

"Charles the Great, whom we call Charlemagne, could not, despite the resources of his genius, to melt into a single body

» so many diverse nations of origin, customs and language;

Beneath an appearance of unity, the natural isolation persisted, and to prevent the empire from dissolving at its inception, he The great emperor had to constantly lay his hand on it. So much During his lifetime, the peoples of the western continent remained agreeable. they were under his vast dominion; but they began to break away this sham union as soon as Caesar Frank was brought down, in imperial robes, in the sepulchral vault of Aachen.

"A spontaneous movement of revolt stirred almost simultaneously the nations allied against their will... The Franks drew their swords against the Franks, brothers against brothers, fathers against the sons. Three of Charles the Great's grandsons surrendered battle between them.

"It was in the midst of this chaos, when the civil war reigned from one end to the other of the immense Frankish empire, that the Danish or Norman Vikings (the latter name prevailed in Gaul) came to afflict this country with repeated invasions... Near A century passed between the first and last descent of the Normans in Gaul, and in this interval was accomplished, at amidst misfortunes of all kinds, the dismemberment of the empire founded by Charles the Great (1).

e

—

my ee eo me ee ee

te RS ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 221

Towards the end of the ninth century, Roll or Rollon, son of Rognvald, |
one of the top-ranking officials at the court of the King of Norway: |
Harald Fairhair was banished by this prince for a: * violation of the country's laws. Roll armed some ships and departed.
with many companions, and, after a race to the embou-Having reached the Scheldt, the fleet arrived in the Seine, which it then followed.
as far as Jumièges, five leagues from Rouen. No army prepared itself | sent to stop the pirates; terror spread to Rouen that the inhabitants despaired of being able to defend themselves; the archbishop from this city went to the Norman camp and concluded a
A truce was reached with Roll and his companions; they were able to enter the city.
promising not to do any harm to it.

They soon continued up the Seine to the confluence
From this river came the Eure, where they established their camp. The king Charles the Simple sent an army against them which was: entiredefeat. This victory was followed by a one-year truce, at the ex-aspiration from which the Normans seized several cities, attacked Burgundy and Auvergne, laying siege twice before Paris. The people voiced their grievances, and Charles negotiated with Roll, to whom Brittany and Normandy were given as fiefs die; the Norman chief was created count or duke, married one of the daughters of the king, received baptism, and swore faith and homage to Charles.

Then came the division of Normandy among the emigrants.
Norwegians (1); the country was divided by a ruler; all the lands deserted or cultivated, with the exception of those belonging to churches, were data, without regard to the rights of the natives, to the companions of Roll, chiefs or soldiers, who became lords according to their rank towns and countryside, sovereign owners of the domains large or small. The former owners were forced to withdraw or to hold from them their own farmland or in vassalage. The serfs had other masters, and men free men were subjected to serfdom (2). A line
A deep divide was established between the Normans by name and of race and the ancient indigenous population; the former, although

(2) Augustin Thierry, History of the Conquest of England, 1.1, p. 203.

ro ee 9 – me to =

— —

CS D ES

mime sea ©:

tent mere te à nas

summer © 0 a me and In in,

299 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

unequal in military ranks and dignities, were equal in rights civils; no one was taxed except with their consent; no one acquitted-toll was levied for the transport of its goods or for navigation tion on the rivers; all had the right to hunt or fish.
The former inhabitants, called peasants and villains, did not enjoy of none of these privileges, and groaned, on the contrary, under the more cruel oppression, burdened by taxes, by forced labor, by trials of all kinds before courts every day invented, plundered by the lords, by their men-at-arms, by their servants, seeing their livestock removed from the plow, and unable to obtain justice from anyone.

They grew weary of the vexations they had to endure, of Ja dis-
insulting distinction that existed between men, and wanted destroy racial inequality. Richard II, third successor of Roll, was at that time Duke of Normandy. Then he appeared in the towns, villages, and hamlets of Normandy an association

– which bears a striking resemblance to Freemasonry and seems to indicate its existence in this unfortunate country (1).

(4) A twelfth-century Norman poet, Robert Wate, in the Roman de Rou, – poem of Roll, Rollon, which in the Romance language was pronounced Rou, = has recounted to This episode of the peasant and villain revolt is strikingly naive.
we believe we should give here the verses of the poet from Normandy, one of the most curio

of literary interest are many words and phrases that have remained in various dialects, and others in those of the Lyonnais, the Dauphiné, the Bresse, the Cotentin, the Bessin, not are not alterations of the French language, as it is spoken today, but words and turns of phrase preserved from our old language, on which one could feel still all the influence of Latin.

Had not yet reigned

Ne gaires n'aveit duc esté,
When the country is at war
Ki dut grant mal ferre à la terre.
The peasant and the villain,

Cil del boscage è cil del plain,
I don't know what infatuation caused it,

Ne ki les meu primierement :
By vinz, by thirty, by cenz
Un tenuz plusurs parlementz.
Privately, a private conversation,

He had not yet reigned for very long,

Nor had there been much of the Duke,

When war came to the country
Which must have done great harm to the earth.
The peasants and the bourgeoisie,
Those of the plains and those of the woods,
I don't know what stubbornness,

Nor who first changed them,

By twenties, by thirties, by hundreds,
Several parliaments were held.

They are having secret talks,

t EE ER

OF FREEMASONRY. 293

It was in 997. Suddenly, without anyone being able to guess who had:
This spirit of resistance was instilled throughout Normandy, in the
In most cantons, the inhabitants began to gather on

They swore to each other.

Ke twinez par lur volenté
N'arunt seirfgnur ne avoé.
Seingnur don't hurt them;
Ne poent aveir od els raisun,

Neither their gain nor their labursegment.
Chescun jur vunt to great dolurs,
En paine sunt et en anhan.
Autar tu mal è pis cel an.

Te ju. sunt lur bestes prises
Pur aïes à pur servises;

So many complaints and quarrels

E custumes viez è nueles.

They cannot have an hour of peace.
Tuz en jur sunt semuns de plaiz:
Plaiz de forez, plaiz de moneies,
Glad of purprises, glad of veies,
Plea of bees, plea of sheep,
Pleasure of sinning, pleasure of all,
Plaiz d'aguaiz, plaiz de graveries,
Plaiz de medlées, plaiz de aïes.
Tant ia prevoz è bédels,

Being a bailiff come to nuevels,

They can have peace, no matter what
So many things make them sure;
Kil ne se pocnt desranier,
Chescun vult aveir sun luier.

Eventually they force their beasts to take hold,
Hold nes' poent, ne defend.
They cannot heal themselves;

Terres ur estuum guerpier.

They can have no guarantee,

Neither towards the lord nor towards the sergeant;
They are bound by no covenant:
Filz to...

Pure kei nus laissum damagier?
Metum nus fors de lor dangier

Tex membres avum cum ilunt,
Et altresì granz cors avum

And alertant sofrir poum;

We must not have more heart than we need.

Above them there is neither lord nor master.
The lords are only acting maliciously;
Justice cannot be obtained.

Not even the price of labor.

The days pass in pain;
Everyone is in pain and sighing.
Last year was bad, this one is worse.

Every day their livestock are captured,
They are required for the chore;

It's nothing but complaints and quarrels.
Old and new forms of justice.

They don't have an hour of peace.

Every day is filled with blankets:
Market blankets, currency blankets,
Path blankets, woodland blankets,
Grinding and channel blankets,
Tribute blankets, tax blankets,
Blankets for the water, blankets for chores
Emergency blankets, melee blankets (for combat).
There are so many provosts and beadles,
So many bailiffs, old and new,

They are burdened with so many loads,

That they do not have an hour of peace;
Justice knows no bounds.

Everyone wants their share of the spoils.

They force their animals to take them,
They are powerless to defend them.
One cannot protect oneself,

And we must leave the land.

We cannot have any guarantor,

No pact holds with them.

Pleasures 6nt swore that never
We wouldn't make them recognize them |

Why let us be harmed?

Let us tear ourselves away from this danger.

We are men just as they are;

We have members like they have,

Bodies as large as theirs,

Being able to suffer the same pains;
We only lack the heart.

_e _ _ _ me «#
D RER – RE A ES De ne ee 2 _

Rte ee + Re Re en 2 en eine non ne

224 ee ee mm

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

In the evening, after work, they would talk about their troubles, about their suffering, listening to their orators brandishing the great question of equality of men, indicating the means of shaking the

Alum bare by oath,
Nos avoir è nus desfendum.
É tuit ensemble nus tenum;
They are naked, veiled warriors,
Well, I had against a knight
Thirty or forty palzans, Maneuversable and combatants.

Malveis serunt se came u thirty
Bachelor de bele juvente,

None of them dared to defend themselves;
If they steal it together, take it.

A machues è à grant peus,

A sajetes et as tineus,

With bows, with axes, with swords,
And as stones that will have no weapons;

Od la grant genz ke nus avum,
Naked knights defended.
Einsi porum aler as bois,

Abres trenchier è prendre à choi;
We live to take our lives,

And as forez li veneisuns;

De tut ferum nos volentez

Of wood, of ewes and of prez.

By these sayings and by these words,
And by other, even more foolish ones,

Unt tuit ce cunscil granté,

They are between sworn.

Ke tuit ensemlé se tendrunt,

And together they defended themselves:
Esliz unt ne sai kels ni kanz

Des plus kuint è des miex parlanz,
Ki par tuit li paiz irunt

E li serement rechevrunt.

Ne pot estre lunges celée

Words to aunts, Genz, carried.

Fust par hume, fust par serjant,
Fust par fame, fust par enfant,
Was it through drunkenness, was it through anger,
Asez lost oï Richard dire

Ke vilains cumune faseient,
E ses dreitures li tellreint
To him and other lords

What common villains did,

Let us unite by an oath,
We will defend our fortune.

And together we will hold on.
And if they want to wage war against us,
We will be up against a knight
Thirty or forty peasants,
Well-disposed and combative.

Those in their twenties or thirties would be cowards.

Young fellows of ardent temperament,
Who could not defend themselves against one?
Together, if they wanted to take it.
With sledgehammers and spears,
Arrows, gnarled sticks,
Bows, axes, gisarmes (halberds),
Stones for those without weapons,
Thanks to the number we will have,

Knights will defend us.
That way we can go to the woods.
Trees cut down and take as desired;
At the fishponds, take the fish,
In the forests, venison;
We will do as we please,
In the woods, in the waters, on the meadows.
With these words and these words
And by others even crazier,
The projects were halted.
Then they took their oaths.
That they will all stand together,
Then they will defend themselves together.
They elected, I don't know which or how many,
Most sensible, most articulate
Who will go to all countries,
And the oaths will be received there.
It could not be hidden for long.
A voice given to so many people.

Either per woman, or per child,
Whether through drunkenness or anger,
Richard quickly heard,

His privileges were contested
To him as to the other lords

L]
0
"A AGE CRE" = at

4
— eo © me ee mem 2nd me in min 04 min + nie cte

+

OF FREEMASONRY. 225

yoke of the lords. These were not tumultuous assemblies.
in the public square, as happens in the moments

Ki vilains unt è vavassurs. Having vilains and vavassors.

To Ruol his uncle sent; To Raoul his uncle sent,

This is the business at this point. This revolt told him. :

Quens is from Evreux, very valiant, He is Count of Evreux, valiant,

Very knowledgeable about many things. 'In many things, very learned.'

Sire, he said, stay in peace; Sire, he said, remain in peace,

Li paisanz à mei lessiez, Etles paysans me laisser;

Never move your feet; you don't have to take a step.

Send me your households, but send me your soldiers instead.

Send me your knights, —" Send me your knights.

Richard said to him: Gladly.

| Dunc envéia en severalurs lieux Il envoya par les sentiers
His spies and his couriers.

| By spies inquiring and spies learning,
Both sick and healthy people

K'il ataint è prist li vilains, Qu'il atteinteit, pris les villains,

Ki justoent li parlemens When they held their parliaments

"And they would keep the oaths."

Raol was extremely talented; Raoul became very angry;

Nes' vout mener à jugement ; Il n'enjudiit pas leur affaire,

You fist them sad è dolenz: Made them all sad and doleful;

He had several people's teeth milked, and had some people's teeth pulled out.

And others fisted, J1 had the others impaled,

To milk the oils, to cut the fists. To pull the eyes, to cut the fists;

Li altres fist tuit vifs broilir, Ceci-ci était brûlé vivant,

And others in plumb boiler; The other sprinkled with boiling lead;

Tuz les fist isi conréer. Ainsi les fit accommoder _

They were hideous to behold: How hideous they were to look at.

They were not seen in any place, nowhere were they seen again

If they were not well known there.

The cumune is so much; The commune remained there,

They did not do well, vile things seemed. The villain no longer assembled.

They all withdrew and resigned.

Of what they had undertaken,

For the sake of their friends, fearing the fate of their friends

They saw themselves defeated and badly mistreated. All mutilated and badly off.

The rich were rich, and the rich redeemed themselves,

E by their burse they acquitted themselves; And by their purse acquitted themselves;
They left them nothing to take, they took everything they could take;

| De tant cum l'um pout raendre: They sweated all they could give.
Such pleasures made their stings, Thus the lords treated them of popular excitement, but meetings that reveal an affiliation and what the writers of the time themselves call conventicles (1). This was not only on a few points that the question of emancipation was raised; the association expanded everywhere, in the cities, in the countryside; she embraced all the classes of the 'native' people who found themselves equal under the level of oppression as before the Great Architect of the universe. The affiliates divided themselves into different circles; there were at least one in each county, and each of these assemblies selected several of its members to form a circle

superior, a sort of central lodge (2); the latter was responsible for preparing and organizing throughout the country: the means of resistance and uprising; it sent from cantons In cantons, from village to village, men who had a reputation for eloquence, enjoyed public esteem,

to speak at affiliate meetings and receive oaths new members.

In the division of land among Roll's companions, the church properties had been respected; however, the upper the clergy, because of its French origin, did not participate in the pre-First time, part of the court of the Dukes of Normandy; when a large number of men of Norwegian or Danish race had embraced the ecclesiastical state, a distinction of rank and privilege villages continued to exist, even in monasteries, among themselves and the other clerics (3). Whether the functions of the church were entrusted to men of the conquering race, whether the pretres, as they had done constantly in previous centuries teeth, confuse their interests with those of the lords Normans, whether they exercised the same rights on their lands vexations attributed to them, or finally that the clergy began

(1) Per diversos totius normannicæ patriæ comitatus plurima agentes conventicula. Willelm. Germet (Guillaume de Jumièges), Hist. normann., apud scriptores rer. normann.;, p. 249.

(2) Abunoquoque cætu futis vulgi duo eliguntur legati, qui decreta ad mediterræ-

(5) Depping, History of the Norman Maritime Expeditions, vol. II, p. 12. Augustia Thierry, History of the Conquest of England, vol. 1, p. 207.

OF FREEMASONRY. 297

to demonstrate this constant hatred against the Masonic institution of which he would later give so much proof, it happened that the

The oppressed people found themselves completely separated from their rulers.
spiritual. The priests did not limit themselves to particular efforts To halt the association's progress, they took to the pulpit, and, from this tribune from which proclaimed words were to descend upholding equality, they fulminated excommunication against those who were trying to conquer her.

The association was spreading and had not yet revealed itself by no act of rebellion, when she was denounced to the court of Normandy, where this news caused alarm. The young Duke Richard consulted his uncle, the Count of Évreux, on the party that was available to preudre, and he undertook a special expedition against key members of the affiliation. The spies played the main role; they discovered the time and place where held the meeting of the central lodge; on their reports, the count d'Évreux marched his troops and stopped all the leaders of this Freemasonry, some while they were holding session, the others while they received the oaths in the villages.

The hatred of the people, the hatred of equality, of which the Count of Évreux and the knights who accompanied him were animated, burst forth in This occasion was marked by extreme violence. There was no respect.
even the forms of justice, and without bothering to put
The prisoners on trial were treated with horrible cruelty; they were subjected to the most horrific tortures; a an unparalleled refinement of barbarity. Some had their eyes gouged out, fists cut off, teeth pulled out, hamstrings burned; others were impaled, burned alive, doused with molten lead. Those who did not
They did not succumb to these torments and were sent back to their homes.
thousands, paraded everywhere to spread terror; the rich
The poor redeemed themselves by giving away everything they had.
returned to their plows (1); the members of the affiliation, either the speed of the Count of Évreux's movements had

(4) Guillaume de Jumièges, p. 249. Jean Nagerel, Histoire et Chronologie de Normandie, p. 48.

298: PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

. intimidated, either because the spies who were watching them had played a role.

an even more infamous role in order to stop the insurrection, namely that the Fear proved stronger than the love of liberty; the bourgeois and The peasants of Normandy did not rush to arms, did not did not rise up en masse, did not contest the victory, and fell back—rent for a long time yet under oppression.

However, this Freemasonry will leave its seeds in the...

country; the association dissolved by force was, or secretly continued, or reconstituted later, by a small number of chosen individuals, and a few centuries later everything erupted on the borders of this Normandy, the scene of his first sufferings, another insurgency regency, also repressed by treason and by rooftops who seemed to want to legitimize in advance the saddest representations sailles.

In England, no sooner had the funcisconnere been instituted, that important events were pushing her back into darkness from where it barely casts a glimmer of light from century to century. While the country was given over to the bloody struggles that marked the short What was the role of Danish domination over the Anglo-Saxons? This association? What action did it take during this war? national history marked by successive invasions, defeats, and Murders, betrayals, torture? Did she take up arms to to chase away the conquerors, when Godwin, after having, in his game—Nesse, who served the Danes, to whom he owed his rise to the highest ranks high-ranking officials in the administration and the army, spoke out with his son Harold, who fought for the country's independence against all Danes.

king or pretender, leader or soldier (1), put an end to the domination of Scandinavians, and placed the Norman woman's son, Edward, on the throne? The history of that time, full of fantastic tales, like that of all the eras in which two races are in conflict, remains silent on the Masonic brotherhood; but it is permissible to think that it bravely defended the interests of the fatherland, for scarcely Edward is it acknowledged that he declared himself, in the very year of his accession,

- (1) Henry Knygthon, On the Events in England, book . ch. 6.
- (2) Acta Latomorum, t. I, p. 4.

A ASS Re Re Po mm = Re Qun

OF THE FRENCH-NASON. 229

Leofrik, who a few years later became governor of the pro-central vices of England.

The records are also silent on her conduct.

during the invasion of William the Conqueror; we only know that the Freemason brothers were beginning the construction of the tower of London, from the wooden bridge and the old Westminster Palace-ter (4), around the time when the Saxon monarchy fell under the blows of the bastard of Normandy. The successors of William protected their meetings, granted them new privileges legends; the association penetrated into Scotland, where Great Britain was founded. L.cze of Kilwinning, under whose jurisdiction they placed themselves soon all the Scottish lodges; in this country, as in In England, the march was becoming more regular, the hierarchy was established. But a completely new war was stirring up the European nations. scarcely formed, it put an end to internal dissensions, precipitating- The West was silenced about the East in the name of an idea. It's not that the principle from which this war stemmed was as new as the war itself; It had already been debated, but for the first time it involved outside the continent, the peoples guided by him; an energetic reaction gic manifested itself against the Saracens, who were not long ago dominant

. members of this Europe who rose today at the voice of a hermit pilgrim, and who, believing he was only following a movement religious, but nevertheless obeyed a grand political ideology. 1] The power of the religious idea should not be underestimated; it is, in its origin, the apparent lever in the eyes of those who they follow the movement, without really realizing it; she seems to act alone, and there is, to support it, a spirit of nationality still unknown in Europe, which reacted against the Arabs, remained-masters of part of the continent, driven from north to south to the borders of Spain, and which is continued along the shore of Africa; there is a vague desire to study, to learn about the civilization of Asia- tion of the Orient in its varied forms, a need to compare that which is with that which was, and which brings peoples back to their cradle; there is also in this expedition a remnant of love for conquests, finding no satisfaction in

(1) Acta Latomorum, t. }, p. 4.

250 HISTORY COULD HAVE A ...

in the midst of a society whose members, barely emerging from chaos, tended to harmonize.

These are the great causes that could be enough to change the state nations, joined, for the popular masses, the souff-

Frances of the misery born of internal struggles and a terror-

a famine that marked the era of the First Crusade; for the great, the ambition to conquer lands, estates,

principalities, an ambition that became clearly evident when they wanted to stop in Asia Minor and settle there, sar: to go further on. That would be the end of the project to liberate the Holy Land, s: the

The thought that was dying out within them had not yet stirred the popular masses.

composing the army, if they were not forced to advance by these masses who did not come to enrich Raymond de Tou- |

neither louse, nor Boémond de Tarente, nor the other obscure captains of | | the expedition, but want to march on Jerusalem, to avenge the men who madly followed Peter the Hermit and Fexec

Adhemar, and were massacred by the Turks.

Any long and important expedition, having a character

In general, like the crusades, its first result was to tighten

the links of fraternities, of secret societies widespread in the country whose citizens will take part in the action. By throwing themselves in the dangers of the unknown, far from home, on lands

unexplored places where customs, language, and religion are different

or enemies, men like to rely on something more than the ordinary sentiment that animates armies;

They draw, if not more courage, at least a greater trust in the promises and commitments of associations

particular; united by a mysterious bond that adds to the strength of a community of ideas by giving them the means to

They know that in a rout they will find a necessary assistance, such as the care of personal preservation and the selfishness of days of misfortune will not make them abandon on the battlefield, that a hand will tend to their wounds, a arms will support their faltering steps.

If it is permissible to count the effects of the crusades on France-

masonry alongside the major changes they brought about in the social state of Europe, and of France in particular, one

L°

can see that the first crusade, which stirred so powerfully imaginations, stirred nations in the name of an idea, had for as a consequence of giving associations more activity in mon-giving an immediate goal to the initiates. The Freemasons who did part of the crusades would at the same time reinvigorate their beliefs in primitive sources, drawing more strength and energy from them energy. |

A society then formed in Jerusalem, which became famous for the rage she displayed, the battles she fought, by her victories, through the persecutions to which she was subjected and the torture of these leaders; it is the Order of the Temple, founded in 1118, to which Beau-Douin IT granted permission to establish themselves under the forecourt, and that the Patriarch Honorius admitted him into his jurisdiction, giving him a provisional status.

Created by nine of the principal knights who had gone to the conquest of the Holy Land, his aim was then to rescue, to defend and care for the pilgrims who visited the tomb of Jesus; religious faith, ardent at that time, the glory that the knights They soon acquired, in their struggles against the Muslims, awakened noble ambitions, and the most illustrious families sought the honor of having representatives there,

The Templars, in the ceremonies that accompanied the The reception of new members brought forms which seem borrowed from the masonry then widespread on various points in Europe; they found themselves, at the time of their most great splendor, face to face with this famous association of the Secret Doctrine, which we have already discussed, which commands for a long time the Old Man of the Mountain, and who kept the name of the Order of Assassins; they had to wage wars against it very lively armies; they sometimes had to oppose cunning with cunning, and the were finally forced to pay tribute. In nominal relations- numerous events that took place between these two bodies so close together, they were able to borrow from each other; therefore, it is not surprising that striking analogies have been found in their uses (1).

When Theoclet, Patriarch of Syria, instituted the order of

(1) De Hammer, History of the Order of Assassins.

born ---

Temple in Palestine, he entrusted the deposit to the nine crusader knights early Christian doctrines as they had developed served, from the philosophical initiation of Alexandria to the era of the Crusades, on the land where Jesus had preached the new old law.

They are founded on the unity of God manifested by three attributes of his infinite essence, namely: the being of God in itself, which the intellect of the human soul can grasp @« a priori; the action of God, or his infinite activity, revealed to the material being through the movement of matter and its successive transformations; finally, the intelligence of God, that is to say, order and wisdom of its immutable laws.

This doctrine admitted the creation of matter and intelligence.

“human being or soul within the essence of God, in which the immeasurable universe is immersed, according to the expression of the apostle Paul: /n Deo vivimus el movemur.

According to this belief, all beings formed from a body and of an intelligent soul are not only creations of God, but also manifestations of his being, children of God.

The principle of the human fraternity and the obligation of the law of love as it has was taught by Mary's son.

While the Western churches were dividing among themselves by constantly recurring schisms, resulting from interpretations various questions on the dogma of God and on the nature of Christ, and that they could find no other way to escape the controls. verses of free inquiry rather than immobilizing all these doctrines through an act of faith, the philosophical forms of the first initiations were preserved in Syria as a benefit rendered to the freedom of the spirit. We remembered the master on this earth where He had lived, and, following his example, tolerance was preached and the love of his brothers. This was how the crusader knights received—rent, in the form of initiation, the teaching of Christianity primitive as practiced by Jesus, and this was through initiation that they kept it among themselves.

The power of the Roman Curia imposed on the Templars the obligation—They are committed to keeping their rite secret, but there is no mystery.

ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 255

that jealous Rome could not investigate further; her jealousy was great when she saw the rich and powerful Order of the Temple growing each day the number of its followers and its means of action. Clement V and Philip the Fair then set about destroying it. Two expelled Templars fabricated accusations; they served as a pretext for the condemnation and the prohibition imposed on May 12, 1312.

At the moment when the Order of the Temple was falling under the blows of the royalty and the papacy, it had more than 15,000 in Europe knights, possessed immense wealth, provided roads to Spain served as a buffer zone for Portugal against attacks incessant attacks by the Moors of Spain.

It was not without regret that the King of Portugal complied with the decision of the Council of Vienna which had pronounced the abolition of the Templars.]1 needed devoted and courageous men to defend the Algarve border; he obeyed the council, and found a way to retain the Templars by creating the order of Christ. The idea of order was condemned, but he saved its material aspects. because of his possessions, his commanderies, his costume, his insignia, except for the addition of a small white cross on the cross patée of red wool, were kept for the new knights of the Christ, of whom the Portuguese Templars became the first nucleus.

The tacit approval that the Pope gave to this kind of reconstituted status under another name, and especially the right that it reserved for him and his successors the creation of knights of the Christ, are sufficient clues which already in 1519 could to shed light on the secret motives behind the judgment that had struck the Templars (1).

Indeed, the difference that exists between the constitution of the order proscribed and that of the order which was formed from its remnants is all a revelation. The Order of the Temple was sovereign, that is to say that it was not subject to any monarchical or ecclesiastical power tick; this independence was one of the greatest grievances against him; that of Christ also did not obtain the sanction of the court of Rome

0 qe ue had to ee ee eee ee ee ee ee RS Reed Ad ce 0 ne ee ee OR On

—_—ns 0 Liane +: «

ee = pe ne

| Re —

254 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

that is on the condition that the Pope alone appoints his knights. Given this condition, it is likely that the Order of the Temple would never have been banned.

The return to Europe of the Knights Templar and members of various orders created in imitation of this one, when the Palestine was lost to the Christians, must have contributed to restoring to the New Freemasonry, the forms of the old, that these orders had been found in the cradle of the institution. It is quite believed It is generally believed that secret societies were founded in Scotland. with the remains of the Templars, and some authors attribute to The latter led to the creation of the Scottish Rite within Freemasonry.

"The similarity of the principles taught, a great analogy between the legend of Hiram and that of the mystical Templar written after the The death of Jacques Molay gave rise to this opinion.

The Order of the Temple did not succumb at the pyre of Pont-Neuf; the Grand Master, near death, designated his successor, and, Since then, this dignity has been fulfilled to this day. If the chief exists— Nothing was said, nothing leaked about the members' work, and it is quite probably that Freemasonry has covered with its cloak the outlawed order.

From a religious point of view, the Order of the Temple, as it existed Today, he is above all tolerant. His faith is purely philosophical. physics. Here are the basics:

To recognize an infinite God in his power, his wisdom and his justice, filling by itself the immensity of space and of

could not be.

To acknowledge an intelligent and indestructible principle of our being, a soul responsible for the good or bad use of our freedom, a soul destined for a future life, without determination of its state of this victory. The order leaves everyone free to consider this future life as the direct punishment or reward for acts of this one, or as a new existence in which can to include as an element the perfections or imperfections moralities, a result of our past conduct and the efforts we we have done to become better.

Proclaim the great principle of universal brotherhood, the basis

Sd ee 2

—...

—

me —

OF FREEMASONRY. 255

fundamental to all freedom, to all equality among men, without which there can be no justice, no love of one's neighbor, of devotion, finally, towards an isolated pain or an ailment to be social.

To believe in progress, that is, in the manifestation of the goodness of God is at the heart of our well-being. Everyone is free to... to take for the voice, the word, the manifestation or the incarnation of God, the voice of every man inspired by his love, his justice

tice, which comes to announce a principle or truth useful to us our improvement.

These are the general principles of the doctrine of order; As for its purpose and current trends, they naturally derive from trullement of the exposition of his doctrines.

The Order of the Temple has convents in the main cm bone

—

The customs 0 me ms «memes mé 0 ES nm ©

m—— mt me. + -e me DD em + 0 + mn ms = Eee 2 © in 0 ns

= 2

256. PHILOSOPHICAL MYSTERY

CHAPTER EIGHT.

The English clergy joins Freemasonry; the kings oversee it and provide it with its officers — Persecution; Parliament abolishes Masonic meetings by bill; the bill soon ceases to be executed. — Alternatives of prosperity and impotence under Henry VI, Henry VII and Elizabeth. The Earl of Esses and the Duke of Somerset, alternately Grand Masters, are beheld. Charles I joins Freemasonry. — Masonic brotherhoods in Germany and Switzerland. — Initiation into the ancient Egyptian mysteries is substituted for the reception ceremony. The first symbolic grade is taken from antiquity. — Political tendencies. — Formation of the Grand Lodge of England. Strange period: ceremonies, changes, rivalries, orgies, quarrels. Head waiters, a quarrel over aprons. Disputes over jurisdiction between the two powers; Encyclical letter; division within English Freemasonry, pamphlet war. — Resurrection brilliant. Freemasonry appears simultaneously in all parts of the continent. It is established in France, Russia, Holland, and Italy. — The Freemasons were not long in being persecuted; Prosecutions; imprisonments, proscriptions.— The Inquisition and Freemasonry. — Extension of the order in France; the English Grand Lodge declares itself Grand Lodge of the Kingdom and provinces. Creation of the Grand Orient of France.

he himself has purchased of joint the bishop of Winchester, the Archbishop of Canterbury succeeded him — tooth; one perceives this high influence which, in the patron, aspires to dominate him.

For a period of one hundred and fifty years, the confraternity seems to have been particularly concerned with the construction of colleges and other monuments; however, His actions must not have been limited to these material works. riels, because here appears the first regular parliamentary act, governmental, made by the government against them; it's a bill

OF FREEMASONRY. 237

rendered in 1425, during the minority of Henry VI, at the instigation of Duke of Beaufort, Archbishop of Winchester, Governor of young king, and by which it is forbidden for masons to hold to the future neither chapters nor congregations: "Whereas, by the » congregations and confederations formed each year by them In their general assemblies, good order is disrupted, and that the effect of workers' statutes is publicly inter-broken, in violation of the law, and to the detriment of all the communes, our sovereign and king, wishing to oppose a a remedy for this evil, with the advice and consent of the communities as mentioned above, ordered and established that in the future he will not hold no more such chapters and congregations, and that, if he were bound Under some pretext or other, they would be found guilty of felony, and that the masons who attended would be apprehended to the body and punished with a fine and ransom at will of the king (4). » |

This bill is unfortunately not explicit enough, and cannot to appreciate the danger that, in the legislator's mind, the holding Masonic chapters could cause problems for the society; but he must have been considered very tall for the holding of the assemblies to the felony was treated as an act of felony, for one could not suppose to impose such strictness without justification.

Abandoned during the civil wars sparked by the houses of York and Lancaster, in which his role is still unknown, The corporation recovered under Henry VII, who himself presided over the Grand Lodge in the capacity of Grand Master.

Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, a favorite of Henry VI, was appointed by him to the highest rank in the order, then the year the following woman carried her head on the scaffold; but the acts of the free-Freemasonry appears completely unrelated to his disgrace. II was replaced by the Duke of Sommeset, who, like him, perished under the executioner's axe. Thus, two men who had occupied the the highest office of Freemasonry died of a violent death, one caught up in court intrigues, the other immolated by religious and political hatreds, without the order

(1) 4cta Latomorum, t. I, p. 7.

me D - 2

+2 me

LR SR ee ee

Re tn me mme = © ne 0 — nuance + Ce ONE Me ent + DS Le 060 Eee ÉD RS men S0 ee ane mt ms one to re

,

mm a mock eee Re ee do men 2e ne Re RS ee —ntendee 0e 0ÈS RRRR —

— — — — — = 2 —. sm

238 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

did nothing, as far as we know, to save them. During the long troubles during the reign of Henry VIII and the youth of Edward VI, its action is entirely nil, or at least not noticeable—than nowhere.

Numerous lodges were founded in England under Elisabeth; but soon the queen grew suspicious, sent some armed men to disperse the large annual assembly December 27, 1561 in York; the officers who commanded the Detachments were introduced into the lodge, where they received initiation. and gave the queen such a favorable report that she revoked her first orders and later became the protector of the masons (1). James I also favored them; Charles I was one of their grand masters (2), and his presence in the lodges brought about a large number of lords.

In France, Germany, and Switzerland, the brotherhood of Freemasons built bridges, churches, colleges, thus responding to a threefold need for commerce, religion, and science. Cologne, Valenciennes, Strasbourg, Wurzburg, Bern, saw their beautiful cathedrals rise up, in which one finds columns bearing the mysterious inscription J... B..., of the ornaments that bear an eternal stigma indicating the order to which belonged those who sculpted them. One put to cons—to build these magnificent buildings over many years, each generation persisted, and on each floor hieroglyphic signs reappeared.

the meaning of which is quite clear to affiliates.

The masons who took part in the construction of the cathedral of Strasbourg, like those of Solomon's temple, were divided.
in masters, journeymen and apprentices; secrecy reigned, as today, at their initiations; their attributes were, as they
They still are: the square, the compass, and the level; men Those unfamiliar with the art of building were admitted into the guild, in so that it is impossible to deny that there was a independent thinking from the profession; here and in England,

- (1) Acta Latomorum, 1. 1, p. 10 and 11.
- . (2) English chronologists.

OF FREEMASONRY. 239

the process was the same with regard to the regular establishment of the power. The Strasbourg lodge conquered all those of Germany had a superiority which earned it the title of Grand Lodge;
the workshops of the countries located on the Moselle, those of Saxony, of the Bavaria, Swabia, and Franconia recognized its supremacy.
tie and recue its direction. The act which proclaimed the head of the lodge of Strasbourg as the sole and perpetual grand master of the the general brotherhood of Freemasons of Germany was passed on to Regensburg, April 25, 1459, between the masters of the various lodges who had gathered there.

At the same time, the various workshops in Switzerland recognized-rent that of Bern for the Grand Lodge; in 1502, this seat was transferred to Zurich, where considerable work had been undertaken colleagues; but, twenty years later, the association was accused of having interfered in matters that fell outside the scope of her responsibilities;
The Grand Master, summoned before the Diet, did not appear, obeying probably at the behest of the brothers; the lodges were abolished in all the states of the Swiss Confederation that, and forevermore, said the act of the diet.

Freemasonry had flourished for several centuries.

in Scotland, under the direction of the Grand Lodge of Kilwinning,

but under the authority of the king, whose approval was submitted the nominations of the chiefs.

This is how Freemasonry arrived in the middle of the tenth century.

seventh century; the institution was expanding; the method of initiation, modified, altered during the long years in which it lay dormant,

during the turmoil that prevented any concern for forms, was brought back to its original meaning. It seemed to have long forgotten the old customs, and perhaps also somewhat the meaning that should be attached to it; we returned to it in 1646, in London; the reception of the neophyte into the first degree symbolism was once again borrowed from antiquity, recalling the Mysteries of Egypt and the initiation of Zoroaster. Two years later
| Later, the association's political leanings became apparent
Clearly, but almost simultaneously, the friends of royalty, the supporters of King Charles Stuart, who had just died on the scaffold
They tried to draw the order into royalist plots,

– 2 mt =

240 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

by diverting it from its purpose and making it forget its origin. The rest
The century passes in alternative paths to prosperity without result.
and well-deserved obscurity.

The eighteenth century, as it opened up, found the Freemason-laughter in a rather sad situation; for fifteen years, London had no grand master; the annual solemnities, where the voice Speakers make their voices heard, where the principles are reiterated.
the duties retraced, where zeal is rekindled, where the bonds of the DE fraternity is tightening, was no longer celebrated; the number of |
The lodges were reduced to four, which derived their constitutions from the Grand Lodge of York. This lukewarmness, however, ceases; the brothers gather, talk of electing a leader, and temporarily form themselves ramentally in the Grand Lodge. This nascent power holds its first meeting on June 24, 1717, appoints its grand master, gives itself to himself the exclusive privilege of authorizing the creation of new lodges, declares that no one will be recognized as legitimate before having obtained the approval of the Grand Master and the approval of the assembly general. The Freemasons of London, the Masters and Guardians' lodges renounce all special privileges, recognize the authority of this Grand Lodge of England, which nothing contradicts for all of southern Great Britain.

Statutes were drawn up and adopted as general law; the Archives were formed, and a large number of documents were gathered there.

manuscripts and old charters; several new lodges

| opened and saw isolated masons arriving within them,

| happy to find a link between them. The order's celebrations were celebrated with great pomp and public processions; the discipline

| An inner Pliny was organized, and men from all over England

| the whole community revered them as scholars were elevated to the highest dignities

| high.

A few years later, an irreparable tragedy struck the Grand Lodge of England, and preluded by the fire to a

a deplorable period; brothers whose motives were never

well-known, or at least explained, were consigned to the flames

many ancient manuscripts, and among others a work ren-

closing, it is said, with very extensive details on the origin and purpose of the institution (1). It is probable that some wretched fanatic-

OF FREEMASONRY. 241

who had come to breathe his vandalistic inspirations into men weak ones that he misplaced. The manuscripts that escaped the fire were gathered together, given to a brother who used these documents to make the book

constitutions (2). |

The Grand Lodge of northern England or York does not live without displeasure or worry the establishment of a second

power; a silent rivalry began between these two centers of direction; it soon burst forth.

Here begins a strange phase, unprecedented until now, and which will show how far the human mind can descend in its e-rements, when he no longer knows how to address the soul and stops at the epidermis. Men who do not grasp the concept of order into which they entered, for reasons unknown, or which have some secret interest in diverting him from his path, do not seek

in the meetings that the means to satisfy their sensuality, and

They forget themselves to the point of forcing the authorities to issue decrees.

regulating the distribution of wine and spirits. Discussions arise regarding precedence and require regulations that establish the everyone's right in this matter; vain puerility takes the

the place of true dignity; instead of engaging in the study of their ranks, trying to understand the difficult emblems

to delve deeper into the problems

social issues whose solution matters to humanity, companions and apprentices aspire to the high honor of having their garments lined with silk.

their aprons. This claim, which could only excite the bursts of laughter, treated from the point of view of the general interest, which,

considered from the perspective of the external distinction of ranks,

Grand Master, brings reports from the wardens, so much is given from gravity to small things, and the Grand Lodge assembles, deliberates, to prohibit those who are not masters or supervisors—granting the ability to wear silk-lined aprons.

This quarrel, barely settled, is renewed by others

(4) Acta Latomorum, t. 1, p. 19.

(2) The book of constitutions of the free-masons, by Anderson, 1723.

242 _ PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

officials; the head waiters (responsible for organizing banquets), dignity of recent origin, and which was gaining importance, to the point that he it seems, in this singular era, that they in turn come to solicit privileges. They believe they are rendering too great a service to that it be possible to refuse them nothing; they ask and obtain—nament, among other favors, that of wearing aprons whose The lining will be made of red silk! They soon realize that the The apron hides the lining, and, as they probably care about this so that no one can misunderstand their importance functions, they want to carry in their hand, as a distinctive sign, a white baguette, and that glorious privilege of master chefs They are still granted boxes! But their ambition is not not satisfied, they aspire to the highest jobs, and, probably—both to reward them and to add to their Out of zeal, it is decided that they will be eligible for the highest offices. except for that of Grand Master; finally, to give more splendor They want to hold their important positions, and they are granted them. the authorization to establish a Lodge of head waiters, a kind of a circle where no outsider, unfamiliar with their art, will disturb their profound meditations. They triumph, and, in the assembly general of December 11, 1755, — for folly retains its dates better than noble and beautiful actions, — they present themselves with resplendent banners, adorned with colorful cords of all colors; their ornaments surpass in magnificence those of the Grand Master and the Grand Officers (4). This time the The Grand Lodge is ridiculously offended by this ridiculous exhibition; She curbs the vanity of the head waiters by forbidding them to present with decorations that are not indicated by the regulations. One truly believes one is witnessing the struggles of the journeymen—swimming for wearing the colors. Luckily this one is all peaceful.

Amidst these sad quarrels, these deplorable tales—tasks, so unworthy of occupying serious men, the Great—The Lodge of England was striving to extend its jurisdiction, which it wanted to establish in the north; the Grand Lodge of York was offended that it

(1) 4cta Latomorun, t. Y, p. 29.

ms ms ra me
es ee meet en 2m =

and SMEs ee "Re Eee

OF FREEMASONRY. 243rd

regarded it as an encroachment, and their respectable claims

A deep division arose. Disgruntled masons...

withdrew, separated from the regular lodges, formed special meetings which, lacking any uniform direction, were bound to lead to anarchy. An attempt was made to recon- but it could only be achieved through concessions mutuals, and nobody wanted to do it. After a meeting general in which the right to form masonry societies- niques was exclusively attributed to the Grand Lodge of England. and where its grand master was proclaimed that of all Europe, the Dissidents who did not accept such claims made a They appealed to all the lodges, addressing them an encyclical letter in which they laid out their grievances. They complained of changes in Ceremonial Islands, modifications in the rite. This last accusation will be repeated often in life of Freemasonry; men adhering to the letter more than to the spirit, essentially pertaining to forms without always understand the meaning, will never want to allow this which they call alterations and is often only the suppression- sion of things that have become useless, that are no longer in harmony It denies the needs, ideas, and customs of different eras. where these changes, moreover, only affect the surface, are operated on. Those who complained were heard, trained Many men separated, formed themselves apart, in taking the name of ancient masons, and giving to others that Modern Freemasons, for their part, created a Grand Lodge, and The Masonic order therefore had, in Great Britain, three governing powers.

Then began a war between the ancients and the moderns. of pamphlets in which they attacked each other in turn, de- they stared at each other, thus lending weapons to their enemies which they will know how to take advantage of, excluding each other, and offering wind.

While Freemasonry, momentarily misled, gave in London this sad spectacle, his thoughts full of energy and vitality did not remain buried in this limbo; it appeared

—

244 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

all of a sudden, at the same time, like a meteor that rained down Several points are seen to shine at the same hour, and one can to judge the secret work that had taken place while it was permitted to to believe the entire order is preoccupied with eccentric trivialities of a few men. Those who don't know the organization Masonic people will be surprised that a society can be both distracted by vain forms and give ideas an impula sion that seems to require the use of all forces; those who belong to the order and who have followed the Islands closely
The workshop activities understand this kind of anomaly very well.
Mali. To serve the development of individual intelligence-a duel for the benefit of all, we left each person with complete freedom to propose what would be just, or useful, or necessary, without to give to the appreciation of this justice, this utility or of this need for a limit other than reason or the knowledge of that who makes the proposal. After all the sessions, we present to brothers a silk purse into which they throw the story paper-
their requests, which are all invariably subject to judgment of the lodge. In addition to this ability to attract attention through a written proposal, the members of a workshop can to still ask for and be given the floor on whatever subject they please.
to process. This broad capacity, limited only by respect Masonic principles, can provide to frivolous minds, or narrow-minded, or ill-intentioned, the opportunity to divert some time a workshop of serious and grave objects which must occupy them per tous, to provoke extremely heated quarrels, very deep divisions; fortunately these great disputes of which the love of noise is often the main driving force, to which the Vanity, taken to exaggerated proportions, only resonates on one point, without anyone elsewhere suspecting or noticing.
thought he had started a general fire, but only a few buildings were burned
a few sheaves at the corner of a field; it is thought that a furious storm, the ship marches on, advances, without the Passengers notice that the wind is swirling and stirring some drops of water at the bottom of a bay.

The quarrels that took place within the Grand Lodge were recorded in chronicles by men who attached

ee je
— ee es — — —

OF FREEMASONRY, 245

the importance of the actions and words of the ruling power; hatched in another workshop, they would have gone completely unnoticed received, or at least without leaving a trace; however, despite the importance

no matter what the battlefield might offer them, they had

— did not prevent Masonic thought from radiating to others points. Thus, Freemasonry, whose actions were completely hidden in France for a long time, appears in Paris, where Lord Derwen-Water founded a lodge in 1725. It was introduced in 1751.

Russia and Holland, and the lodge in The Hague gives initiation to.

François, Duke of Lorraine, Grand Duke of Tuscany, since em-Father of Germany. In Italy, Florence was the first to open a workshop. Ireland is organizing itself according to the plan adopted by England. Scotland, where work had been suspended for a long time, suddenly sees thirty-two lodges meeting in Edinburgh and to constitute a Grand Lodge. : | |

While Freemasonry still pursues the same goal, the followers are no longer the same; the new initiates are neither neither the peasants of the tenth century, nor the builders of the Renaissance-sance; a revolution has taken place in ideas and is being prepared in things; philosophy has penetrated the upper classes of the society; the ideas of equality and liberty, the essence of Freemasonry, preached by her, they find supporters among the nobility who humanity comes to mingle with the bourgeoisie to form the lodges; has taken a step, since the principles intended to bring about its renewal tions are now professed, defended by those who until then had shown themselves to be enemies.

But no sooner does the new Freemasonry manifest itself in broad daylight, that a vast persecution breaks out against her. The authorities don't really know what she is, and they're pursuing her. instinctively; they sense it rather than know it, and They outlaw it. It's a newspaper article that lends credence to the crusade. his first pretext; it was natural that the press would come to the aid of thought; a publication on Freemasonry inserted in who permanently banned Masonic meetings by an edict from whose rigor they soon relaxed. That was in 1735 that the persecution was beginning against the lodges of Amsterdam, of

246 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The Hague, Nijmegen, and from that day the clergy fulminated against the Freemasons, a prelude to the eternal war that he was going to now to do it for them. Two years hadn't passed before the elect- The Palatine Emperor defended the assemblies of masons, and that all the Members of a lodge in Mannheim were arrested and thrown into prison; at the same time the Freemasons of Florence, gathered Despite an edict from the Grand Duke, they were persecuted by the priests. imprisoned in the name of an inquisitor sent by the Pope.

In the same year, the police chamber of the Châtelet of Paris was having the door of the caterer Chapelot bricked up, guilty of having received a meeting of Freemasons at his home, and condemned him to a fine of one thousand pounds. King Louis XV forbade his court to sei- those who would be initiated, and threatened anyone with the Bastille would accept the then-vacant Grand Mastership. Masons assembled Grains were thrown into the lodge on Rue des Deux-Écus in Paris. at For-l'Évêque, and finally Pope Clement XII launched against the Freemasons, the famous bull of excommunication (1) of the 4th day

(4) Here is the text of this speech bubble:

"Divine Providence having placed us, despite our unworthiness, in the chair of higher of the apostolate, to constantly watch over the safety of the flock that is our entrusted to us, we have given all our care, as much as divine intervention has allowed. permitted, and all our application to oppose vice and error with a barrier which in halt progress, especially to preserve the integrity of the Orthodox religion, and to to keep the faithful away, in these difficult times, from anything that could be a occasion for trouble.

"We learned, and public rumor left no room for doubt, that he had..." formed a certain society, assembly or association under the name of Freemasons or liberi muratori, or under an equivalent name, depending on the diversity of languages, in which people of all religions and all sect, which, under the affected guise of a natural probity that is demanded there and of v content, certain laws and statutes have been established that bind them together, and which, in particular, bind them, under the most severe penalties, by virtue of an oath sworn on the Holy Scriptures, to keep an inviolable secret about everything that happens in their assemblies.

"But since the crime reveals itself, and despite the precautions it He tries to hide, but he betrays himself by the brilliance he cannot stop, this society, t Assemblies have become so suspect to the faithful that every good man looks

If their actions were irreproachable, they would not evade the flame. Hence it is that for a long time most princes have wisely These societies were outlawed by their states. They regarded these kinds of people as enemies of public safety officer.

OF FREEMASONRY. 247

The calends of May 1738. It was nothing less than the death penalty, confiscation of property, an irredeemable punishment

Having therefore given careful consideration to the great evils that arise for the ordinary of these associations, which are always detrimental to the tranquility of the State and the and which, as such, cannot be reconciled with civil and canon law: instructed Moreover, by the very word of God, that as a prudent and faithful servant, Chosen to govern the Lord's flock, we must continually be in beware of people of this character, lest, like the thief, they per- a hundred the house, and that, like so many foxes, they do not throw themselves into the v do not spread desolation everywhere, that is to say, for fear that they might seduce the s do not secretly wound innocent souls with their arrows;

"Enfo, wanting to stop the course of this perversion and prohibit a path that dou- nerait licu dese laisser aller impunément à beaucoup de iniquités, et pour plusieurs reasons known to us, which are also just and well-founded, after having deliberated on the bereaved with our venerable brothers the cardinals of the holy Roman Church, and of their opinion, and even also of our own movement and certain knowledge, and of all to the fullness of our apostolic power, we have resolved to condemn and to defend, as in fact we condemn and defend by our present constitution- tion and repeatedly, the aforementioned societies, assemblies of Freemasons, or designated under another name, whatever it may be.

"That is why we very expressly forbid, and by virtue of holy obedience, to all the faithful, whether lay, secular or regular clergy, including those who must be specially appointed, of whatever rank, grade, condition, dignity and pre- no matter how minor they may be, to enter, for whatever reason and under whatever pretext that is, in the aforementioned Freemason societies; to promote their increase; to receive or hide them at home or elsewhere; to become associated with them, to attend them, to facilitate their assemblies, to provide them with anything; to help the advice; to lend them aid and favor in public or in secret; to act directly- directly or indirectly, either directly or through others; to urge, to solicit, to induce, to encourage someone to be adopted into these societies, to attend them, to help them in whatever way it may be, and to foment them. We order them, in the con- to prohibit themselves entirely from these associations or assemblies, under penalty of excommunication which will be incurred by the sole fact and without further declaration by t comings whom we have mentioned, from which excommunication they will not be able to be absolved only by us or by the sovereign pontiff then reigning, if not by the article of death.

"We further desire and order that the bishops, prelates, superiors and other ordi-
The local authorities, as well as the inquisitors, proceed against the offenders, whatever their rank, condition, order, dignity, and preeminence; let them work to repress them, and that they punish them with the penalties they deserve, as very people suspected of heresy.

"To that end, we give each and every one of them the power to prosecute them and"
to punish them according to the law, and to resort, if necessary, to the arm secular.

"We also want copies of this constitution to have the same force as the original, as soon as they are accompanied by the subscription of a public notary and t
of some person situated in ecclesiastical dignity.

TS -q om
ee A oo mm <q

248 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

and without hope of grace (1), for those who would enter into the order, for the demolition of the houses of those who would receive meetings; people were still instructed to proposals would be made to initiate them into the process of having to denounce them.
otherwise you'll face hardship.

The priests did not limit themselves to threats; a sentence of the Inquisition had a Masonic book burned in Rome by the hand of the executioner, act of vandals who would like to destroy jus-
than to monuments erected by thought, a stupid act since the invention of printing, if we consider it in its result material, but clearly revealing the tendencies of a body. To Florence, a citizen suspected of running a box in her home Freemasons were arrested, tortured, and condemned to detention. Clement XII's bull was published in Malta, hence Several inhabitants and knights went into exile; Philip V, in Spain-gne, issued an edict against the Freemasons, imprisoning them to a certain number; in Holland, the priests were stirring up trouble against
They were driven by ignorance and fanaticism; the Bishop of Marseille fulminated... commandment, and in Portugal they were condemned to the galleys and to banishment.

Only a part of Germany showed tolerance, thanks to the King Frederick William II, who presided over the lodges, gave himselfeven the initiation of his brother and several sovereign princes;
but she could not prevent the imprisonment of the masons at Vienna, nor the persecution to which Rome was only just beginning centuries ago, the Inquisition.

"Let no one, moreover, be so rash as to dare attack or contradict the present declaration, conviction, defense, and prohibition. If someone was wearing just that, to such an extent of audacity, let him know that he will incur the indignation of God and the blessed apostles Saint Peter and Saint Paul.

Given at Rome, at Saint Mary Major, in the year since the incarnation of Jesus Christ 1738, the 4th of the Kalends of May, of our pontificate the eighth.

» A. Card. producer. The place + of the sccuu, » C. Amar, vice-secretary. JB Eucèxe.

"Registered at the writs secretariat, on the above day, month and year, and published" to the usual places in Rome, etc.

(1) Edict of Cardinal Firrao, in execution of the bull of Clement XII.

OF THE FRENCH NATIONALITY. 249

This power, which was destined to bring desolation to families, the trouble in consciences, torturing so many unfortunate people, pouring so much bloodshed, covering all ambitions with a religious veil temporal, giving and taking away empires, cursing Rome and the god of the Christians, had begun in 1208, in Gaul Narbonne, during the pontificate of Innocent III. The schism of the Albigensian region was expanding, and the bishops had petitioned the Pope for repressive measures against him; two monks had been charged by the pontiff to preach against the Albigensians what was called a crusade through the odious abuse of a great idea; their success urged the Pope to create inquisitors independent of the events, tasked with prosecuting heretics, as delegates of the holy-siege. It was quite a revolution: political, because it established a jurisdiction, a justice system separate from that of the country, qualified of crimes, without the cooperation of the true and natural legislator, of acts of conscience that were not the responsibility of anyone; religious, because it changed the living conditions of the bishops, modified their temporal power placed them themselves under surveillance and almost under the authority of the legates.

These strange missionaries, who began by violating the laws, the denial of ancient rights, the contempt for freedom of examination men had the power to proscribe, to hand over to the secular arm those who would not want to renounce heresy, after having however confiscated their property, a measure that the church never failed to take, they tried to draw the king, the counts, the barons into those that the knights who departed for the Holy Land deserved. Philippe wanted to remain neutral, the lords refused, the The French bishops themselves did not welcome the intervention of these foreigners. The most prominent among the Albigensians were known under the name of Perfects; the legates held talks with them, but they could not train them. They then took another path: They summon the lords to prosecute the heretics, threatening those who would not obey, to excommunicate them, to put them under the in- forbidden on their properties, to release the vassals from the oath of fidelity, to finally punish the rebels by all sorts of means.

We know the rest: the crusade was organized under the orders of 17

RP D m2 1 mo OP PP PP P0 GE RG EE PER EEE

born at noon

L

per Een 2

0 + nn = nn Reed EU. qe OR + M

250 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Simon de Montfort; the Lateran Council ordered the measures more cruel, more infamous, and thousands of people perished return to the islands of torment.

Saint Dominic, who displayed in this horrible war a His deplorable zeal led him to found an institute of inquisitorial monks; he He created one of women charged with praying to God for triumph Catholics and the extirpation of heresies, then a third composed of secular people, living in the world to assist those who preached. This latter order was called the militia of Christ; Its members assisted the inquisitors and were regarded as belonging to the family of the Inquisition, and were named the familiar (1). The workings of this institution are immediately clear: spies, men and women, judges and executioners. Under the guise of faith, she had penetrated everywhere, in Italy, in Spain, and everywhere had signaled its establishment by cruelties; the Dominican order was specifically charged the bodies. From time to time the people rise up against these awful men who perpetually threaten one of the most precious freedoms, that of conscience, and kills some worries sites; Rome makes saints of them.

It was necessary to gain acceptance for this institution among the people by... deceiving; a priest whom the Holy Office considers one of his brightest lights, Louis de Paramo (2), imagines to attribute to the eternal Father himself, in the earthly paradise, the invention of the Inquisition, and to have it exercised against Adam the power of the preaching brothers. In his book, one of the most curious monuments to human aberrations, to trivial lies and of monastic bad faith, the writer has God quote Adam in court shouting to him: "Adam, where are you?" (Adam, ubt esP) for, he said, the lack of citation would have rendered the proceedings null and void. God. The holy water under which so-called heretics are burned. is modeled on the garments of skin that God made for Adam and to Eve. By stripping them of the possessions they owned in the

(4) Llorente, History of the Inquisition, vol. 1, p. 51.

– em SE + mme ee en ns

* (2) Book II, Chapter NT. |

OF FREEMASONRY. 251

meet – + me mt

earthly paradise, this same God has already approved the plundering actions of which the inquisitors will be guilty by confiscating the the fortune of those they throw into the fire.

The wretched author of these absurdities goes even further: for him Jesus was the first inquisitor of the new law; by establishing Saint Peter, at the head of the church, transmitted his powers to him, from where he It follows that the popes are inquisitors by divine right. These are the ex-Travagances, the senseless dreams that will claim so many victims, ignite-Streams will be lit throughout Europe, America, and India,

What restraint can be imposed on fanatics convinced that they are islands? successors of God the Father and Jesus? Who will stop them? Now, are they on this path of cruelty? What tortures do they see as... Too painful, what tortures too cruel? Who will make them to understand that the confiscation of heretics' property is a unfortunate children whose fathers they will kill and whom they will strip of their possessions will themselves, when they are shown God punishing on all the human race, the alleged disobedience of earthly paradise. So clever rogues soon took advantage of the ignorance of peoples, superstition and fear of kings, and the horrible tribunal is accepted as the judge between God and man.

The Lisbon court had resisted, albeit weakly, the establishment—the oath of the inquisition; on the representations of King John I, the Pope Innocent VII had revoked the powers of the inquisitors Portuguese; the accused had been acquitted, reinstated in their offices and dignities; the sequestration placed on their property had been raised; but, under King John III and the pontificate of Paul III, a The forger presents himself in Lisbon as a legate; he brings to king of letters patent from the Pope; his patents are signed by the Pope. bearing the papal seal; he has full power to create a grand inquisitor and officers of the holy office; he borrows from considerable sums in the name of the Apostolic Chamber of

Hail Rome; he lives like a prince; the king is astonished, but dares not resist; the false legate levies a tax, assembles his tribunal, and, |

before his deception could be discovered, he burned two hundred people and extorts two hundred thousand crowns. In vain is the lie exposed, the false legate removed in

_ — — In + ee ——— eee ee I RS em mn mA 1 ee eme de er 0 #2 ee de de de ee

259 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

a tour by a Spanish nobleman from whom he had borrowed on counterfeit bills, taken to Madrid, sentenced to whipping and to Despite the difficulties, the Pope nonetheless ratified the procedures he had do, and be careful not to revoke the establishment of the Inquisition in Portugal. Doesn't God have the right to use all the means to consolidate its power?

This tribunal establishes as a principle that compassion for the Children reduced to begging should not be softened by the severity of the measures. towards the guilty party (1); he adopts cunning as a means (2), not does not want an accusation erased from the book of the Inquisition even devoid of any appearance of truth, because it may be useful later (3), states that it is not necessary to insert only that there is insufficient evidence against him, so that he can never claim absolution (4). He accepts the denunciations by the woman and the child against the husband and the father, thus opening the door to the most appalling abuses, pushing to the most horrible crimes; to appeal to superstition, to make it complicit in his murders, he grants indulgences to those who sit— They will be subjected to the torture of the condemned. What a religion! What a morality!

The clergy criticized the Freemasons for the mystery that surrounded them he enveloped; he shouted it loudly from his pulpits, in his writings, that we do not hide to do good, that evil alone has the need to veil oneself; it was repeating the accusation of Clement XII; but, alas! as if to testify to the poverty of spirit of all enemies of freedom of conscience, of freedom of the In thought, this Clement was himself merely a plagiarist of Caecilius. the accuser of the Christians, who had exclaimed with so little wisdom and reason: "Why do they hide this so carefully?" What do they do and what do they revere? When honesty is on full display In broad daylight, crime seeks out the darkness (5).

(2) Nicolas Eymeric, Dictionary of Inquisitors, p. 58.

(2) Ibid., ibid., ibid., p. 291.

(3) Ibid., ibid., p.193.

(4) Ibid., ibid., ibid., p. 319.

(3) Cur oculiare et abscondere quidquid colunt magnoperè nituntur? Quüm honesta semper publico gaudeant, seelerata secreta sint. (Minutius Félix, p. 22, edition in-49.)

! LEP No GG

OF FREEMASONRY. 253

From century to century, the Inquisition found some new heresy. new to pursue, some victims to deliver to exile, to the persecutors cutions, to the stake, and forces the kings themselves to attend the executions. These are the followers of the Waldensians, the partisans of Wiclef, the Begards, the supposedly apostate Jews who are coveted wealth; each of the Catholic countries has its scaffolds.

The bull of Clement XII had given the signal against the Frank-Freemasonry; we saw Philip V, in Spain, publish a A terrible order, the courts send the mem— From the lodges, the Cardinal Vicar of Rome declared that they would be punished by death, without reprieve, the Châtelet walled up the cabaret

Marseille issues a decree against Freemasons;
The Châtelet ordinances once again outlawed the meetings which, held in spite of these orders, are dispersed by force; “Leroy the caterer, who allowed a meeting to be held at his home, is sentenced to a fine of 3,000 pounds; Benedict XIV renews the Bull of Clement XII; the examiner of books for the holy office

denounces the existence of Freemasons; the Archbishop of Avignon, By publishing the bull, he orders the faithful to return to his
in the hands or in those of the inquisitor the manuscript which contains their regulations and their names; Charles III of Naples proscribed their meetings; Frederick [], King of Sweden, forbade their assemblies wounded under penalty of death, then reports this cruel edict; the magistrates
The treaties of Geneva suppress the lodges founded in that city;
Ferdinand VI of Spain issued a new ordinance against them—
nance which equates them with state criminals in the first instance;
The Inquisition did not limit itself to persecuting assemblies, it penetrates through espionage into the lives of families and workshops, and, without waiting for the facts, punishes intentions. A Frenchman, Mr. Tournon had gone to settle in Madrid, to found a factory there, and to train Spanish workers there. In 1757, he was denounced by one of those he employed, as a suspect of heresy, for having asked his students, the denunciation document states, to be received Freemasons, promising to have them recognized as such as those established by Masonic power in France. Some had consented; Mr. Tournon showed them a diploma on which

2 pm PE

9254 HISTORY – PHILOSOPHY

engraved were instruments of architecture and astronomy, he he told them about an oath by which they pledged to keep the Silence was maintained regarding everything that could be seen and heard; they believed th
This had to do with magic; Mr. Tournon was arrested and imprisoned.
in the secret prisons of the Holy Office, which conducted his trial.
His interrogation, extracted from the minutes of the in—
The requisition will perfectly illustrate the hatred of this court.
against Freemasonry.
The Inquisitor. – Do you swear to God and to this holy cross of
To tell the truth?

Mr. Tournon. – I swear it.

The request for his name, country, and reason for... follows.

– Do you know why you were arrested and locked up in the prisons of the Holy Office P |

– I suppose it's because I said I was a Freemason.

He recalls the opportunities made for his workers.

– Did you tell them the truth?

– Yes.

– So you're a Freemason?

– For twenty years.

– Have you attended Freemason meetings?

– Yes, while I was in Paris.

– Were you there in Spain?

– No; I don't even know if there are Freemason lodges.

– If there were any, would you have attended?

– Yes.

– Are you a Christian, a Roman Catholic?

– Yes; I was baptized in the church of Saint-Paul, in Paris, which was the parish of my father and mother.

– How dare you, with your Christian faith, to find at Masonic assemblies, knowing that they are contrary to religion?

– I never knew that, I'm even unaware of it: now, because I don't I saw and heard nothing contrary to religion.

– How can you deny it, since you know that we professes, in Freemasonry, indifference to religion.

OF FREEMASONRY. 255

me

which is contrary to the article of faith (outside the church there is no

that by professing the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman religion P

– This indifference is not professed among the Franks–
Freemasons. What is true is that, in order to be received among them,
It is irrelevant whether one is Catholic or not.

– So Freemasonry is an anti-religious body.

– That cannot be either; for the purpose of its institution is not to fight against or deny the necessity or usefulness of a religion, but to practice charity towards one's neighbor unfortunate, whatever his religion, and –especially if he is member of the society,

– Proof that indifferentism is the religious characteristic
The difference with Freemasonry is that one does not confess the very Holy Trinity of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy One Spirit, three distinct persons, one true God; since Freemasons recognize only one God whom they call– slow the Great Architect of the universe, which is to say, with the heretical naturalist philosophers, that there is no other

The true religion is natural religion, in which one believes in the existence of a creator God, as the author of nature, viewing everything else as a purely human invention.

The inquisitor then summons the accused, out of respect for him, to Jesus Christ and his mother, to tell the truth.

The accused replies that in the dressing rooms they don't deal with neither to combat the mystery of the Trinity, nor to approve or reject it the religious system of the naturalist philosophers. God is there designated as the Great Architect of the Universe, by one of these numerous allegories so common in Freemasonry and having in relation to architectural art. He adds that in the lodge one does not concern oneself v
No religious dissertations, but Ed topics at the religion.

The inquisitor having asked him if he believed, as a Catholic,
committing a sin of superstition by confusing things sacred things with profane things, he first apologizes for not being quite knowledgeable about all things relating to the purity of faith, but He admits that anyone who would confuse, through disdain or contempt, the two

Re ne Red an nn TE 0–0 M SE <q Re 20e de OR ne de – AR GERS QE. naked =

Rd

with others, to make them produce supernatural effects, would commit the sin of superstition.

– Is it true that, in the ceremonies that accompany the Upon the reception of a new mason, the image of Our Lady appears. Lord Jesus Christ crucified, with the corpse of a man, a Skulls and other profane objects of that kind?

– The statutes of the order do not prescribe anything of the sort. If These things are sometimes used there, no doubt because the effect of some particular custom adopted there, or of any other arbitrary arrangement of the members of the corporation tion who are responsible for preparing everything for the reception of the candidates, because each lodge has its own customs and party ceremonies culières.

– That's not what you were asked; answer if it is
It is true that all of this can be observed in the lodges of Freemasons.

– Yes or no, depending on the arrangements made by those who are in charge of the initiation ceremonies.

– Did things happen this way when you were accepted?

– No.

– What oath must one take to be received as a Freemason?

He replies that we swear to keep secret the things we will see or hear.

Regarding this question: Is the oath accompanied by execration? And how do we do it? He replies that we consent to suffer all physical and moral penalties if one violates their promise.

– How important can this promise be for us to believes he can administer an execratory oath without indecency Just as formidable?

– That of good order in society.

– Why a crucifix if the reception of a Freemason is not Not considered a religious act?

– To penetrate the soul with a deeper respect at the moment where the novice will take the oath. It is not seen in all lodges. He does not it seems that when it comes to conferring a certain rank (rose-cross).

– Why do they bring a skull and crossbones there?

– So that the idea of death inspires more horror in the parjure.

D

Eee nn

OF FREEMASONRY, 257

– What purpose does one see the corpse of a man there?

– In order to make the allegory of Hiram, the architect, more complete of the Temple in Jerusalem, which was, it is said, assassinated by traitors, and to make murder and harmful vices even more detestable Until next time.

The inquisitor asks if it is true that the masons chose Saint John as their patron saint, and that they celebrate his feast day; what is the worship that is shown to him.

The accused replies that this ceremony is limited to a meal of brothers, after which a speech is read to encourage the guests to to practice charity.

Upon request, the sun, the moon, and are honored in the lodges.
The stars, he replies, are displayed there to make
The allegories of true light are more sensitive than the lodges.
These representations are received from the Great Architect of the Universe.
They instruct the brothers and encourage them to be benevolent.

The inquisitor told the accused that the explanations he had just given the statements he made are false and contrary to what he previously revealed himself. He urges him to tell the truth, to confess the heresies of indifferentism, supersilion, and idolatry, to ask for his forgiveness through his confession before the taxman accuses him criminally committed these horrible sins. After that, we can only... to pursue it rigorously, according to the holy canons.

"I told the truth in all my answers," said Mr. Tournon.
And if there are witnesses who have testified to the contrary, they are mistaken in the interpretation they have given of my paroles, because I only spoke about the object I was questioned about. only with the workers in my factory, and never in any other direction.

He is accused of wanting to train other men to to receive and embrace heretical, superstitious errors his and pagan. He admits it, but it was in their interest; that

However, it is false that he pushed them to embrace errors contrary to the Catholic faith, since there are none in Freemasonry, where there is no dogmatism.

The inquisitor said that it had been proven that these errors were not fanciful. He implores the accused to confess to them humbly,

00 qe Gone

258 PHHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

to ask for forgiveness and absolution for the censures incurred, if he does not does not want to be the cause of his misfortune through the loss of his body and of his soul

This is Montlion's first hearing. He is advised to to reflect in order to prepare for the two other hearings that await him will be granted through an effect of compassion and mercy rope that the holy tribunal always shows to the accused.

Mr. Tournon was returned to his prison. In both hearings— He persisted in his answers to these following questions. The taxman presented the indictment, which, according to custom, was divided into articles in accordance with the witness statements. The accused was offered to choose a lawyer to defend him, which he refused, saying that the lawyers in Spain are unfamiliar with the lodges, and perhaps— sharing the prejudices of the Holy Office towards them, they do not would know how to defend his case. He was offered the opportunity to present his evidence, or to dismiss the persons whom he believed had testified against him out of hatred, out of self-interest, or for some other particular motive. He refused, saying that the cause of his misfortune lay in a prejudice and the false interpretation given to things past. Moreover, after having carefully considered his position current situation and the consequences of its persistence, he had thought that it was wiser to admit he was wrong, and to confess his ignorance or the dangerous spirit of the statutes and customs of the Freemasonry. Based on these reasons, he declared again having seen nothing contrary to the Catholic faith in all that he had done it as a mason; but having been mistaken for lack of He was prepared to hate certain particular dogmas. all the heresies into which he might have fallen, and asked to be absolved of the censures, offering to carry out the penance that would be imposed on him. He hoped that this punishment would be moderate, because he had always acted in good faith, had always sanity; faith had never been opposed, and he had acted in all peace of mind.

The defendant's request was accepted by the tax collector. His judgment was pronounced and notified in December 1757.

ee me Pr re ae

niques; finally, idolatry, by honoring the images of the stars.

OF THE FRENCH-MACONNERIE. 259

EXTRACT FROM THE JUDGMENT.

Mr. Tournon is declared a suspect (of Levi) of indifferentism, in following Masonic practices which are imbued with naturalism; superstition, by mixing profane things with feasts, oaths of execration and Masonic ceremonies-

Mr. Tournon has committed serious crimes, in approving the use of corpses in certain Masonic ceremonies- niques, by considering the horrible excrements as permissible which accompany the oaths of Freemasons, by wanting to present these errors as dogmas, and by seeking to entice good Catholics into Freemasonry, The holy canons and bulls excommunicate, and the laws of Espagne are subject to various temporal punishments, including those reserved primarily for state criminals, especially those who form secret societies without permission and the king's pleasure.

Mr. Tournon deserved a severe sentence for having found guilty of all these offenses, especially for attempting to corrupt good Catholics. Considering, however, that it is not born in Spain, which he acknowledged was an error committed by ignorance, that he asked for forgiveness and reconciliation through penance, he is condemned only, and by an effect of compassion and the mercy of the Holy Office, to a year of detention which he will have to accomplish in the prison he currently occupies, and, this Time expired, to be led, under the escort of the ministers of the holy-office, up to the French border, and banished from Spain for always, after he has been informed that, if he ever returns to the kingdom without the permission of the king and the holy office, it will be severely punished and according to the full rigor of the law.

tie of his sequestered effects to pay the expense he has already done or that he will do, as well as the costs of his trip to the borders of the kingdom (1).

(1) Llorente, History of the Inquisition, vol. IV, p. 66.

sacred things, and the worship of saints and images with joy.

oo mm

0

260 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The judgment also includes a sentence for exercises in piety, orders a general confession to be made, and the book of reading to be read. Spiritual Exercises of Saint Ignatius of Loyola and that of John Eusèbe Nieremberg on the Difference between the temporal and the eternal, to recite the Holy Rosary of Our Lady the Victress Mary, of frequently repeat acts of faith, hope, charity and contrition, to learn Father Astèle's catechism by heart, to prepare to receive absolution at the Christmas, Easter and Pentecost, etc.

And, so that Mr. Tournon may be informed of this sentence and of With all these arrangements in place, a special auto-da-fé will be held in The courtrooms, the door open, in the presence of the secretaries of secrecy, employees of the Holy Office and persons with- which the lord inquisitor dean will have allowed to attend.

Mr. Tournon will appear in the auto-da-fé without wearing the blood-benito ni la corde de genèet, et entendrea debout la lecture de his judgment and his complaints; he will receive a remonstrance from the sei-dean, inquisitor; he will then abjure on his knees all the heresies, particularly the errors of which he was deemed suspected of Levi; he will read and sign his abjuration and his profession of faith in accordance with Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman dogma, with the promise never to attend Freemason meetings, to no longer present himself or behave as a brother of the order, and to consent, in case of recidivism, and if he is taken back by the saint-office, to be treated as a relapsed criminal and subject to the reserved penalties to those who fall back into the same crime (1).

This judgment was executed in its entirety. Mr. Tour- He did not return to France seeking a more hospitable asylum.

This struggle, so intense that Freemasonry had to support it, This did not prevent it from spreading in France, where there were energetic protests. gradually against Roman oppression; it was bound to to cover the whole country; the sun had risen, nothing could more neither the ordinances of the Châtelet nor the prohibitions could stop its light of Louis XV, nor the conclusions of the Sorbonne against the order. By the end of 1736, four lodges existed in Paris; on the 24th

(4) Llorente, History of the Inquisition, vol. IV, p. 67,

D RE

20 2 2000 0 oo

OF FREEMASONRY. 261

In June 1738, the Duke of Antin was elected Grand Master, and the king did not He didn't send him to the Bastille, as he had threatened to do. The half-century that followed offered the spectacle of the greatest development The development of masonry in France. Paris saw the legal creation of formally and authentically, in 1743, under the name of Grand Lodge English in France, a central power which, in 1756, was to cease to recognize London's supremacy, to declare itself Great-Lodge of the kingdom and imprint its direction on a large number workshops. |

The provinces responded enthusiastically to the call of the capital. tale; Bordeaux, which had been initiated as early as 1732, worked with a remarkable activity, but not without obstacles and dangers, at the spreading the ideas she had received in order to pass them on, faithful custodian of a light that she was meant to radiate around her. Her English Lodge was not content with simply opening its by opening doors to the city's inhabitants, it constituted workshops at Lorient, to Limoges; the ships that left the port and carried French goods in our colonies carried in their veils the regenerative principles of order, and a lodge was founded in Cayenne in 1755; ten years later established itself in Périgueux, the Lodge of Friendship.

Driven by the purity of Masonic doctrines, obeying the philosophical thought that was already quietly stirring France, many citizens, happy to contribute to the disclosure of thoughts preached in the meetings, and which were expected, as they spread, They came to line up on the columns, soon to change the face of the country from this lodge where bourgeois and nobles mingled and blended and priests. This era, in fact, offers the example of the clergy... throwing themselves into the political movement to support it, and members of the nobility openly adopting principles is changing; humanity is entering a new phase; something

(1) The Devaulx family from Sarthe were counted in the FPAmitie lodge in Périgueux, Marquis of Taillefer, of Saint-Astrés, of Albzac de l'Adouze, of Blanzac. (We owe everything related to the lodges of Périgueux to the kindness of Brother Charrière. We regret that we cannot reproduce in its entirety a remarkable manuscript (through order, clarity, and the elevation of ideas.)

oo, mm

269 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

something vague, unknown, foreshadows the union of the Third Estate and the clergy, the Jeu de Paume and the night of August 4th; a breeze is in the air The harbinger of the storm where the past will be swallowed up.

The mountains of the Ardèche, in their steep locations, had witnessed cruel massacres; their deep ravines had given refuge to freedom of inquiry and conscience during the long persecutions fomented by fanaticism; their tormented rocks were still stained with the blood of their unfortunate inhabitants; it was It was natural that an institution which wanted Tolerance of all religions brought together those who had been separated religion, proclaimed the equality of all men before the Grand Architect of the universe, and, by uniting them with the bonds of the brotherhood prepared them to form a single, great political family.

It was through the army that Freemasonry penetrated this province, because it too felt the wind that was blowing over France. The oldest lodge, initially called the Vivarais Regiment, was created in Saint-Omer, where the regiment was garrisoned (1). Little by little three lodges opened successively in Annonay (2); and soon Two of them founded a philanthropic society to help the elderly, the infirm and the indigent families (5). Two other lodges, one in La Voulte (4), the other in Tournon (5), were completing the conquest of the country with Masonic ideas.

(1) She took the title of Parfaite-Union. Ven...: F.". Dupret, officer of the regiment. Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of France, dated April 15, 1759, renewed by the Grand Orient on June 4, 1735.

(2) La Fraie-Vertu. Founders: FF. Lombard, Monneron, Frachon, Chevalier, Demissolz, Demissolz de Lapras, brigade leader in the artillery. Affiliated in 1766 to that of Saint-Jean de Saint-Louis, of the Metz regiment. Renewed constitutions by the Grand Orient, dated July 1775.

True Friendship. November 16, 1778. Founders: Brothers Claude Peiron and Raviuel. Peiron, Blanc, Malsontier, Bluchier. This lodge is distinguished by the regularity of its works, The clarity with which the principles and the elevation of the philosophical questions that were addressed there; there, among others, Monne- were initiated, Joseph Montgolfier, baron de Canson, Bollioud de Brognieux, Boissy-d'Anglas.

(3) This creation dates from 1788; these two lodges continued their work until- than in 1815.

(4) Saint Vincent of Perseverance. Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of France, in Date of November 23, 1769. Vée.. : F.-. Tardy de Montravel, artillery captain.

(3) Perfect Union. Constitutions of the Grand Orient, dated April 18, 1774. Ven.:

| OF FREEMASONRY, 263

Franche-Comté joined the movement with gusto; a The lodge was first established in Besançon, installed by the intendant. of the province which was appointed its grand master (1); it had more late a chapter of rose-craix, and, wanting to initiate the ladies into ideas of Freemasonry, he created an adoption lodge for them. provincial intendants, subdelegates, magistrates, directors of various finance departments, lawyers, officers, canons, abbots, and religious figures from various orders lined up on its columns, and the number of its members became considerable.

The principles of liberty and equality were upheld there with energy; that was the spirit of the Masonic constitution, but Several deliberations from this workshop demonstrate that no one was not willing to compromise on this point.

Later, a second lodge opened in this city (2), and she closely united herself with the first, whose aspirations she followed and the traces. Poligny, Dôle, Salins, Lons-le-Saunier, formed soon a powerful Masonic circle that began to communicate cation with Lyon and Strasbourg. Besançon became a center where brought together deputies from Basel, Salins, Vesoul, Lons-le-Saunier Saunier, from Luxeuil, from Poligny, to agree on the measures to be taken in the interest of order, and appointed the delegates who were to go to Paris to attend the installation of the Grand Master. In the same circle, Gray had his lodge, Langres, Fontaine-French women, theirs.

Not all priests were willing to support the regeneration of France; the repulsion that some of them their protests against the lodges went so far as to refuse to their share the donations intended to come to the aid of the unfortunate. In a year of hardship, the brothers and sisters of Besançon

F. Dumaine, notary. (We owe all the notes concerning the Ardèche to the com-pleasure boat of F.*. Poncer, of Annonay.)

(1) La Sincérîte, founded in 1764, to the French rite and the ancient Scottish rite and accepted; it was authorized by the Grand Lodge of France, from which it received constitutions in 1766 only.

(2) La Parfaite-Union, founded in 1771.

264 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

wheat and offered it to the town priest to distribute to indigents. Although the venerable master of the lodge was a canon, the
The priest declined the mission, on the pretext that going to the intermediary
To acknowledge this charity would be to recognize and confess a body which was not authorized by the king, nor by the law, nor by the church. The
The mayor, to whom the lodge addressed itself, did not share this scruple;
accepted the offer eagerly; the wheat was handed over to the bakers Gers, and the bread was distributed at the town hall.

To the south Marseille, to the east Lyon, to the north Rouen, Arras, had their lodges, and formed the nodes of this vast chain of union which surrounded France. However, this development was too quick to be entirely directed, controlled, by a power central authority established outside the laws of the kingdom, and to which the obedience-
The action was entirely voluntary. It does not belong to all men to fully understand the purpose of a mysterious association; the superficial, narrow minds, which have been and will constantly be the
the scourge of Freemasonry, they are preoccupied with forms; the vanity fuels their desires for precedence, supremacy, and the Lodges are bustling about fruitlessly trying to resolve these futile questions.

This era offered a sad spectacle of this; the Masonic institution-that was invading from all sides at once; it was spreading under the auspices of England, of the National Grand Lodge of France, under the influence of Scottish Rite ideals and nebulous dreams of Germany; the feeling of the need for leadership had led to the creation of the Grand Lodge of France, and, if its power would have been completely accepted and recognized everywhere; it would have been easy,
From that moment on, to imprint on the order a movement of the most powerful; but disagreements arose. Is this the fault Human weakness? Is this the result of Machiavellianism?
power? Singular facts give this last thought a a certain appearance of truth; or an order where each of the
the individuals who comprise it enjoy absolute freedom of examination,
'of appreciation and expression of his thoughts, is it necessarily destined to see divisions arise within its ranks? Whatever the case may be, the disagreements that had stirred the workshops of England were partly reproduced in Paris. The three ruling powers of creation of workshops under all rites, grades, chapters, of courts, more or less regular, of councils decorated with the most pompous and strangest titles that were installed in the capital and in the provinces.

CD

Childbirth was difficult; some men, forgetting that Only election, in Freemasonry, can confer the jobs, aspired to job security and thus failed to recognize the The very law of their existence; the affiliates can judge the the confusion that such a satisfied claim must have caused. Vanity ignored in the lodges the principle of equality that the order proclaimed and was meant to radiate outwards; she was not content in addition to the three symbolic degrees; a chapter was seen to emerge taking the title of Council of Emperors of the East and West, sovereign princes of Freemasonry, issuing capitularies for the high ranks, appointing inspectors-general responsible for to propagate the Freemasonry he had established, having colleges on several points in France. War broke out between this council and the Grand Lodge, a war of pamphlets, exclusions, and decrees, of powerless decrees.

Fortunately, and despite this lack of uniformity which would have been if necessary, under all names, under all headings, despite all the idle pretensions, the general thought was everywhere the even, because it was no one's place to change it; the movement could be slowed, hindered in its progress. but it was not possible to stop him.

Of the mystery that reigned over the order, of its long-standing language and necessarily symbolic, was born, in the minds of some unfortunate ignorant people, poor deluded souls, the most strange, the craziest thing that ever came out of the human brain. Men who knew nothing of Freemasonry except the name convinced themselves that the secret they had heard about was none other than that of making gold; the great Masonic science- For them, icing was not the goal; the great work seemed to them the objective. that the institution was pursuing. [They did not understand that it was to change ideas, institutions, laws; they put the master instead of thought, and, unable to delve deeper into the symbol, They sought to create a chimera. Then, they were formed, fantastic (1).

18

in mountainous regions, in wooded countries, meetings which took place at night, in the deep shadow of the forests, where they gave themselves over to the most senseless practices, where the most

The great revolution that changed the face of France, stirred throughout Europe, it altered the political existence of almost all the nations, the great wars of the Empire, the progress of civilization—sation, have fought for a very long time against these illusions, without to destroy them; in the final years of the Restoration, assemblies of this kind, but which had preserved nothing of the traditional forms of Freemasonry, were held in the woods of certain regions, and perhaps we would find some Even today, a few last vestiges remain.

Finally, a cry for reform was heard; the Grand Lodge appointed commissioners, workshops in Paris and the provinces sent delegates; the Masonic representation assembled at the hotel of Chaulnes, under the presidency of the Duke of Luxembourg, and proclaimed, in 1772, a central power formed by officers of the order and deputies of the lodges, under the name of GRAND ORIENT OF FRANCE.

The following year, he promulgated the constitutions of the Freemasonry renewed the old patents and issued them. new developments, and gave it a strong impetus. However, the war The internal strife did not cease; some men, whom the creation of the the new power disinherited them from [a part that they had exercised in the leadership tried to resist him; under their influence, the The Grand Lodge continued its work and correspondence; the rite The Scotsman increased the number of his workshops; the councils strove— They sought to extend their jurisdiction. Petty passions held sway. a major role in this conflict, where incredible zeal was displayed ble, an unheard— of vivacity; they were more bewildered than wicked In your case, there was more vanity than real ambition.

(4) We have before us manuscripts from the last century, obviously copied of books unknown to us, manuscripts where naivety reveals good faith, in which contain details, requests, answers, and euphemistic indications Masonic ment, leaving no doubt that, in the mind of the copyist, the Perfection in order was achieved when one arrived at the transmutation of metals.

mm, qq

+

The struggle that followed the creation of the Grand Orient must not be confused, however sad it may have been, with the disputes of London; in France, it was a question of the direction to be given to the institution; men equally determined to march in the same direction conquest may not always agree on the path it is necessary to take into account the leaders who should be placed at their head; Unfortunately, in these disputes born of serious thought, Minds are stirred, human passions are given free rein, and divert resources that should be used elsewhere.

When, seventy-five years later, we look back on Looking back, we pause on this period when order was in turmoil. disputes so deplorable that the means adopted to appease them only exacerbate them further; it must be acknowledged that the institution The Masonic tradition must have had great strength not to be among them broken.

Viewed from afar and from above, all these rivalries seem quite poor-past; we no longer hear the echo of those struggles which were so ardent; the resounding words of passionate orators who stirred the crowd, they find us cold and insensitive; this viva-In this city, this noise, these threats, these partisan acts, do not move us. no, because through all these miseries inherent in humanity-Unity, one thought has triumphed, which dominates everything. From somewhere When the wind came, it blew towards the same point, leading to same goal.

a"

ess

Eee ur ed en ee en

268 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

CHAPTER NINTH.

State of Freemasonry in Europe at the advent of the Grand Orient.— In Russia, — In Poland. — In the Netherlands. — In Germany. — In Sweden. — In Denmark. — In Switzerland. — In Italy, — In Avignon. — In Spain. — State of the institution in France. — Extension of the

Voltaire. – The situation of Freemasonry in the Americas. – A serious question Masonic tensions stirred up by the War of Independence – French Revolution; influence of t Freemasonry on the revolution.

14

RE. AVORIZED by the need for a:
*"Uniform direction, finally out = n S, of the long conflict that agitated the

ML Orient set to work; he did not

It wasn't guaranteed that he would succeed completely.

STREETS PS years the difficult work of printing everywhere a

PAT works identically, to regularize all shapes

FEAT | of the institution, but nothing could stop Île anymore

aq development of Freemasonry, and he the

And secondly, powerfully.

y LS At the moment he took the reins of an administration
#8" \ news, the whole of Europe was being silently worked on
ÿ JS by the mysterious association whose principles are spreading–

| were in all states, including the brilliant ceremonies
These were not empty representations, but spoke more to the
to the heart and soul as well as to the eyes. Introduced forty years ago in

In Russia, Freemasonry initially only had assemblies.

extremely secret; in 1763, Catherine IT had taken up residence there–

she had declared herself the protector; many lodges had created, but almost exclusively reserved for the nobility who,
In his initial enthusiasm, he opened workshops in his castles.

Digitized by Google

JN lodges of France, the Grand– .

Ed

ce ot <

The social organization of this country did not allow Freemasonry it is not reasonable to assume a very large extent; however, some However limited it may have been, the philosophical principles, the new ideas—the seeds she sowed, the future she foresaw, were not long in coming not to frighten, or at least to worry Catherine, who, from then on, pronounced against her, without, however, daring to take action. Those who had only joined the association through training, through Out of curiosity, they abandoned the lodges in imitation so as not to displease those in power; only a few continued their They worked amidst the harassment they faced. were to be, a few years later, strictly closed by Paul I*, at the urging of the Jesuits who had barely been recalled and who thus marked their return by proscription.

The Masonic institution had penetrated Poland at the same time at the time in Russia; Augustus II had soon banned it there in – promulgating and posting the bull of Clement X. From this

At that moment, she had lived underground, in the deepest shadow. thick, and its trace is only found a few years after the foundation of the Grand Orient of France, in 1780; but soon, at limiting this, a Grand Orient was established in Warsaw to govern Poland and the Grand Duchy of Lithuania; Warsaw, Wilna, Posen, Dobno, Grodno, were represented there by their deputies.

In the Netherlands, the States General had unsuccessfully outlawed Freemasonry, the clergy had in vain roused against it the population, it had triumphed, and, scarcely installed, the Great-The Orient of France made a treaty with the Grand Lodge of Holland. This was headed by Mr. de Boetzelner, lieutenant-colonel of the Dutch Foot Guards regiment, which occupied the position of national grand master since 1757.

Freemasonry had considerable influence in Germany various; protected in Prussia by a philosopher-king, she had based in Berlin, and the work of one of its lodges was being held alternatively in German this in French; the precise language a positive philosophy penetrated to the heart of the new power-sance which aspired to the leadership of the Germanic body; the ideas language followed naturally. The city of Brunswick had seen

ee ee ee ee

270 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The Freemasons are establishing an institute for young orphans; the Thought arrived on the wings of benevolence. Upper Saxony was invaded; lodges were formed in Altenburg, Nuremberg, Hamburg, Leipzig.

All classes competed; the sovereign prince of Bayreuth had opened his palace to Masonic meetings; the Baron of Hund had founded a workshop in Kittlitz, near Lobau; Dresden was for a long time the seat of a fairly powerful Masonic organization already strong enough to carry out a reform that took the name of this city and was called the Dresden Reform. In Prague, four lodges had come together to found and endow an orphanage, and A few years later, during an overflow of the Eger, all The brothers distinguished themselves by saving flood victims at the risk of their own life, distributed aid to families ruined by the plague, did not were not afraid to go and solicit public charity for themselves, acting as intermediaries, and thus deserving of blessings unfortunate people at the same time as they spread their doctrines, a double benefit that extended to both the soul and the body.

But the situation was far from being so prosperous everywhere, too brilliant; the medal had a sad reverse side. The past struggled with all the strength he still possessed. We saw, from the very introduction of Freemasonry in the Palatinate, the Palatine elector defends the meetings and have all the members of a lodge thrown in prison. The German emperor, Charles VI, had banned the institution of states subject to his obedience; the brothers established in the capital had tried to escape the consequences of the edict by dissimulating, re-establishing their existence under a new and unknown name, and had seen, despite this precaution, arrested and imprisoned.

Marie-Thérèse had severely proscribed them, and soon Joseph II had deprived of their jobs the civil servants who belonged to the lodges. The magistrates of Danzig had ruled against the Freemasons; the priests of Aachen, and in particular—The Capuchin Islands and the Dominicans, heirs to the fanaticism of their boss, dissatisfied with the banishment decree which, In addition to heavy fines, they were being driven out of the city. they hurled anathemas from their pulpits, accusing them of all the crimes formerly attributed to the Templars, aroused

-inspirations, threatened them, insulted them, attacked them even against them a superstitious, ignorant crowd, who, under their.

OF FREEMASONRY. 271

in the streets. In Bavaria, in the Duchy of Baden, they were not treated with less rigor. The fight was on the vast proportions.

In the alternatives of such a struggle, it was impossible that Freemasons, protected on one point, persecuted on another others receive and follow a uniform direction; darkness being the only guarantee for some, how can the thought of

RES — M de ee ne eee er er nn ee This Rene to had her leaders guided them to their hidden retreats from all eyes? Also, different systems had been introduced in Germany—gne. Mysticism and reverie, whose German nature is imprints found a career, and imaginations gave free rein to were born into fantastic dreams, rushed towards the realization of mad fantasies; they had mistaken the letter for the spirit; rites ceremonies had been created; they were being sought there also the philosopher's stone, people indulged in evocations, they studied, or rather, people thought they were studying magic; they even went so far as to

to found a school of this so-called science.

In Sweden, Masonic assemblies, initially banned under the death penalty, had been permitted some time later, and They had soon grown large enough, had become powerful enough to establish a home for orphans in Stockholm

linen. Denmark had its workshops.

In the Swiss mountains, Freemasonry had a direct confrontation with authority; proscribed here, on the contrary there protected and prosperous, it disappeared from one point to reappear there—to return again. Cantonal sovereignty allowed him to live freely in one country, while she was persecuted in another. Bern had closed the lodges, ordered the masons to abjure their oaths, and to impose fines on them;
Lausanne, after initially following this example, had shown Soon there would be no more tolerance; the lodges had reopened; Geneva allowed the institution to develop within itself.

In Italy, watched over by priests, hunted by the Inquisition,
the brothers braved prison, torture, and spread their message in secret |
their doctrines, despite the bulls of Clement XII, of Benedict XIV, |

despite the edicts of the King of Naples, Avignon saw the inquisitor Mabile, a Jacobin father, to prosecute the Freemasons, to surround the mother-in-law, remove the furniture, papers and islands charters.

Spain was under the control of Ferdinand VI's defenses, who had banned the meetings under penalty of being punished by offenders declared state criminals and tried as such; the Holy Office there reigned as sovereign.

Such was the situation of Freemasonry in Europe when the Grand Orient of France was established. This power was not not accepted without question, he had to defend himself against the accusations of usurpation, numerous volumes were written for attacking and supporting him; condemned to read a part of it for to give us an accurate idea of this sad struggle that shook the lodges whose minutes have been passed before our eyes, we cannot than to lament the time, knowledge and talent that were deployed there. However, we are pleased to note that in many In the workshops, resistance was only maintained out of fear of seeing the alterations principles and modify the purpose of Freemasonry (1).

This fear was unfounded, this danger did not exist; Each year was marked by treaties concluded with lodges. chapters, councils accepting the direction of the Grand-Orient, and by the extension given to the institution.

Marseille had four lodges established in a short time (2), one of whom unites with a client from New Orleans, then of this spirit of brotherhood which binds the Freemasons of both worlds.

Two new temples were built in Périgueux (5). At Mans opened a most brilliant lodge, whose principles were clearly proclaimed, the considerable benefits, the celebrations splendid, where the greatest severity was applied to the

(4) This is based on numerous documents that have been transmitted to us, with details very specific, by departmental lodges whose brothers were kind enough to to consult the archives for us.

(2) Perfect Sincerity, of 1763; the United Brothers, of 1776; the Meeting of the Elect, The Faithful Friends, from 1789.

(5) The Happy Encounter, the Meeting Point.

HAS

OF FREEMASONRY. 273

receptions, and which relied heavily on its columns for memories of the clergy (1).

Freemasonry had made immense conquests in Paris; writers, artists, politicians, the whole school philosophical thinker who stirred Europe with his words, undermined the prejudice, fanaticism, and superstition were found in the temple, they coordinated their efforts there; one man was missing at this constellation, a man who, for sixty years, had attacked to the leaders who dominated society, and had struck them with an incredible passion, in the theatre, in history, in his letters, in his epistles, in his serious works, in his light poems, thus making a weapon of all resources that nature had bestowed upon his vast genius.

Voltaire, who was unaware of the purpose of Freemasonry, He supposed her to be inspired by mysticism; he had treated her badly enough. | in his Philosophical Dictionary (2), had thrown upon her the sarcasms that he lavished on everything he believed to be tainted by superstition; but while he was indulging in fanaticism and tyranny, In such a harsh war, Freemasonry grew and spread. And the poet found himself one day, perhaps not without surprise, surrounded of men who were fighting for the same cause as him, and who all | belonged to the association whose efforts coincided so well | with those of the great writer. Franklin, printer, physicist, and legislator all at once; Court

| of Gebelin, whose universality few men have equaled

| knowledge and depth; Lalande, the great astronomer; the Dixmerie and Abbot Cordier of Saint-Firmin, both men of letters, were members of the Nine Sisters lodge founded under the inspiration of Helvétius, who died before it was inaugurated; these were They were the ones who suggested Voltaire be initiated. Completely

|
|

|

L

|

|

(1) The Moria lodge. Several of its members soon made a name for themselves in illustrious arms and public affairs; it included the priests of Le Mans, Tuflé, d'Aigné, de Domfront, the Benedictines, the Oratorians, the Minims, the prior of Saint-Vincent. There had been an atclidr in Le Mans in 1740; its name is forgotten; the The oldest documents about this city date back only to 1787, and are ral- they bring to the Horia lodge, which was then in full operation.

. @) Works of Voltaire, Baudouin edition, vol. 56. Philosophical Dictionary, | t. Vi, Initiation, p. 207 and 208.

|

From — EE

274 PITHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

a stranger to the work in the workshops, of which he had no idea the scope, the poet experienced profound astonishment upon hearing- such men pressuring him to be admitted into the order Masonic; he did not think his tendencies were serious, and he saw the Franklins, the Lalandes, great thinkers, minds vast, seeking in Freemasonry the means to propagate their ideas.

Astonishment was soon followed by conviction; Voltaire learned that the lodges worked to dispel the darkness, to undermine the prejudices, to shed light on superstition; the goal he himself had constantly pursued was theirs; it was a powerful auxiliary which was revealing itself to him; perhaps he could even become interior- rement this justice that the impetus he had given to development The development of philosophical ideas was not without influence on the activity that Freemasonry was carrying out; he accepted.

It was on June 7, 1778, that Voltaire was taken to the lodge of Nine Sisters; presented by Cordier de Saint-Firmin, he was received in the porch by the brothers of Meslay, Lort, Bignon, Remy, Mercier, Cailhava, Fabrony, Dufresne, then introduced by the Chevalier de Villars. The lodge was presided over by Lalande. The Grand The poet relied on Franklin and Court de Gebelin, followed by Knight of Cubières.

There were no physical tests; the entire assembly knew the writer, judged him; no one needed to search what was in the philosopher's soul. Which of all the feelings that a man can keep hidden deep in his heart who are the enemies of Freemasonry, he had fought them-tus; the doctrines of order, he had sown them in all his pages; what is asked of novices, he had done. The Reception should be the starting point of a life of struggles, that of Voltaire was the crowning achievement. The trials were therefore all moral, and the illustrious philosopher found an opportunity there natural ability to brilliantly expound dry ideas. "It's for us

"What was the lesson, and not for him," wrote one of the brothers who had attended this ceremony.

When the time came to present him with the insignia of the order,

OF FREEMASONRY. 275

Lalande gave him the symbolic apron, a sign and pledge of work;

It was Helvétius's; Voltaire spontaneously brought it to his lips, thus honoring one of the boldest thinkers and one of the most learned masons of that great era. Voltaire was nearing the end of his long career illustrated by works intended to exercise

such a great influence on the revolution that was brewing and on the century that would follow it; the edifice he had struck was undermined

on all sides, close to collapsing; the undermining work once

Once finished, the worker was going to die. A few months after this reception-

tion, so touching that one of the brothers present could not speak of it with tears in his eyes, although many years had passed

Afterwards, the same Nine Sisters lodge rendered honors.

funeral services for the one whom the nation was soon to transport to the temple of great men.

Lalande, who had presided over the initiation, also presided over the funeral ceremony; he was attended by Franklin and the Earl of Strogonof, who served as supervisors; Brother

Lechangeux was in charge of occupying the speaker's chair. "Two
One hundred visitors were admitted to the proceedings, introduced two by two
"And in complete silence. The orchestra was considerable and » composed of the leading artists of the capital; it performed by » intervals of pieces taken from Alceste, Castor and Pollux, and

» had decided that M^{re} Denis and Marquise de Villette should present-
 | » would just happen to attend the ceremony; they | » arrived, the first led by the Marquis brother of | » Villette, and the second by the brother marquis of Villevieille (1).

 D » We arrived at the burial enclosure via a long and narrow

 | » gallery; the room, entirely draped in black, decorated with

 | » taste and simplicity, and adorned with cartouches where one could read the most

 "Beautiful thoughts in prose and verse taken from the works of the illustrious"

(1) Madame la Marquise de Villette belonged to an adoption lodge; she was in 1819 Grand Mistress of the Belle et Bonne lodge in Paris. During a grand celebration Masonic ceremony held on February 9, 1819, in his residence on rue de Vaugirard, The bust of Voltaire was crowned. Mademoiselle Duchesnois recited verses by Jouy; Lacépède was venerated at an honorary table; Countess Guilleminot, Baroness de la Rochefoucault filled important functions.

00th 2nd rating LEE SRE oo Pme RE =
 L

276 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The deceased's room was lit only by a few lamps, the pale » clarity cast a dubious light; Voltaire's mausoleum was |
 » at the back of the room. |
 "The venerable man's speech was a kind of introduction;
 the lodge speaker read a speech similar to the subject of the | ceremony; the speaker from Thalia's lodge improvised a speech- |
 tion which was listened to with the keenest interest; finally, the brother of La Dixmerie delivered a eulogy for Voltaire. A fine gesture.
 took place around the middle of the speech, at the point where the speaker |
 he exclaimed, after having addressed the enemies of the great man: |
 And if the voice of truth cannot yet silence that of the Slander, I see no other way than lightning to impose it upon him
 "silence"; the drumbeat is heard, the mausoleum disappears, and |
 "One sees a painting depicting the apotheosis of Voltaire."
 "Brother Roucher then read a fragment of his poem of |
 The month of January, which contains an energetic tirade against the fanaticism that led to Voltaire being denied funeral honors, while scandalous ones were granted to the Cardinal of Île Roche-Aymon, hypocritical prelate, and to Abbot Terray, minister concoctaire.
 » This verse:

ER y Es v »%

VF YE 5%

"Where a great man rests, a god must dwell."

» reading of the entire piece.

"During the funeral ceremony, at the moment when the brothers go

"Place the mysterious branch at the foot of the cenotaph," Franklin

"offered, as a tribute of his fraternal sorrow, the crown which | » had previously been presented on behalf of the lodge; it is |

"It is impossible to express the profound feeling that this produced."

» inspiration from Masonic friendship (1). » |

We understand what influence they must have exerted in the lodges |

Men like Voltaire, Franklin, Lalande, what an idea they had!

had to provide masonry work outside, and how many men- |

My colleagues considered themselves fortunate and were proud to share their work.

| |

(4) J.-C. Bezuchet, Précis historique de la Franc-Maçonnerie, t. I, p. 292 et

|
|
"aroused enthusiasm; the author was obliged to start again the
|
following.

Fe ee ee nn ee nn ee ei RAR in 0s

OF FREEMASONRY. 277

Whatever power one may attribute to principles, it is necessary

much in their triumph. The cooperation of the philosophers
the most daring of the eighteenth century in Masonic work would suffice to have his views, his tendencies, his goal judged by this

at this stage of its history, if any doubts could remain at this
In this regard, Freemasonry sought to liberate peoples, in the moral order and in the material order, that is to say, to destroy all prejudices, all the errors that divide men into slaves both as masters, as subjects and as sovereigns, as beggars and as the wealthy, saturated with possessions, the damned and the elect; she attacked both political and religious law; his action was to to extend to the entire universe, that is to say, to all the points where it had been able to penetrate; she substituted a law of love for war, and united all peoples in a bond of brotherhood.

These principles of Freemasonry, the Revolution would soon try to achieve them, and if he were not given the
To succeed completely, she had to sow seeds everywhere.
destined to grow. Seeing the purpose of the institution, one understands why it counted among its members Helvétius, Cabanis, Camba-Ceres, Franklin, Voltaire, Lalande, Parny, Lafayette, Washington, and a great many other men who held a position elevated in literature, in science, or played an important role-both on the political scene.

Masonic principles and ceremonies had been brought to North America by English colonists, and on
In this virgin land, order had quickly prospered; one could find traces of it can be found in Boston as early as 1753. The following year, a Great-
A lodge is founded in this city; it issues constitutions to provinces, while that of Kilwinning delivers at the same time patents, and that the detached English regiments have their lodges particulars. Favored by this threefold impetus, the institution developed rapidly; the Scottish rite prevailed particularly.

The War of Independence broke out; Lafayette came to fight in favor of liberty; it was in America that he was initiated.
Freemasons took a most active part in the struggles which ensured the liberation of the new people, and lost at

EE

a — A —

the Battle of Bunker's Hill, June 27, 1775, their Grand Master Warren, who fell in the midst of victory. The separation between England and America once consummated, the lodges of this The latter country no longer received the direction of the Masonic powers. ques of London and Scotland, founded in all the states Independent Grand Lodges, but which, imitating the constitution the country's political leaders, united closely, and appointed a single leader. grandmaster for all of America; so as not to leave any a pretext for quarrels and pretensions, they all admire rites and treated them equally.

By ceasing to recognize the supremacy of English lodges and Scottish, the American lodges continued their relations with they, and established with those of other European countries; printed documents contain the letters which were addressed, and as a result, several workshops of the two worlds had accredited correspondents with each other others. Apart from the issue that can divide two governments In Freemasonry, there is a link that brings them closer together. men.

The War of Independence raised a Masonic question— of the utmost importance, which had to be stirred by again, a few years later, in Europe, in the struggles of the Republic and Empire against other nations. France— Freemasonry preaches universal brotherhood, it condemns all unjust aggression, she disapproves of the war and does not look upon it as permitted only that which aims to repel the invasion. The American Freemasons, resorting to arms with their fellow citizens _citizens to free their new homeland from a yoke that oppresses them seemed too burdensome, to conquer their nationality and become their cause, by their own right; the English soldiers who belong— Those born into Freemasonry must have had many ideas less certain about the legitimacy of the war they were about to wage, war ordered by politics, by the interests of England, but that the mistakes of those in power had brought about.

If doubt entered their souls, how could they to fight without disregarding the principles they had promised to the equals of other peoples, did not doubt the justice of.

To follow? If they did not fight as brave and courageous soldiers, Were they not betraying their country? In the first case, what became the brotherhood that must unite all men, and one of the What are the main Masonic laws? In the second, what infringement

_ was not inclined towards the discipline so necessary for the troops, link that cannot be broken without simultaneously dissolving the body Armed or exposed to the gravest dangers?

Among the men who were called upon to compete on the fields of Battle of the New World, many had shared the agape mystic, called together peace upon the universe, preached the concord, and suddenly the homeland gave to each from them a sword with which they might slaughter each other. Philosophical, religious, political, Freemasonry was going to- Will she triumph, or will her principles be misunderstood by those who had received his baptism. That was the question raised. through war. But Freemasonry was still only a an unenforced principle, unknown to most of those who follow the orders of power, the dangers to the homeland, the laws of war pushing- were on both sides, fighting each other; no state had made it his religion, his law. Freemasonry is like of all the great social ideas: adopted, practiced by individuals in all that this situation of isolation allows them, it could not be proclaimed by a nation as its law, to less so by all; for she who would make it her rule of conduct, to model its codes on it, would be, in its relations with other nations, inevitably trained to disregard its precepts.

But if the application of the principle of human fraternity, which would one day make wars between peoples impossible, were it not not permitted by the state of society, the masons still had to uphold the principles of equality and liberty, the triumph of which The phe had to necessarily precede that of fraternity. As for the war, it was not in the power of any Freemason of the empire- dear; in both camps, everyone obeyed their country, remember- queen mistress of all, and the duties of the citizen prevailed on the others; however, the Freemasons, after having fought With courage, they never forget that a mysterious bond unites them.

born

that they owe aid and protection to that one among them, a compatriot or enemy, who fell wounded on the battlefield, or who was taken prisoner.

That is certainly not the ultimate goal of the principle, that is observation restricted by the state of laws, customs, and society entirely; it offered only individual consolations, that the benefits were limited, but it was then impossible for it. It turned out differently.

At the moment Voltaire died, like a star that leaves
After him, a long trail of light: Freemasonry.
reached the highest degree of power. The Duke of Chartres, since Duke of Orléans, he was appointed Grand Master; outside of France, twelve hundred lodges were in contact with the Grand Orient; at Inside, three hundred lodges received direction from him; four Hundreds more were scattered across the territory, depending on the National Grand Lodge, of the Scottish Lodge, of the Rite of Misraïm; chapters and advice were regularly provided; we had wanted to involve women in this great movement which was to foresee the regeneration of the country, and adoption lodges were created in Paris and the provinces. In principle, per-members of the highest aristocracy joined it; one saw in the Lodge of Candor, the Duchess of Chartres, the Duchess of Bourbon, the Princess of Lamballe, the Countess of Polignae, the Countess of Choiseul-Gouffier, the Viscountess of Faudoas, the Marquise de Courtebonne; all the ladies of the court followed these big names in the boxes. But this enthusiasm should not not to last, the ideas preached in the assemblies could not not to be adopted by those who clung so closely to power that was being undermined from all sides; other meetings of ladies continued Nuërent, but those featuring the ladies of the court ceased soon.

Imagine seven hundred workshops scattered across the ground of France, in which the boldest, the most Famous figures of the time repeated lessons of freedom every day.
equality, fraternity, religious tolerance, at a time when the government was an absolute monarchy, where the state was divided into distinct classes, where prejudices of birth, if they

OF FREEMASONRY. 281

were beginning to be less powerful in social customs, were enshrined in law, where inequality of conditions, of burdens, was an integral part of the social contract, where the fanaticism of how much Freemasonry, while remaining within the theories, had to help the movement that was preparing itself, to the great a jolt whose first oscillations could be felt.

Three Masonic powers acted, not in concert, but simultaneously, excited at the same time and by the thought of goal to achieve and by the natural rivalry that it aroused their coexistence. The Great Lodge survived and worked actively; The Grand Orient created workshops and regulated others; Scottish culture captivated minds and seduced with its representations. theatrical performances where the thrilling emotions of the drama served to development of doctrines. The ranks had a significance deep, no longer veiled in mystery, or whose veil was very transparent: Hiram was reason, light, freedom; His three companions who assassinated him were driven by fanaticism. ambition, tyranny; this simple exposition needed no further explanation. Based on these deductions, the duty of the masons was easy to understand.

Numerous ranks had been invented, which stemmed more or less naturally of the three symbolic grades and, without the to continue in perfect order, always connecting to it and telling- were providing instructions of some interest. We were looking for- We will later examine the real reasons for their creation in an order who called to him men from nations so different from one another of customs and habits, having immediate political needs so diverse, summoned in the same temple all classes of society so deeply divided in terms of status, wealth, and education tion, thoughts, views, causing them to confuse opposing interests so far; we only wish to note today their action.

One of these grades, modeled on that of Master, which we have explained the myth, dramatized the revenge for Hiram's murder, and minds, stirred by the great movement that animated the country, occupied with social issues of the utmost importance, they quickly forgot

the astronomical allegory for what it covered, and the dream 19

- + 090 to 00

Ho me nee me mn meme 2 ee meme me pen

289 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

were hurtling towards reality. Another grade had nine points

We must judge to what interpretations they could effortlessly give rise. In a third, the subject of reception, of the theatrical performance in the middle of which initiation is given Born, was the Babylonian captivity. There, in a spectacle full animation, movement, amidst shifting scenes where the play of light was employed with the utmost skill, Cyrus's dream unfolded: the roaring lion ready to devour the tyrant, the eagle emerging from the flames, cleaving the air and bearing the Legend: Set the captives free! Nebuchadnezzar the Balthazar, burdened with chains; the towers of captivity in which the prisoners groan, awaiting a liberator; the a bridge of deliverance thrown over a river that carries corpses. Other ranks required a sinister, frightening apparatus. Sometimes: the ceremonies recalled the passion of the dead Jesus for liberty and equality; the halls were draped with draperies black, dotted with skulls, lit by chandeliers whose branches or various parts were bone-shaped humans.

"a – What time is it?" the president asked one of the officers.

"a – It is the hour when the veil of the temple is torn, the darkness And consternation spread throughout the universe, the light is "obscured, the tools of Freemasonry have been broken,"

"The blazing star has disappeared, the cubic stone sweats blood and"

"Water, finally the word is lost."

At that moment there was a knock at the door.

"– Who strikes P?"

"– He is a brother who, wandering in the woods and in the mountains– » gnes since the destruction of Solomon's temple, has lost

"our word, and wants to seek it with you, or contribute with"

"You will have to recover it."

Then all the assistants threw themselves to the ground in the attitude of pain; the newcomer is brought in, and he is told: "You must "to perceive, from the consternation that reigns here, the disturbance which "has happened in the universe; the veil has been torn away, the light is

OF FREEMASONRY. 285

"obscured, etc.; speech is lost, we cannot"

"to give it to you; however, our intention is to try, by

"A new law, to find it. Do you want to follow this law?"

The brother swore to obey this law which he belonged to. speakers to develop, but which could not be written or engraved.

The mysteries of another order were reminiscent of the Egyptian well where Sethos descended, and the action that was taking place in his depths was to leave an indelible mark on the initiate's memory cable.

"— What are you asking for?" they would say to him.

"I demand to discover the whole truth."

A mechanism was at work, a deep and dark abyss opened up in the midst of the onlookers; a sword in one hand, a torch

In the other, the candidate was lowered down by a rope attached to his belt, and there sc was playing out a real drama whose twists and turns, exalting the imagination, they were to give birth to heroes ready to die for the triumph of this truth that they sought and that they had found in the underground passages from which they emerged victorious, the torch relit after being extinguished, the sword remaining in the hand from which they had tried to tear it off.

Elsewhere, in more mystical forms, the dogma of human brotherhood. In other temples, other degrees of the ranking system, they were not just lessons in equality that the brothers received; in the obligation that they they lent, they made a formal commitment to treat all the men with perfect equality, whether they were rich or poor, noble or commoner, to recognize in them no other
a distinction other than that of virtue.

Elsewhere, summarizing the maxims preached in the sanc-Tuaires, they would say to the initiate:

"A friend of men cannot be a friend of the deceitful, who were in all ages the plagues of the earth.

"Virtue, enliven us with your benevolent fire; reason, guide our not on the path of life; truth, may your torch light us illuminates.

"Be fair, because fairness is the foundation of humankind."

"Be good, because goodness binds hearts."

ee ee em Qt 000 ed te mm om a ee + mme de - = ge tee

284 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY |

"Be lenient, because, weak yourself, you live with..."
beings as weak as you.

"Be gentle, because gentleness attracts affection."

nurtures goodness.

"Be modest: pride is rebellious."

"Forgive the insults: revenge perpetuates hatred."

"Do good to the one who insults you, so that you may appear more righteous."
taller than him and to make you a friend.

"Be restrained, temperate, chaste, because voluptuousness, impulse-Perance and excess will destroy your being and make you despicable.

"Be a citizen, because the homeland is necessary for your society, for Your pleasures, your well-being.

"Be faithful and submissive to the legitimate authority, because it is necessary for the maintenance of society.

"Obey the laws, the expression of the public will, to which Your will must be subordinate.

"Defend your country, because it's what makes you happy."
and which contains all your possessions, as well as all the most dear to your heart.

"Do not allow the patrician, this common mother of you"
and of your fellow citizens, falls into the chains of tyranny; she does not would be more than a prison.

"If your unjust homeland denies you happiness, if, subjected to a Unjust power, she suffers when she is oppressed, stay away from her in silence, but never disturb her (1).

It is neither appropriate to exaggerate nor to deny the significance of the actions of the Freemasonry in this supreme moment when men clairvoyants foresaw the future. The vast majority of The nation called for, wanted changes that would put an end to a
The situation had become intolerable; he was rejected from the government.
in which he had no part, the Third Estate was preparing itself in the lodges are about to appear on the political scene. Everything is serious in this moment for Freemasonry: we can clearly see it in the workshops men of the highest nobility, senior officers,

.

_____ _ _ _ _ SL ep 0 ee eee – Die 4 Or _ QT o

+ 0 Se – te me

CPU; doi... MMFROQFSEERR/OREUEIR "°C. © € | | à CR QE € Ç Ç Ç QQ QQQURQ RQ À RRQ RU QUE F
eee nn su

(1) Ragan, Philosophical and Interpretive Course of Initiations, p. 593.

OF FREEMASONRY.

defeated, some of them mistaken about the path they choose, obeying the general enthusiasm without looking ahead; but The mass of Freemasons consists of the bourgeoisie, of lower-ranking officers, of the lower clergy, that is to say, of the three elements who will soon unite, fight together, when the nation will set out to conquer his freedom.

The bourgeoisie forms this army which acts every day, first in secret meetings, then in circles, at the heart of the family, a thousand, whose vows are repeated even in the pulpits of priests, in the cloistered conversations. This army has powerful leaders, princes, sovereigns; she will follow them for as long as they will be able to go along the path she has chosen; from the day they will stop, she will leave them on the way, but will not make a stop.

It was not in vain that Franklin, Helvétius, Voltaire and Other philosophers had made their voices heard in the lodges, Their words had not been lost; there was no hatred. of the priest, but there was the hatred of the fanaticism that had raised the scaffolds of Calas, of Labarre, the hatred of superstition which kept the people in ignorance, some members of which The clergy benefited. They were not opposed to Christianity there. But they wanted to bring him back to the precepts of the Gospel; the reason said that all religions were equal before the Great Arch- They were subject to the laws of the universe, and they had to be subject to civil law. admitted into the ranks of the Masonic brotherhood the men Of all beliefs, we wanted to shape society on the model of the lodges, and therefore it was no longer possible to tolerate that these beliefs were ever a motive for persecution, a cause exclusion from any of the civilian careers.

For half a century, Freemasonry began to... As these ideas developed in France, the bourgeoisie absorbed them. then he caressed them, fed them, and when the time came to write the instructions of the deputies to the Estates-General, inserted the summarized in his notebooks.

The form of government adopted in the lodges had not maintained without difficulty; power there was elective, temporary, and All brothers were voters and eligible to hold office; under a monarchy

286 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

absolute and hereditary, it was a kind of anomaly; one had tried to establish grandmasters for life, we had succeeded after rather fierce, rather long struggles; but these attempts were exceptional, and in the majority the electoral system had

of the government that suited the nation.

This is what the bourgeoisie was like in the lodges; let's see how many-

what had been the effects in the upper social regions of Masonic affiliation. Let us borrow this table from Lamartine:

US ES EE 5 5%

"Religious tolerance in Germany was born out of contempt" even where Frederick had held sway over religions. In the shadow of this tolerance, the philosophical spirit had organized associations occult practices, like Freemasonry. The German princes- The men were being initiated. They believed they were performing an act of superior intelligence, laughing as he entered these shadows, which, deep down, do not contain- they held nothing but a few general principles of humanity and virtue, without immediate application to civil institutions. Frédéric, in his youth, had himself been initiated into it, to Brunswick, by Major Bielfeld. Emperor Joseph II, this an innovative sovereign, bolder than his time, had also wanted to undergo these trials in Vienna, under the direction of Baron de Born, head of the Freemasons of Austria. These societies, which had no political significance in England, because the Liberty was openly conspiring there in parliament and in the press, had a completely different meaning on the continent. They were the secret meetings of independent thought; thought escaping from the books, they took action. Between the initiates and the established institutions, the war was silent, but more deadly. "The hidden driving forces behind these companies were obviously to..." the goal of creating a government of human opinion in opposition to prejudiced governments. [They wanted] reforming religious, political and civil society, by beginning- influenced by the spirit of the enlightened classes. These lodges were islands catacombs of a new cult. The sect of the Illuminati, founded and led by Weishaupt, was spreading in Germany, in competition with the Freemasons and the Rosicrucians. The theorists, for their part, created symbols of perfection.

en ee ee 2 tn M - pm,
0 re Le ere Me ee ee 2 ee eme ct ee ms from +

=
| = << on

OF FREEMASONRY.

supernatural, and enlisted all tender souls and all

ardent imaginations surrounding dogmas full of love and of infinity. Theosophists, Swedenborgians, disciples of the sublime but obscure Swedenborg, this Saint Martin of Germany, claimed to be completing the Gospel and transforming humanity by transforming death and the senses. All these dog-my thoughts were all mixed up in an equal contempt for the institutions existing, in an aspiration for the renewal of the spirit and things. All were democratic in their last
In conclusion, because they were all inspired by love for mankind, without distinction of classes.

"The affiliations multiplied endlessly. Prestige, like
It always happens when zeal burns, he fraudulently added
In truth, as if error or lies were the alloy inevitable truths and virtues even of the human mind.
Centuries were evoked, shadows were conjured, and hearing speaking with the dead. The visions were the last secret, the apparitions
We relive the last miracle of these sectarians. They hallucinated
the princes' indulgent imagination through transitions rapid shifts from terror to enthusiasm. Phantasmagorical science-Risk, little known at the time, served as an aid to these seductions.
After the death of Frederick II, his successor submitted to these trials.
and was captivated by these splendors. The kings conspired against the thrones. The princes of Gotha gave asylum to Weishaupt.
Augustus of Saxony, Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, Prince de Nieuved, the very coadjutor of the ecclesiastical principalitiesquarries along the Rhine, those of Mainz, Worms, of Constance distinguished herself by her zeal for the doctrines mysterious aspects of Freemasonry (1).

Revolution breaks out in France; the nation can make itself heard

|

his voice in the councils, actively involved in the government of country; the Constituent Assembly proclaims from its tribune
the philosophical principles preached every day, without respite, without hesitation, with a fervor for truth, in the pulpits of the Freemasonry, and which are simply the recorded precepts

The ae – te mme ©

.

= - —

288 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

in the Gospel, to which the institution has always shown itself profoundly fundamentally attached, and which constituted its entire strength. The Assembly The constituent assembly will not be able, in its short duration, to make them triumph. all, apply them, because it is more theoretical than governmental; desperate resistance, external wars, the internal struggles, the storms that, accumulating beneath the feet of the revolution, delay its progress, divert it, will not allow not to the assemblies that will succeed him to fulfill expectations data provided by her, to achieve the goal she had hinted at; but She will have accomplished the greatest conquests a people has ever known. never obtained, changed the constitution, threw the nation and the Europe in a new way, planted milestones for the future, raised In the eyes of the world, a flag that will never be lowered again.

The voluntary immolation of his titles and privileges by the nobility on the famous night of August 4th was the realization of a portion of Masonic doctrines; the majority of France wanted the abolition of privileges that divided the nation into enemy castes; but the admission of the nobility into the lodges, where It was repeated every day that all men were equal, where This equality was being discussed, or was being philosophically established. in the name of reason and religion, where inequality was shown between citizens of the islands, like the result of tyranny, such as the source of all the evils that had weighed upon the world and afflicted— particularly affected French society, which had its own admirably at the sacrifice of his titles.

From a political standpoint, the actions of Freemasonry in the years preceding the revolution cannot therefore be doubtful; moreover, it appears with too much obviousness to that serious men can or will deny it; it will to still exert a very serious influence in a circumstance decisive, and if it is not possible for him to stop the march of enemies who advance on France, at least she will throw some hesitation in their resolutions.

In agreement with some émigrés and corps commanders, the king... determined to transport the monarchy in the midst of an army, without to realize that, being nothing like a soldier, he could neither see to lead or train the troops, without understanding that he was proclaiming

not

PP om to ED than to ee corner

OF FREEMASONRY. 289

he himself abdicated for the first time; he fled the capital to
In the middle of the night; arrested in Varennes, he is brought back to Paris, guarded at sight by the nation which makes him a hostage of the revolution against the attempts from abroad; the emigrants, at the head of whom are the French princes, the Count of Artois, the Duke of Bourbon, the Prince de Condé, besieged Prussia, Austria, the Russia, which they are trying to draw into a coalition against the France, and finally decide them to invade, an implicit act that will weigh eternally on their memory, will return the responsibility to them
June 20, August 10, September 2 and January 21.

However, the war party, so strongly stimulated, finds opposition among the German princes, and the Duke of Brunswick, who was soon to be, not the true author, but the editorauthor of the famous manifesto that bears his name and decided on the destinies born of Europe, he himself is silently fighting this coalition of which he will be the commander-in-chief. What secret motives can be attributed to his calculated delays, his latest efforts to deflect the threat suspended over France, the march of the armies over Champagne, on the Rhine and the Var? When the emigrants gathered in Koblenz
They incite Europe against us, proclaiming the solidarity of thrones,
They irritate kings, evoking an imaginary danger hanging over their heads.
establish a regency to replace Louis XVI, represent the
The French nation, deemed incapable of resisting, announces everything
They are so high that in a few weeks they will have crossed the border, conquered Paris, crushed the revolution, thus decided the enemies by the pride of conquest and the fear of peril, what unknown power thus stops their arms, restrains their impatience such a highly manifested tendency?

"Freemasonry, this underground religion in which
"Almost all the reigning princes of Germany had entered the islands," » covered with its mysteries of secret intelligences between the phi-"Francish philosophy and the sovereigns of the Rhineland. Brothers"
"In religious conspiracy, they could not be enemies"
"Quite sincere in politics. The Duke of Brunswick was at heart
"A heart more citizen than prince, more French than German."
"The offer of a throne in Paris had tickled his heart. We fight
"A people one hopes to rule, and a cause one..."

ee RS

290 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"Wants to win, but doesn't want to lose": such was the "Situation of the Duke of Brunswick. Consulted by the King of Prussia,"

ee

"He advised this monarch to turn his forces towards ja
"Poland and to conquer provinces there, instead of conquering"
"Principles in France (1)."

But the sympathies of the Duke of Brunswick and some princes could no longer hold back the events destined to to thwart all calculations, to deceive even those who had them prepared, either by not meeting their expectations, or by...
exceeding. The French Revolution, which needed peace to grow, to carry out its apostolate and penetrate further easily at the heart of nations, who had not dreamed and did not want that a peaceful conquest of peoples to its philosophical principles phiques, was trained for declared war already from the top of the a platform for the powers that the inspirations of the émigrés had armed against her.

The latest indecisions of the commander-in-chief of the coalition forces of Prussia and Austria, operating on Longwy, on Sedan, on Verdun, in the Argonne forest, did not counterbalance the movement excited in France by the first disasters of the campaign, the abandonment of Belgium, the flight of some generaux, the surrender of our cities.

The camp outside Paris was declared, enlistments were voluntary they huddled in the public square to the applause of the crowd; on the altar of the endangered homeland the women laid their jewelry, the proceeds of which were intended to clothe and feed the soldiers,
the nation's supreme hope; the Parisian uprisings
were now challenging the kings; it was over, the armies were about to clash in a terrible struggle, and our conscripts, rushing into battle to the sound of the Marseillaise, triumphing over the discipline of the old gangs under whose rule Europe
The enemy wanted to destroy the revolution.

On the invaded borders, all that can be heard is noise.
distant from the march of the regiments illuminated by the fire of the cano one vomiting death; the gleam of the falling ramparts, of

(4) Lamartine, History of the Girondins, 1. 11, p, 290, 3rd edition.

|
|
|

RS than 2

OF FREEMASONRY. 291

| collapsed bridges; the tumultuous cries of surrendering cities, the Germanic cheers from the victors, the clash of the fields of battle where past and future clash, where Île is contested victory between despotism and liberty; bloody war, melee dreadful, all the alternatives of which reverberate at the heart of the countries as if by an electric shock.

Inside, there's the fervor of the clubs, the clamor of the crowd. applauding the motions, the revolt stirring the countryside, raising up cities, surrendering ports to enemy squadrons; the the repercussions of the disorderly uprisings dragging on the

|
|
|
:
|
|
|

public square, in the palace of kings, at the bar of representation national tation, their cohorts inflamed by passion, their bizarre banners, their bloody pikes; the decrees of Assemblies that stunned the world, energetic struggles from a platform where the sacrificers pass by one after another and the victims; the last songs of the condemned on the fatal cart, the dull and mournful echo of the scaffold raised in turn by the parties; and, through the twists and turns of this great drama, of the men pushing patriotic energy to its absolute limits fanaticism, organizing armies and victory, a people rising up in full force and triumphant!

Look for traces of Freemasonry in the midst of these divisions, these titanic shocks that hold Europe together

What to think about in these days of public emotion? At the moment of the action, in the heat of a battle fought on all fronts, Without respite and without mercy, who would concern themselves with theories? Who, Island How would they proclaim loudly enough to make themselves heard? How would do- Did they anchor these clamor, these upheavals in society? At Furthermore, why delude ourselves? The theories, put forward by... Men of reflection, men of order, are almost always put into practice by others; a purely philanthropic thought discussed them, established them; it was to a vigorous arm that the appla- tion belongs to it; will it stop exactly at the marked point? The Nile, in order to fertilize the plains of Egypt which, without it, would remain sterile, begins by invading the lands, and destroys everything that has not been raised above its highest level, mm se mm comm: ua AA ce ee has du

L

Anne. ne CR ee ne nn de Re ee de ee + Re ee ne 0e Re M me ee A -
_ - mn mm ee ee DER - ee 20e eee Re OR CR Se RS ee

299 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Also, what has become of the lodge leaders, the initiators into the mysteries of all rites, the orators with the voice vibrant, the preachers of doctrines? Ideas are debated in the street, and the brothers have abandoned the columns; it is no longer in the shadow and the secret that it is a matter of initiating a few elite beings, It's out in the open, it's an entire people that is being called upon to... agency of mystical formulas. Some left the temple to the rostrums to which the popular tide has carried them, from whence it will hurl them, They abandoned symbolism for the unvarnished truth. Who would listen to them? Now? It's in the evening that they gather, but at the same time Instantly, other burning questions are being raised, posed with a different clarity, a different inflexibility, at the Feuillants clubs, Cordeliers, Jacobins, in the midst of an immense crowd applauding the speaker she loves, sending him back all the exaltation- tion of the passions he awakens in her.

These men command armies on the Rhine and in the Alps. from where they will later set off towards Italy, on the Var where they will wait- tooth, in the ports bombarded by enemy fleets, in Vendée, in Brittany; some are fighting there, some illustrious, others obscure soldiers, all contributing to the liberation of the fatherland, to the conquest of a threatened nationality, to the maintenance of rights proclaimed. The scaffold too will have its share of their heads in these blind and always bloody reactions that change in a day of victory in defeat.

Freemasonry, as a constituted, active body, was not Nowhere anymore; the Freemasons were everywhere, except in their temples where they had no business; Pepe with which they are armed could no longer be a peaceful sword, an ingenious allegory, a weapon on the use of which those who presided over the receptions provided philosophical instruction to the neophytes; they had also been told that they should always Ready to pull the trigger for the salvation of the fatherland, they obeyed. The time
The orators had passed, the soldiers' speaker had arrived; Ja puis-
The power of action replaced the power of words.
Freemasons were at the frontier, in the besieged cities, at the national platform, within the administration, subjected to serious concerns opportunities for the regeneration of a people struggling internally and externally

mm

has in

nt – dr RD 0 © oo Re et

OF FREEMASONRY. 295

outside; only the invalids remained in the sanctuaries, like

at the time of an invasion, while all the citizens are standing On the ramparts, only the women remain in the churches.
the old men praying for success, for the victory which they did not can share the dangers.

However, Masonic work, neglected as a result of the importance of public affairs, appear not to have been abandoned completely, and an unheard-of event in the annals of the order was given at the Grand Orient, in the very midst of this agitation-France's feverish state. Judged differently in the lodges, interpreted in very different ways by writers, by the

. orators, due to the time in which it takes place, the circumstances-

Those who surrounded him deserve to be mentioned, for he will understand better than any dissertation how the institute-tion was appreciated by those whom the majority's wish had placed at its head; moreover, it belongs to the history of Freemasonry-
Indeed, this is not one of the least curious episodes of that time.

The Duke of Chartres, later Duke of Orléans, and Philippe Égalité, had been in 1771, upon the death of the Prince of Clermont, his uncle, and grand master of the order, elected in his place by a faction of the ameborn from internal debates about isolating themselves, about separating from the Great The lodge, which had soon issued them with a decree of banishment. accepted this appointment which reconciled the two parties, the decrees were reported, and the Grand Lodge ratified this choice by a new election. Two years passed before it was proceeded to the Prince's installation; in the meantime, other dissensitivities had prompted the government to impose a ban on the The Grand Lodge, the Grand Orient, had been founded and had confirmed the Following the duke's appointment, lords of the court launched sarcastic remarks. my thoughts on his election, which they labeled illegal. But in the end, the two powers had drawn closer for a moment, taking the same man for chief, and his installation took place in October 1773; she was with great pomp at the little house of the prince called Folie-Titon, rue Montreuil, faubourg Saint-Antoine; in its title as Grand Master of the Masonic Order in France he joined that of sovereign grand master of all the islands, councils, chapters and Scottish lodges in France, so that divided powers taken 2 eee Re ee naked

294 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

However, both were presided over by the same man. Did the prince want to attempt a grand merger, or, despairing of it To succeed, he harbored the secret thought of blowing out his inspirations. tions in the whole body by gathering in his hand the direction of the three parts of which it was composed? That is very probable, and the political events that soon unfolded, and in which he played such a large part, cannot leave any doubt in this respect; moreover, the terms of its acceptance are quite explicit (1).

We have already been able to judge the activity that the Grand Orient has deployed, immediately after its creation, and the excellent results it achieved. In order to to shed as much light as possible on this period of history where the actions are happening so rapidly, one must enter into a another, less important, order of events, than the enemies of order have exaggerated very skillfully by dressing up their writings with a veneer of good faith quite capable of deceiving minds, that Authors devoted to Freemasonry have not, as far as we know, gathered and grouped within a framework of course, but which will throw their share of light on this mysterious era. The Duke of Once Chartres was established, the word "semester" was invented, which should never to be said elsewhere than in the lodge, and without which every irregular mason, any man, whether a stranger to the order or not, whoever they may be

(1) "In the year of the great light 1772, on the 3rd day of the moon of Jiar, on the 5th of the year 5772, and of the birth of the Messiah on the 5th day of April 1772, by virtue of Proclamation made at the Grand Lodge assembly on the 24th day of the 4th month of the Masc From the Most High, Most Powerful and Most Excellent Prince, His Serene Highness Louis-Philippe Joseph d'Orléans, Duke of Chartres, Prince of the Blood, for Grand Master of all the regular lodges of France and that of the Sovereign*.Cons. .of the emperors of the East and tooth, subl.. Scottish mother lodge, the 26th of the moon of Elul 7771, for sovereign grand master of all the Scottish councils, chapters and lodges of the great globe of France; office which His Serene Highness has graciously accepted for the love of art royal, and in order to concentrate all Masonic operations under a single authority. In witness whereof, His Serene Highness has signed the minutes of acceptance. Signed: Louis-Puillipe-Joseph D'ORLÉANS. »

Minutes of the meeting of the most illustrious administrator-general, of June 48, 1772. Signed: Monraux-LuxEMBOURG, and signed by one of the secretaries: D'ATESEx. In-40 6 pages.

3.-C. Bezuchet, Historical summary of the Order of Freemasonry, t. Y, p. 46 ct #7.

| RE 0 © oo nn mn
L 0 0 0 Re sm ent de me D Qu ne 2 2 - -

FREEMASONRY. 299

Mr. and Mrs. "0

cannot be allowed to participate in the work; legitimate guarantee against curiosity and betrayal. The following year, the Grand-Orient abolishes the highly inappropriate designation of royal order given in the workshops at the institution, and decrees that in the future the The brotherhood will be called simply a Masonic order (1). In In 1773, he expressed his intention to cleanse the desecrated temples, he said, by corrupt men, and orders information on the composition and work of the lodges; he experiences resistance tances, we believe we see in its prescriptions a violation of the He disregards the freedoms of the lodges and continues his plans reform.

In 1776, the Grand Master, whose Masonic acts were still few in number and perhaps limited to his initiation and upon its installation, it undertook in the southern provinces of France, a journey that will be a long triumph for him; presides over the French Lodge and the Amilié Lodge in Bordeaux, attends to a banquet given to him by these two artists, and to which are The duchess, his wife, and other ladies of the city were admitted, and posed

From Bordeaux, the Duke of Chartres goes to Agen; the brothers rush in to meet him; he comes to Toulouse to receive the delegations of workshops in the city and surrounding areas, settle disputes which they existed between them, reconciled them. This journey continues; in Poitiers, in Angoulême, in Montauban, in Montpellier, in all the cities he passes through, he is surrounded by the tributes of the French masonry, greeted with compliments, accompanied by wishes, and upon his return the Grand Orient sends him deputies who congratulate him and thank him for the honor he has given to the order (2).

The reform continues with unwavering activity; thoughtful men who look deep into things can to sense, to recognize a powerful influence in the work of a regeneration that is truly useful, necessary, and that we accept with happiness because we contribute to it, a rare advantage for those who operate without revealing their secret motive. We are

(4) Acta Latomorum, t. V, p. 112.

(2) Ibid., t I, p.12let 192.

296 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

obviously prepares for something unknown whose future alone will reveal the secret. The direction doesn't seem complete enough, not enough absolute; there are restless, vain minds, aspiring to shine, unable to keep in their hearts the thought that they have discovered green, or only glimpsed, men whose aspirations were poorly the contents can compromise; Freemasonry is lacking of discipline, – and at all times one can address him This very criticism—it is important to prevent this danger: a A decree from the Grand Orient forbids lodges and brothers from doing anything print before having communicated their manuscripts (1). The Duke perhaps the Chartres family understands the need to show off, to to make known, to accustom men to hearing his voice, and In 1777 he presided over the Grand Orient for the first time. Dignity must prevail in the workplace; it is difficult to maintain. in public places, where, moreover, one is exposed to view indiscreet, where uninitiated ears can listen and hear; Lodges are forbidden to assemble at caterers' establishments and in cabarets.

Two years later, the grandmaster, who seems to be getting more mixed up actively involved in the affairs of the order, appointed as secretary by-particular of his commands, with regard to the franc-masonry, Mr. de Chaumont, who, in this capacity, lends his services ment. Around the same time, he went to Fécamp to review a hussar regiment, and donated his portrait to a lodge of this town which had sent him to pay his respects; in 1780, a tailor

A distinctive piece of jewelry, a medal bearing on the front the bust of:

Duke of Chartres who is willing to allow the brothers to decorate themselves with it; soon he will preside over the joint lodges of Besançon, and there he will receive A magnificent celebration.

The Duke of Chartres had been appointed Grand Master by the Grand Lodge, accepted in this capacity by the Grand Orient, in so that, through a rather striking anomaly, and one which deserves to be noted, two powers vying for control of order, and a rather fierce war was being waged to seize it,

(4) Acta Latomorum, 1. 1, p. 126.

+ ee

OF THE FRENCH MASONRY, | 297

2
-
|

However, they both had the same leader. In 1789, the prince, Having become Duke of Orléans, he can detach himself from major concerns policies of the day, and presides over the work of the Mother Lodge of the rite Scottish philosopher (1). Thus, at the time when the revolution French society was finally bursting forth and would regenerate society, the due, which must have played a significant enough role to be accused of aspiring At the throne, he united the three Masonic powers in his hand. who shared the workshops of France.

This retrospective review was necessary to highlight the value the act by which the Duke of Orléans was, on May 13, 1793, deprived of the Grand mastery of the order and quality of a deputy. The republic had been proclaimed by the National Convention; the stipulation of the secret treaty concluded after the Battle of Valmy between Dumouriez Danton on one side, the King of Prussia and the Duke of Brunswick on the other the other one had not been filled; the French general and minister had promised what they could not do, the king's salvation and the restoration of the constitutional monarchy belonged to events and did not depend on anyone's will. The With the revolution underway, perhaps we could have foreseen how far it would go. He would go, but no hand was strong enough to stop him. He movement, but which multiply through that very movement; the

The arms that pushed them would not be able to hold them back; they would be broken.
The Convention had reorganized the armies; France was fighting on all points at once, had taken the offensive and carried the war on enemy territory. Custine had seized Speyer, Worms, Frankenthal, Mainz; Montesquiou had taken Montmélián, Chambéry; Savoy had joined France;
Nice was occupied by Anselm, who was supported by his squadron.
Admiral Truguet; Belgium was ours. Inside, the wheat fields
There were shortages in the markets, famine was everywhere; the Vendée
And Brittany was in revolt. The head of Louis XV had rolled.

* On the scaffold, the revolution was irrevocably begun; the Angle-
The earth declared itself against us and began the coalition which was to lasted twenty-three years; it had drawn in Spain and Holland;

(1) Acta Latomorum, 1. 1, p. 182.
20

Same es M ee 000 mms "te mur "mé + de Ge ee ee

ee mm ee mm m0 Re ee nn ne

me ————— —

298 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

We had no allies; our soldiers lacked shoes,
The peasants did not want assignats, money, or food.
All of Germany had armed itself; already on that front we were experiencing setbacks. The mass mobilization of citizens ordered by the Con-
The convention was generating resistance; the assembly itself was deeply divided, and one could already judge how would resolve this terrible struggle.

This was the moment chosen by some brothers for demonstrations.
Masonic festivities to which the Duke of Orléans, who was born, belonged
He was more than Philippe-Égalité, and did not join. Observations
The messages were sent to the Journal de Paris by a correspondent from Toulouse regarding the inaction of the Grand Master and the receptions which were made then (1); it is on this subject that Philippe-Égalité
Two days later, he wrote the following letter to the journalist:

"Paris, this 22nd of February 1793, year 9 of the Republic.

"I saw, Citizen Milscent, in your bulletin of the 20th of this
"months, the concerns conceived by your correspondent in Tou-
"louse, on what three or four lodges of Freemasons have there
"resumed their work, and on what was made to receive masons a
"said of the general staff. I cannot, despite my dignity as Grand-
"Sir, you cannot give any information about these events which"
They are unknown; but I want at least to put you in a state to respond to the reflections and considerations relating to me
"What did your correspondent find wrong with his stories, true or false?"

"You know," he said, "that a rumor has been circulating all over France."
that Citizen Equality, Grand Master of all the lodges, had
"A major party in Paris."

__» Indeed, as early as July 1789, the court party re-
"pandit this noise, which he apparently believed to be useful to his aims.
"A bunch of counter-revolutionary slanderers seized upon it."

» in October of the same year, and since a party of in-

"Trigants tried to rejuvenate me, I don't know for what purpose; but of "That alone is why it's been talked about all over France for the past four years,"
"Without anyone having produced any proof, any clue, he told me

(1) Journal de Paris. – Bulletin of February 20, 17953.

Sc D om og ge © or enr ere TE Ro © mm qi qe en ne

»

ne – ne ee eee ne MR ee D US LE Rs

OF FREEMASONRY. 299

It seems that every man of good faith should agree that this
The party does not exist, it never existed.
"To be honest, we hadn't imagined it until now."
to add this consideration, that I was grandmaster of all the lodges of France; but this only proves, on the one hand,
that all inventions improve with time, and,

everything. I don't believe that this could add anything significant.

weight in the balance of probabilities.

"In any case, here is my Masonic story. In a
a time when certainly no one foresaw a revolution,

"I had become attached to Freemasonry, which offered a kind of the image of equality, as I had become attached to parliaments, which offered a kind of image of freedom. I have since left the ghost for reality.

»

"Last September, the secretary of the G.*.-0.:. having addressed the person who filled out the forms for me
functions of secretary to the grand master, to send me

In response to a question regarding the work of this company, I replied:

to this one dated January 5th:

a. As I don't know how the G.-.-0.-. is composed, and that, moreover, I think there should be no mystery nor any secret assembly in a republic, on-Right at the beginning of its establishment, I no longer want to involve myself in nothing of the G.°.-0.°, nor of the assemblies of the freemasons.

"I'm returning to your correspondent. He says: 'He ran here a rumor, which may be false, that this Equality was in Toulouse for "visit the departments." As, from the beginning From the National Convention, I have never gone three days without attending his sessions, it will be clear, even for the correspondent.

I haven't been to Toulouse. I won't say anything about it.
no further information on this item.

"But he added: 'You also know, perhaps, that the aristo-
"Crates openly declare that they want liberty. And the Écauiré."
And this word Éçauité, printed in small capitals, designates me obviously using a pun.

"Certainly, ever since the wish for li-
"Freedom and equality, I have no doubt that the correspondent has it" » heard, as I did, pronounced by many aristocrats;
"But I also admit that I highly doubt it was me they..."
"Want them and that they specify in their wishes. In any case, I am
"I'm very glad to have this opportunity to warn them publicly!"
"that if they want me, I don't want them, and I add that"
"I don't want any more of any party, society, gathering,
"Intrigue or secret meeting that would have a plan to deceive me"
"OR share some kind of power."

"I ask you, Citizen Milscent, to forward this reply."
» to your correspondent via your newspaper. |

"I am your fellow citizen, L.-P.-J. ÉcauîTé (1)."

It was two and a half months after this letter was printed, which for the first time is recounted in its entirety in a book Masonic, that the Grand Orient would have assembled, would have decclared the duke resigned, and that the president, breaking the spell order, would have thrown the pieces into the middle of the room. This The Grand Master's statement is less a Masonic act than a political statement inspired in its author by the circumstances extraordinary situations in which he found himself, thrown into the struggles of a revolution that he knew neither how to serve worthily, nor how to fight Frankly. Ambitious without courage, without elevation in the ideas, the Duke of Orléans had long dreamed of the crown, thought that the monarchical ideas that still lived on in the minds of many men would have enough strength to bring the nation to reconstitute a throne intended to be a link between her and the European powers. By its position as a member of the royal family, by the role he had played, the part he had taken to events, the party he had sought to form around &
In June, he had been able to nurture the hope of seeing France, tired and me-
Born from all sides, to put it at its head, to accept it as an anchor of salvation. At that moment, either he recognized his mistake, or he

(1) Extract from issue 13, supplement to issue 55 of the Sunday edition of the Journal de
2^e February 1795, in the 2nd of the French Republic.

He thought it useful to give new guarantees, he defended himself against all Ambition? He rejected the idea of a party; he was afraid. Considered As a political statement, his letter does not deserve the honor of a discourse; it reeks of weakness on every line; it is truly, by the tone that prevails there, of a man to whom the events had created a situation beyond his soul and his capacity. As a Masonic act, this declaration could and should en- dragged out the resignation of the grand master, but did not justify the breaking of the sword of the order, which did not die because the duke d'Orléans abandoned it after having sought there a strength that his His character and conduct did not allow him to find it there.

The traces of this act have disappeared, as have those of several others. others, and although it is hardly possible to doubt that he had licu, we cannot assign the real motives. Two conjectures present themselves: the Duke of Orléans had played a deplorable role in the trial of Louis XVI; he had not dared to listen to the cry of nature told him to recuse himself, nor to absolve his relative; had voted for death amidst general shock produced by the words he spoke on that solemn occasion. Perhaps the act of May 13th was a protest against his con- duite. On the other hand, after the king's death, Dumouriez had organized an Orleanist conspiracy within his camp; in a conference with Colonel Mack, Chief of Staff to the Prince of Coburg, which was attended by the Duke of Chartres, the colonel Montjoie and General Valence, he had pledged to deliver as collateral to the Austrians the town of Condé, to march with his army on Paris, to overthrow the republic, to give the crown to a prince of the house of Orléans, several members of which formed a sort of court around him. Perhaps Dumou's betrayal- laugh, which took place a few days after this conference, and which Success was prevented by the abandonment of his army, implicated- Does she see the Duke of Orléans as complicit in the eyes of the few? of Freemasons who were still meeting, and she dictated the act of degradation accompanied by the breaking of the sword. The field remains open. to conjecture.

In any case, such an act could have been perpetrated by a few men whose thoughts it is easier to imagine today,

ee 6 ee ne ne MMS Ge Eee Get nee

—

em

ee ee se et mes de er eve

0 ee QU Es Gene NO 0 "nn nq year of eu

ee + eme mme ee

ee

902 PILOSOPHINIC HISTORY

amidst the struggles of the homeland, what to define and to to recognize by relying on testimonies. One can find thereto see the action of a party, one cannot see in it that of the franc-Freemasonry, which had the right to reject its president, without to achieve this, she would break her own sword, which she had temporarily entrusted to her that she never gave (1).

(1) We have made incredible efforts, the most meticulous research, the _ longer, and we must also say the most sterile, to establish by evidence

authentic the breaking of the sword of the order in a session of the Grand Orient of the 1
May 1793. We have reviewed the minutes of the Masonic senate, and it...

It was impossible to find anything there that related to this object, despite all the com-

the ease which was put in place to favor our investigations by the honorable secretary, F.
Here, moreover, is a note that this F.:. was kind enough to give us, and which, if it
It does not explain the fact, but it may perhaps make us understand why the traces have di-

"I have searched in vain through all the minutes of the Grand Orient and the various » chambers that made up his administration at the time of the revolution, and I have not
"No trace was found of this fact, that the Grand Master's sword had been broken at the
"in the middle of the temple, during a session that allegedly took place on May 13, 1795, » the letter he wrote to the Journal de Paris.

"A completely different motive has been given for this alleged event; but it seems to me s
"dinary and so eccentric that, although it was affirmed to me by a vicious ma-
"That, who got it from a F.:. who was supposedly present at that scene, I'm not reporting
"However, this is subject to all reservations and without any guarantee."

(Here lies the narration of this event which, by its nature, and in the absence of authentic proof, not of a nature to hold its place in a book serious.) :

"This fact of the sword breaking is, I know, recorded in several authors, notably" » ment in Thory and in the Historical Summary of Freemasonry by FF.: B. and B., "Our former members of the Grand Orient, who could only draw from the sources where "I myself had hoped to discover something certain; perhaps they, who are "Having arrived first, did they find some document from which they could profit?" "But today there are none in this regard."

"It was said that in 1995 the archives of the Grand Orient were looted; there may be "There is some truth in that statement, but the real plunderers have not" "Were not the men of '95 nor of '94; it is the collectors who, members or "dignitaries of the Grand Orient, and often archived without the slightest control, have "searched and researched without scruple in this warehouse, and only abandoned it when the They thought there was nothing left to tempt their greed. However, I must » add that the Grand Oricunt of our time has shown himself to be more concerned with his a "chives, and that measures have been taken to restore order and preserve what "It remains there, or whatever will be deposited there."

"I return to the fact of the breaking of the sword, and I am astonished that it could have "The aforementioned period. Initially, meetings were held only very rarely, and the assemk "If we can call them that, they were often composed of only three to six per- Sounes. Lately, the minutes only indicate the date of the w

+

oo
oo mm

OF FREEMASONRY. 303

The Masonic institution, in fact, would soon reappear, not with all the freedom she needs, chained to the chariot of the man who then filled France and Europe with his name the noise of his victories, but with a strength that was to conquering empires, leading to fanaticism, to the most prejudiced harsh blows they might have received from foreign nations res; the armies were to be his auxiliaries, the missionaries tasked with spreading his doctrines.

Thus, to summarize his role in Europe during the tenth century. In the eighth century, Freemasonry prepared for changes profound changes that a new constitution will bring to the laws

In people's minds, it nourishes their hopes. In this respect,
It is not limited to theory; it applies it as much as possible.
She upholds the precept of equality, proclaiming all men equal, by making them so in her temples; she declares them all

"sessions, and for a long time now they have only mentioned the opening and closing-» session duration, without any work.

"The last minutes of the Grand Orient are dated December 27, 1788, the day of the "Feast of the Order, Later, on December 21, 1789, in the administrative chamber,"
"A letter from a Mr. de Shée, secretary to the Grand Master, is read aloud, which » announces that the latter, being absent from Paris, will not be able to attend the process
"That was the last time I heard anything about him."

"After 1992, it wasn't until 1999 that regular reports were recorded."
"which, however, sometimes still present gaps that are disheartening for the history-
"Lorien, because often, at the moment when he believes he has grasped the thread that should
"On some important point, this thread suddenly breaks, and the unfortunate writer
"He is like the unfortunate man depicted in the catacombs of Rome."

The shortcomings that are unfortunately noticeable in the minutes of the Grand-Orient, the very alterations that some of them have undergone and of which we
We will have to talk about this later; they will not be renewed. Today, all registers are held with great regularity, with perfect order, by Brother Pillot, and the historians who will come after us to recount the actions of Freemasonry, in the phases that it still has to go through, will find, thanks to him, precise documents, coordinated materials, which they will then only have to implement.

It is worth remembering that the Grand Lodge was also under the direction of the Duke of O
On June 24, 1795, resuming its work, the Grand Lodge rejoiced that the Terrorism is defeated, removing the customary health certificates of the former king and t Léans, having incurred the animosity of the people, now returned to his sovereign rights, orders that the health of the nation will be prioritized in the future a sovereign. *

* Circular containing the minutes of the session of June 24, 1795.
s

nn,

2 - << - << ee ee

4

© oo © + ee

304 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

worthy of liberty, and, presenting an image of that liberty, it gives within its fold to all followers the right to elect and to be elected officials; she fights against and breaks the entrenchment that a few men introduced into the grand mastership, undoubtedly misled by the example of royalty; finally, it aspires to universal brotherhood saddle which, uniting all peoples in a common bond, will impossible wars; to join example to precept, she He calls the initiates of the entire universe brothers, and welcomes them equally ment. :

This is her work; she fulfills it, but she has not made herself any she does not preach theories for the circumstances because Although she senses their impending triumph, she does not raise a flag. new; it is what it must be irrevocably under penalty of not being, and its precepts are the same as those we have seen written in the book of Zoroaster: "Look at these votes, - that "of the heavens and that of the temple—they unite without distinction" "Kings and subjects (1)."

Amid the struggles that divide France, Freemasonry, which is not a political power, which has no direct action, does not cannot, as a body, become a party; it is neither mountain- Neither a gendarme nor a Girondin, she is a philosopher; she has sought the truth. She saw it, she knows where it is, she says so, but she didn't of the governmental system to achieve the goal.

From a religious standpoint, since its reappearance in France, its simultaneous invasion of almost every point on our continent, She worships the Great Architect of the universe; she lavishes providing aid to those who suffer, establishing institutions for the orphans and the elderly, unites men by the bond of goodness. feance; it strives to achieve the realization of the principles of the Gospel, glimpsing the happiness of peoples in this realization- tion; thus, she maintains a faith, practices charity, and nurtures a hope, and these three words are indeed the motto of one of its- main ranks. | |

Those who wrote against her criticized her for not having
He was persecuted during the revolution, an absurd accusation if one

(1) See above, page 67.

OF FREEMASONRY. 305:

reports on the facts. Its members, also driven by out of love for the public good, they followed different paths, depending on whether they were influenced by their position in society, by their families, through their philosophical opinions. They all wanted the just as she herself intended, everyone sought to realize it-to use the method that seemed most likely to achieve it, and this difference in action was bound to result inevitably from the freedom left in the lodges to all ideas for application.

Indeed, in those difficult days, there was room for everyone.
The systems, all had a chance of success, none could be applied completely in the middle of a storm that struck them one after the other. From this emerged the emancipation of France, a people
new. Freemasonry contributed to this immense result.
Bué as a philosophical school, as an order, its followers have contributed as citizens, and the part she played in this great

The movement that regenerated Europe will always be one of its most beautiful titles.

306 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

_ CHAPTER TEN.

Freemasonry in France from the Directory to the Restoration – Festivals of Peace and victories. Under the Consulate and under the Empire, it became military without ceasing to It brings together the most illustrious names in arms, science, literature, and takes an i development. – It triumphs with our armies in Italy, in Spain, in Holland, Founded in all conquered countries. – Freemasonry in England, in the warring states.
with France, and in America, during the same period.

S Aj°" our years have passed,
ME the revolutionary storm has ) calmed, the lodges in France

200%)" their work; the first
 The need is for unity, the initial efforts,
 The first demonstrations aimed to to establish it; the Grand Orient and the Grand Lodge, since so long divided, finally merge through a concordat in a single body which will henceforth to give a uniform direction. The question that what actually prevented the merging of the two powers was that of the immovability of the venerable ones that the Great-Loge maintained with more obstinacy than intelligence-| agency, and yet within a very limited jurisdiction.
 The Grand Orient alone was in the right, in the principle of insti| tution; this was only through a clear departure from the doctrines
 | of the order that vanity had conquered for life; he had
 For him, reason was key; he was bound to triumph sooner or later; but such is the tenacity of petty human passions that negotiations
 | The steps taken on this subject required further diplomatic action,
 | officials, that the conclusion of the most difficult peace treaties between |
 | two great peoples. Twenty times the conferences had been rom- |
 | puses, and, when they were taken up again in a serious manner, they
 |

Digitized by Google

OF FREEMASONRY. 907

lasted another year; finally, commissioners were appointed and
 The treaty was concluded. It was a transaction. Here it is.

"From the 21st day of the 3rd month of the year of the V... L.:, 5799,

"We, the joint commissioners of the two GG.+.-00.-. of France, sitting in Paris, we displayed our respective powers, emanating from the 0.-: to which we are attached, from which it follows that, of a
 On the other hand, Brothers Darmancourt and Conard were appointed as presidents.
 teeth, and the Brothers Duvillard and Houssement, and, on the other hand, the FF... Montaleau, president, Angebault, grand orator, and Bernault, a leading expert, to advise on means of conciliation and of union between the two 0's..., to make them a single indivisible whole, and all for the benefit of Masonic art and the prosperity of
 In order, we have agreed on the following articles, namely:

» Ant. [®. Irremovability is abolished. .

» TonrT. II. The currently irremovable WV.-. will be able to continue-to fulfill their duties for nine consecutive years.

"The lodge shall have the right, upon the expiration of the said nine years, to continue them with the same dignity, etc.

» Ant. III. The former officers upon the appointment of the V.-. alone will in the future be subject to the appointment of members of the L.. and by ballot.

"Arr. IV. The two associations, united in perpetuity, will hold their sessions in the premises located on rue du Vieux-Colombier.

"Arr. V. Their archives will be gathered there."

"Arr. VI. All the lodges of the two associations will correspond" at the common center, whose direct address will be G.*. N.°.; the The register will include the names of Their Majesties, Their Excellencies and deputies of associations with which correspondence will be established.

» Arr. VII. Constitutions bearing the character of irremovability will be reported; they will be, or reconstructed by relating the this treaty of union and the original date of the constitution, or simply aimed at the desire of the article [*], which extinguishes the unmovability; the reconstitution or the visa will be at the V.-..'s choice.

"Constitutions that do not bear the character of immovability will simply be targeted; the L.-. will have the power to make itself to reconstruct.

ceremonies, first expert and chamber experts.

PP <<

308 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Article VIII. The officers, VV., and deputies of the two associations will enjoy the same prerogatives. The officers composing the G.*. O., represented by Brothers Darmancourt, Conard, and Duville-Lard and Houssement may be added, until further notice appointments to the positions of secretary-general, hospital-general, architect-verifier, and to the orators, secretaries, masters of

"Arr. IX. By virtue of this union, all masons" holders of certificates issued by each of the associations will be received in their respective Lll.-.

This was a transaction which, deviating from Masonic principles-niques by a concession that was far too broad, extended kéga-

element; it was a very slow transition to reach the state
That's normal, if the masters for life didn't understand that, struck Morally, they should have just withdrawn and given back to the voters.
their usurped rights. But the division had lasted for thirty years, it had given rise to scandalous internal debates, contrary to the spirit of fraternity which they were causing people to forget; she had passionate about all the superficial men of the islands, more concerned with the
In form as well as substance, it also involved some serious men.
because it is so difficult to escape the influence of the environment in which We lived; it was time to put an end to it. Two ideas were in place.
presence, irremovability, and election; in this conflict, the Great-
The Lodge represented the country's former political government, the
The new Grand Orient; it was truly a struggle between the traditions of the past and aspirations of the present; victory does not could be questionable.

This rapprochement, this agreement between two opposing powers give rise to an important observation: the preaching of philosophical principles, radical theories of equality, which reproduces itself more or less clearly under all regimes, is the an undeniable glory of Freemasonry, she is often the only action by which it manifests itself; but the institution, when
It is tolerated, and generally follows, in its outward form, the government movement. Popular in India when it struggle against castes and against religious organization, we

OF FREEMASONRY. 809

we saw it in Egypt as an integral part of power
theocratic, to merge with him; it is among the Hebrews pure republican, under the law of Moses, aristocratic republican and pontifical in Greece, patrician and pontifical in Rome.
regained considerable popularity at the time of the appearance of John the Baptist and Jesus, and during the first centuries that follow, while public authorities falter and no longer have solid foundation. It always works towards the emancipation of humanity.
prepares the people's advent at all times; abandoned
whether persecuted or not, it is clearly democratic;
Whether accepted or protected, it conforms to governmental procedures.
countries it has entered.

In the new world, in England, Freemasonry accommodates itself to the constitutional regime, represents its disputes, its fluctuations, its reversals of parties, through vain struggles which erupt within her, then she identifies quite closely with the power
so as not to be worried when bills prohibit others secret societies. In America, it becomes federative like the republic; every capital has its grand lodge from which the workshops of the province. In France, before the revolution, it

The interiors are primarily intended for the preservation of all independence on central power. The neighboring provinces are willing to bond with each other, but they find it difficult to recognize a common direction. The monarchy is destroyed, the Parliaments are collapsing along with it; there is now only one assembly. sovereign, the republic is proclaimed one and indivisible, the two major bodies that governed Freemasonry met in one.

Such events can go unnoticed by men who
They don't think, but they must strike those who follow them.
carefully observe the actions of this mysterious power, always active, and which will, moreover, provide a remarkable example of his actions in a new career that events have open. France, attacked from all sides, is entirely at war; The brothers are with the armies; victory will bring the Freemasonry wings and the deposit pariet where our soldiers will stop triumphant. Bonaparte, on his way to Africa, made himself to initiate in Malta; the generals, the principal officers of his army They are bricklayers, he wants to be one too; they go together to report Initiation at its cradle.

910 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

After a few years of work without any significant impact, and which primarily concern lodge constitutions, the new era Masonic lodges in France open with peace festivals. This was the On 20 Germinal, year IX, the 10th day of the 2nd month 5801, they took place at the same time on several points. The administration had been reorganized in all its parts, the constitution of the year VIII proclaimed and implemented; the Vendée was pacified; of the coalition European Union, only England and Austria remained, and nothing had been unable to disarm. This was reinforced by the islands. troops from Bavaria, Württemberg and the Elector of Mainz, supported by English subsidies. A few months ago— Previously, the combined enemy armies threatened us at the same time on the Rhine line and on the Var line; Austria occupied Italy. Moreau, in his short and beautiful German campaign, spent the Rhine, moved to the Danube, and, after many victories, after having brought several places under the control of our troops important, rich stores, demoralized the enemy, trapped the Austrian commander-in-chief in the Ulm camp, had surrendered possible operations of the Italian army.

Bonaparte had crossed the Great St. Bernard Pass; our soldiers had crossed the Little Saint Bernard Pass and the Sim— at the same time Plon, Mont Cenis, the Saint-Gotthard, had seen this Italy again, formerly the scene of so many glorious exploits. The memorable days, one of the most brilliant, the most extraordinary to which an army has ever contributed, a given general his name; the Convention of Alexandria and the final victories Moreau's work on the Danube had hinted at the possibility , of a glorious peace. England alone was opposed to it, and still supported Austria in its resistance; the resumption of the Army of the Rhine, had finally convinced this power to negotiate—cere, and the Treaty of Lunéville had given France peace hostilities in Lombardy, the victory of Hohenlinden won by

OF FREEMASONRY, 911

eagerly desired after an eight-year struggle against Europe.
Two months after the signing of this treaty, Freemasonry celebrated peace, in accordance with a circular from the Grand Orient who himself gave a remarkable celebration. Four hundred brothers were there.

were gathered; the lodges had sent their visitors, those of the departments their representatives. Music, poetry, high-writing contributed its tribute; poetry, in the workshops maconical, always has excellent intentions, but the inspiration
He often lacks it; it is a misfortune which men of taste
were able to notice; this time she was of the greatest weakness.
Bonaparte had not yet seized control of Freemasonry
as he soon did, he was not yet seeking the strength that must necessarily result from the action it exerted on public opinion, but it's already easy to see that he has his friends, his admirers, his courtiers, witness the following verse of a Hymn to peace:

Honor to you whose valor
He knew how to bring us this peace!
Accept recognition

Of all French Freemasons.
Bonaparte, a powerful genius!

Always live for our country,
That is the wish of the Freemasons.

The name of Moreau, whose victories in Germany had powerfully contributed to wresting the treaty from the coalition Lunéville, was intertwined in other stanzas with that of the victor of Marengo.

Douai held its solemn ceremony in the lodge of Parfaite-Union; the voices of the orators made the name of the first consul resound there once again; Brother Delalande, in a speech containing some ideas wise, but without elevation, in verses far preferable to those who preceded, addressed lengthy flattery to the idol of the day, and led the acclamation of "Long live the Republic! Long live Bonaparte!" Long live peace! We note with surprise that, recalling the motto Masonic, he replaced the word fraternity with that of human-denied. Two other brothers also sang of the hero; no other

ue

EEE in © to

312 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

No name was spoken; a young man was planted in the courtyard of the lodge acacia.

A similar festival took place in Nantes on the same day, celebrated by the three lodges of this east (1) in the Circus.

The bust of the first consul stood atop a granite column. placed in front of a luminous triangle lit in transparent (2); On his head was a crown of thirteen stars, a symbol of immortality, with these words: To the peacemaker of Europe.

Between the columns, garlands of flowers were unfurled... both the following inscriptions:

To the republic.

To the government.

Ladies first.

To the freedom of the seas.

To forgetting the past and uniting all French people.
To the First Consul.

To peace.

To General Moreau.

To the brave armies.

To the shop.

The pavilions of the friendly powers, a portrait of Bonaparte in on foot, in the costume of first consul, completed the decoration tion. In verses, the best that have ever been spoken or sung
In all these celebrations, the names of Bonaparte are still found.
and Moreau; fortunately one can also read a few words there on brotherhood. A few weeks later, a peace festival took place.
it still takes place in Paris; it was performed by three lodges in full dress adoption (3). The name Bonaparte is found in the couplots inspired by the circumstance.

This must be noted with regret, in all the speeches given.
in these ceremonies and collected by the Masonic journals of the time (4), the speakers are below their task; the occasion
It was a solemn occasion; it was important that Freemasonry explain itself.

- (1) The Perfect, Harmony, Mars and the Arts.
- (2) The greatest honor that Freemasons can bestow upon a man.
- (5) The Union, the Centre of Friends of the Arts, the True Reunion.

'(4) Mirror of Truth, 1. I.

OF FREEMASONRY. 315

on the future, that after having noted the achievements obtained, the said how we could , we should, preserve them. By staying Even in the text of the peace won by victory, there was instead of making known what should be for the propagation of Masonic principles, the results of this peace. Those who carried-either kept their word, or did not understand their mission, or obeyed
a secret password, which would be their only excuse; these parties were therefore a lengthy tribute to the man of genius who occupied the first place in the republic, and Freemasonry had something else to do.

From this point on, we can anticipate that the institution will move to already his emperor's mantle. His lieutenants are in all the lodges in Paris and in the departments, and it's not just to rest from the fatigues of war or public affairs. We will soon see the high dignitaries of the Empire attending Masonic meetings, which Kellermann will seek a moment to remove from the Grand Orient the direction of the order by founding within a grand lodge.

On the 23rd of Brumaire, year XIII, the 14th Thursday of the 9th month 5804, the G.*. 0... sent the plan- to the lodges and chapters of his correspondence the list indicating the names of the Grand Officers of Honour of the Order. These names were named in two previous sessions. We will not read them aloud. pointless:

Grand Master, Prince Joserx.

Deputy Grand Master, Prince Louis.
Great administrator, Marshal Masséna.
Grand Conservative, pe CnoisEuL-PRAsLIN, senator.
1st Grand Supervisor, Marshal Murar.

2nd Grand Supervisor,/ne LACÉPÈDE.
Great orator, DELALANDE.

Grand Secretary, be Jaucourt, Senator.
Grand Treasurer, Macox of Medina, Rear Admiral.
1" grand expert, BEURNONVILLE, ambassador.

2nd expert, General MacpoxaLn.
Grand Keeper of the Seals, General SEBASTIANI.

+ Pr nee 20 A A0 OR OR ss and mm + - =, the En A of meer mn) - __- - ae nm marne Cm + (of leading e. ; enr en 2 1

014 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

:

|

Chief Keeper of the Archives, Field Marshal KELLERMANN.

Grand architect, dE LUYNES, senator.

Duranreau, legislator, |

Girarnin (Stanislas), tribune. |

Grand Hospitalier, Marshal Augereau.

Grand Almoner, Marshal Lerebvre.

Grand Masters of Ceremonies,

At the meeting where the proclamation of these elections was made,
The tribune Challan, acting as orator, delivered a speech on Freemasonry; there was no longer any question of Liberty, equality, fraternity, words and things were very far away;
In his eyes, "the institution is at once mythological, natural and..."
civil: mythological, because it elevates thought towards the sublimity of the creator of beings; natural, because of its type
The principal one is represented by the star that gives life to the universe; finally, the because the strong and the weak, the rich and the poor find there also a comforting moral message and useful rules (1). »
That is the entire Masonic philosophy of this speaker; but if he
He forgets the principles of order, but he is careful not to forget men.
ges to the emperor. "Napoleon! The cult of the masons is that of the "Acknowledgment towards the illustrious men who founded,
"enlarged or defended the companies; judge then whether the masons
"French people owe you love, you whose genius has"
"assured our safety. And if, by some special favor, you allow—"
"Tick the members of your illustrious family to come and dictate to us"
The lessons of your wisdom, they would bring you testimony "of boundless gratitude, etc. (2)." It was difficult to to lower himself further, and the time was past when the Freemason-
_neric dictated lessons of wisdom to the licu to ask for them. |
In Marseille, Freemasonry was not foreign either.

—_—

v Sy 06 ©'

Read

manages the major events of the time; the 4th day of the 10th month of 5805, 12 Frimaire year XIT, {a Parfaite-Sincérilé decided, in an extraordinary meeting, during which wishes were expressed to

(1) Circular from the G...-O... of France, dated the 14th day of the 9th month of 5804 (25 mayor year XI), pages 9 and 6.

(2) ll, il, id, page G.

Grand Architect of the Universe for the Defenders of the Homeland and for the success of the French invasion of England.

It was resolved that, at all banquets, a toast would be made to our victorious armies, and that if the descent were accomplished Fortunately, the lodge would provide a dowry for a young girl and marry her off to one of the soldiers who would have most gloriously contributed to the success of this great undertaking.

Joseph accepted the title of Grand Master; Louis, sent to Hol-
The heath where Napoleon erected a throne was replaced by Cambacérès's.
who diligently fulfills his duties. He was installed on 45th day of the 10th month 5805 (22 Frimaire year XIV); the same day High-ranking officers of honor crowded around him who came to take oaths for the offices to which they had been promoted, either in a first appointment, or in place of those in command of the armies or other jobs important figures in diplomacy or administration distanced themselves from Paris. They were the brothers:

Lacépène, Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour.
Recnier, chief judge, minister of justice.

Czémenr pe Ris, praetor of the senate.

Muraire, First President of the Court of Cassation.
Davour, senator.

D'AIGREFEUILLE.
Duvipa,
tribunes.
JAUBERT, |

Auoier-MassizLon, member of the Court of Cassation.

The Masonic institution had never asked its members
no other oath than that of keeping inviolably the secrets which they would be entrusted with the task of complying with the general statutes of the order and the specific regulations of the lodges in which they were received; by a derogation from this custom which maintained Wisely, Freemasonry remains separate from political passions.

As his theories evolved, people had recently imagined swearing Loyalty to the emperor. This oath was renewed in this session.

The brothers mentioned above had just taken out their bond

©

in mm

910 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Masonic; Lacépède had thanked everyone on behalf of them. "At this
"At that moment, all the FF.*, by a spontaneous movement, rise up"
"to reiterate the oath of allegiance to His Majesty the Emperor and" king. The R.-. first representative of the G.-.-master pronounces the "Oath, and we swear it!" is repeated at once by all the members of the G..-O... A noble and religious sentiment pene-
It touched all hearts, and this moment was the most august and a
"One of the most impressive moments of this memorable session (1)."

Thus, Freemasonry followed in the footsteps of one man, and all the glory, the military successes, the administrative genius of this men could not justify this disregard for the principles that must always place above individuals, even the most brilliant.

The seal of the G.-.-O.-. had long borne three flowers of lilies that, during the first years of the revolution, were forgotten to remove them, without anyone noticing; later they were replaced by a triple circle containing these two letters:
RF; after the revolution that gave the empire to Napoleon, one finds there substituted an eagle. It was imposing upon oneself the sad necessity of modifying it-proud of every change in the state; also the years 1814 and In 1815, they saw it revised three times in a few months. Happy Freemasonry, if, in that sad era, it had not given the
A spectacle of even more serious reversals! Since 1850, the seal and the
The arms of the Grand Orient now only bear attributes belonging to... nating to the institution.

The close relationship that had developed between the imperial government
rial and Freemasonry no longer allowed the institution to to enclose within the circle once drawn to its activity; it was naturally inclined towards political demonstrations, and, the
On the 21st day of the 10th month 5805 (December 27, 1805), she celebrated in
At the same time, the celebration of order and the celebration of victories.

The French armies had, in fact, just acquired a glory modern. England, implacable in its hatred against the 14

(1) Minutes of the session of the 15th day of the 10th month (22 Fructaire year XIV), of t
G...0... of France, page 14. |

min

Letter

has

—

+ me ee (ee of + _ a
ee =

mm — ne — <q Renan — ed CR ne eee es 0 ee

<< ee ne ne

OF FREEMASONRY. 917

France had formed the Third Coalition; the emperor had created the kingdom of Italy, and, upon the refusal of his brother Joseph, had declared rot, until peace; he had given the principality of Lucca to one of his sisters, reunited Genoa with the empire, and these acts, which were not the real motives for a new war, him at least served as a pretext; they had provided Russia the opportunity she was seeking to acknowledge her allegiance to the coalition already settled by a treaty. Austria had accepted the proposals of English cabinet. The Boulogne expedition, so long in preparation—real and announced, which made England tremble, and was supposed to, if She would have succeeded, changed the face of Europe, but had failed by the due to Admiral Villeneuve's mistake, and Napoleon, forced to renounce a project whose success would have had incalculable consequences, had Once again, he turned his weapons towards the continent of his exploits. were going to surprise.

Organized with incredible speed, directed towards the theater of the war as secretly as possible, in conquests made beyond the Rhine and the protection granted to the Elector of Bavaria, the French army had suddenly appeared heart of Germany, in the Franconian plains, on the banks of the Danube, before his arrival was even suspected, when Austria believed it was certain to beat it on the field of a battle she herself had chosen. This army had to fight the Russians, the Austrians, the Swedes, the English, on both reverse of the Swabian Alps, while the Neapolitan government-Tain was plotting a betrayal that would deliver Sicily to the Russians. and to the English, arm the populations, incite Calabria to revolt, launch against France, even against the brigands of that country, and thus support the movement of Austrian forces.

In both countries where the armies were going to clash, the coalition-The army had five hundred thousand men, Napoleon two hundred and five a thousand; Prussia still floated, undecided, awaiting the victory to decide; she had two hundred thousand soldiers to carry on one side or the other.

Fortunately, the Russians, divided into two army corps of sixty thousand men each, had not yet carried out their junction with the Austrians; their two corps advanced one after the other through Poland, the other through Galicia; twelve thousand elite soldiers comprising the Russian guard following this corps; an army of A reserve was being formed at Wilna, and finally sixteen thousand men were assembled at Revel had embarked for Stralsund, where twelve thousand Swedes had preceded them in order to support, in Hanover, fifteen A thousand English people had already disembarked.

218 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

It was most important to prevent the Russian corps from coming through the Gallicia, Vicnne, and the road to Munich, to unite with Austria dogs that General Mack had once again arrested on the On the banks of the Danube, in the entrenched camp of Ulm. Napoleon, by a skillfully combined march through the Duchy of Baden and Württemberg succeeded in outflanking the Austrian army, across-to cross the Danube, to seize the road to Munich, to position oneself between the two armies, and to surround General Mack with all stuck together.

The glorious battles of Wertingen, Gunzburg, and Lands-berg, of Haslach, of Elchingen, of the Michelsberg, in which Excelmans, Dupont, Davout, Ney, Soult, Murat, Bernadotte, Lannes, they all vied with each other in courage and energy, some military science experts prepared the famous surrender of the camp d'Ulm, to which the emperor's skillful maneuvers forced General Mack commanded them. In fifteen days this first campaign-#ne was aclievéc, sixty thousand Austrian prisoners, two hundred cannons, several thousand horses intended for flags and all the equipment of the enemy army were at the disposal of to see French people.

At this moment Prussia was allowing itself to be drawn into the coalition Through Alexander's seductions, a treaty was signed between the king of Prussia and the Emperor of Russia who swore friendship to each other eternal on the tomb of Frederick the Great; but the slowness of the The first [forces] had fortunately given Napoleon time to act.

In Italy, Masséna, with fifty thousand men, had held head of eighty thousand Austrians, and, by the bloody battle de Caldicro, forced into retirement by Archduke Charles, to whom he en-raised eight thousand prisoners. Ney had invaded Tyrol with ten ee el

OF FREEMASONRY. 19

a thousand men, crossed the highest passes and occupied Innsbruck.

After the capitulation of Ulm, Napoleon took the road to Vicenne, his generals routed the enemy wherever he tried to... felt, the bridges of Vienna surprised by Murat allowed to the French to occupy this capital. Finally, the great ba-the size of Austerlitz, delivered against the Russians and the Austrians, ended this memorable campaign which had seen the renewal of to reveal all the wonders of the first consul's campaign in Italy; Austerlitz was the counterpart to Marengo. The two emperors Brothers from Austria and Russia were fleeing; ninety to one hundred A thousand Russians and Austrians retreated, defeated by forty-five thousand Frenchmen, who had taken twenty thousand prisoners, taken One hundred and eighty cannons and the treasures of the enemy armies. The The third coalition was defeated; three months had been enough for to achieve this immense result. Happy France, if Trafalgar Had not a veil of mourning been cast over so much glory! Happier above all, if he had conquered a solid peace, his ambition

chief, developed to the highest degree by such brilliant achievements of weapons, would make it impossible!

These were the victories that Freemasonry celebrated in at the same time as its winter festival, in commemoration of the death of Hiram, which no one seemed to think of, so great was the intoxication general, religious figure who accompanies all demonstrations of men opening their proceedings by proclaiming their respect for the Grand Architect of the Universe. The eighty-one mystical stars which illuminated the temple; Cambacérès presided; where he noted among others, in the East, the FF.-. Regnier, Grand Judge, Fouché, Minister of Police, Lacépède, Marshal Pérignon, the senators Chaptal, Clément de Ris, Siméon, Davout, Valence, the President of the tribunate Fabre (of Aude), the tribunes Jaubert, Duvidal, Challan and Carrion-Nisas, Muraire, Delalande, the great vicar of Arras, Alès, Anduse, the colonel of engineers of Récicourt, the administrator of the Aigrefeuille literary repository.

The five orators Delalande, Challan, Dejoly, Pajot d'Orville, Delahaye took their seats. Challan spoke first.

ee ER NE NME "NP SORDeR -eeuAn es ne en =

220 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY,

Four years earlier, during the peace festival celebrated in Douai, the speaker had again proclaimed these three words: liberty, equality, humanized, as representing Masonic principles; the F.-. Challan didn't even dare repeat them; it seemed that the two first, even if it might hurt the ears of so many men who owed their great fortune to the triumph of the ideas of the French masonry; he was not afraid to change them.

"Peace, UNITY, Blessing, these are the sacred words of which the "Masons make the vault of the temples resound twice a year" "They elevate us to virtue." Such was his opening. It was beginning with a inaccuracy. He then threw out a few fairly accurate sentences on the division that can be made of masons into two classes, those those who received only the sign and those who penetrated the meaning of mysteries, and the culpable ease with which certain workshops grant the high degrees. He finished, as was his custom, by praising the emperor in exaggerated terms. As for of the victories that were to be celebrated, he did not cite a single one.

F.-. Dejoly succeeded him at the podium, and his speech was not than a long panegyric of Napoleon; however, he ventured to qg pancayriq P

to talk about putting an end to conquests. After recalling these words from his hero: "Military successes are only of "Brilliant calamities, and my victories the fable of my life; peace"

"the sole purpose of my work and my ambition," he added:
"A conqueror is but a scourge if he is not the benefactor of humanity, and Napoleon, great as he was, would not have been "worthy of commanding the most sensitive, the most belligerent people" queens of the universe, if the brilliance of his genius had not been tempered by
"the most loving and generous soul."

"Pursue your destiny!... Just a few more moments, and your
"The work will be accomplished; the peace of the continent and the happiness of the peoples whom Providence has entrusted to your wisdom will be the worthy
"A reward for your heroic efforts."
His courage did not extend beyond that, and he did not say a word about core principles of the institution.

There was an avalanche of verses, cantatas, and lyrical stanzas, either in the temple or at the banquet. One of the strange poets of

LS

5

ÿ

"

3

5

OF FREEMASONRY. 921

This celebration placed Napoleon above Caesar, Alexander, and Gen-

giskan, of Charlemagne, and made this singular verse heard:

Your name alone, eternal, must survive in the world (1).

A choir, after emphatic adulations addressed to the em-

Look what gold and treachery have done!

There you are, all alone, proud islander!

Are you prolonging your reckless struggle?

Tremble... the gods carry Napoleon.

Yield; or soon this noble cry of war

Its echoes will reach all the way to Albion:

Long live Napoleon!!! (2)

This prediction was not accurate.

The vicar general of Arras read Masonic-political verses. worthy of a schoolboy. F.-G. de Beaumont recited verses in the honor of Prince Joseph; they were worth even less than the previous ones.

Fortunately, this session was marked by acts of bi-serious affair, as had been the festival of peace: the second son a stonemason, father of seven children, was adopted by the Grand Orient and placed in a high school; six hundred francs were, in addition, paid to the relief fund (3); this offers some consolation for the bad worms and flattery, but does not justify forgetting principles, the change-movement of its motto.

The feast of the order, in December 1806, has some unique features. similar; each speaker feels obliged to throw his incense to the idol; this deviation from the rules seems to have become the law common; military personnel, administrators, lawyers, all suffer from it. General Lasalle, so brilliant on the battlefields, reads a a piece which he precedes with these singular words: "After my "Epistle to Hatred, which has so well served the lofty conceptions of

(1) Verses to the emperor and king, by Raup de Baptestin. Minutes of the festival, p. 15.

(2) Lyric epode, words by F.*. Brunct, music by F.:. Carbonnier. Proces-party report, page 18.

(3) Minutes of the party, page 13.

om A men
E]

ne os mn cn

1

i

329 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"Our august monarch, I have just made one to love;
"Please grant me your indulgence and attention." He he especially needed the first one; he handled the sword better than the pen, and it's hard to find anything less poetic, of less high than its rhymes (4).

F.-G. de Beaumont, in verses far superior to those
the general, expressed, in favor of Poland, wishes that the politi-Napoleon's attitude towards Russia was not to be unfortunate-how not to realize:

|
|
|
|

Finally, wake up from your lethargy.

Sarmatian people, children of the North,
And you will see your homeland again

To be reborn from the bosom of death!

I follow a terrible god into battle;
He can reclaim your rights,
He whose arm was invincible

The land dictates its laws.

Alexander threatens you in vain.

It's time, break your chains!
Recall your ancient audacity,
Reclaim your rightful place in the universe.
Napoleon, in his wisdom,

Go and put an end to your suffering;
But, confident in his promise,
Come and triumph under his flags.

They saw our valiant soldiers,
Such as the companions of Hercules,
To expand its vast states.

Peoples, break free from slavery,

And come fight alongside them.

For your wives, your legacy,
For your children and for your gods.

OF FREEMASONRY, 923

The Pole, breaking his chain,
Will know how to rebuild its defenses,

He will defy the Tsar's hatred.
Aided by the first of the Caesars (1).

This appeal to an oppressed people had been heard; the Poles had long shared the glory of our arms, the fati-
the hardships, the deprivations of war; they remained loyal to the very end.
In recent days, Napoleon alone did not live up to the expectations that the
The Polish campaign had given rise to...

The prefects of that time did not disdain to sing in public,
especially when it came to praising the emperor;
The one from Seine-et-Marne, F. de Lagarde, sang verses in which he presented the hero alternately as the liberator, the comforter, the avenger, the peacemaker, and finally like a another creator in the world. He dared, and it was the first time that In a Masonic lodge, they would go so far as to applaud at return from Egypt, one of the acts in Napoleon's life that earned him
there will always receive the most criticism:

What a heavy yoke had been
On my unfortunate homeland!
The whole globe had felt
The tremors of anarchy.
A hero leaps from the scene

May the Nile water and fertilize:
Peoples! This is the messenger from heaven,
He is the liberator of the world (2).

F.+ DeJoly, the speaker of the Grand Orient (5). He spoke, at least for a moment, about the institution, and raised questions that we will have to return to later

| soon, then launched into the usual realm of flattery. He gave free rein; however, he ventured some advice:

"I cast my gaze upon this enclosure, once resplendent-
"Disseminating the rays of glory of so many valiant warriors, I

- (1) Minutes of the party, page 18.
- (2) Minutes, page 20.
- (3) He was then a lawyer at the Council of State and the Court of Cassation.

"
em -m— —

CA Ge ee SR Re ee eq ne
:

,
- ms - 2m +

A

ee

52% PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"Look for Alexander's generals; they followed him. Just yesterday they "joined in our peaceful work... and already the empire of Darius
"is destroyed, the throne of Sidon restored. But, wiser than the son of "Philippe, their august leader, will know how to set limits even to his..."
"Fortune." | :

These were the only truly serious words that could be found.
in the speeches of this solemn occasion. Soon the speaker returns to new habits that he himself had helped to establish and to which we had so quickly adapted; he wants Napoleon to Leon erects a throne in the North on which he will place one of the members of his family. It's one of the saddest inspirations of the speaker, like the creation of the thrones occupied by the brothers of The emperor was one of his most deplorable conceptions.

An order, an insinuation? Was it a matter of anticipating public opinion? Public, or was it just flattery? That's the question today. unsolvable. Here are his words:

Through him, the genius of France hovers over the banks of the Vistula and the Neva. Let no one say that Peter's had » preempted; we saw with Suvrow the regenerated Russian islands of "This Pierre, the spoiled child of fame."

"Napoleon will be the true legislator of the North; a new Odin, he will..."
"to revitalize these strong souls, and the liberal ideas of the nineteenth "century, the century of the great Napoleon, will germinate in these"
"barbaric lands, where murderous or massacred princes have"
"were our contemporaries."

"Happy are those distant regions if, like Italy, they
"see their new destinies entrusted to a prince of his
"Blood, Companion of his victories!"

After a speech in honor of the hero, the speaker addressed his incense to Cambacérès who presided: "And you, custodian of the "Thought and power of the hero; you whom he believed to be great enough,
"Wise enough to entrust him with the tranquility of this vast empire,"
"without the assistance of a public force; you who, alone and without the "Prestige of arms, let this second Rome enjoy all
"The sweetness of peace, your name will be for all ages"
» associated with his great name; and if he reminds us of Augustus and

ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 329

"Henry IV, you remind us of both Maecenas and Agrippa and
"Sully."

This is the style of the orators of the Great East. It is no longer just... no voice dares to proclaim these grand principles in these parties attended by so many eminent men in the weapons, councils, administration, diplomacy, courts, National representation. Freemasonry in Paris seems to have lost all philosophical character; it is not for those who run it, a charitable association, an opportunity to
to show one's sympathy to the head of state. The titles that were left at the temple gate to simply receive the name of brother are relayed from the outside world into the lodges, into the dis-

of Saint-Jean-d'Angely, great orator, gives the title of Monseigneur in Cambacérès. The institution's new role is outlined by Him in a few lines:

"a The protective bond of all the widow's children extends over
"All parts of Europe, linked to all empires, are..." » subdivides among all the cities.

"He offers everywhere a protective support, a benevolent aid to
"to the wandering traveler, to the shipwrecked without resources, to the poor without
"Comforter, to the unfortunate without support (1)."

The Persian ambassador to France, a member of a lodge of Paris was attending the session.

"He has been admitted to our mysteries," exclaimed the speaker. "He
"It was given to see these comforting rays shine which have"
"traversed the immensity of spaces and times to come here,"
"From the depths of the East, to enlighten just and good men" » doing.

"Through him this pure light will return to its ancient home—"
"ceau; Asia will recover the pious and useful institution of which it has enriched our climates.

"A new bond will unite men; a moral clarity, commune, will illuminate all their souls, like a single sun lights up all their eyes.

S

5

[2

(1) Extract from the proceedings of the G...-0... Winter Festival of 5808, page 3.

Sn 0 oo om <q En

926 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

—

» places where its first branches emerged.

"His offspring, transplanted to their native land, will lend
"Their shelter, its novice farmers will offer their help to
"A European traveler, within the vast expanse of Persia, in his "famous cities, in its overlooked villages, in its tribes"
"distant, even into its deserts."

These are the great words that resound in the temple;
empty speeches, when they are not filled with praise for the empereur. The speakers had resumed the habit of naming Ja Freemasonry, the royal art, a name abolished by decree and which was utterly ridiculous. Even in their relationships on the material works of the Grand Orient, the secretary Godefroy de Beaumont, the orator Dejoly find a way, one of them to commentcer, the other to end with a censor blow to Napoleon. The
The cantatas, the stanzas, are inspired by the same thought of adulthood.
lation; barely a few words to a Cimarosa tune dare-
They timidly remind us of the temple's legality.

After singing of the peace that lasted so little, the victories that saved France, the Grand Orient sang of love; the festival of The order, Summer of 5810, is a long epithalamium whose marriage of Napoleon with Marie-Louise is the subject.

Throughout this entire period that we have just reviewed,
True Freemasonry should not be sought in these Grand Orient festivals, and the direction given to its work
all the more regrettable as it included within its ranks more A large number of distinguished men are found. One finds with a lively satisfaction in its columns the most remarkable individualities
the highlights of that brilliant era: the soldiers who had won on the battlefields the marshal's baton, the epaulettes of generals, who had traversed Europe and Egypt as victors, They saw the gates of the capitals fall before them; the ambassadors whose names are intertwined with the major diplomatic acts of time; the ministers directing the affairs of France; islands legislators, tribunes, last hope and last illusion of liberty, legal experts, magistrates, from the earliest elevated in the hierarchical order; French and foreign princes

Re eme

—!

works presided over by the arch-chancellor of the empire.

If such men had seriously desired triumph
Masonic ideas, what impulse could not have given them Give? But they were near the master who had restored in France, the despotism, to whose orcs the word of freedom. Freemasonry was for him a force he wanted to act in his own self-interest, and he persuaded himself that, holding the Masonic senate under his domination, in his hand, he held it the entire order.

[I] was not quite so; compressed in the head, the spirit of Freedom persisted in the rest of the body.

Several years before the revolution, lodges of several provinces lived in a kind of independence that he had been impossible to destroy; bound together by their rites, in cor-
With their responses settled, they acted as sovereigns, holding... congress where each of them was represented, making resolutions who carried out their duties faithfully, implementing important reforms.
Thus, in 1778, at the request of the directory of Bourgo-
The convent of the gne, the fifth province of the order, had taken place in Lyon.
Gauls, which was attended by the deputies of Franche-Comté, of the Burgundy, Alsace, Germany, all the directorates of France, under the presidency of F. Villermoz. He had redone the rituals, brought about significant changes to customs, promulgué ur general code of regulations for lodges of the French language, of the rectified regime. Its decisions had been approved and maintained at the convent of Wilhelmsbad, in 1782.

Many cities had large provincial printing lodges putting the direction to a number of workshops; they had more directorates of the Dresden reform. Lyon, Bordeaux, Strasbourg sometimes had both.

This provincial spirit was reawakened under the empire.

From 1800 to 1804, new lodges opened in Besançon;
On this latter date, former masons gathered in this city under the authority of the committee of the order; planks were addressed to Lyon and Strasbourg in order to gather the elements necessary. The fifth prefecture of Besançon and the regency were reinstated in the 5th province of the order. Three years later, the chan-national mastery of the rectified system; he accepted it, and, by a patent, transferred the provincial seat to Besançon from Strasbourg, whose members were dispersed, a transfer which remained provisional until a general convention had pro-statement on this point.

— 2

328 PILOSOPHITIC HISTORY

The Burgundy directory, reconstituted in Besançon, brought together under his aegis the lodges of Burgundy, Basel, Geneva, of Gray, from Salins, from Lons-le-Saunier. The Grand Master was the Prefect of Doubs, F.-. de Brys, Baron of the Empire, Commander of the Legion of Honour; his deputy to the Grand Orient, F.-. d'Aigrefeuille. This state of affairs lasted until the Restoration.

The eastern part of Périgueux had seen its temple reopened; towards the At the end of 1802, the English lodge L'Amitié asked the Grand Orient to resume his work, and soon all the masons will be scattered found a sanctuary. In 1807, they consecrated a new temple with a splendid celebration attended by five hundred brothers; delegations had come from Bordeaux and from the departments neighboring properties.

The ceremony took place in the Rochefort house, whose immense terraces overlook the plain and the smiling basin which extends to the foot of the Petit-Change hill; rich Aid was distributed to the poor. The ceremony was announced at sunrise by a salvo of artillery; at nine hours later, a second salvo marked the moment of the meeting of the brothers. An inaugural song was performed with a large orchestra; It is remarkable for the religious sentiment that prevails there and far superior to all the Masonic poetry of the time (1).

(1) We believe we should reproduce this piece, which is undoubtedly unpublished and which pruntons au manuscrit du F.*. Charrière , which we have already mentioned, page 261.
INAUGURATION SONG.

The deepest darkness reigns beneath the outer courtyard.

THE CHOIR.

At: Fresh myrite or dark olive.
God the Creator, soul of the universe,
Hear the wishes we make in the shadows.

ee ne nee à

Equality was not achieved there, and the brothers were able to applaud these towards t

The st © mn

Far be it from you to harbor guilty desire!
Far be it from you to harbor fatal pride!
Let us be equal during life,
We are all at the coffin.

'Lyon was the seat of the Auvergne directory. Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Nantes, Rouen, Marseille, and many others obeyed Drotinéiales lodges. had directorates, of Long enough our holy concerts'

They resounded in the dark night.
Spread your immortal rays upon us.

Virtue seeks the light;

Come and relight, at his prayer,

The sacred fire of your altars.
|

UNB VOIX.

You lend the day its luminous disc;

The night owes you its chariot strewn with stars.
So from your throne and from heaven
Your hand tore the veils.

But these torches of the eternal wainscoting
They make us, by publishing your glory,
Cherish memory even more
From the sacred water of your altars.

THE CHOIR,

Creator Dicu, soul of the universe, etc.

When the choir repeated the first verse, thunder could be heard rumbling.

AN APPRENTICE.

In Lorient I hear the heavens rumble;
Would God come, armed with his thunder,
Confusing our proud wishes?
Ah! Let us fear, let us fear his anger.

A MASTER.

Rather, beware of blaspheming the Lord,
To fail to recognize his clemency;
Close your hearts to hope,
That is to renounce his altar.

SR ne RE pe qe el rt Tr

5 of our data

— ee + me qe

330 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Scottish lodges, and the ideas that the Grand Orient was forgetting in Paris were maintained in the departments.

In 1806, the Masonic senate, in order to succeed in all matters of direction With his hands, he made a regulation that proclaimed the union of rites. The existence of provincial lodges, an intermediary between him and the workshops hindered his progress; he did not dare to remove them, but he declared that they were an obstacle to the regular operation of the ruling power, and decreed that in the future there would be no more established.

THE SAME.

hurls death into the heart of the perjurer;

But for us, his flashing lights

They are a good omen on this day.

Thus, in former times, in the sight of Israel,

He appeared in the clouds,

And came, carried on the storms,

Restore its ancient altar.

At the sound of thunder, the temple opens; an ancient altar is seen there on which burns the sacred fire dedicated to Friendship.

A MASTER.

God of Hiram, God of Hiram, whom our mouth implores,

Your splendor shines forth before our eyes.

And from North to South, from sunset to dawn, .

Everything here shines with your light.

Of your blessings, beneath these porticoes,

We will instruct the day's star,

And, in the night, our holy hymns

There will still be songs of love.

But I hear it, God is calling us;

He wants his children to be happy

At the feet of faithful Friendship

They run to burn pure incense.

THE CHOIR.

We hear it, God is calling us;

He wants his children to be happy

At the feet of faithful Friendship

They run to burn pure incense.

The FF.. enter scattering flowers; the V.. is at the altar, where he burns incense.

teen. of ne nee nes

= — —

This decree sparked struggles; but the original spirit was not

OF FREEMASONRY,

stifled, and that was the important thing.

Freemasonry had infiltrated the regiments before the revolution, at a time when the ideas of liberty and equality were germinating throughout this fertile land of France which was to give

A MASTER.

Let us hang our garlands in the New Orient;

Let us mingle our flowers with its perfumes.

May these humble offerings be presented before the Eternal One

They carry the tribute of our hearts.
And you, companion of his glory,
Chaste Friendship, daughter of heaven,
Receive from the hands of Victory
The incense promised at your altar.
He whose arm was formidable
Harvest your proud enemies

Your venerable priest will be

The defender of your courts.

THE CHOIR.

He whose arm was formidable
Moissoana, your proud enemies
Your venerable priest will be
The defender of your courts.

Know the price you pay to the God who gazes upon you.

The gentle blessings are returned to us;

May the uninitiated forever learn, by your example,

That true goods are virtues.
Far be it from you to harbor guilty desire,
Far be it from you to be fatal: pride;
Let us be equal throughout life,

We are all at the coffin.
Holy Friendship calls to you;

Swear to obey his laws,

Swear all to live for her.
Swear to die for her.

THE CHOIR (raising their hands towards the altar).

Holy Friendship calls us;
We swear to obey his laws,
Let us all swear to live for her.
For her, we swear to die.

_ + er - ee ee

331

- -- mm
ah ee me en

•
ns meme = em ©
ee

ee ee me me + +
°

ee = ocher me ee ce - ne e— QT me RS - mm mg + 6

592. __ PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

a hundredfold the seeds sown within it. Under the republic-

that, and especially under the empire, the example of this group of men illustrious figures whose courage and talent Europe admired, whose The fatherland repeated the names with gratitude and pride, led the scidats towards Masonic mysteries.

Quickly swept from the center to the extremities of the empire by the events that were then unfolding with greater force, more with unprecedented vivacity, the marshals, the generals, the colonels, the The captains happily rediscovered the maxims around them. philosophical, religious, and political issues that had captivated them, spring from which they had quenched their thirst, which constantly drew them in, amidst the noise of the camps, the perils of war.

Freemasonry enhances courage by showing it a purpose. maintain his enthusiasm by pointing out the conquest to be made, teaches to die for the triumph of his ideas, and, in those times of

"terrible struggles, endless work, sacrifices"

painful, she wielded an easily understandable power over these elite natures that shone on the battlefields. Almost All regiments had their own organized lodge, composed of a single unit. a military unit, operating regularly within its ranks. at a time when most men were soldiers, the lodge offered to some the religious thoughts that one so reluctantly relinquishes, to other philosophical studies that fascinate and engage the elevated spirits, to others still the image of the lost family. It was also a powerful bond between soldiers exposed each day to imminent dangers, a way to fraternize with the followers of the cities where the troops were stationed; a thought com-

"community was maintained between the citizens and the defenders of the homeland; also we see Freemason soldiers attending with great punctuality at the meetings of the cities they passed through.

It is not possible to get an exact account of the work of the exclusively military lodges, although it exists in the archives from the Grand Orient a considerable number of files and documents which concern them. Their official reports, which would be a monumental... They are very curious about Masonic history in the army. mostly remained in the hands of secretaries, architects visits; perhaps many were lost in the disasters,

2

a me me = = mn + me mn pen à ai 2

ee mme em

U

0 mm QE nee 2 Rec

— me “This me Re born a 0 ON ee ee en nee ee OR —e de nn ee ete ee see
. .

OF FREEMASONRY.

on the long journeys of these soldiers who traveled across Europe with the speed of the eagle that served as their ensign. We are struck by the thought that, for twelve or fifteen

For years, the French army truly had no other religion than that of Freemasonry, another philosophical study than.

that of the truths she proclaimed; thus she was the most ardent of them all.

missionary. — |

In 1804, Naples witnessed the creation within its borders of a Grand Orient.

attached to the military division of the Italian army, whose general—

.ral Lechi was appointed grand master. The following year, a supreme

The council was organized in Milan, where a Grand-Orient auquekse united that of Naples, and Prince Eugene

'Beauharnais was invested with the dignity of Grand Master of the Lodges' Italian. At the same time, Portugal, where Freemasonry flourished, and established its senate in Lisbon.

The land of the Inquisition, watered by the blood of so many martyrs

Slaughtered by the fanaticism of priests, Spain was initiated by the French army with Masonic mysteries, and intended to preach fraternity, love of humanity, freedom of worship, in places where the provocations and anathemas of intolerance. By a contrast that alone would testify to the dispositions of soldiers, if other acts did not confirm them, a

The Grand National Lodge for all of Spain was founded in Madrid, in October 1809, in the very premises that had been occupied (L tition (4). In Germany, Kassel became the seat of the Grand-

'East of Westphalia, whose king Jerome was named grand-Master. Everywhere, finally, where our victorious armies had penetrated,

They had carried with them the comforting dogmas, the high

Truths of Masonic philosophy. Noble mission of a people civilizer |

We have seen the Grand Orient contract, since the peace celebrations, the habit of protesting, in all important meetings, of his loyalty, his attachment to the emperor. All his great-officers were, by virtue of their functions, members of the government; They were appointed mainly from among the marshals of the empire, the

(1) 4cta Latomorum, t. 1, page 244.

n
Dan mn mm ilona es eZ

2
,

qe oo STREET – En meinngu GREEN ge À
.

in + of 2 me pe ee ee to ie mm to eee cp 0 40m f

eme and me 0e nn

"om mme mm
.

354. PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

generals, men devoted to Napoleon; it is therefore probable that imperial politics had to become somewhat intertwined with the ceremonies Masonic ties to the army; however, the primitive ideas there were not abandoned, and a secret society, known as the named after Philadelphes, organized within the army by Colonel Oudet, seems to have caused the emperor considerable anxiety (1).

Oudet was born in Ménale, in the Jura mountains, around 1775; He took up arms early, and at first showed himself to be animated the highest, purest republican sentiments. In gar-
Nison in Besançon, he was initiated into a lodge of Philadelphes which, It is said that their aim, in principle, was to remove France the County to France, and to form a Sequani republic. This thought was certainly nurtured for some time by the mountain dwellers of the Jura, but it occupied little Oudet who judged too well understood the situation in France, understood too well the necessity- the state of cohesion, in an attempt to weaken the homeland-through a separation. He liked the republic as a form of government exclusively suited to ensuring the happiness of men, and He would have liked to establish it in all states.

It was during the consulate that Oudet, then a captain, created the so- political society of which he was the leader. He had guessed the thinking of Bonaparte before he was even strong enough to have there was no longer any need to hide it, and its goal was to find in the army of defenders for liberty whose rise he could already foresee to bind as in Earbonism. Oudet, who was in Paris, well

(1) Details about the Philadelphuses can be found in a book entitled: History of the Secret Societies of the Army, a work attributed to Charles Nodier, who supposedly wrote it news. We feel it necessary to warn the reader to be on guard against the assertions in this book, which can only be consulted with regard to the organization of society. Everything else is a web of lies concocted during the Restoration to to please the new government and deceive the country. Thus, the author strives to establish the cooperation of Mallet and Oudet in a royalist restoration plan, and their intelligence links with Moreau for this purpose. This is completely contrary to the character of these

* two men known for their republican opinions, and who were neither capable of

Neither is it a betrayal. Let writers work to make their ideas triumph. politicians, nothing could be more natural; but, after the victory of their party, it is u honest people would cast slander on men who are dead and cannot be defend.

OF FREEMASONRY. 33%

that the corps to which he belonged was garrisoned on the island of Rhe, found himself in contact with a large number of officers. From a wolf with a sure eye, persuasive eloquence, and to whom it was difficult to resist, he led many men to share his hopes.

Frances, he initiated them into the society of the Philadelphs, made them aware his goal, but limited himself to revealing his methods to a few. There are still men who knew him, who saw him up close, and who, while keeping secret things they don't think able to reveal without breaking their oath, they confess that he was not

It is possible to have a private interview with Oudet without being convinced of the justice of the cause whose triumph he sought. They saw old soldiers, hardened in battle, coming out

+ from near him the 7th, wet with tears, warmed and won.

His existence was suspected; Oudet was returned to his body, to the island of Rhe, then soon placed on leave; he retired to a village in the Jura. Some time later, he was made a major, He returned to Paris where he once again took over the management of the company. 11 He was disgraced again and forced to leave the capital. He had married on the island of Rhe and had a very young child; at the time of to leave and return once again to his mountains, he He introduced her to some friends, and, while embracing her, he reportedly uttered, words imbued with mysticism and politics which without Doubt, he told all his thoughts to those who were initiated into his plan, but from which it is hardly possible to derive a very precise meaning. The history of Rome and Jewish history, at a time when they They no longer had any connection whatsoever with each other; they were all confused. in order to confound the searches, to offer meaning to all the parts, so that the key can only be found in the knowledge of the political opinions of the person in the mouth of the-

which historian placed them.

Mallet, who, at the Philadelphes society, had adopted the name of Spartacus, succeeded Oudet in the leadership of the brothers. called from the Jura some outspoken republicans, but pure of all excesses; a secret committee was formed, a provisional dictatorship organized, a general assembly of men chosen from the

mm S me ee me ee me
2 men and women

390 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Forty-eight sections of Paris were convened and held (1). But the The emperor's fortune was to prevail.

A few years later, during the 1809 campaign:
was about to open, Oudet, who had been included in the first promotions of the Legion of Honour, was recalled to the army with the 'rank of brigadier general, and received orders to organize a additional line regiment under No. 6, but which became the No. 9. He surrounded himself with Philadelphus officers and came to take part in the Day of Wagram, July 6, 1809.

This is where this mysterious career was supposed to end. A death shrouded in mystery. Oudet had been wounded. during the affair of three lance blows; in the evening, after the winning of

"In the battle, he received orders to advance with a weak-detachment. He obeyed, and gave, in the night, it seems, in an ambush, or in the middle of an enemy force. Relieved on.

the next day by the troops who followed him with twenty-two officers. Even though the trees had fallen around him, he lived for another three days. He had thirty-four years old.

In countries where France's influence was less pronounced, The order, however, was not lacking in activity. The emperor of Russia, Alexander, had, in 1803, agreed to repeal the orders sanctions rendered against Freemasonry by Paul [°° ct by himself at his accession to the throne, and had restored it to its states, with the aim of gaining some popularity through this act. He had wanted to be initiated himself, and the work of the workshops had regained its luster, but one can judge how little freedom it owed to leave them the despotism of the czar; he did not foresee in the institution that the usefulness it would be. For him, he only calculated the services- these staff members that she could return to him; in her eyes, it was not a matter of than to forge new bonds, at the time of war, boyars whose loyalty and love were quite problematic ques, while allowing them to proclaim at least some formulas the principles are not very harmonious with the ideas of sovereignty imperial. The lords of the court reopened their private boxes- eulières, and that of Duke Constantine, brother of the Tsar, was one of the brighter.

(1) /History of secret societies in the army, page 185. |

RS RS mn mm me

The institution was flourishing in Sweden: it created almshouses for the orphans; the king openly protected her; he had founded the order of Charles XII, the sign of which was to be worn in public

. by the high-ranking Freemasons. Bernadotte, to whom the policy of Napoleon outlined the king's legacy, which had to be found in these lodges a powerful support, happy if the maxims that one there preaching would have dissuaded him from lending his support to the last organized coalition against France, his homeland. The king was attending sometimes at ceremonies as a spectator, his family there-took part; the Duke of Südermania was Grand Master; but, in outside of these meetings where the truth was so widely represented In addition, there were others, more hidden, where they also gave a freer flow of ideas.

The French revolution had thrown into the lodges of England a lively commotion that is easy to perceive; the triumph of Masonic principles in an eminent nation

the initiating figure, who proclaimed them from the national tribune and invited all peoples to adopt them, which interested the order too much whole so that we wouldn't feel a profound joy everywhere.

After so many centuries of persecution, effort, and misery, the secret doctrine established equality on the ruins of the throne, the plas powerful in Europe. In countries subject to absolute monarchy-

read, one concealed this feeling of satisfaction that takes hold of Convinced minds when a resounding success crowns their struggles serious, we were sent to the kings, protectors of the order, initiated into lower ranks; but in free countries, one could to deliver with greater scope to the joy of a long-lasting victory disputed. This is certainly not 'following the advice of the caution, but the same men who sheltered their designs shrouded in the deepest mystery as they fought at peril their life or their freedom do not always resist pleasure to announce their success.

The demonstrations that took place in the London workshops,

'when the French revolution broke out, seem to have worried the power, because the leaders of the order thought it useful to give him pledges, and the Grand Lodge decided that an address would be presented to the king to assure him of the devotion and loyalty of all the

ee

L2

.

L]

$.

.

mn + CR RE

.

.

= = ee te ee ee

538 – PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

English Freemasons. Clarence's lodge went further and decided that it would not allow any speeches in its assemblies on the French Revolution. That was going too far, wanting to

to link thought and speech, in a circle they had to always be tempted to cross; moreover, the French revolution– The French event was the one that most keenly interested France. Freemasonry, and forbidding anyone to talk about it was simply absurd. The decree provoked widespread disapproval; the lodges of England, Scotland and Ireland declared it an attack on liberty, Clarence's lodge is banned from Freemasonry, and refuses to...

return to corresponding with her. The punishment closely followed the forgetfulness principles.

through the revelations of Abbé Barruel, which seem to us to have never
He was a bricklayer, but he obviously received confidences.
pored over Masonic books, mixed many truths with many lies, and exaggerated the scope of a great many of facts (4); frightened by the books of Mr. Robison and the author of Zimmermann's life, the English cabinet took measures to to prevent the expansion of Freemasonry, in order to destroy it Incently, because it had put down roots too deep for him
It was possible to pull it from the ground in one go. H obtained from the Parliament passed a bill which, while respecting existing lodges, placed numerous obstacles to their preservation and defended to establish new ones (2).

The lodges that did not want to risk suppression were required to have two of their members affirm this under oath that they existed before the bill and in accordance with custom and statutes of the Freemasons. This declaration had to be certified by the magistrate who received it, signed by those who made it, filed with the clerk of the justice of the peace court of the place where the lodge is loc gathered. The distinctive title of each lodge, the place of the assemblies.

the names and descriptions of all the masons were recorded registered at the registry, inserted by the clerks into their registers,

- (1) Memoirs to serve as a history of Jacobinism.
- (2) Bill of Parliament of July 12, 1799.

St um ms
es mm.

DR. FREEMASONRY. 3939.

placed in their protocols, and a shipment of these documents was handed over each year to the magistrates of the general sessions judicial authorities could prohibit the meetings as harmful.

to public order and punish the assembled masons contrary to this decision.

The bill was, from the outset, rigorously observed; eonspositivities were refused to new lodges, but the old ones

In times of active struggle, the multiplicity of workshops has the advantage that it lends more power to Masonic action that, and, in those moments, energy is above all what is needed ask the institution. On calm days, when the The fight is not around you, and harmony is above all

– desirable, the ban on opening new lodges imposes on

Brothers, more uniformity, more agreement; we do not separate, in the fear of no longer being able to meet.

Favor soon returned to the lodges of the Great Breiagne; an assassination attempt on the king provided to the Freemasons official nonsense, the opportunity to send him an address for the congratulate her on having escaped danger; soon after, busy with physical work, she laid the first stone of a basin maritime near the port of Leith, from a bridge over the Spey, in Scotland, from a theatre in London, and the Grand Lodge of Scotland

He appointed the Prince of Wales as his Grand Master. The men

sincerely committed to the principles that are the essence of the institution tion continued to view the French revolution as the a harbinger of the reforms that were to change the situation People's politics, the French as the great initiators to new ideas; but their wishes were unfortunately powerless to change the implacable policy of their government the ment which succeeded the coalition in the election, supported by its subsidized the armies of the continent, disregarded the treaties, violated the rights of nations, sought even in the other hemisphere of enemies to France, and was due, in a triumph Due to chance, to see the empire that had made him tremble crumble for so long.

Prussia saw Freemasonry spreading within its borders;

ne A – –n 20 4 “00R ne Geen

– 340 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the king did not always rely on his secretaries, on his ministers, responsible for corresponding with her; he wrote himself to the Mother Lodge, at the Three Globes, in Berlin, to promise him

his protection; he approved the statutes of the Royal York Society of Friendship

In a statement from his office, he assured him of his goodwill, he later sent a letter to applaud the principles she manifested, and when, driven by fear, the government—The English government was itself seized, and it issued an edict against secret societies.(1), he excepted lodges, by determining on what Masonic power did they have to depend to escape? per to the proscription; he continued his private correspondence with them, sanctioned the appointments, the agreements, the modifications compliance with regulations. It finally includes all of Fins— IE institution and actively participates in its actions.

It was during this period that the Prussian lodges revised the... the registers of ranks, the general statutes, and that the Mother Lodge of Royal York of Friendship renounces all ranks foreign to the primitive masonry and introduced into the workshops of its jurisdiction the three symbolic degrees of the doctrine of the Grand Lodge of former stonemasons of London.

The order had continued to flourish in Holland, but it was prosperit in the Austrian Netherlands; the invasion of Belgium ct The Brabant region was reopened by troops of the Republic, who then moved the temples ther of France naturally found themselves placed under his direction; those that had been founded under the auspices of the Granide—Loge provincials passed under the French banner; the Freemasons followed the policy that gave him freedom. The Grand Lodge of The United Provinces had established workshops in the East Indies tales and westerns; she continued to exercise power under the reign of King Louis, brother of Napoleon, but taking the title of the Grand Orient of Holland, of which the king was appointed grand master; When Holland was united with the French empire, the power...

Masonic; the ancient lodges established by the Grand Orient

did not cease its functions. Belgium alone had twenty-nine workshops under the authority of the Professor of France; many

(4) October 20, 4798.

mrs

Se me ee ge

| DR FREEMASONRY. | 341

were very old, and the Constance of Maastricht, among others, dated from 1761.

All of Germany was covered with lodges, but in con-

- very different editions, proscribed by some princes, protected or tolerated by others, still living. The Freemasons of Schleswig, in Mecklenburg, sacrificed their income to a hospice, whose foundation stone they were laying. Those from Weimar encouraged poetry and literature by awarding them medals. Altenburg was opening new temples: Mannheim saw the formation of the Grand Orient of Baden, whose prince re-The Grand Master of Ysembourg became Grand Master. Heidelberg, Carlsruhe, Freyburg formed a Grand Lodge. Frankfurt am Main, after seeing his workshops closed, he founded a Grand Lodge of eclectic rite.

A most curious fact demonstrated the vital force of Freemasonry: the Emperor of Austria believed all the deserted lodges, abolished in its states; by an instruction of

In 1801, it had been strictly forbidden for all officials to: to be a member of secret societies, under penalty of expulsion; for that no one could plead ignorance, it had been decreed that the oath of loyalty that every employee had to take upon joining function would contain this clause, 'and this same emperor found-eleven years later, Freemasonry was present in its provinces, in:

+
nt qe CRE Rene fn teen ee D ee
. 0
me + Ge fe + ue - ue eu pu ee ste

his capital and even in his own palace (1).

The two Americas had seen the expansion and growth of the franc-Freemasonry in their provinces. In the United States, it had not She had not experienced any persecution, nor had she enjoyed any protection. special from the authorities; he had, as with all the cults, left the most complete freedom, she had largely

She took advantage. She was everywhere, she had her temples, her ceremonies external; her principles made her appreciate enlightened minds;

his acts of charity, always numerous, often repeated, the | recommended love and respect from the masses.
|

(1) It was in 1812; the police discovered a Freemasons' lodge in Vienna; all
The brothers who could be captured were imprisoned; the public officials who were part of it, lost their positions; a chamberlain of the emperor was struck by impeachment.

ee re nm

mn mm em to -

849 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Thus, during the consulate and the empire, in the countries where it is _outlawed, in those where she is treated as a friend, in those where she is left to her own devices, without any help other than that of the law that guarantees freedom for all, Freemasonry or persists or rises; it actually completes the conquest of the world.

However, Europe was facing a terrible crisis: England pointed against France, against its greatness, its development a lie, an implacable hatred; a duel to the death continued between the two rivals, and more than once, stifled in the shackles of the continental blockade, which French writers later attacked With such passion, England had been on the verge of its loss. Its industry was on its last legs, its taxes enormous, its debt immense; incredible efforts had sustained her.

Napoleon's overly real ambition, intoxicated by victory, served as a pretext for his struggle. Never were there faster, more No amount of glorious triumphs had justified or explained this intoxication.
but never had a conqueror shown such insatiable ambition-

'ble. Napoleon had raised the glory of the empire very high, made to make the Romani people of France shine, to dominate Europe; its grandeur thrones in his family had altered his long-standing, high political standing.

so skillful, had led him into mistakes whose consequences were bound to be so cruel for him as well as for France, because he
It was impossible to separate them from each other.

Spain was attached like a leech to the flanks of the France; England was contesting Portugal with us; Italy was in turmoil,
The Emperor of Russia had violated his promised faith to make a cause common with our eternal enemy and trained Napoleon to this fatal campaign, which began under such promising circumstances, ended by the most dreadful defeats, where at least our soldiers did not
They could only be defeated by the cold and hunger.

Germany was riddled with secret societies that conspired
The overthrow of Napoleon. The Philadelphus lodge, organist in the French army by Oudet and whose aim was the establishment-the freedom, did not manifest its existence throughout the period of the empire that by the mad and bold attempt of Mallet;
She led him to the plain of Grenelle, he fell bravely,

me ee ne te + - mena

-----...-

-

no
| + me me ne

hands. This society undoubtedly wanted to proclaim the republic

OF FREEMASONRY RIB. 343

He half rose to shout, "Long live the republic!" and fell back down...
None of the Philadelphs ever sought to use the dagger against the emperor; they propagated their doctrines of liberty, they were ready to take advantage of the events, but they felt although striking Napoleon in the midst of his incessant struggles to fight against Europe was to strike France at its heart, to deliver it to its enemies by depriving her of the leader who held her destiny in his hands.

republic, but it is regrettable that the mystery still hangs over
It does not allow for an appreciation of the system, the political elements questions on which it intended to base it. German companies they had not understood their role like the Philadelphuses; they had set themselves the same goal, but with different means.

Formed in the mountains of Tyrol, they had soon widespread throughout the German Empire; national pride wounded by defeats, by the French occupation, by the dismemberment, had given them ardent activity; Napoleon was For them, the enemy had to be defeated, and, it must be said with regret, They hadn't flinched from the thought of murder. When the The disasters in Russia signaled the start of shameful defections. cowardly betrayals, of a final European coalition, the ideas of liberation that motivated the followers were exploited skillfully manipulated by politics; Germany, exhausted, made a In a supreme effort, he rose up in the name of liberty against France, which only she could give it to him; she fought for those who were soon to deny him the benefit of victory, turn against herself the strength they drew from it and make her vividly to regret his trust and his mistake.

The German secret societies were therefore mistaken; they misjudged the situation, allowed themselves to be led astray by a unthinking zeal, they yielded to a legitimate movement, if one from the point of view of nationality, erroneous if one considers the from humanity's point of view, as the Franks must do masons; they did not see the abyss and fell into it.

344 © PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

CHAPTER ELEVEN.

Freemasonry under the Restoration. The Grand Orient at the fall of the regime, 1814–1815. hostile to Freemasonry. Many lodges are closed; partisanship is taking hold in some. Some in favor of the new government, Ardent reaction of the clergy against the Masonic spirit. The regenerated free men. The ambitious are abandoning the institution, which is no longer jobs or to advance towards them. Rite of Misraïm. – A large number of former officers come to search in the workshops for the memory of happier times, the philosophical religion they loved, which they had followed. – Reappearance in France of a second ruling power; supreme advice.

Gradually, the attacks from the clergy, the awakening of the liberal spirit, the struggles. The protests against the restoration bring the crowd back to the boxes. They begin by dwelling to discuss hopes there, then we actively resume preaching the eternal maxims of The institution. Invasion of Carbonarism. – Persecutions against Freemasons in Italy and :

Towards the end of the restoration. Mutual schools stemming from a Masonic proposal. Lafay
Lyon. July Revolution, Masonic Festivals,

PO SR NE ER

I France in the last two campaigns
which determined the fall
of the empire, she succumbed
under the efforts of Europe. She was exhausted.
of men, exhausted of money; the famine had
* during this period, the price of bread had risen to a rate that it 7th place hadn't been reached for twenty years. We had suffered-NS Mferr. When the nation had relied only on

For example, she herself had found in her own res-
one source, in his courage, in his despair, the strength |

It was about resisting, about overcoming; but at that moment she had

GE: so identified with the emperor, that, this one |

Defeated, she fell with him; perhaps there was, in

- an appeal to the people, a last resort to crush the foreigner
the very heart of France, to repress treason, to revive the uncertain, to bring back the selfish ones who, jealous of preserving this

Spain. Bloody scenes on both peninsulas. - The role of Freemasonry in France

Digitized by Google

OF FREEMASONRY. 941)

that they had conquered or obtained gifts from Napoleon, stipulated for them, abandoning both the homeland and their benefice-
But that would have created civil war, and the emperor backed down.
With the use of this powerful remedy, restoration took place.

The Grand Orient of France, which had so completely given itself over to The empire, likewise, submitted to the new government; it hastened to declare the imperial prince deposed from his grand mastership late and cross out again (1). The feast of the Order of Saint John in Summer, celebrated on the 24th day of the 4th month 5814, is a sad monument to this deplorable era: the F.. Godefroy de Beaumont, that we have seen Napoleon extolled, lavishing praise on Louis XVII. "The Great Architect of the universe has cast, in his wisdom, a "A favorable glance at this beautiful kingdom; he has seen our misfortunes," He granted our wishes; and now, in the most dreaded crisis—table, the angel of peace, led by his benevolent hand, comes to calm the storm that was rumbling above our heads. He chose it in this august family which, for so many centuries, governed France with as much grandeur as generosity, and which he entrusts to our head like the cornerstone of the throne that rises to begin our happiness anew; he chose it from the noble blood of Henry IV, whose name will never perish; he is still the » descendant of Louis XIV, whose name Grand recalls the "Great deeds; he is, finally, the brother of the blessed Louis XVI, who, "of the celestial abode due to his virtues, after having been nourished" "of sorrows and outrages, enjoys the admiration of the French" "That (2)."

The grand mastership was vacant, the powers were entrusted to three Grand Conservators of the Order; these were the Islands

(1) Minutes book of the Grand Orient of France, years 5814–5815. One significant mutilation occurred in these documents, but what remains is sufficient for to serve as a lesson for the future.

(2) Minutes of the celebration, pages 3 and 4. We apologize to our readers to make such quotations, which do not even have the merit of being correctly written—ly, but we are copying verbatim. It is likely that the embarrassment of F.—. of Beaumont was reflected in his style. The other speakers were distinguished by their lack of adulation. This curious report is signed by F.*. Dejoly, who this time had the It's good practice to remain silent.

— te nn nee mm EEE Rupee 0 Reg dense ete ER ee ne

... —...—

me ee To td ©

940 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

FF. Macdonald, Beurnonville, Valence; among the dignitaries of This year, we find Kellermann, Rampon, Augereau. Muraire, Masséna, Moncey, Davoust, Serrurier, Mortier, Souilt, mixed with some men from the restaurant industry who, likewise, seizes control of the Grand Orient, which the events of 1815 bring about to perform contradictory actions.

The empire had fallen for the second time and was not to be reborn. to rise; Napoleon, after the greatest fortune, was going to give to the the world witnessed the spectacle of the most immense pain, and the government- The English signaled the coalition's triumph with an infa-

which had set humanity back several centuries, brought it back to the worst days of Roman decadence, to the barbarity of Middle Ages. The law of nations, which is not always enshrined by the treaties, but which nothing erases from the code of honor, was shamefully violated in the person of the greatest captain of the era, which, in its most intoxicating triumphs, had shown a generosity perhaps equal to his glory.

The Grand Orient continued its work, pronounced the centrali- the incorporation of all Masonic rites within its ranks, left vacant the presidency of the order, appointed Beurnonville and Macdonald first and second deputy grand masters, inaugurated the bust of Louis XVII, and in his celebrations sang of the king and the return of peace. Things were not the same in the rest of the

France: struck in their glory by the disasters of the homeland, in their love through exile and Napoleon's captivity, humiliated by the presence of enemy armies on French soil, offended through persecutions, whether miserable or bloody, many men, broken by profound grief, abandoned the workshops. A Lyon lodge, having lost all hope for the future, He burned his furniture, his archives, his tapestries, his ornaments, his altar, and was extinguished in a deliberate fire. Comminent to speak of the principles of liberty under foreign bayonets; of equality when efforts were made to restore the old regime; of fraternity amidst the triumph of a party unleashed against the The revolution that had proclaimed them? In the despair of the nation, in its general and entirely legitimate dejection, a large number

ete ne en ne 0 AL 20e "ment rm - en ee ASS

OF FREEMASONRY. Dot

Lodges closed while awaiting better days. Public opinion The royalist seized some of them, made his presence felt there openly, and This gave rise to divisions which led to the desertion of the columns. The anarchy that reigned outside in ideas was reflected in the Masonic body.

It was impossible for it to be otherwise; the shock had
 It was too terrible, the jolt too violent, not to get involved to be felt everywhere. Freemasonry was defeated by the revolution.
 who succumbed, defeated along with the empire she had loved and who was collapsing. The ruling senate, it is true, was maintaining itself by rallying to the new power; but the order was about to face harsh consequences attacks to endure. The clergy, who owed so much to Napoleon, distinguished themselves through his violence towards her; gratitude and charity
 They were no longer bound by the law of the church; ambition stifled them. The pre-
 They sang of the triumph of the throne and the altar, and reacted with energy against everything that had stood in their way. The names Voltaire and Rousseau were dragged through the mud, all the philosophers of the late eighteenth century insulted; the serpent who was biting the file! Freemasonry was shrouded in this stream of insults; the followers of public hatred were singled out.
 that; they did not limit themselves to thundering against them from the pulpits, whispers were made in the women's ears, in the mysterious confidens of the confessional, the estrangement for their affiliated husbands.
 The crusade was fierce, ardent, it reeked of hatred; the chapters Barruel's texts served as the basis for sermons, even in the Îles region.
 countryside where people were unaware of what Freemasonry was,
 priests who knew no more about it than their parishioners-
 His people thundered against the ever-reborn Masonic hydra.

The bloody reactions of the restoration came to afflict, to terrify France; they began with assassination, with the looting; in the South, women, children, entire families-They were slaughtered. Everything suspected of liberalism was pursued by bands of brigands authorized by the silence of magistrates; our soldiers, remains of so many victorious legions,
 They were hunted like wild beasts, sacrificed without mercy;
 Freemasons considered to be Bonapartists were struck by those very people whose misery they had alleviated; the Protestants

a ee me me De ne te me

0 same G- = in cree core er ce nee me donne une benn OS Re ee ee ce
 From Les ess

+ ne nee QD See - -

348 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

were killed in their temples in the name of the Dicu of the Catholics questions; then, when public indignation could raise its voice, Legal assassination replaced summary murder, the scaffold

men driven by an infernal spirit conceived the shameful thought of to use Freemasonry for the revenges of the royalist party; Rejected and disavowed by the vast majority of the brothers, they organized They formed a separate society, taking the name of the Free Regenerates, while retaining Masonic forms. Their goal was to bring France to a more absolute government; the power The central lodge was in Paris, and metropolitan lodges were established there. near him were provincial residents housed in the departments; the Followers engaged in active propaganda and investigations the most meticulous on the opinions of individuals, but principally palement of the men who were part of the administration which they claimed to be purifying. They wore around their necks, for decoration, an amaranth ribbon from which hung an eight-pointed cross embroidered silk tips of the same color, and in the middle of which was a fleur-de-lis embroidered in silver brocade; Each crossbar featured two letters embroidered in black silk and arranged in the following order: at the head of the flower, PR; on the right, DE; at the bottom, RE; on the left, PA. Pro Deo, rege, patrid.

The following lines, taken from a speech given by the pre- the president of the Free-Regenerated Ones will make perfectly clear the intentions of this society. "Knights, GOD, THE KING AND THE COUNTRY, "These are the sublime objects of our veneration, of our devotion" "ly, of our worship. That says it all, that proves it enough" "We must not, we cannot, worry the authorities," "Whenever she is genuinely devoted; that's enough" » indicate that, as soon as, against all expectations, she becomes concerned about "WE, we'll have to worry about her much more... Let's take an example" "(our very enemies; the greatest mystery, the most secret "firmly guarded, they envelop, they protect their smallest details" "projects. Let's take the example of a recent event that cannot "It is only the crime of a few subordinates, of a few mer- "Conaries; If the secret had been broken, a culprit would still be "under the hand of justice, and his peers would not raise

OF FREEMASONRY. 349

» boldly the head (1)... So as not to give too much

"Give joy to our enemies, let us not attach too much importance to a

"an escape which would only be so deplorable insofar as it would be

"The harbinger of some other, more sinister projects."

"Knights, we are accused of denouncing. Never a denunciation--"

"Ciation sourd et laceous n'est n'partie, ne'il n'partie ce que le rangs;

"Using our information, she was able to convince herself that we

"We were not dangerous, so that we were not useless (2).

These last words clearly show what an unworthy person he is.

The role of the Free Regenerated descended. When the government

He realized that such friends were leading him to his downfall, and he closed their silent lodges; the Grand Orient appears not to have been foreign to this decision by the authorities, and a letter from the prime minister

Deputy Grand Master, Brother Beurnonville, suggests that he had,

as he also says in a positive way, called attention

ministers in companies that only survived by making victims (3).

There had been men in the lodges, under the Empire, who had embraced Freemasonry because they saw it protected by the government, nominally presided over by the brother of the emperor, in reality by the first official of the State, the one to whom Napoleon granted the highest confidence and left the

He took care to govern France when the war kept him away.

men, whom no idea inspires, for whom no enthusiasm

does not warm the heart, they have only one idol, themselves; only a pen-

their fortune; that of a desire, that of rising; these ambitious people of all ranks and backgrounds, who find themselves

at all levels of society, constitute the hornets of any institution. Freemasons under the Empire, brethren of the

|

(1) The president wanted to talk about Mr. Lavalette's escape, who had been able to flee, to his wife's devotion, at the moment the scaffold was being erected.

on the occasion of the inauguration of the king's bust. Hermes, Masonic archives, ? }, pages 46, 47, 48, 52.

(3) Letter from F.-. Beuraonville to G.-.-O.:. of France, 7th day of the 10th month of the of the V.'. L.*. 5817, 00 mt -© te 0 0 © + + om me" SRE men ni Sd tu.

a mm ee - ge = md

990 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Saint-Sacrement in the early years of the restoration, more late members of the Succession for the propagation of the faith, you will see them take refuge in the bosom of liberalism when disapproval The country will shake the bell that is to toll the death knell of the branch eldest of the Bourbons. They will parade after July in the ranks of the citizen militia, will distinguish themselves by the fervor of their patriotism borrowed ism, until the day they understand that the wind no longer blows from this direction; then they will register in the regi- members of the Society of Good Marriages, they will affiliate with the children of Loyola, because they're always where the power is. Those ones

They abandoned the lodges for the churches.

Freemasonry had been, during the Consulate and the Empire, a kind of novitiate for all careers; one could give to measure his talent, to train him, to refine him; one prepared oneself for it within the administration, in a circle where the workings are quite complicated quarries, where officials are numerous; to discipline, in a truly representative, constitutional order, where the rights are clearly defined, where the bases are hardly lacking to be repressed; to the struggles of the tribune, the public prosecutor, the bar, in a chair that imposes serious duties and makes of man who occupies it, the perpetual defender of the law, its constant organ, the controller of all proposals, of all measures; to handling of affairs, with wise, calm, cool discussions,

, enlightened, in the councils where, although a lodge is little named- everything inevitably takes on an importance as great as if it were a huge company, because everything has a real interest-

table.

Therefore, every individual can be to produce, none is stifled, and the relationships are too cons-

eo 0 en de ie 0 ONE ent AR
born
— Smeg mat -

om ee - Re ne eee

aunts, the opportunities are too numerous not to judge
a close examination of a man's character, of the spirit that guides him,

All the islands are followers, promising to help and rescue one another.
engages; it is therefore not surprising that, in its days of glory, of triumph, it was a nursery where the empire chose the

of his ability, of his knowledge. Furthermore, the same oath binds to |

topics he needed to fulfill public functions
The head of an administration always leads on his pa

ee me tee ne M. | Ga à ucsS.

S Uf1

DB FREEMASONRY. 391

a number of those under his command; some follow him
by conviction, others by trust, still others by calculation. From 1803 to 1815, almost all the directors of the various branches of the administration were initiated; many employees frequented the lodges. The reaction that marked the beginnings-
The restoration efforts forced the former to leave the workshops.
The subordinates had to do the same: their livelihood depended on it.
families.

The Freemasons who came to continue under the vault of the temple their worship of the Great Architect, their apostolate, are found-emerged from his shroud, and his propagators founded a fairly large number of lodges especially in the south of France; the Grand-Orient refused to recognize them, and flagged them as dangerous- his (1), the public prosecutor's office prosecuted them, and the correctional courts They closed them.

However, the bloody reaction had ceased; the allies were leaving. the soil of France; Masonic festivals inaugurated this sort of liberation of the homeland humiliated by the presence of the stranger, and who would finally breathe. We were emerging from a terrible dream, We awoke for a new struggle, for this long battle of liberalism, which was destined to end in Cherbourg. The officers of the armed thugs who had been hunted down and murdered in the departments southerners, insulted in Catholic pulpits, called brigands, imprisoned without cause, cowardly persecuted, deprived of their pay, steeped in disgust and affronts, began to res- to worsen upon seeing Freemasonry greet with its songs of alle- The departure of the occupying army is underway. To celebrate properly At such celebrations, it was necessary to review the misfortunes of country and the glory of our armies; it was to make the hearts of many old soldiers wanted to take part in the expression of shared joy.

Soon these officers came in greater numbers to bask in the memories of a time they missed; the Catholic clergy,

(1) Letter from Brother Beurnonville, first deputy grand master at the Grand Orient of France, from the 7th day of the 40th month of 5817, reproduced in the Extract from the plu trace from G.-.-4,... symbolism of the 16th day, page 6.

Re + Mrs. +

EL in the same ee - mme

2 gp æ: es me

Mrs. Ge = =

Re ne + en - 7 ee ee ue ne ©

a -2m ns = ne ee ne CN 7 OU Se ue MT to M 9 NS ue - mm ee me — - nn eee Dee Een R0 - Un Ne ne 6 De ee Que (Reese LL
t

re The sr does not weigh in + From rm es mm mm - ne third party RD <q mm mm ER GS

me ne ce EE

392 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

so bitter in his hatreds, inspired in them a deep and legitimate distance. The emperor's name was associated with the most infamous. epithets, this great military glory was dragged through the mud, One of the greatest geniuses of modern times was insulted by ignorant sacristy servants; these churches that he had reopened retained- wove savage cries against him, hyena-like howls fury. Those who condemn the executioners of Christians applaud- they spoke of the martyrdom of the hero to whom they owed everything. The soul of these old soldiers who had endured the harshest privations, suffered hunger, misery, shed their blood for the great and A sublime revolutionary idea, for the constantly threatened homeland. was especially upset to hear those who had taken shelter behind the altar, when the cannon thundered, clapping hands on the lapels of our armies, and to salute with a hosanna the sufferings of Russia.

The Masonic lodges offered refuge to their thoughts; they found themselves beneath the mysterious vaults, in the secrecy of the temp- those they had loved, those they had followed, their leaders, their comrades from the battlefields; they heard to proclaim once again the brotherhood of peoples in whose name they had fought; friendly hands clasped theirs, voices comforting thoughts descended to their hearts, and a philosophical religion... phique, elevated, purified, which inscribes nothing contrary to the reason, inaccessible to intelligence, the only one they knew, opened its arms to them again, and showed them the horizon, In the mists of the future, triumphant freedom. We see them found themselves on the temple columns, and they were going to help then- samment to the movement which was soon to manifest itself in the lodges and give new impetus to the public spirit.

At that time, the unity of leadership, achieved with so much difficulty, After so many struggles, it broke again. We saw under the empire Marshal Kellermann tried to establish a power alongside the G.*.-0.+, then renounce it, rally to it, by yielding, without any doubt, based on powerful observations; this attempt had been renewed in 1815; it was going to succeed. It was contested in the Senate Masonic leadership of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, the even which, before the revolution, had, through the splendor of its ceremonies- Nies, who had so many followers, that he had recognized in a positive way, reunited with Jui, and allowed free exerciseccr (4). This rite, combined with the G.-.-O.-., nevertheless had a supreme advice which, without absolutely directing him, hovered over him, no as an administrator, but as a regulator of ranks. The Grand mastery of this rite having been given to Brother Cambacérès, already director of French Freemasonry, the two associations had agreed (2). From the very beginning of the restoration-ration, the Scottish Supreme Council had taken particular actions;

"ee ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 353

A few years later, he completely separated and created... lodges. All attempts at reunion failed; from this
At that time, Freemasonry in France had two directions.
In vain did one of them try to impose a ban on the other.
In vain did she try to close the temples under her authority to followers who followed the banner of the rival power, tolerance has in the end, he won.

Breaking up the unity of leadership was a misfortune, especially since
Since the Grand Orient accepted all rites, the brothers could, at all by following its laws, embracing, according to their wishes and preferences, that of the two Scottish and French regimes which seemed to them the better suited to their purpose. There was no shortage of reasons for explain this division of governing power under the restoration;
We didn't realize that we should never ask the Senate sitting close to the government with independent airs, so much that the law will not have formally recognized Freemasonry, will not have given him a secure existence, that which depends-dra of the ministry's goodwill. Whether one is called Grand-Orient or Supreme Council, the question will always be the same (3).

If the establishment of two powers had only resulted in...
to stimulate commendable emulation, to instill greater regularity to the works, more rigidity in the execution of regulations, we might have regretted not walking completely together,

(1) This meeting took place on the 5th day of the 10th month 5804.

(2) It was in 5805 that Cambacérès, first deputy grand master of the Freemasonry
French stupidity, was appointed Grand Master of the Scottish Rite.

(5) We do not believe we need to elaborate further on this subject; the masons will understand perfectly, and any explanation is unnecessary for those who do not appear tiecouent not in order.

to have two leaders under the same flag; however, the order does not He hadn't suffered. Unfortunately, this kind of struggle which what was established, more artificial than real, was bound to have a different result.
As we have already explained, there is no possible schism in Freemasonry, but the rivalry in the impetus given to the various factions of the association always has an unfortunate side.
What is happening, in fact? A workshop is being set up in a city under the obedience of the Grand Orient; soon some unrecognized men tents of his march, or whose election has deceived expectations, or Driven by divergent ideas, they abandon it, reunite, form a nucleus, and, unable to obtain from this Great-Orient a constitution that the statutes do not allow to agree-der, address themselves to the Supreme Council which creates a new lodge.
Thus, men to whom Masonic law imposes the obligation to live in harmony, separated from the beginning by words,
and, through words alone, they regard each other as adversaries.
and are divided into two camps.

The thought must be the same, and no one has the right to alter it;
all must contribute to his triumph; however, his weakness
Human nature is such that individualism takes the place of the principle.
cipe, and that this one is forgotten in undignified quarrels. It is especially in times of political calm that such a spectacle is given to the Masonic world, because then the minds rest-senses; that danger may re-emerge, unity arises; some raise
Their banner, the others shine it, but the sterile struggle of the days
This rest, however, had the effect of distancing itself from certain spirits.
Seriously, they will soon tire of the absurd battles they have no
could not help but take part, who proclaim the Freemason-

useless nonsense, and one that is no longer found when the idea triumphs demand from writers, determined orators.

Public spirit was not dead in France, it was dormant, it was compressed; a generous voice had risen from the tribune of The chamber of deputies was stifled by cries of madmen.
but a single accent had sufficed; other voices joined the pre-
First, they had to be listened to; in vain did the majority try to
To stifle them, she resorted to proscription; the moment was came to reckon with France applauding the little phalanx

ee ee ee RE

tireless, who for fifteen years pursued the bad guys ministers and fought against their reactionary plans. Liberalism began his work.

A proud, intolerant, and passionate clergy declaimed against
The Freemasons; the lodges repopulated in hatred of the clergy,
And what particularly distinguishes Freemasonry during this during the restoration period, it was his constant struggle against the priests, against their fanaticism to which she always opposes lessons in tolerance, against their deceitful miracles upon which It illuminates the truth. This era is remarkable in this respect.
report; the church thundered against Rousseau, against Voltaire, one reprints Voltaire and Rousseau, and editions follow one after another;
Molière's play Tartuffe, which seems to have been written in 1990, is being reprinted.
Molière; she rises up against Volney, Volney is reprinted; to all His anathemas are met with public outcry through testimonies of sympathy for those it strikes. It condemns the frank-Freemasons in the fires of his hell, the Freemasons sing
hymns to the Great Architect of the worlds.

The first ones to enter the open workshops of nou-calves first paid a tribute of regrets to the past; they were natural, but this movement was so widespread that it imprinted on That era was a type of person whose influence has not yet faded to this day.
and we still hear our orators reminding us far too often a time that is no more and will not return. In each period of Human life, its labors, each era its glory, and the most
The great thing is to understand that we cannot go backwards and to accomplish bravely carried out his mission. After bidding farewell to the past Full of tears, serious men turn their gazes towards the future. This is how the Freemasons of the Restoration acted. To the Regrets were followed by the expression of hopes that the awakening of the nation was giving birth to; but these hopes had to be realized, the Freemasonry did not forget him; it resumed its work of undermining and mine with incredible fervor.

The situation was indeed serious: the electoral law was so restrictive was threatened by the chamber of peers, whose majority by the addition of sixty-one peers chosen from among the military and administrative notables of the empire, etc. in but mm me – ee ee CN AN eee de ee Pete

Go

which include names well-known in the annals Masonic; individual liberty was suspended; the press was hunted down, writers condemned, imprisoned; the party
The royalist waged a fierce battle against all liberties; he fought against the government itself, which was not moving fast enough
according to his wishes; the missions crisscrossed France; the teaching Public administration was left to the Jesuits.

The Masonic tribune enjoyed a small amount of immunities, thanks, it must be said, to its obscurity, to the lack of noise she was making outside. But what did the noise matter?
Lies! That is not what followers should be seeking; the propagating their ideas, that is their duty; improving the
The fate of men, that is their goal; the triumph of their doctrines Trines, that's their hope. Brilliance doesn't affect them much, provided they succeed

Freemasonry, however, had not been sufficient for long to this era of political unrest; power was too easily seized.
access; men who professed liberal principles
They knew what they were doing, they were able to choose themselves, leaving the others to vain ceremonies; but outside of it society was formed secret society of the Union, of which Mr. Rey, from Grenoble, was the organizer, Mr. Béranger (from the Drôme region), one of the propagators, Lafayette, one of the chiefs. It spread from Grenoble to Lyon, then to Paris where it affilia MM. Voyer d'Argenson, Dupont (de l'Eure), de Corcelles father, Tarayre, Demarçay, Labbey de Pompières, Chatelain, of Schonen, Girod (de l'Ain), Mérilhou, Odilon Barrot, Mauguin, Berville, Cousin. Hardly established in Paris, it contributed there powerfully to the establishment of a Masonic lodge, the Friends of the truth, whose members were chosen from among the young the most liberal people in schools and commerce, and who had, from the principle, a completely political direction (1). The Union proposes to knows the overthrow of the government by means of insurrections which were to erupt simultaneously in Grenoble, Lyon and

(4) Mr. Rey, from Grenoble, Historical note on the secret societies of the Restoration.
Mr. Flotard, Revolutionary Paris, article entitled A Night of Students under the Restorati
ration.

in summer een mn 0

ne 02 0 ae >" 0 oo Re 6e eee

OF FREEMASONRY. 997

another public society known as the Society of Friends of freedom of the press (1), which, supported by Mr. de Broglie, counted its ranks included prominent figures in literature, the arts, the deputy, took charge of preparing draft bills, and managed to have some of the provisions it had decided adopted. It lasted eighteen months, and was dissolved by a conviction pronounced against Colonel Simon-Lorrière and Mr. Gévaudan, at which they used to meet; the ministry had yielded to the declamations of the royalist party and the clergy (2). |

We talked about secret societies in Germany formed under the empire, and which had led against France such a large number of young men believing they were obtaining freedom. They sought to liberate their homeland and achieve political freedom. They were dissolved after the victory without having fulfilled expectations. Followers; a new society was created by the students of universities under the name of Burschenschaft (General Union), and only resulted in the murder of Kotzebue, an attempt against Mr. Ibell, president of the regency of the Duchy of Nassau, and finally to measures adopted by the Germanic diet against the students teachers, at the establishment of censorship against the press and a research commission composed of seven members tasked with investigating the origin and ramifications of this that the rulers called revolutionary plots and demagogic meetings.

It was after the dissolution of the Society of Friends of Liberty of the press, after a few failed attempts against the government, that carbonarism or the charcoal burners invaded in France. Writers who have sought the origin of carbon-scholars have been unable to assign it a fixed period; some do date back to the most ancient times, others attribute to it Saint Thiébaud, founder in the 10th century; his existence is noted during the reign of Francis I°, that is to say around 1530. What there is the truth in all of this, what emerges from the documents, is that the

(1) Created in November 1817.

(2) Mr. Rey, of Grenoble, Historical Notice. Mr. de Vaulabelle, History of the two Restorations, Volume IV, page 443.

Re ee Gent es <S –

898 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Freemasonry and the Carbonari were for a long time absolute-the same thing, masonry in the cities, coal mining in wooded areas, that they had the same goal, Ja con-primitive, pure of all the aberrations that have obscured and sometimes dishonored others. In one, the followers were called brothers, in the other they called themselves good cousins, and for a long time That was the only difference that existed between the two societies.

A few years after our great revolution, the coal-nothing was making rapid progress in Italy; in the kingdom of Naples Above all, it encompassed an immense number of individuals from all classes.

Democratic principles were highly professed.
Then there was that infamous farmer, this Caroline of Naples who had embraced and favoured the coal industry and Freemasonry.
that Masonic writers, deceived by this protection which concealed ambitious views, exalted and presented as a glories of the order, Caroline, who ruled with her lover, Minister Acton, who brought shame upon the king, established
juntas tasked with imprisoning and judging those who were involved of politics. The second of these juntas included three men whose names deserve to be pilloried by history
tory; they were the prince of Castel-Cicala, Guidobaldi and Vanni.
Then began the most horrible persecution; society was filled with spies; the words, the gestures, the most indifferent interpretations were made; confiscation, the scaffold, punishment-rent those who professed ideas of liberty; the queen did not did not fear to witness the tortures; this degraded majesty had nothing left to lose, not even the prestige that comes with it those who can grant mercy. The dignities, the riches of The victims were given to those who delivered them. Caroline wanted, she said, "to destroy the old prejudice that attached infamy to role of informer. » She did not destroy, in the kingdom of Naples,
than the prejudice of the greatness of kings.

Freemasons and Carbonari played a large part in this dreadful persecution. By taking possession of Plialia, the
The French fostered Freemasonry there; the two orders or

EU FREEMASONRY. 399

rather the two divisions of the same order lived in good understanding alliance. Having retreated to Sicily, the king and queen sought to renew relations with the Carbonari contributed to the creation of a a new division, the calderari (coppersmiths). Their return in their states signaled new proscriptions, new violence. We wanted to take advantage of the followers' efforts, but not to honor the commitments made to them. This treacherous
The court of Naples was finally to bear the punishment for its crimes; by a
the final betrayal, while the French armies were on the banks of the Danube, fighting against Austria and Russia, Caroline,

Italy was opened to the Russians and the English, and its ports were handed over to them. The victory at Austerlitz decided the fate of the Neapolitan monarchy. A French army occupied the kingdom of Naples. Caroline went to die in Constantinople, her lover in London.

Freemasonry ascended to the throne of Naples with Joseph Napoleon; a quarter of the population were initiated; priests, nobles, openly professing the principles of liberty; the Carbonari flocked to the Masonic lodges.

Murat soon succeeded Joseph; if France were to forget liberty in its glory, conquered Italy, even devoted, demanded institutions; the coal mine became the hearth where the Italian patriotism; Freemasonry remained the link that united the French. Rivalry ensued. Either Murat didn't understand not the need to yield to the wishes of the nation, whether it was held back by Napoleon's all-powerful will, he refused to Neapolitans a constitution, and began against the Carbonari a persecution for which he had to pay a heavy price. Is there any need to recount his deplorable end? He was cowardly betrayed by those who... owed their fortune, and fell under the bullets of twelve soldiers. Of all those who had given it so much splendor, the Freemason- Nothing saved anyone.

Once again ascending the throne of Naples, supported by the Holy Alliance, the fool Ferdinand no longer knew how to put limits to his vengeance; the scaffolds ran red with the blood of Patriots, Freemasons, Carbonari. But the members of

A+

= me me

er <q -

360 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

This latter association were not men to give in easily. ly. If the Italians are lively and impetuous, they are also in their plans of rare patience; they lie in wait for their prey with a They possess extraordinary tenacity; they know how to wait for the moment to strike.

Carbonari sales multiplied rapidly; the people,

kept in ignorance, kept in fanaticism, not
he no longer thought much of liberty, he was content to despise his king;
The sales filled with enlightened men, belonging to the commerce, the liberal professions, the nobility; soon they were going to act.

Another Ferdinand had been placed on the throne of Spain and had inaugurated his return with the same persecutions that had bloodied the kingdom of Naples. The same causes led the same effects; Freemasonry had sown seeds, they grew. Various associations suddenly appeared.
Pyrenees deep in Andalusia; the Carbonari, the Children of Padille, the Sons of the Widow had only one goal: freedom. They
They will also take action.

By a remarkable coincidence, the secret societies com-threatened to make their influence felt in France; the three kingdoms that were ruled by Bourbons aspired to at the same time to shake off the yoke. In France, these were not still the Carbonari, but the remnants of the Union which, dissolved at
In Paris, there were still Friends of Liberty living in the provinces.
of the press which, having been scattered for a moment, had resumed their conferences, members of a society known as the
The place where she met was the French Bazaar.

Some details about the third grade of the coal mine,
The grand-elected grandmaster will make the island's goal perfectly clear.
of this institution. The candidates, says the author to whom we borrowing this information (1), will never be admitted if they are not true friends of the freedom of peoples, and are ready to fight-to be against the tyrannical governments that are the masters
abhorred by ancient and beautiful Ausonia.

The vendita (sale) takes place in a dark, hidden cave.

(1) Constitution and organization of the Carbonari.

tte ER ne ne

ee – mt ee mp de ee

: ES RE ER RUES RS PERLES ER RE Ce Sr SE EP NE ES :
Re mn

OF FREEMASONRY. 861

unknown to men who are not Grand Masters of the Carbonari, already received, high-ranking officials. The room is triangular, truncated by all the points. The grand master, the grand elect, is in the east; in Facing him is the inner door which only ever opens to true chosen ones; she is guarded by two overseers wearing Swords twisted into flames. Three lights, shaped like Sun, moon, and star illuminate the vendita; the benches are covered in red cloth with yellow flames. The chosen one, in Dressed in his robe and the costume of the order, he strikes seven blows with a hatchet on the tree trunk, and said:

—Good cousin, first scout, what time is it?

The first scout: The alarm bell is ringing from all sides, it's the A sign of the awakening of free men; it is midnight.

The chosen one: Good cousin, second scout, what time? must open our secret works P

The second scout: At midnight, when the masses, led by our cronies, the good cousin directors, are gathered—Organized and armed, they march against tyranny and are ready to to make big moves.

The chosen one: All directors destined for the general movement Are the troops who are about to be deployed at their posts, well-lit, and well-armed?

The two scouts: Yes, they all left after repeating the oath to perish or to conquer,

The chosen one: Since everything is so well arranged... to me, my good cousins.

1° To the creator of Punivers!

2. To Christ, his envoy to earth to restore philosophy... Phile, liberty, equality!

3° To his apostles and preachers |

4° To Saint Thibaldo, founder of the Carbonari!

5° To Francis [*, as the protector of order and the extermination of our former oppressors |

6. To the eternal downfall of all tyrannies!

7. To the establishment of a wise and endless freedom upon ruin eternal enemies of the people!

— You have the floor, good cousin, our orator, star of our nighttime gatherings.

| 24

0 + ee re

em. me

562 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The star (speaker): "...The majority having chosen leaders, it granted them concessions of authority, gave them appanages, guards, the right to enforce the laws made by and for the people; but, freely elected, the holders of a temporary power soon tried to preserve it and to increase it. They used armed men placed under their orders to bind their benefactor people in chains. They dared to proclaim that their power came from heaven, and would be now hereditary and all-powerful. The force that should not to serve only the general defense of the territory was employed against the unarmed citizens. Their ungrateful leaders forced them to pay enormous contributions to support their splendor, their unjust wars, and to settle scores with their persecutors. They concentrated the right to make laws in a few devoted and mercenary hands, and, when the peoples wanted to assemble and destroy the tyranny, a handful of audacious bandits, calling themselves sacred, covered in a usurped inviolability, they called the rebels true sovereigns of the state, who can only be the totality of individuals making up the nation. The poor were despised, treated of a brigand, counted for nothing. The monarch's favorites reigned or tyrannized in its name, and the most dreadful despotism replaced primitive freedom in almost every corner of the globe and the equality that heaven had intended to establish for all men, and which now only exists after the death of individuals.

"...An iron scepter weighed upon the nations, and brigands cut-

The Romans triumphed alone and made a mockery of the people. Such is the dreadful fate of the rich and beautiful Ausonia. She obeyed many-nating to thirty so-called sovereigns who, locked in what they they call their domains, only tyrannize them with greater impu-the unfortunate peoples subjected to their harsh authority but staggering,

The respectable carbonara. Exiles from the world, liberty, equality they took refuge in the forests, they hid in the woods, and there they swore to overthrow all the oppressors of these beautiful lands. We all did, at the radiant sign of the Savior of the world, the sacred oath to restore his holy philosophy. The moment is era a — ee + me,

A — 2 RS Dame) vf

OF FREEMASONRY. 969

mm

Having arrived, the tocsin of general insurrection has sounded, the peoples Armed forces are on the march; at sunrise, the tyrants "They will have lived, and freedom will triumph."

When the speaker had finished speaking, the secretary, on the order The elected official read the instructions given to the directors of movement that was to take place to liberate Ausonia; then All those present renewed the oath, the formula of which is as follows:

"I, a free citizen of Ausonia, united under the same government and the same popular laws that I dedicate myself to establishing, Even if it costs me all my blood, I swear, in the presence of the Great-Master of the universe, to employ all the moments of my existence-tendencies to ensure the triumph of the principles of liberty, equality, and "Hatred of tyranny, which is the soul of all secret actions" and public figures of the respectable carbonara. I promise to spread the word. the love of equality in all souls upon which it will be It is possible to exert some influence. I promise, if it is It is possible to restore the regime of liberty without fighting, to to do it until death.

"I consent, if I become perjured, etc..."

After this oath was sworn by all the good cousins, it was given reading of the constitutional social pact prepared by the committee of legislation, which all members were called upon to discuss, and which, if successful, would have to be subject to the nation's sanction. This constitution has no fewer than fifty-eight articles; it It would be too long to list them all here; besides, it would be quite... superfluous, because if the doctrines of the Carbonara were to triumph one day, customs, ideas, and the needs of the people would bring it there significant changes.

Such was this carbonarism which played too important a role in the period we are dealing with so that, in writing history We were able to refrain from speaking about Freemasonry.

In Spain and Naples, the Carbonari triumphed, obtained constitutions, restrained royal power, and, while preserving before the monarchy, they imposed conditions of governance on him. Lies. A triumph of a day, a victory that would cost those who had won them. Soon, leaning on their bayonets Foreigners, the kings had regained the fullness of their power, a — ne — Es Sr mn St re — me mms er me —

—

me ge mn pet me mpmqen en ne qe EE UE

ee ee D US RS ee RS — que 0 ee Un ee ee en

904 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

and political scaffolds were erected on both peninsulas, | because the rest of Italy had followed the Neapolitan movement.

"I hold you at last, Freemason, son of the devil; die, die!"

"So!" cried the executioner who was strangling Riégo and who crouched—was pissing on his shoulders to break his vertebrae. Riégo had respected the king's days when he held him in his power, the king

He paid for it by hanging.

The plans hatched in France for the overthrow of the Bour—

The good ones did not succeed. So it was organized on a vast scale, and with great speed, the carbonarism which was to give also

The executioners had the opportunity to mow down the ranks of the friends of the freedom.

It had been brought back from Italy to France by Joubert and Dugied, fugitives after the incident of August 19, 1820, embraced immediately by Bazard (1), Buchez (2), Flotard, Cariol the Elder, Sigaud, Guinard, Corcelles fils, Sautetlet, Rouen aîné, then by Lafayette and his son, Dupont (of Eure), d'Argenson, Manuel, Beauséjour, Cor—the, Mérilhou (3). It is not within our scope to retrace his

A story that would take us away from our subject.

The persecutions carried out in Italy, in Piedmont, in Spain
The attacks against the Carbonari extended to the Freemasons and made them... almost disappeared from these regions; if a few continued
Their meetings must have been held in the utmost secrecy. The institution
It was likewise outlawed in Portugal, and a decree was signed by the king, Countersigned Thomas-Antonio de Villanova Portugal, dated March 90, 1818, orders that all convicted persons to attend the lodges, clubs, committees, those that would convene them others to be part of these lodges, clubs and committees, those which Those attending the reception of any member will be liable penalties established against those guilty of lèse-majesté. These were simply death carried out with cruelty and the confiscation of all property, notwithstanding the existence of children or parents.

(1) Later leader of the Saint-Simonicus.

(2) Author of the Parliamentary History of the Revolution.

(5) See the details given by M. Trélat in Paris révolutionnaire, article Char-bonneric.

OF FREEMASONRY. 515)

In France, we have seen Freemasonry regain some influence.

“activity; at the festivals for the liberation of the territory, which marked-

this marked the beginning of the new period she was about to enter.
To the running were added the funeral celebrations in honor of those who were no more. On the 10th day of the 2nd month 5819, the lodge of Artists from Paris celebrated a ceremony of this kind for the brothers it had lost since its creation; delegations from
The Grand Orient and most of the lodges in the capital were in attendance.
Within the temple stood a funerary column displaying on two marble tablets with the names of twenty-four brothers.

Among others, it contained those of Marshal Brune, of the general
Lassalle, de Desforges, playwright, of General Saint-

Georges, de Lion, deputy to the legislative body, of the rear admiral

Delmas, of Field Marshal Guillemet, aide-de-camp of Brunette (1).

Masonic activity was about to develop again; but, Faced with a suspicious power, it was important to choose one's field. Three main events mark this interesting period—the health of Freemasonry from 1482 to 1850: the development of charitable acts, high-level discussion philosophical, economic, or order-related questions, and Finally, a very strong encouragement was given to elementary education. comment.

Paris was witnessing the development of a project for a central welfare fund It was a matter of fact for the Freemasons, but it was not for the followers. only those whom the institution wanted to help; collections were organized to alleviate misfortune; sub-descriptions to help in the creation of begging depots; on during the winter they distributed soup in the Chi-square telet. In Strasbourg, the lodges gave wood to the poor; The one from Le Blanc (Indre) was competing with the charity office to a daily distribution of bread, wood and money to unfortunate of the city. In Reims, in Vannes, in Saint-Germain-en-

In Laye, Lyon, Marseille, and Bordeaux, efforts were made to rescue

(1) Hermès, Masonic Archives, vol. 1, pages 527 and 328.

366 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

those who suffered, and everywhere Freemasons were blessed—Nonsense. Metz, believing that work is better than alms, subscribed to provide work for the poor. In Luçon, one gave dramatic performances for them.

The fire at Salins stimulated emulation in all the workshops. It wasn't just France that was being concerned; they were organizing aid was being provided for the unfortunate people who had survived the Missolonghi disaster.

We don't want to make the institution more generous than it is is not actually so; however, it is fair to say that never a His great misfortune did not make his appeal in vain.

in the boxes, all animated by a commendable zeal: Lyon offered a prize for the best thesis on ways to make France flourish masonry, that is to say, to make it as useful as possible to humanity. Paris was opening conferences on the origin, the importance and the necessity of high ranks, a subject full of interest, so much of controversial times, the issue is effectively resolved in part of North America, but one that will be a hot topic in France for a long time, where it divides serious men, and on which we

We will explain, in the chapter relating to grades, in a way neat and precise. A workshop in the capital was holding a competition this important question: To what extent does the spirit of patriotism-Is m can be reconciled with love of humanity. In the

In the Netherlands, a discussion was opened on freedom of education. Freemasonry at that time was stirring up ideas, occupying the spirits, proved worthy of his past, and, while his enemies naively portrayed her as entirely surrendered to ridiculous practices, as if absorbed by vain ceremonies-

In this way, she acquired new rights to the respect of men who, not stopping at the surface of things, they study the character institutions that have some vitality in a country.

Paris awarded prizes for virtue, and F.*. Berville, whose his name became entangled in the political struggles of that time, was in charge of the report on the award winners. Saint-Quentin was following this for example, then, in order to encourage industry and the arts, instituted competitions for factory designs and for questions

=

ee ee ee ne

OF FREEMASONRY. 907

literary. Rouen had a course in morality taught in one of from his workshops. We see it, in this time of peace, the Masonic spirit-nique did not remain inactive.

We said that elementary education was handed over to Jesuits; this society enveloped France in a network whose The stitches tightened every day. A perfectly clear instruction. limited access was given to the children of the people by the brothers ignorant people whom the Jesuits dominated. The worthy sons of Loyola had rewritten and distorted the history of the revolution, and their books were given preference in colleges and educational institutions.

'The members of the deliberative assemblies who had settled the

France's destinies were portrayed as cannibals

'who, in the middle of a session, had roasted children and had sated with their quivering flesh; the emperor was a marquis of Bonaparte in the service of Louis XVIII (1). These infamous lies, – an act of audacity and unheard-of, incredible cynicism – were circulating among the children, they instilled false ideas in them, their teachers were quick to curse the principles for which their fathers had shed their blood. Or the men who thus deceived the youth were delirious, or they hoped, through censorship laws:

to silence all demands, to stifle complaints by gagging all mouths.

This example of what the Jesuits, masters of instruction, can do The public demonstration should remain as a memory and a lesson. Such an attempt was not seen without indignation, and men of the heart wanted to oppose truth to falsehood, to dispute with ignorant of the direction of the children of the people. The system of en-Mutual instruction had just taken place, the liberals of the time they encouraged him. It was from a Masonic lodge in Lyon that he emerged the first proposal for the formation of an instruction society elementary tion (2); but it was feared that, presented under the This idea, under the patronage of Freemasonry, was found to be too of obstacles, was difficult to achieve, and this fear will be found quite natural, because we remember how the institution was then

(1) History of France, by Father Loriguet.

(2) The Lodge of Perfect Silence, under the venerable office of Brother Arquilière, which in 1848 vice-president of this company.

nee

368 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

fiercely attacked by the clergy; if the authorities tolerated it, thanks Despite the efforts of the Grand Orient, he was far from protecting her; accepting her as a founder of schools, that would have been to recognize her, and her complacency did not extend that far. The idea that had emerged in a lodge was suggested to other people, received with enthusiasm

a subscription was opened, and the lists were covered quickly from a considerable number of signatures.

The school was opened; soon it was too small to hold everyone.

For the students who applied there, it opened a branch, then two.

Then three. The clergy became agitated, attacked the system, and declaimed in the chairs against the parents whose children attended these schools which, according to him, were hotbeds of impiety, and stirred up a thousand hassles for the directors. Public opinion prevailed, the Schools were maintained and grew. The example of Lyon was followed;

upon leaving a celebration of the order given by the Lyon lodge, which

As we have just spoken, a Viennese delegation (1) began to the work, opened a subscription, and a mutual school was founded in Vienna. The Paris workshops subscribed for the elementary schools commentators, distributed prizes of emulation and encouragement, crowned the students who distinguished themselves there; the same was true

in Valenciennes and in a large number of other cities.

Such were the actions of Freemasonry in France at that time, and this period of restoration, which had begun for her

Under such sad auspices, it was not to be without glory, nor without conquests. We searched all the writings of the time; she had Happier days, more splendid celebrations, but we don't

no one could deny that she had exercised her powers within the circle to which she was permitted to act, a real influence on the happiness of men.

Since the year 1787, under the inspiration of Marshal Macdonald, one of the three Grand Conservatives of the order, the Grand-

Orient was working to give Freemasonry a regular code.

It was no easy task to reconcile the decrees.

delivered at long intervals on issues for which he

there was no established case law to rule on customs that varied according to locality, whose origin was

(1) From the Cogcorde lodge, Orient of Vienna.

someone" " "

OF FREEMASONRY. 869

sometimes unknown. A commission appointed for this purpose put four years to coordinate his work (1); it was only in 1821 that the F.-. Vassal presented the commission's report. Heated debates ensued.

animated, says a historian of that time, succeeded the presensation of this work; educated and conscientious men took an active part in the deliberations. It was necessary to consult the lodges; the report was printed, sent to all the workshops which

Finally, the Masonic code was promulgated in 1826.

Marshal Beurnonville had died as first Grand Master deputy, that is to say, in reality, director of Freemasonry which had no grand master. The Grand Orient and many of Lodges celebrated funeral festivities in his honor. Nothing will better prove the truth of the picture we have drawn up earlier high on the situation in the country than the words spoken in this circumstance by the speakers who followed one another, on behalf of the various ranks, in front of the monument erected to the marshal:

"I could not appear before this grave, nor think of your pre-
"first exploits, without experiencing some insurmountable trouble-»ble, without being assailed by a thousand memories that retrace what xf at the moment they rushed to arms, without
"to remind me of that devotion, that enthusiasm, which burned
"their hearts, and transformed into giants men who, little
"Just moments before, they barely knew if they were men."
"The enemy was advancing; our strongholds had been surrendered to him; he deso-
"I was destroying our countryside; he threatened the capital and proudly proclaimed-
"Luckily, the plan for the most horrible revenges. What was needed?"
"What to do? We had conquered freedom, and we knew what fate awaited us."
"Waits for the people who become slaves again... We didn't throw
"Point: every Frenchman became a soldier. We rushed upon the enemy,"
"I will make him bite the dust, punish his pride, drive him out of "France, it was a matter of a few days, so easy is it to be
"Free, when one is truly worthy of freedom!"
"Brave Beurnonville, you were one of the generals who..."

(1) This commission was composed of Brothers Richomme, Gencux, Delaroche, Vassal, Pages, Borie, Caille and Benou.

em —.-

370 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

, 5 » y

They led then, and the laurels that you gathered with us
These are, without a doubt, the ones who will shine the longest.
on your head.

tion, history has already consecrated them; it has delivered them to posterity in all their splendor and grandeur; she said our work, our marches, our countless perils, our successes Incredible. Alas! She also spoke of our misfortunes!... Could we—to be exempt from it, when so many diverse enemies, when so many Were they preparing us for unimaginable acts of betrayal and cowardice? But she also spoke of our steadfastness. In vain, mercenary hands... narcissism and sacrilege seek to disfigure history, to destroy the truth; in vain hatred, jealousy, lies, blasphemy— Our glory is overshadowed by darkness and imposture. to tarnish it: this glory will not perish (1).

"Worthy general, let me speak to you once more of a glory"
So insulted. Cowardice and treachery have no place here;
We are safe in the shade of your laurels: let me
returning to the sweet moments of our early years; the wars—
Those who hear me would ask for nothing better than a warm-up.
to forge their souls in the sacred fire where their first courage was kindled.
Do you remember how we ran into battle; how, leaving our parents, our friends, all the pleasures of life, we parts amidst applause and blessings universal; how, young, inexperienced, without bread, badly clothed, drenched by continuous rain, deceived, harassed by Despite the deliberately spread terrors, we marched tirelessly on.
Joyful, full of hope and enthusiasm, we marched singing.
And we achieved victory?

"Do you remember how sincerely we wanted the good—
the happiness of France, with what good faith we believed in the honor Neur, to the sanctity of oaths, to the fatherland, to virtue? You

"Who can hear me, do you remember?"

"So these crosses, these cords that I see hanging from your

(4) Bézuchet, Précis historique de la Franc-Maçonnerie, vol. 1, pages 125, 126, 125

the following.

,
— and ee RE of 22nd me ne ma

rages; the mere gaze of our homeland was enough for us. We did not We wanted to conquer or die. Do you remember that refrain?
sacred things that preceded the battles:

To die for one's country,
Is this the most beautiful, the most enviable fate?

"Well, General, soldier of my country, tell us how much"
"Centuries have passed since that incredible time."

"Tell us what feelings, what desires succeeded the..."
"wills, to such noble sentiments. Tell us by what
"A terrible marvel, the pure love of country was able to give way to..."
"What we call the love of a master."

"France remains with us; may she be happy, may she be"
free; may the torch of philosophy dispel errors and Darkness! Only philosophy can civilize peoples.
to give them peace and happiness; his absence only brings Madness, upheaval, catastrophes. Without her, everything is men-Dreams and violence; the people are now nothing more than savages.
barbarians and, the most vile thing in the world, slaves.
"Farewell. We will not forget that you led our battalions to victory, and that you fought for freedom; we will not forget Nor will we forget that, besides the sword of the fatherland, you carried the sword of our order. This sword too must have its power and,
More than just a warrior's sword, it is a sword of service to the world. It is the sword of the word and of truth. You waged war against our oppressive kings.
sisters; the knights K.-.-H.. swore to do it to the most Cruel enemies of mankind are fanaticism and superstition. You
We fought with iron, we will fight with science and the philosophy. You had sworn it; this oath, we...
Let us renew on your ashes, because we all know that if the States perish through ambition, they also perish through ignorance and fanaticism, and that their firmest support is justice, That's science, that's truth (1).

(1) Speech delivered by a Kadosseh knight at the funeral feast he had the honor
From Marshal Beurnonville, on the 26th day of the 8th month 5821. Historical summary of F Blaçonnerie, by Bézuchet, vol. II, pages 561 to 568.

+ < Çn OR-E

ee ee me ee ee ne -m-i ee + get -e RE 2 no QT <

Freemasonry must have been cruelly wounded by insults directed at the defenders of the homeland to discredit them a tomb; she made no secret of her aversion to fanaticism and the superstition that the priests sought to revive in France, and we must give it this credit that at this moment when Her enemies were the strongest; she was not afraid, in the The sessions were almost public due to the number of men who attended. were admitted and the impact they had, in speeches intended to be reproduced by the press, to designate its She was doing this to her opponents and throw down a kind of challenge. nobly fulfilling a duty, even though it was not without some danger. While the clergy in France strongly opposed Freemasonry,

This was not the case in the United States, where priests did not they did not believe they were offending their God by uniting with the Freemasons in public ceremonies. We find proof of this in the funeral celebration held in New York in honor of Jefferson and d'Adams, former presidents of the Union and members of the order.

"At dawn, the national flag was raised at the Capi-sheet metal and mast of each building that was in the port. The closed shops and boutiques gave the city an appearance of sadness.

"At ten o'clock, the military society and the Masonic society," as well as the citizens, gathered in the park, and, before At eleven o'clock, the procession was moving in the order indicated. by the program. The military led the way; they came then the municipal body, the officers of the administrative body and the judicial body, the county sheriff, the mayor, the recorder, the members of the city council, the state officers, the chancellor, chief justice, supreme court judges and the orator who was to deliver Adams's funeral oration and of Jefferson. After them were the officiating pastor and the clergy; then came the members of the Masonic lodge of the Fraternity and members of several other lodges, with their distinctive insignia; a corps of musicians preceded them. The robes, the belts of these different orders, the rich attire of the officers of the royal ark, the clothes black, Spanish-style, of the Knights Templar, formed a

ee ee

DB FREEMASONRY. 979

an imposing sight further enhanced by the emblems various mourning attire in which each was dressed. The body of the Franks-

Others include Mr. Wilson, former director of South Carolina. then saw the members of the bar, those from the school of medicine, the Saint Andrew society with its decorations, the members of several corporations preceded by their ban- Finally, the crowd of citizens and foreigners.

"The procession marched in this order through the southeast part of the park" opposite the Capitol, and followed several streets to the house of the town, where he stopped to receive the veterans of the revolution tion, men justly honored with public esteem. They were received with distinction by the marshal who was leading The procession was placed in the middle of an honor guard. then resumed its march to the church, where the procession entered on two rows and went to take his place in the nave. The benches and The galleries on the upper floor were lined with ladies, citizens and military personnel.

"The organ then played sad and harmonious tunes." Soon the Reverend Father Ludlow began a fervent prayer and solemn, in which he invoked the continuation of the divine protection that had guided the citizens of the Union to through the perils of a revolution and the infancy of their government government, and which had given them the great men whose works had so effectively contributed to prosperity current of the country, and whose example had served so eminently of guide in the glorious career that the American people have traveled. He added to his invocation a prayer in which he implored divine power in favor of other nations, so that it may This also allowed them to enjoy the benefits of civil and religious freedom. The prayer was followed by sacred music.

"A suitably decorated platform had been erected in facing the pulpit. It is there that the speaker, having near him the The mayor, the sheriff, and the marshal delivered their eloquent eulogies. "of the life, character, and services of the two immortals" "patriots whose loss afflicts the republic. The author, Mr. Van- "To last" made a profound impression on the audience.

TE GE 5% 5

Emo mm oo << one

374 PHILOSOPHICAL STORY

"After a few religious ceremonies, the Reverend Father "Leonardo gave his blessing to the assembly, which soon..." They reformed into a procession and returned to the park. That was the only

"In Corps, the veterans of the revolution."

"During the march of the procession, shots were fired every minute."

"Gunshots rang out, and the bells could be heard as well as "The drums. The deepest reverence presided over this."

"solemnity, and, although the entire population took part, the

"The ceremony was not disturbed by any disorder (1)."

Freemasonry was then, as it still is today—

today, in the United States, where freedom of religion is not a vain word, the preferred religion. In Brazil, its leader was the empc—

President Pedro, who had to choose between the two crowns of Brazil, of Portugal, and kept the first. It shone in Peru; it cncovered India; she had entered Persia, thanks to the ambassador

Persian friar who, having been initiated as a Freemason in France, had attended, under the worse, at the Grand Orient festivals.

In Europe, English masons actively continued their propaganda and especially their charitable mission; the chamber

the lords, the house of commons included within their ranks

many insiders. In Spain, on the contrary, the power put an incredible rigor in his prosecutions against the Freemason—

nonsense, even after the initial reactions of the counter-revolution.

Thus, in 1825, in Granada, seven brothers formed a lodge were surprised, arrested, condemned to death with cruelty and execution eutes; the neophyte they received was sent to the presidios (2).

In 1898, in the same city, the Marquis of Cavrillana, rich

owner of Cordoba, and Captain Don Fernand — Alvarez de

Sotomayor, nephew of the late Count of Colomera, were condemned to death as suspected Freemasons, and for not having not denounced themselves (3). Thus, there was no longer even a need

Without sufficient evidence, mere suspicion was enough for judges to send someone to the c

| the men who were believed to be affiliated with the order.

(2) Historical summary of Freemasonry, vol. Y, page 207, note.

(

(4) Extract from the New York Journal of August 4, 1826.

(3) French letter of May 6, 1828.

OF FREEMASONRY. 379

1829; the members of a lodge composed of Italians and Frenchmen were arrested on the denunciation of a former Piedmontese officer named Erro. The venerable Galvez, a Neapolitan lieutenant colonel, was sentenced to death and executed; two brothers were also sentenced.

to the galleys for life, three others for two and three years; the rev—

had to have him escorted to the Sardinian border (1).

The hour of revolution was approaching; the final years of the
The restorations were marred by countless mistakes; the battles fought for liberty by Messrs. Peyronnet, de Corbières, de Villèle, had angered the nation; it breathed a sigh of relief under the ministry of MM. de Martignac, Hyde de Neuville, de Vatimesnil, but all hope vanished with the advent of the cabinet of August 8, 1829, where Mr. de Polignac, the companion of |
Georges Cadoudal, Mr. de la Bourdonnaye, the man of categories,
Mr. de Bourmont, whom history had already branded. At the first sign of trouble—
A wave of terror was followed by calm and resolve; France understood where it was being led, and sensed the struggle. Mr. de Rigny refused
Mr. de Chateaubriand withdrew from entering the ministry.

Similar events were taking place in Barcelona in November.

ee æ er –ee pnRee–mee–e eeene enge ene dpqente De nee 2

We do not want to recount the history of the last year of the reign of Charles X; it is also not part of our thinking to give Freemasonry a greater role than the one it has filled, but we must note that it did not fall below of its mission, that the issues addressed by its speakers were worthy of this solemn moment when a people will descend into the arena to fight his government, and that the speeches of Leaders, imbued with patriotism, contributed everywhere to putting the weapons in the hands of the brothers.

The ministry had barely been appointed when Lafayette began to across France, this famous journey which was to be a long triumph-phe and who would so well prepare the nation for resistance.
Lafayette had been the man of secret societies for ten years;
The Union and the coal company had counted him among their members;
He belonged to Freemasonry; no doubt he was able to reconnect with

(1) Masonic Bee of December 28, 1829.

RP RC PP PP D – ge EU non

870 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

broken sons of associations. As early as August 15th, he arrived at the Coast-
Saint-André; from there he went to Rives and Grenoble, a city entirely

Those who had been freed had been imprisoned. He was offered a crown of oak, and, in presenting it to him, the former mayor of Grenoble in 1791 told him: "Receive these oak branches as a token-
"A sign of the people's gratitude; may they be the emblem"
"of the strength we will put into supporting our rights and our institutions" » (utions. »

On August 19, Lafayette arrived in Vizille, at the castle where he had The famous assembly of 1788, which preceded the Constitution, was held. killing; from Vizille he went to Voiron, then to Bourgoin, to La Tour-du-Pin, in Vienna, and on September 5th he arrived in Lyon. Everywhere he was received with enthusiasm, escorted by the locals, complimented; Everywhere he was reminded of the part he had played in the liberation from the United States, he was made to understand what was expected of him; But nowhere was he received as he was in Lyon. Never a king, never The emperor had never made such an entrance; the population was transformed the entire city was located on the left bank of the Rhône, the city was pen- for a few hours, it was literally deserted. A delegation was sent to meet the citizen whom Lyon was about to receive and awaited him at Moulin-à-Vent; there, he was complimented by Mr. Prunelle (1); he got into an open car and drove through the middle of this A huge crowd greeted him with cheers. In the evening, summoned by the cries of "Long live Lafayette!" repeated a thousand times, he appeared on the balcony of the Hôtel du Nord and was greeted with the most enthusiastic applause. the following day, the committee of the elementary education society was presented, and the general went with him to the model school of mutual learning, thus encouraging through his visit a an institution that was the work of the liberal party in Lyon.

On the same day, this party, then highly organized and not letting- seizing every opportunity to demonstrate his strength, he gave to Lafayette, a celebration on the water. Two decked boats, decorated with flames of a thousand colors, surrounded by a great number of elegant- Your boats sailed up the Saône as far as Île-Barbe.

(1) Mayor of Lyon in 1850, then Member of Parliament.

2 -:

Re born nine,
ne Den 0 mr mme ae
QUES rpm NA EE EEE a crc PDC EDR none

OF FREEMASONRY, 977

The general was on one of them, in the middle of the elite of the ladies surrounded by their cheers, the soldier who had fought for the conquest of American independence; magnificent equipages, many cars followed along the left bank boats whose banners unfurled beneath the gusts a rather violent south wind that seemed to want to carry towards Paris, like a lesson or a warning, the echo of all these voices.

It was on the return from this walk that General Lafayette and his son Georges-Washington Lafayette came to take part in the work of Lyon Freemasonry, in a meeting imposing attire in the premises of the lodge "Les Enfants d'Hiram", at Flore pavilion, in Brotteaux; they were brought by a deputy sent to meet them. These were the workshops of the Perfect Silence (1) who had organised the party; there were representatives of the lodges of Sincere Friendship, Candor, Square and Compass, Union and Trust, the Children of Hiram, the North Star, The Asylum of the Wise, east of Lyon; the Perfect Union, east of Villefranche; the Franche Amitié, east of Saint-Étienne; Isis, the east of Paris; Fidelity, the east of Lille; Love, the east from Geneva. The three gavels were held by venerable men.

Upon their arrival, Lafayette and his son were received by masters ceremonies that led them to a waiting room where they decorated themselves with master's insignia and received jewels on their names were engraved on them; a moment later, they knocked-paid at the temple gate, gave the password, and were ushered in with all the honors due to such visitors. They were offered the presidency of the works, responding to the address that was given to him, and, brought to the East with his son, He occupied an armchair next to the venerable man.

By a happy coincidence, that day was the birthday of the general's birth, and it was Freemasonry that celebrated it in the last year of the restoration. The speaker took the

(1) LeF.—. Lafayette was elected honorary grand master for life of the Council of Kadosh (50th degree), based at the lodge of Perfect Silence. He accepted this title with gratitude session, and the council had his bust placed in the lieu of its sessions.

00": % ss)

ge éme —

in a brilliant and energetic speech, he retraced the principal-
main features of the past life of the man who was soon to be | called upon to play such a large role in a new revolution (1). |

Poetry was also meant to enhance this celebration; verses were read.
in honor of Lafayette (2). We then went into the hall of banquet; to the health that was raised to him and his son, the general

(1) The speaker was Brother Richan, Venerable Master of the Sincere Friendship. The impres
His speech was approved by the assembly.

(2) They were from a young member of Union and Confidence, Brother César Bertholon.

Here they are:

|

| Cover yourselves with festoons, vaults of this temple! |

| From his fellow citizens, love and example, |

The apostle of our rights, the prisoner of Olmutz

It brings sixty years of virtues into our walls.
This man, whose glory, after long storms,
Rises unscathed and survives shipwrecks, |
Its appearance makes two continents jealous, |
He welcomes us all under the name of brother.

To bend his generous head like ours,
For legality flees before virtue.
He comes, this close friend whom so much esteem follows; oi
He comes with his son, his son on whom, in advance, oi
Like him, we have based our hope on this foundation.
O brother! Your appearance makes all our hearts beat faster;

|

' 1

Below the sacred level, his preparations are in vain.

|
i

Learn all that a people is great and magnanimous,
Rushing in your footsteps with a sublime impulse,

Your name must one day be written by wisdom
At the temple of humanity;
For the price of your work, your happy village
It will find its immortality in our hearts.

|
|

Freedom lives within you, young warrior.

When his tree was still quite weak,

To support him, lend him your laurel.
Since then, through misfortunes, you grew up together;
France also unites you in all its best wishes.
And he said it again with us, on this day of fairness:

"Preserve us, god of our destinies,"

|
| |

"Since the laws are finally chained to our rights, |
"Lafayette and liberty."

|

With hers uniting your dawn,
{

in
| ER

OF FREEMASONRY. 979

responded with a toast to Lyon's Freemasonry, to friendship, to the freedom. Verses were sung, and all those present repeated—
They enthusiastically sang the refrain (1). Later, in Paris, the Freemasonry will throw parties for the triumphant Lafayette;
In Lyon, she was celebrating before the fight.

On September 7th, the liberal party of Lyon offered its two guests a banquet where five hundred guests were seated. No one was mistaken.
not on the situation, on the danger that the institutions were facing,
on the necessity of resistance. Next to Lafayette were
Mr. Couderc, Member of Parliament for the Rhône, Messrs. de Corcelles and de Schonen, Members of Parliament for the Seine, Mr. Chevrier de Corcelles, Member of Parliament for t

(1) These verses were by F.+ César Bertholon; the assembly ordered the printing from the preceding verses and from these couplets which we believe we should reproduce as a testament to the spirit of the lodges at that time.

Air: I've developed a taste for the republic.

It has appeared... rise up, young France;
The heavens should resound with your words,
Welcome into his presence, you who are rich in hope,
The pure remnant of a noble memory.
The tree that grows on your fertile banks, 7
In other times, he was the one who planted it;
Greetings, greetings to the man of two worlds,
To the father of liberty.

From the universe asleep beneath its chain,
Still quite young, he hastened his awakening.
And from Boston to the banks of the Seine,
The sun was lit from another era.
If, freed from foul darkness,
We grow up in its gentle light,
Let us give thanks to the man of two worlds,
To the father of liberty.

Do you agree on another shore

The tumultuous waves of an entire people,

Happy, powerful, free through his courage

To pursue the hero with a cry of love?

This sublime cry has traveled through the airwaves,

And on our shores it will be repeated:

Greetings, greetings to the man of two worlds,
To the father of liberty.

.
U

To eme + ee 000 © RE EP EP ER ER

+ tn "COR PR ee ee Re de ee

2 - tee meme mmmn- nee + + 0e © ee me en nn di an mme

ee me nr

ee RER RC + on

380 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

deputies from Saint-Étienne and Vienne; Freemasonry was still widely represented; after the mysteries of the temple The public demonstration was also coming for her.

Mr. Couderc proposed a toast to the general, and, in the reply of In this one, we find, among other things, these remarkable words:

"I am proud and happy that my time in this great and
"The patriotic city was for her yet another opportunity to
"to demonstrate his constant hatred of oppression, his love of the true freedom, his determination to resist all temptations traits of incorrigible counter-revolutionary thinking.
Unanimous and spontaneous applause interrupts the general for several minutes. [1 repeats:

"No more concessions!" the Islands newspapers recently said.
"Officials of this party; strange misunderstanding about the nature of the "Social powers! No more concessions!" he said in turn, and more
"The French people are quite right when they demand these institutions"
"So long awaited, which alone can guarantee enjoyment"
the knowledge of those at least of our imprescriptible rights that the » Charter recognized. |

"Without the jury trial procedure, all enlightened publicists,"
"All nations that know freedom of the press,"
agree that this freedom is not guaranteed.
"Without municipal and departmental administrations"
"Frankly and completely elective, the interests and the wishes"
"The public will always be upset, elementary education"
"will always face obstacles."

Lafayette then examined the electoral process, the double vote, the institution of the National Guard; he continued:

"We are being threatened with hostile projects! How would they carry them out?"
"On? Would it be through the Chamber of Deputies? In a moment"

"In the spotlight."

"Do they want to dissolve the chamber? The voters will..."

"deputies worthy of themselves, of the nation and of the occasion."

"Would they dare, through simple decrees, to corrupt the elections?"

"Exercise illegal power? But no doubt the supporters of "Such measures will remind us in time that the strength of everything"

3

5

y

OF FREEMASONRY. 981

"Government only exists in the arms and in the purse of"

"Each of the citizens who make up the nation. The French nation"

"She knows her rights, she will know how to defend them (1)!"

Prophetic words that were to come true a year later.

Lafayette left Lyon on the 8th; a newspaper from that city, which summarized—mastered the moving picture that his journey in the departments of Isère and Rhône, he said in conclusion:

"Strength combined with wisdom, these are the conditions under which

A people attains freedom; these are the freedoms we strive for. every day to obtain, and which will ultimately form the basis of our public morals. If we are not yet far enough ahead to know how to constitute our freedom, we are quite capable of

"less to want it, and that is enough for absolutism not"

"That is no longer possible. How far we will go one day, that is the question."

that the darkness of the future hides from us; what is certain—

"Damn, the thing is, the league of the congregation and of the stranger doesn't..."

"Won't make us back down (2)."

France, in fact, did not retreat and triumphed. Freemasonry consonance, through discussion of the most serious questions, continua to spread ideas, to enlighten the citizens who were making them part of it, to prepare them for the fight. The following fragments of a speech delivered in a Lyon lodge a few days before the The July ordinances will give an idea of the spirit that animated So, Freemasonry:

a They treat an enlightened people as one would treat brutes;
They refuse laws that have become essential; they remain
"Stationary when everything around them is in motion; they will be broken."
"In the shock, like the gears of fire engines which,
detached by the fall of some tenons, they find themselves alone » opposed to the general movement, and are broken by the gears-

CRC

» ges carried away by an irresistible engine... It is in vain that these "Men, dreaming of a broken power and a theocratic empire"

"Having fallen into disrepair, it is in vain, I say, that these men, interested-
"Resourceful on the ignorance of the people, they would like to prevent the

- (1) Precursor of Lyou, September 1850.
- (2) Ibid., id., September 1850,

nt – EE DE |

re een, Rent mOn cu + ne le

382 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"Lights to spread; they have undertaken a task above"
"of their strength. Reason repels them, the happiness of the world"
"calls their defeat. Education, and with it the spirit of liberty,
"They can no longer downshift, they can no longer even stop"
"They need to walk, to grow. It's a chariot."
"launched from the top of a fast-moving mountain and which will descend to the » foot; it is a river that has risen on its banks and that will roll
"Its waters flow all the way to the sea, passing over all the dikes"
"that is opposed to it (1)."

Such speeches were not isolated incidents, but the result of fixed ideas; the speakers vied with one another in zeal and energy.
Freemasonry included within its ranks, as we have said,
men whose names were honored in the bar, in the letters, in commerce; they were faithful to the teachings of gifts to the sons of Hiram, and the day the revolution broke out in Paris, In Rouen, in Lyon, the brothers knew which side the right and where their place was. In Paris, several were killed by arms in hand, and the temple on rue de Grenelle-Saint-Honoré

It was open to provide them with the necessary care and produced nearly six thousand francs. In Lyon, many Freemasons took their place among the insurgent citizens in defense of the freedom, and we saw an almost entire lodge under the weapons, his venerable one at the head.

On August 6, the three Trinosophist workshops celebrated in A common celebration for the triumph of liberty. Brother Dupin The young man presided, Brother Berville was at his speaker's bench; F.-. Dupin's speech was met with responses from all those present. Eri, long live liberty! Count Muraire invoked the spirits of the dead. Fighters who had paid for their victory with their lives. The F...

-Berville excited the assembly by painting the picture of the three great days, and a bountiful collection came to aid for widows and orphans.

The clergy was not in favor of the revolution; they took to

(1) Speech delivered in the Union and Trust Lodge by the Brother Orator Kauffinann, at the summer feast of Saint John, in July 1830.

(2) Masonic Bee, August 16, 1830.

E LB FREEMASONRY. 383

|
|

Freemasonry considered as a religious body of celebrants to celebrate with funeral festivities the heroes who died in defense of rights of the nation. Lyon set the example; the other Easts... followed. The celebration held in Lyon in the Union and Con- lodge fiancée, was one of the most imposing and remarkable; all The lodges of Lyon were represented; the ladies had been admitted; among the brothers, the prefect of the Rhône was distinguished,

'F.+ . Paulze d'Ivoy, the division commander, F.-. general

Bachelu, several senior officers and a large number of of- garrison officials.

The vast temple draped in black, a funerary column surmounting—
the edifice of an urn upon which the genius of France laid hands brambles; at the foot of this column, muskets, sabers, swords, pebbles, bundles of sticks on which floated tricoloured darts covered in crepes, everything carried to the soul a religious sadness. Four speakers addressed and impressed
The assembly was eagerly awaited; Brother Bertholon read verses which began... enough to bring tears to one's eyes; F.*. Kauffmann then took the
He then read a poem entitled: Glory, Mourning and Liberty.

After drawing a portrait of Charles X, he added:

A relic of the past, now coveted.

A medal that time has devalued,

Vicux, a pediment in ruins of some forgotten order.
The capital, which the years have loosened from its original form,

A ruin still standing in the middle of a beautiful temple,
There's Charles! The people, passing by, gaze at him.
Then he walks away and agrees to pay the taxes.
To bribe the watchman who is ensuring his rest.

However, he threatens a gathered crowd;
Against her he brandished his ridiculous sword,
And already his servants have written on our walls
The guilty decisions of obscure councilors.
The laws no longer exist; a senseless rage,
"To support the crime, chain the thought.
Between a magnificent people and an unjust king,
The old pact is broken; whim becomes law.
Charles, to defend us, they lent him the lightning bolt;
But with a word, with a breath, you can be reduced to dust!

me

684 Philosophical History

We fought for our freedom;
Would you cut down this young tree?
A storm is brewing. Can you hear the tempest?
A giant will be born, who, hovering above your head,
He will snatch you away, wretched one, with his iron hand,
| Then, opening this hand in the middle of the air, |

Your crowned head will shatter on the rock!
This giant is the people! They have sacred drofts;
You recognized them and you swore to them.
For you, as for him, perjury is a crime.
What! You're suing? Well then, overwhelm your victim;
Obey the voice of treacherous flatterers,
Today courtiers, tomorrow deserters;
| Weigh down the yoke on surprise France
The heavier the irons, the better a people can break them.
Reign, but hurry, time is running out!

|
| î
|
|
|
|
|

One bird leaves... the echo says: Our laws! Our freedoms!
At this all-powerful cry, gathered around a few brave souls,
A nation of heroes is born from a nation of slaves;
And suddenly, as if in a flash, we saw
Shake off their dust, and stir in the air,
Two wings numb from exile for thirty years,
Who, in this long rest, seem to have grown even taller;
And in the distance, one can hear the rooster of the ancient Gauls.
To recite with pride the beautiful songs of yesteryear.
A tricolour flag is seen being unfurled.

May a beautiful sun color with a nascent radiance,
A sign of victory in valiant times.
A scarf of hope in unhappy days,
A comforting rainbow in the middle of the storm.

Tears flowed from everyone's eyes when the poet, after having sketched the scenes of the fight, he added in a moved voice (1):

Then, on the angular boundary,
A mutilated soldier, a conscript from Marengo,
What had Waterloo forgotten in its harvest?
| Old man of our good old days, veteran of the Loire,
H seemed to be waiting for a day of glory before he died.
JL had rushed over to avenge an old insult,

(1» Masonic Bee, 1: November 1850.

ne ne ne Om ee ee eee ee | qe ER L | |

in

OF FREEMASONRY. 385

The star on the heart and the old eagle on the forehead;

He had, as in the days of grand funerals,
A blue greatcoat worn out after twenty battles;

Then he fell. There... struck near the heart.

His mouth, as it closed, murmured: The Emperor.
Old friend! Then we lived on the bloody slab,

In the middle of the crowd, a trembling woman,
Who, in order to find his son, interrogated the bodies,
Who washed the faces of the dead with her tears,

Dust was brushed away from their mutilated foreheads,

And he asked in vain of this great cemetery

His fifteen-year-old hero, so young to die!

Then he recounted the funeral held that evening in Paris, at the lucur torches, to the victims of the battle.
And the people sang over their half-open tombs:

Honor to their young dust!
To their cold tatters!
Their warlike zeal
To proud France
Makes days brighter.
These brave men sleep there! Respect to their graves!

They have won, but the traitors' cannon
It decimated the citizen soldiers.
And French people begging for masters
Death has been paraded among their ranks.
They fell for our holy cause,
But this death is worth immortality!

No, they are not dead, since their blood waters
The tree of our freedom!!

Such was this festival, which we have specifically mentioned because that it was the first; in many parts of the East, festivals seem-
The speeches were celebrated, and were no less grand, nor Less pomp. After the funeral chants came the songs.
of triumph; the Supreme Council and the Grand Orient united, don-
They held a party in Lafayette; it took place at the City Hall of Paris, under the presidency of the F.-. Duke of Choiscul, Peer of France, and of F.-. Count Alexandre de Laborde, member of the chamber deputies; F.-. Berville and F.+ Dupin the elder occupied the ee Re ne one à CO ne

Mrs. – Se

886 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY.

Speakers' bench. The wounded from July were presented there and ushered in with Masonic honors, beneath the steel vault,
All FF.-. stand and be at attention.

The president addressed them with the following words:

"My brothers,

"The feeling that your presence inspires, the enthusiasm"
"that it brings into being, attest to you that the Masonic world,
"like the secular world, celebrates the imperishable glory of "Worthy avengers of the fatherland and humanity. Your titles to "immortality will not only be inscribed on marble by
"The faithful chisel of history, they will remain engraved from age to age"
"in the hearts of the French and of all free men of the world" and the other hemisphere. Posterity, like your contemporaries-
"Rains will applaud those who, in the three great days of
"July, they brought the heroism of the action to its highest point through the subli-
"Mite of clemency."

"Already, in the Chamber of Peers, I paid my just tribute"

"Praising so many virtues, by presenting a report on the national awards that are due to you and that you award-

"will give the grateful homeland; that I consider myself fortunate in the new-

Distinguished, to honor you, to congratulate you! Receive
"Therefore, brave Freemasons, receive our unanimous homage with
"An expression of our admiration."

The president orders a triple shot to be fired in honor of the wounded Freemasons.
French and Scottish drum kit, amidst repeated cries of "Long live our wounded Ill.-. FF! Long live the defenders of the fatherland!"
"Long live the restorers of our freedom!"

The F. Lafayette was introduced a moment later, mallets fighters, and F. de Choiseul addressed him with a long speech; the general replied: .

"From my very first steps within these walls, my heart was "deeply moved by the sight of the brilliant meeting which I attended"
"seen surrounded, and especially in view of these noble colors, of this
"An indelible sign of the freedom that has given us back our strength."
How can I express my gratitude for the few compliments?

DB FREEMASONRY. 387

"deserved that you have just addressed to me through your mouth s T.-. He].-. venerable?

"Forgive the weakness of my expressions; after his,
"I can't say anything, add anything; my emotions are too intense."
"Praise, too, is a burden far too heavy for me."
"old years; you overwhelm me with them today with too little in-"Dulgence, and I want to take my revenge by offering you the homage of » my thanks with a triple cheer (1). > |

F. Berville then recounted the life of Lafayette; F.-.
Coudret read a piece of verse in which we notice the
following: .

Already, a promising precursor to the future,

A mighty murmur stirs the earth in the distance

And foretold the brilliance of his new destinies;

Every tyrant already totters on his throne.

Liberty is reborn, and her voice immortal
Heroes are born everywhere.

Oh Lisbon, oh Madrid, Berlin, Naples, Brussels,

So much blood shed, such beautiful lessons learned

May they not be lost to the future before your very eyes;

The French have finally defeated tyranny.

To triumph like them, to avenge the fatherland,
Like them, know how to win or die.

These tyrants and these gods, the object of so much homage,
Who, born like a torrent in the midst of storms,
"They were destined to be swept away one day by some storm,"
These slaves were armed to defend their chains.
These thrones, these altars erected by hatred,

And respected through fear.

All these titles, ultimately created by selfishness,

And these martyred heroes, so dear to despotism,

They will be annihilated by the breath of time.

While in the light of the torch of glory,

Centuries to come, traversing memory,
Your names will always be cherished.

(1) Masonic and patriotic celebration held in honor of General Lafayette, octavo pamphlet 40 pages; Paris, 1830. In a Masonic collection of the time, it was deemed necessary to include to the general a few words that were not spoken.

© — ©

388 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The celebration ended with a banquet where speeches were given and readings of other speeches and other verses; an initial collection had been made. One such ceremony was held for the wounded of July, and another for the Belgians. that the example of France had led them to take up arms. Six days later, the Grand Orient held a second celebration in La-Fayette; the FF.*. Mérilhou, Jay were the speakers; the F.-.. Bouilly was its poet.

= mo cyan em ©

re ... uses oo ee bé ic Hide
oo, eo té mé, me

•
LL
- : L
U < CR Payroll
+ ds 4 .
L SU 4" 4.
' , ,
I
-0% 73
READ
2 FR
U.
L1
'
1st.
, 0 ,
. " 1 The: .
Li) / /
{ #
•
? D
| CAEN:
CRE" 2% T TO Ti AE 2)
PA SL
h -
' 14 =
' + .
. is "L"
4.Æ
Po, LOT Û '
. . ne. AR 2
= ° = , :
THE "] L2
•
•
: *
•
RE D

me

| : ee

ee

OF FREEMASONRY. 389

CHAPTER TWELFTH.

Freemasonry from 1831 to 1848. – France: The ambitious. Project to grant the Grand Masters to the Duke of Orléans. Indifference of the July Monarchy towards the institution. This is The lodges held this idea that the Masonic principle had triumphed in the last revolution, Order is now useless. This doctrine is flawed because it ignores the progressive law of hu Mania and the true role of Freemasonry. Subscription for Poland. Agitation Politics within the lodges. Law on associations; resolution of the Grand Orient.

Intellectual works: Masonic press; newspapers, speeches, discussions; their elevated chara – Foundations for rewards, prizes, for acts of virtue, courage, and devotion. Fundraising for the flood victims of Lyon. Second reconstitution of the Knights Templar. A lodges. The Grand Orient promulgates new statutes. 1] establishes a central house in Paris relief for unfortunate masons. Traveling masons. – The Fourierists are beginning to Joining Freemasonry: Lively discussions that their presence raises. New debates. between the Grand Orient and the Supreme Council; they resound in the departments, Attempt of rapprochement; they fail. A state of stagnation ensues. – Creation in Lyon of a council of venerable elders; it is replaced by a central council. Important consequences c institution; it is fought, it succumbs. It is reconstituted; hopes that it gives rise to it. The Grand Orient takes offense; it believes it sees in it the germ of a He writes a circular on the subject; the council is dissolved. Results. Foundation of a so Patronage for poor children. – Act of tolerance between the two powers, – Congress Masonic: Congresses of Strasbourg, of Toulouse.

Freemasonry in Algeria: a kind of Arab Freemasonry. – In Switzerland; the Zurich affair. – In Belgium; struggle against the Jesuits. – In Holland. – In Prussia; questions concerning In England. – In Germany. – In Sweden. – In Denmark. – In Baden; erection of the statue from Erwin, to Steinbach; reorganization of Freemasonry in the duchy, – In the United Stat – In Haiti. – In Senegambia, – In Madagascar,

7 LPS GER ÊTES triumphant, songs fu–
6 fE ie <S darkness, acclamations, these

HE S sweet vanities of victory,
Little by little, everything ceased, and their
DAT NRA U 7 + last echoes faded away
2: ER N under the vaults of the almost deserted temples. The Heavens, saddened by the sight of the men they SE" pt had seen things moving around them; but, always Faithful to the law of love and devotion, they continue-

They were tempted to walk the path laid out for initiates.
The ambitious people of all regimes, seeing the franc-Freemasonry triumphed with the July Revolution, had reappeared on the columns, in the hope that the institution was going to regain what they call its former glory,

}

nn A LAON ré NC NC) Diatized bv QI UN

ee — _- TS

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

that is to say, the power to raise its members to dignities and to favours. The Brothers Dupin, Barthe, Mérilhou, Berville, the principal-
The poor orators of the lodges successively arrived at the business or to jobs, and the spectacle of the honored Masonic institution among its influential members brought back the skilled ones of whom we have spoken of in the previous chapter. They were only passing through; the principles
The temple's representatives were not those of power, or they were interpreted as such.
so as to cast doubt on their true meaning; the government-
he remained indifferent to Freemasonry; he did not did not object: any act of hostility would have been a fault, for the sanc-
The streets had mostly resounded with cries of satisfaction;
he didn't protect her, didn't patronize her like many others did.
had expressed the desire; he was waiting. The leaders of the order had wanted to bring the Duke of Orléans to the head of the institute-tion by accepting the grand mastership; negotiations open to This matter was long, difficult, and finally closed without having the expected result, namely that a secret thought would elide-gnat the power of any act that could have implied some kind of protectorate, or the desire to bring back the clergy who were showing themselves hostile did not allow him any demonstration in favor of the franc-masonry.

By a circumstance that would be truly strange if it was the effect of mere chance, of an aberration, but in which Perhaps we should see this as a clever calculation, a skillfully cast net.
Voices suddenly rose up in protest against vanity, and at the same time, in the lodges of Paris, in the departmental lodges, which were asking Freemasonry for a kind of voluntary abdication workshops this false idea that, the Masonic principles having achieved, through the July Revolution, the greatest triumph to which They should never have aspired, the institution's role was over. Speakers said: "What is the point of your ceremonies, your initiations, Your temples? What will you teach the novices? What they are every day called upon to perform publicly as citizens. The mystery is outdated; 1 liter is no longer needed. You love the God of tolerance, the maxims you attribute to him are written in the organic law of the State; its sanctuary is everywhere; close

ne + A © CRD RE CR RE eee <0

OF FREEMASONRY. 391

yours, and stop wasting your time pushing your followers to "A pointless struggle, since there is no longer any resistance."

What did these singular apostles of carelessness, these pre-these soldiers, who sang a pre-tense victory, mistaking shadow for reality, did not ask What if they were to fall asleep amidst the delights of Capua? Did they want to arrive very gently, without any jolts, to a kind of resignation of the order? Disappointed in their ambitious hopes, they persuaded themselves- Did they in good faith say that the institution, which had been powerless Raising them could do nothing for humanity. That is a mystery. that it is not possible to penetrate without delving into history to the role of biography, and which will probably remain unexplained.

That the opponents of a religion whose dogmas would offend Reason screams at him to return to the shadows, to repudiate his pontifical, to burn his altars and the images of his gods, because he humanity needs a cult better suited to its intellectual needs customs, morals, civilization-that's understandable. That one to speak to a philosophy confined within an immutable system: Leave your pulpits empty and without echo, you can teach nothing more. You are overwhelmed by the discoveries of the mind, you are beyond the reach of men. through science; to a political principle: You've grown old, you no longer have By force, society ceased to belong to you; you responded differently- once you've had an idea, you've animated at a previous time the form that provided tranquility to the population, safeguarded their interests loans, ensured their independence and gave them a nationality; Today, you've had your day, step aside, leave the stage. world to new forms in harmony with the character which developed among peoples, we still understand it, because that this may be true. But to speak in such a frank manner... To misunderstand masonry was to misunderstand its true role in the midst of constant progress of humanity, a role which consists of fighting persistent abuses persist in successive transformations

The error is not immediately obvious to everyone; presented with
In terms of wit, paradox can be seductive, and it is not enough for an idea to be False, in order for it to be rejected, we must also fight it.

that its scope be understood, the results glimpsed. If it *

oo << ©

3.2 Philosophical History

found orators to profess this deplorable maxim that Freemasonry was now useless, that there was no
For her, it was a middle ground between abdication and futility; others rose up.
rent in Paris and in the departments, who attacked this idea with energy they finally triumphed.

However, this victory was hard-fought; the struggle
It lasted several years with considerable vigor. The special press which we will soon have to talk about, had to enter seriously into the examination of this question; the Masonic Review of Lyon was Founded expressly to defend and maintain order; Brother Philippe Dupin, orator of the Supreme Council, whose opinions have-what-that value, later joined the discussion to reject the idea of those who want to disarm; and yet, today that Many dormant workshops have resumed their work, as have Many new lodges have opened, from time to time
We still hear men abusing the freedom of the public platform.
to surreptitiously undermine an institution to which he would not flinch that it was up to them to withdraw, if they truly believed it to be useless.

In politics, in religion, there are unfortunately mixed-race people whose conduct is nothing but a series of inconsistencies; they have
They have no beliefs, and we see them from time to time performing acts religious; they have no preference for any particular form governmental, and, on a given day, they act on their vote.
of their influence, in an interest they do not truly share-
Not lying. Such facts are deplorable, however they do not inspire than pity; but to throw oneself into the midst of Freemasonry, sc to mingle in its ceremonies, to seek its honors, to accept the cords, to adorn oneself with them with a certain vanity, to maintain cor-responses with one of the two major powers to obtain the
to receive the highest ranks, to undertake long journeys, then come to silently fight the order that welcomed you, which instructed you in all his thoughts, initiated you into all his hopes, revealed what is most mysterious about it, is to fulfill a dishonorable role.

If a Catholic priest were to ascend the pulpit that
The church gives him the opportunity to attack the religion he promised to
to serve, if he were to come and preach against the God of whom he is the apostle,

OF FREEMASONRY. 593

|
|

voices of the indifferent themselves would rise up precisely for the | condemn, to shout at him: Get down from that pulpit, this is not |
Not your place; get out, renegade! The sign of the honor- |
tété, of political probity, is fortunately quite strong among the | men to prevent those who betray from ever being honored.
Freemasonry surprises no one; it only receives |
Mature men who must understand what is expected of them;
before admitting them to the initiation, after having subjected them to the trials of the first grade, she warns them that they can they can still withdraw if what they heard does not hurt their feelings.
reason, their religious faith, their ideas on the progress of humanity

| nity. When she removed the blindfold that covered the eyes of neophyte, when she received him in her temples, admitted to the works of his rank, it does not impose on him the obligation to remain in her breast; A has the right to leave by declaring her will by writes, and he regularly moves away; he is allowed the ability to ren-
He can return whenever he wants; only honor and his oath prevent him.
a duty to reveal nothing of what he saw and heard. When,
With such freedom to act or abstain, one comes to fight in the stands the order to which one has bound oneself, to whose actions one

Participating voluntarily means failing to meet contractual obligations.
We ignore the voice of conscience crying out that honor is not not an empty word.

During these unfortunate struggles, these discussions which, putting |
The doubt surrounding the existence of Freemasonry diverted them from his goal by occupying him with things that should never have occurred to be fought within its own borders, Poland succumbed to the sword of the Bour-reals. The July Revolution had given him hope of resurrection, she had risen with the thought that she would be shaken-Driven by France, she was alone in the fight, and heroism was Powerless against material force. Some sympathetic and devoted as the Freemasons in general were to the ideas they espoused by the Poles, they could only protest in favor of a nationality destroyed with terrible ferocity and cruelty which was to be surpassed again a few years later. The Freemasonry organized subscriptions in France and in England to come to the aid of the unfortunate cities; in the 26

(eee Ce à ee en ee | ee ge
_——— OR Sd Sn
ee cm ue

ten nt ent Annee ee – – ee © © R0 Ce “au me té ne em une ne een RE A à en – ÉM OS R ea me – ee

ds –

gen ne Re ee de + te eee +

on 2 ei mi rm

Lie ie and radio

mn to – be — – – — e – a – + to Es + _ hd _– mme nm s– to – ds sé, Be L em 0 née Re ee +

294 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The brothers in both countries welcomed them everywhere with eagerness. They were offered a second homeland, a sanctuary where they could still to prepare for the liberation of their true homeland, to embark on heroes and fall as martyrs, until a more just Europe agrees to restore their nationality.

The unrest that the fall and

The abandonment of Poland resounded in the lodges; the discussions of parliament naturally found an echo there, and, if we recall—exclaimed the energy of the patriots at this moment close to the revolution
In July, we will realize the effect that it must have produced In the workshops, the arrival of the martyrs of freedom.

to form a secret political association which soon became very large, it brings together a greater number of followers than that active members of Freemasonry. This body full of vitality, energy, composed of a vast number of men young and dedicated, it expanded, prepared itself, and finally functioned with a incredible activity for as long as he believed he had a head. the day he realized he didn't have one, that he was obeying a word of an order whose origin was simulated, which he did not have on his side to imprint the direction and movement of the men he believed to follow and who had no idea of their power, he became disorganized nisa; only powerless debris remained.

The history of this association would be one of the most curious episodes from the times following the July Revolution; but,

although almost all young masons of that time did so part, although it exerted a fairly strong influence on the Freemasonry, she does not link herself closely enough to the latter order so that we can say more on this subject.

It is not necessary to recall which events served a pretext for the authorities to request and obtain rooms the law against associations; Freemasonry did not believe itself affected by its provisions; however, a voice was raised in the central committee of the Grand Orient and proposed to ask the government government authorization to meet, so as not to find themselves in opposition to the new code; the writer Bouilly, grand orator—the author, vehemently opposed this idea, and proposed in turn to ee cm cmt me + ne reg eee + ni tent ee —

— —...—,
;

om nee— one “me 20 RM

OF FREEMASONRY. 399

to pass the authorization and continue to meet; we went to the vote: Forty-two balls against seven repelled the first proposition and adopted that of F.—. Bouilly (1). A few days afterwards, the Grand Orient voted in the same way and dispatched a circular on this subject (2). Freemasonry was not

As we saw earlier, they questioned the usefulness of its existence. It were trying to restrict its action.

The period of the first twelve years following the revolution is not marked in the Masonic institution by important events; but, by a kind of compensation, the Intellectual work occupies an infinitely larger place there than in no other period since the beginning of the century. In all the eastern regions of France, Switzerland, Belgium, and England, the speakers engage in extremely serious work, and the The order's journals are full of highly remarkable speeches, research of the highest interest; we delve into the archives of the past. we trace the old initiations, we reconnect the chain of time.

In Paris, the Masonic Review succeeded the journals Hermès and Abeille. the Globe, one of the richest and best-written collections that we have; in Lyon the Masonic Review is founded which replaces that of Paris, which disappeared after a few years of existence, and which establishes contact with all of France; in Rouen, the Fra-Lernité, in Marseille the Compass, and soon after the Link of Peoples.

Abroad, Leipzig has Latomia; London, Boston, New York They have their journals; everywhere the thought of Freemasonry is emerging, and one can follow the work of the extended family on the various points on the globe.

11. There are men in Freemasonry who are afraid of all innovations; the old rules are such for them— They consider these things sacred and do not want to allow anyone to deviate from them; they are convinced that absolute silence is one of the first

- (1) Meeting of the central committee of the Grand Orient, on the 19th day of the 2nd month
- (2) Session of the Grand Orient, on the 28th day of the 2nd month (April 28) 1834.

ee 2e mo

396 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

—

conditions for the existence of order. Those who dispute its usefulness Masonic documents, because they fear seeing them displayed at The mysteries are brought to light, to see things revealed that have been kept from them said to keep them secret. In another era, these fears would have deal with Freemasonry, which gives false ideas about it;

The mystery is almost gone. The periodical press directed by educated writers, and especially by writers who know discerning what should be kept silent from what can be published without revealing what should remain in the shadows will, in the eyes of men who were strangers to the initiation and even in the eyes of the brothers themselves, these false ideas, often deliberately sown; the discourses conveyed by
She will serve as a guide in all the workshops to those who might to go astray, will establish the true principles, will make understand what
We must become attached to what we should reject from old practices.
We will not venture into an architectural drawing intended for the impression of what one could have done in a speech before to die between the columns; we will no longer allow these attacks unfraternal which have so often corrupted Freemasonry;
the quarrels that shook the lodges in the last century are no more possible with a press that would subject them to ridicule. Moreover,
The report of the festivities, the work, the outfits, must never
It can only be done with the consent of the officers; they are the judges of this.
that should be made public; therefore, the advantages that it offers remain alone, and the disadvantages disappear.
Completely.

At the same time as the press influenced minds, it also shed light on the followers on the grandeur of their mission, the acts of charity
The sessions were taking on a greater dimension in order of development.
lodges came to the aid of the flood victims of Lyon through subscriptions-abundant donations; they held parties to benefit the workers without work in this city, so often afflicted by unemployment, this terrible plain of industry; they distributed bread, meat, potatoes; they brought their offerings to the bonfires dies of Hamburg, as they had done for the colonists of Martinique devastated by an earthquake. They had consolations for the victims of all plagues.

name mm me mme to =

OF FREEMASONRY. 597

Freemasonry was not limited to alleviating suffering material things, she wanted to moralize men. The Grand Orient had established rewards for services rendered to the order, | for acts of virtue, philanthropy, devotion, for useful institutions outside the order; the departmental workshops
many had followed this example; in Lyon, they had created awards committees for good deeds around the world both secular and within the Masonic world. In Vitry-le-Français, he had A fire rescue service has been established in Marseille.
a house was founded for the education of young girls from the poor-

acts against the slander of the priests.

The Order of the Temple had just been reconstituted for the second times; many dormant lodges resumed their work; the The Grand Orient of France had promulgated new statutes more in harmony with the spirit of the times; the Belgian one imitated it soon; everywhere, finally, Freemasonry was deploying an activity remarkable in the interest of humanity and for the triumph of his philosophical and political ideas.

There is not a single phi- institution in the major cities
The human being who doesn't have his hornets, his scavengers. The Freemason- | ncrie, considered a charitable organization, could not to escape the common law; it owes aid to its members
that misfortune suddenly strikes, that misery seizes;
She owes them aid and protection, whatever nation they may appear to be.
hold, on whatever ground they are found, everywhere in short where |
They say, "I am suffering, I am in danger," that they express themselves through the through words or through mysterious gestures instructed by the initiator.

This duty is faithfully fulfilled, and one cannot fault
the order to rescue only the followers, because he never failed to bring his offering to all those suffering great misfortunes, his cooperation ration to useful institutions. The obligation one undertakes toto help the members of the extended family of the widow's children imposes a large reserve on the workshops in the receipts and strict adherence to the conditions determined for admission
sion; forgetting these leads to serious problems; a blind or vain proselytism makes initiation a matter of |

|

nues te re es + 2e

nu ue — STOP pee nee ms me és

m é né és com gen 2 + qu grignoter 0 Que A 2 26 let de ne mt med ee ea ie mer

a em
ee me —

The ds + rs © A a Sn ei en a camaraderie; the excessive number of lodges in large cities, their obligatory and often unproductive expenses lead them, for to obtain money, to be very lenient towards the laypeople are presented to them. As a result, one finds on the columns of men incapable of understanding the signs-philosophical aspects of Freemasonry and others related to it constantly under pressure.

There is a curious type to observe in Freemasonry, and that is the of the traveling beggar. He was received somehow, sometimes Even though he doesn't actually belong to the order, he found a a friend, an accomplice, or a simple soul who taught him a little about what you need to know to present yourself and claim help. He holds a diploma which is sometimes skillfully overwritten; he always has his pocket full of certificates issued or endorsed with Far too much complacency. It essentially resembles the Wandering Jew, in the sense that he rarely stops; he does not linger in the cities that just had enough time to collect the medals passing through the various lodges and the particular gifts of some brothers; then he continues on his way. Where is he going? Straight ahead. He has no specific goal. His diploma is from Paris, validated since He was going to Le Havre; he was going to embark there for London where he would be promised a job, when, as he was about to leave, he received the news that the job had been given; now go to Marseille where A brother told him that another brother might be able to recommend him. to ask for help in getting him a position. What kind? He I don't know. What can he do? Oh my God, whatever you want.

In reality, he is not going anywhere with the intention of stopping there; he is going exploit Masonic charity everywhere; he goes around the France, the cup in every sense, armed with his almanac which He tells him where he will find boxes. He sees on the large on the way to an inn; the sign bears characters whose crowd doesn't understand the meaning; our Champollion knows admirably To decipher the hieroglyphs, he enters without hesitation, makes signs, He shows his papers and finds the bread and wine of brotherhood. letter of recommendation wrested from complacency or fairness Blesse is a mine he will exploit for ten years. If he can manage to By pretending to be a political refugee, his harvest will be more

ne ee ee RAR

OF FREEMASONRY. 999

ce ee ee em

has

abundant; in this case, he no longer asks, he demands; he writes of thirty leagues to the mason editor of the local patriotic newspaper that he will arrive with his wife and children, and invites him to open immediately a political-Masonic subscription.

To put an end to the exploitation of these Roma people in favor of which sums are wasted every year in France considerable which could be so usefully employed in relieving-ger of real and honest miseries, the Grand Orient stopped, in 1840, the creation of a central relief house in Paris, and called for special subscriptions to cover the costs. This the house became a refuge for the unfortunate brothers, but did not prevent the relief of travelers who were forced by real needs to resorting to masonry.

In the Orient, where several workshops exist, the traveler serious person who needs help to reach their destination $fe finds himself in the sad necessity of going to the venerable and the tre-each lodge's attendant, to begin again at each visit the story of its position. In large cities where one does not encounter all-Those we are looking for are wasted countless hours, and sometimes, Before he could leave, he spent what he had received. To avoid to these two drawbacks, to spare the unfortunate the repetition-tion of painful confessions and leave them the ability to use the The aid they receive has led to the creation in some parts of the East of a central fund to which each workshop pays a specific sum miuee; the administrators are appointed in a meeting general; they alone distribute aid, and, if the abuse is not Completely destroyed, it is at least diminished. It is something to be desired. that this practice becomes more widespread; it will help to provide assistance promptly, without humiliating him, the real misfortune; he will prevent the waste of the poor's property.

The Saint-Simonians no longer existed; energetic, enthusiastic-yourselves, most of them convinced, the members of this association had given up the apostolate to return to society; some had gone to Egypt to oversee major public works projects, Others had thrown themselves into the arms of power, which asked nothing of them nothing better than turning their business around for their own benefit. Something Whatever judgment is passed on them, we must render them justice.

Se M ee ee on ee + mn nn ue 0 ee Re 0

OR ne + de - + e

cos ee em — +

em _— =

e D endows nn me me ri

2 om CE 0 May at ÈS

oo

400 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

PE

that they have powerfully stirred up your France for an honest purpose, that they stirred up ideas, led minds towards serious matters studies on social order, and finally that they sincerely wanted to improve the state of humanity. The time they took to discuss the conditions in which the workers moved were not not lost, far from it, and many men who, since their downfall, affected a superb disdain for them, did not live than their ideas, and borrowed their critique which was the the most brilliant part of their work. If this criticism were not not new, what rightfully belonged to them, was the incisive, bold form, the sharpness they gave it and which have not They haven't been replicated since. Perhaps their biggest mistake was believing themselves powerful enough to establish a new religion; they were only called upon to destroy and not to found; they did not understand it. They didn't succeed, they failed.

Fourier's school arose on their ruins, borrowed their ethical, while simultaneously disavowing them. It was around 1840 that the disciples of Fourier began to use the Masonic platform to preaching their doctrines, or at least that was the earliest time. to which we found their actions considered to be those of a bodies and not as isolated facts. It was first in the lodge of Children of Sully, in Brest, and later in that of the Clementine Amihé, from Paris, whom F.*. de Pompéry tried to found a phalansterian teaching under the name of economics course social. A very lively discussion arose in this last workshop when he proposed his course; the most vehement opposition was made by a distinguished professor of chemistry who feared seeing the franc-Freemasonry corrupted by the Fourierists; if the proposal found She had ardent opponents, but also fervent defenders; one of these, which one appears to have had the most influence on the vote, declared that he was not familiar with the new doctrines, but that he did not believe they should be rejected without having heard them to judge them (1). The course was accepted; a few days later, F.-. Pompey gave his first and last lesson in which he

(1) Minutes of the meeting. Globe, of 4840, page 168.

DB FREEMASONRY RIP. 401

dealt with ignorance and the need for education in order to...
to truire ensuile ses semblables.

He only spoke this once and then withdrew, using as a pretext that a lodge meeting only once a month, and wanting listening to speeches, undergoing initiations and affiliations, not can pay enough attention to the presentation of ideas that require require a certain amount of work and even prior preparation. rieuse (1). It was a bit late to realize it, and it must be believed that the The professor did not reveal the real reason for his retirement.

This attempt therefore failed; however, Fourier's disciples did not abandon their propaganda project by taking the using Freemasonry as their instrument; they gained admission into the lodges in Paris and the departments; they find listeners there, and seize every opportunity to expound their doctrines. In In some parts of the East, conferences have been established; they are deploying there a lot of activity, but the issues they deal with are rarc- new information, the text and title of the speech by F.*. de Pompéry were reproduced there, and it is doubtful that the Fourierist Islands obtained- They are very successful because, in the minds of those in the know, the realization of the principles of liberty, equality, fraternity, that Freemasonry continues relentlessly, would create an order a new social order that would fulfill humanity's wishes by establishing his happiness on a lasting basis.

The disciples of the societal school are too intelligent to They may not have understood it, but they see the ultimate goal differently. of humanity, they want to lead it by different paths to what they believe to be happiness; through a spirit of tolerance that one would ask other institutions in vain, with the aim of to gather all the elements that can contribute to the solution of the pro- Freemasonry lends them a platform for social problems, they use. The discussions that arise from the presentation and the The development of their ideas has this useful quality that they call attention to extremely serious and medi-worthy objects deep tations; they would render a real service even when that they would have no other result than to have the various judged

(1) Globe of 1844, page 15.

don't me ee + em - - - __-___. - St ee © = =

me me ne 0 cure

409 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Schools vying for control of society. Let's leave it to Those who have done so will triumph, those who have done the most for the happiness of humanity.

However, the eternal quarrel between the two powers reignited in 1841; it was always the same question, the claim to a exclusive direction, and as a result, in the departments, taking to the letter and rigorously following the orders of the Grand- In the East, many workshops flatly refused to accept the brothers who obeyed the Supreme Council; hence the rivalries, the Endless discussions, infighting in the lodges where these The strict measures were not approved by everyone; hatreds that... did not remain in the Masonic circle and found themselves in ordinary relationships. Two brothers whose literary merit and their personal qualities had given them some advantage, Bouilly and Viennet were tasked with preparing a concordat which put an end to this deplorable situation. They did it conscientiously- ly, animated by a genuine desire for reconciliation, but the spirit which is fueling the division intended to annihilate the forces of the inst- Tution should not give in any more this time than he had before. Previously; the concordat was met with responses, with counter-proposals, the whole series of diplomatic acts that make to thwart the good intentions that one seems to want to serve, and It was impossible to reach any conclusions. Freemasonry, everything the whole community was affected; amidst these perpetual disputes, its but is misunderstood, its action is now only partial, the discouragement engement seizes men who want serious actions, the en- Teaching is abandoned, indifference arises, and powerlessness... follows.

Freemasonry is criticized for lacking the unity it once possessed. cussuire to all institutions intended to live and prosper; However, despite this lack of homogeneity inherent in its constitution tution and which stems from the peaceful circumstances in which It is where it is today, nothing has been able to destroy it so far, and this This phenomenon deserves to be explained. The main principles of the order, as we have already made clear, cannot to be unknown, nor altered by those who have fully grasped the meaning of The initiation and the two grades of journeyman and master. They

mt

and no

er ee ne – mt me me me –ums
ee ee
+ ee cn =

OF FREEMASONRY. 403

They would try in vain; they would inevitably be brought back to the true path through public reason, which has its frankness in the workshops.

This impossibility of going astray with regard to principles constitutes the vitality of Freemasonry, and it is not under this report that the lack of unity is felt; here is how it consists of, and we do not want to mitigate its negative effects: Agreed on the goal, the speakers were left without direction precise, active, powerful, according to their own inspirations, must necessarily diverge on the means to be used to achieve to the application of principles. Each of them follows its own spirit, its heart, his temperament; that one wants to wait, to temporize, to... to improve future conditions, while relieving present pain; He wants to cure more quickly the ailments that afflict humanity. manity, and, without refusing its approval to measures which may to alleviate suffering, to lessen it, proposes more remedies energetic and quicker.

From this arise the divergences; from this it happens that the frank- A mason overhears words in a workshop that inflame him; present the current era as conducive to achieving improvements rations, make him understand the magnitude of his mission, and, in another, speeches that recount to him both the situation and his duties from a completely different perspective; it is not impossible that he receive advice or from the same day and in the same box less contrary impressions, so that, tossed between Faced with two opposing ideas, he no longer knows which one to choose. It's not not only in the intellectual sphere that this difference occurs; the lodges are sometimes called upon to give their opinion on a general measure put forward by one of them, invited to to give their opinion on a proposal from the Masonic senate, or to to execute a decree he issued. Discussions begin, ct. Although they are directed intelligently and carried out calmly, imbued with complete good faith, one can be assured in advance read in the same way everywhere.

The day Freemasonry obeys an impulse serious, which, without destroying freedom of examination, would coordinate it, em me me mm. me ae

Re nm — me me

em + + + —

404 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

If its use were subjected to wise rules, it would be a true power. The lodges of Lyon understood this well; they wanted, repeatedly, to give a uniform direction to the institution in their orient only, without deviating in any way from respect that they owe to the ruling senate. They were not thinking of themselves to replace the regular power, to become independent, to exercise—to take direct action on the departments; such claims that wasn't on their minds; they simply wanted to do to cease the inconveniences that we have just pointed out and which etio—Masonic life is slow.

The eastern part of Lyon has almost always been a factor for a long time. twelve active lodges; meetings are frequent; the name Newcomers sometimes attract a crowd that the temples can barely contain; the ladies come in great numbers to attend the Children's baptisms; soldiers still meet there some—a few rare priests and listen with them to the precepts of Jesus that nothing has altered; the celebrations there often have great splendor; of Beloved artists make their voices heard there, musicians first-rate additions to these solemnities add the charm of their instruments, poets and composers provide the first—In these of their works, the organ casts its melancholy notes, and many orators develop the highest questions there; Training uniforms and conferences are organized there; finally We don't limit ourselves to ceremonies, we speak to the soul, to the intellect—agency.

The speakers could agree; without hindering the pace in any way. of their talent, they could, being in charge of the direction concealment of spirits, setting a goal, charting a course, and so on at the time the institution was functioning with admirable regularity, would acquire great moral strength. While waiting for the moment favorable to realizing this idea, the Lyon lodges essayè—rent to create uniformity in intellectual and material direction Ericlle; the venerable elders formed a council in which struggles—

after this preliminary work, they were transferred to the lodges where
The problems were almost always solved in the same way.
The system was incomplete; it seemed to explain the domination of one

me

OF FREEMASONRY, 405

alone in each workshop; moreover, this was only a first step in a new direction. The idea arose of creating a true representative sensation, and a central council was founded where each lodge had three Representatives: the Worshipful Master, the Speaker, and another member. Without
The council, not interfering in any way in internal affairs, settled everything.
which had to do with the Orient in general; idle discussions ceased; the overly easy receptions, which so often leave... regrets became less frequent; Lyon Freemasonry naise had a real direction. Midsummer's Eve was approaching;
The council decided that it would be celebrated by all the workshops gathered together.
in the largest temple; the questions that were to be addressed there were arrested and put to a competition; the submissions poured in.
The council was able to choose. A few days later, eight hundred brothers of Lyon and neighboring eastern regions were united in the same sanctuary, around the same pulpit where generous voices were heard words, from which fell great and noble thoughts.

Moral strength had been won, but this result was too good to be true;
those who do not want Freemasonry to become a
The powers took incredible care to disunite it. The council of cent-
The tral could only exist through the agreement of all the lodges, one of them
He detached some of them, and the building crumbled. It left too large a void.
great; the scattered elements that had formed it came together, it was reconstituted and continued his intelligent work.

Until then, this institution had only been attacked in its her own breast; that was no longer enough to destroy her, she was attacked before the Grand Orient. Under what colors was it represented?
What ambitious views were attributed to him? What need to search for it? The Masonic senate believed it saw in it the germ of a a governing power willing to challenge his control of the workshops, He took offense at this, wrote a circular on the matter, and the central council succumbed a second time to the fears of The Grand Orient, and even more so under the attacks of secret enemies whose mission is to render Freemasonry powerless-
session. | |

But no good institution passes without leaving something behind.
after her; The existence of the central council of Lyon had to be marked by a foundation destined to outlast itself and as at ie, a Ra 6 à dan a ee

nt mi

ee eee + nn LR ee ee 2 - -.

406 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

whose high moral character will be confirmed by the future. The men who seekchment, amidst the political chaos in which we are immersed, the means of effecting a social transformation, of changing the living conditions of workers, had to do everything first, focus on improving the lot of children, the seed of the ge-future generations, the hope of the nation; they wanted the enemies of equality could not always oppose emancipation passion of the masses, their ignorance or morals; they have created the asylum rooms where the most tender childhood is taken away to the temptations of the street, an important institution whose first
The most immediate benefit, at least, is to allow poor people mothers to engage in fruitful work whose wages will help the family. They established mutual instruction schools where the children will receive an education that will sometimes be their only fortune, which will often allow them to show, to develop the aptitudes that nature has placed in them, which will reveal the first Glimmers of genius, will not allow it to be stifled. Another
The institution was lacking. Despite the significant improvement that can be observed in the fate of children, there are still parents who, afflicted with the most appalling misery, stupefied or enraged by
They have nothing but indifference towards their children; deprived-Seen from an educational standpoint, they don't feel the cost; brought to selfishness through suffering, they think and they say that evil-happy creatures they brought into the world will do as They allow the seeds of brilliant qualities to perish.
the first flashes of intelligence are extinguished; they constrain the ray of divinity to be stifled under an early labor, beyond-strength is at stake; happy are the children if they do not receive unfortunate examples, perverse lessons that will condemn to the prison, penal colonies, an activity that was carried out for the benefit of society!

Struck by these thoughts, animated by the generous desire to uproot some children with a sad future that seems to await them irre-
In short, Brother César Bertholon proposed to the central council
the creation of a patronage society for poor children of Lyon and its suburbs. Repairing the mistakes of their parents, the society would give children a protector, an enlightened guide.

compassionate, constantly watching over them, making up for the indifference, to ill will, to the inexperience of the father and mother. Patronage had to combine its benevolent action with that of the family in which the child still resided, of which one did not break the authority, which was helped or moderated according to the circumstances. These two actions were intended to complement each other. one by the other; if unfortunately the family was one where finds neither morality, nor good inclinations, nor generous instincts, the intervention of the boss or the bossess neutralized First, then change the direction first printed to Young minds so easily led. In this case, the introduction of an element of moralizing within a family had the double advantage of protecting the child from contagion and of rowing—to sometimes bring back to better feelings those who had gone astray. The magnitude of this goal could not be ignored; subject to central council, the proposal was examined, discussed and adopted there It was necessary to create resources to cover the costs; here The question arose as to whether subscriptions would be restricted. to Freemasonry, or if one were to look outside of it for a necessary support; the latter option was chosen. A plan was drawn up lists; the Freemasons acted as citizens outside lodges were formed; memberships were numerous; the society was founded. It operates wisely, regularly, doing some good without ostentation, measuring its adoptions against the funds it has in a sure thing, whatever the future may hold, that she will never be in the difficult position of having to abandon those that she received in her womb before having fully accomplished Their generous mission in their regard. Each year sees its resources increase and at the same time to extend its benefits proportionally, and today it has forty children watched over by their employers, to whose needs it provides, which it monitors in schools, whom she will later place in apprenticeships, and who will receive from her, when the time comes, either a small dowry, or the instruments work elements necessary for the exercise of the profession they will have embraced. She will thus have prepared good things for the homeland citizens, made up of hardworking and honest women, without the

to sequester them, without depriving them of the happiness of seeing and embracing their parents, without loosening the family ties that are so often broken deliberately in houses where misfortune is given shelter.

This is the institution founded under the auspices of the central council from Lyon, but which we owe to the activity, to the perseverance of F.... Bertholon was one of them. The institution lives on; the council has ceased to exist. to exist; will it rise again? That is likely, for it will always necessary. Will it have a longer existence? That is doubtful. because he will always find before him the same passions, the same elements of division, the same systematic adversaries not daring not, or rather, unable to destroy Freemasonry, but determined to render it powerless, and who will strive to— core of deceiving the Grand Orient about the goal that is being proposed to Lyon, seeking to create unity.

The division that had manifested itself in the lodges in 1841, during the unsuccessful attempt to bring the two powers closer together, these— gradually becomes clear, if not legally, then at least in practice; the lodges of The two obediences visited each other; the orders that defended him were For those who were unaware of these issues, public reason prevailed over intolerance. triumphed, the Supreme Council did not prevent the temples of its obedience to receive the masons from the other camp, and a circu— The Grand Orient finally raised its defenses which, for the sake of honor of the Senate, should never have been fulminated.

Since 1842, a movement has taken place in the lodges of France. a lie that cannot be ignored; everywhere the need has been understood unity is what all good minds strive for; in the midst of anarchy annoying as we reported, there have always been some men who strove to invigorate society Masonic, to strengthen its bonds, to give it this unity whose absence prevents any decisive action. They did it so far, it is true, with more courage than happiness; but The initiative belonged to them, and success did not depend on their will. In 1845, at a large assembly of Freemasons of France and Germany, held in Steinbach in honor of Erwin, and about whom we will speak later, it was decided that a The Masonic congress would take place every year, alternating in the various directions.

What were these assemblies?

Before 1789, when Freemasonry was divided into one a large number of rites or sects that vied for ephe-
Mother precedence, the Lyon followers convened in assembly
In general, the main lodges of France and Germany for the
to restore unity of doctrine and discussion. This assembly
It was called the Convent of the Gauls. Other meetings of this kind then took place in different cities and at various times under the titles of convents or congresses.

After 1850, the lodges of Paris and Lyon joined forces to strengthen the bonds of brotherhood that united their members and to spread Masonic ideas more successfully.
meetings they formed, which were banned by the Grand-Orient, because they were contrary to an article of the rules the elements of the rite, did not have the importance of the congresses, but they.
were all tending towards the same goal from afar.

It was in 1845, as we have said, that they began again
the Masonic congresses themselves, that is to say the assemblies delegations composed of representatives from lodges in different cities, having the special mission of destroying abuses that harm the progress of the institution and to seek the appropriate remedies
to bring it there. ' | :

A few days before the vote in Steinbach on the resumption of the congresses, La Rochelle had held one on July 50, 1845.
He had been provoked by the perfect Union of this city; all
The lodges of the province had responded to his call. This congress It lasted three days. In the first session, the president, after having congratulated the visitors, recalled the main circumstances of the organization of the assembly, then he explained its purpose-here, which was to deal with matters of Masonic interest and social issues. In the second meeting, regulations were discussed and adopted.
for the congress attire. The question of the poor was then addressed.
perishability and ways to remedy it were sought. Attention was given to Finally, improvements to be introduced into Freemasonry.
The result of this deliberation was sent to the Grand Orient under form of wishes.

The following August 51st took place in Steinbach, a city in the Grand Duchy 27

me

of Baden, a Masonic assembly that did not take the name of congress, but which held all the importance. It had been provoked by the lodge Les Frères réunis, of Strasbourg, with the aim of inau-to guer the statue of Erwin, author of the plan of the cathedral of this city and first known Grand Master of Freemasonry in France. It was hoped, quite rightly, that relations would improve.

fraternal, more powerful than in the past, would establish themselves in this celebration between French and German followers.

The Baden government, which had been asked for authorization-
the decision to hold this assembly, hastened to grant it.

The delegations from the lodges of Metz, Nancy, Mulhouse, Basel, Stuttgart, Mannheim and various other cities had found themselves at the meeting, in the temple of the Brothers who gathered, in the day and at the time indicated.

"It was," said Erwinia (1), "a truly touching spectacle that
"This gathering of men from different nations and faiths,
"most of whom were seeing each other for the first time, and who, upon-
"With confidence, they would come and hug each other affectionately"
"And greet each other with the gentle name of brother."

The departure took place on Sunday morning, August 31st, by the railway. The train stopped a league from Steinbach. The local authorities and delegates from the assembled Brothers, departed vigil to receive the delegations from the lodges of Frenckenthal, of Carlsruhe, etc., had come, preceded by harmonicallynieuse, at the head of the procession. The mayor addressed the president-tooth, then we headed towards Steinbach to the sound of instruments and detonations of boxes that young people placed in certain
The distances along the road caused them to set off as the procession approached.
Country dwellers flocked to the area to enjoy
the sight of this extraordinary meeting for them.

Upon the arrival of the procession, the Freemasons gathered in a the town hall room arranged like a Masonic temple, and opened the session according to the ritual.

It was decided, on the proposal of the president, that a congress

(4) Periodic collection published on the proposal of a member of the Eagle Lodge Frankfurt.

OF FREEMASONRY,

Masonic, to which all lodges would be summoned would alternately tick in each city whose lodges would have adhered to the decision; that the congress would aim for prosperity—the order, the establishment of brotherhood among all followers and active correspondence between all the workshops; finally that the first meeting of this kind would take place in Strasbourg the following year.

After the session, the procession formed again to go to... to consecrate the statue of Erwin. Headed by the Speaker of the House deputies from Baden and Consul Haefelin, High Bailiff of Bühl, he headed towards the hill where the statue of Erwin stands. A Upon his arrival, the crowd that covered the mountaintop opened up true to let it arrange itself in a circle around the monument. Several speakers delivered speeches relating to the circumstance and were warmly applauded. After the consecration of the statue, the procession returned to Stcinbach to attend a banquet fraternal gathering where more than one hundred and fifty guests were present gathered together. Praiseworthy toasts were offered amidst the rejoicing general, and a collection of 250 francs was made. which were handed over for the poor to the mayor of Steinbach. Thus ended this celebration.

On June 7, 1846, the Monthyon lodges of Saintes, L'Avenir, of Bressuire, the regenerated Egalile, of Saint-Jean-d'Angély, the Union perfect and the Arts united, from La Rochelle, met in the Temple of Perfect Harmony, Rochefort, in Masonic congress.

At the start of the session, the chairman congratulated the visitors, then he explained to them the purpose of the congress, which was to bring together in one the same bundle of scattered efforts from isolated workshops; for the strength of Freemasonry is in the association of its lodges, in the union of its members.

"Their action," he said, "is limited, for the most part, to a few isolated acts of charity, it would be true to say that, in order to to provide such relief, it would not be essential to be a bricklayer and to maintain establishments at great expense almost useless.

"But the influence of Freemasonry must no longer be trapped in such a narrow circle. All the questions that touch on humanity, regeneration and well-being masses are within his domain.

"When the foundations of its institution rest on the principles
Even in the purest form of morality, can Freemasonry remain foreign to the progressive and generous ideas that seek to Can it, without violating its laws, re-to maintain, without taking part in it, this general movement which tends incessantly to return to the largest and most Disinherited from society, this is the place she strives to conquer.
through his work and patience?

"No, probably not. But what can isolated efforts, of Useless wishes?

"The association, a great means that allows us to achieve everything," was the only one who could give our words and actions the influctuation which those who need it. The forces multiply a hundredfold by bringing together, and it is a grand and generous idea that has inspired our Brothers of the Perfect Union when they conceived and held the congress of the lodges of the West, etc. (1) »

The questions on the agenda were formulated as follows:

"4° What is the influence of Freemasonry on civilization?"
"station?"

"2. What is the influence of Freemasonry on the family?"
and on the relationships between men P »

"3. What is the quickest and most effective way to
To come to the aid of a regular bricklayer or his family? Special-
How could this means result from the formation of capital?
"Social through an annual contribution?"

The first speaker proclaims Freemasonry the school per-
The sanctuary of universal morality, the sanctuary from which thought Persecuted and triumphant, she enlightened the world.

His argument was based on Masonic principles.
He expresses the thought that civilization consists in development simultaneous development of society and the individual, then in the conservation and teaching of universal morality, heritage secret and ancient societies. He elaborates eruditely.

(1) Masonic review, €10 per year, page 165.

DR. FREEMASONRY. 413

and clarity both proposals, and he concludes by noting the indirect influence of Freemasonry on the French Revolution of 1789. "It's a grievance," he adds, "articulated, it's true, against your order, but true Freemasons should be proud of it.

The second speaker outlines the history of mysterious societies, from which he derives the civilization that has en- fantasized so many wonders in industry, science, and the arts. As well as the first speaker, he presents to the Freemasons, as The association, the only means of success in all their projects, friendship, harmony.

Another speaker, after taking a detour into history- The leader of the order concluded his speech with these words full of meaning. meaningful and relevant:

"Civilization, nurtured by peace and supported by ma- stupidity will see peoples fall under its laws every day who, by their origin and customs, had long been deaf to the voice of reason and truth; the time will no longer be good- early on, armies, passive instruments of sovereigns, were launched on the territory of a neighbor, a rival, in order to exert a passing domination, or against a generous people, for to rivet the chains of tyranny to his feet.

"The only way to work successfully towards the achievement of The wishes we express, let us all repeat, are, my brothers... to act together, to unite as one, and to to show the Masonic senate that our support is guaranteed. if he persists in the progressive voice he has entered.

"So let us get to work, my Brothers! Let the congresses become for we the consecration of our joint work; that the franc- Freemasonry, whose principles are based on progressive laws of humanity, and not on an absolute principle, may it be reborn great and Strong! To work, my brothers! Working men have the right to unite: Union is the first need of intelligence and of heart. » | | |

In the second session, a brother, addressing the second question- tion, seeks to demonstrate that the most complete philosophy sc finds itself entirely within Freemasonry. As means effective ways of spreading the truth, he points out to the press, the paths of iron, Masonic congresses. "To perfect our education Masonic, he said, to reform our morals, to inspire men love of divinity, of virtue, horror of vice, attachment for his fellow men, submission to the laws of his country; to offer our aid to the weak and oppressed against the powerful oppressors Sister, such are the tendencies of our peaceful gatherings, of our fraternal work.

The third question, concerning Masonic assistance, was then addressed by a follower who condemns begging in terms energetic. He spoke of establishing relief funds and loans in each lodge, or rather in each orient.

In the last session, it was decided that at the next meeting of the congress, all visitors would gather in the same hotel, in order to begin a more friendly relationship between them.

The congress, which had been suspended at the Steinbach festival, opened in Strasbourg. August 18, 1846; it lasted three days. Many lodges in France and from Germany took part by sending delegations or memberships.

The following questions were addressed:

"1. What is the purpose of Freemasonry, with regard to the liberal-social structures and the progress of civilization?

"2. What improvements can masonry attempt to make?"
to produce in favor of the working class, observing that these improvements should focus on a specialty whose establishments-charitable foundations established by the secular world have not Not busy yet?

"3. How to inspire lukewarm or indifferent Freemasons more of fervor for our institution P »

"4. What effective means would be employed to provide to needy masons, especially those who, while traveling, find themselves veat in the midst of scarcity, aid which, if properly employed, Wouldn't they have the degrading character of almsgiving?

"3. Should Freemasonry make proselytes?"

These were the questions that the congress had to address, and of their solution could result in significant advantages for the the whole society, if the workshops, emerging from their slumber to practice what would be stopped. Our order has this misfortune that sou-

In the wind, very serious questions are being raised, and people are becoming passionately
A third party is for or against; a conclusion is reached, a vote is taken; the order is ex-taken would have a beneficial influence, unfortunately we do not execute-cute not what was decided, and progress is achieved with a Desperately slow.

The discussion opened with the first question: "What is the
"What is the purpose of Freemasonry?" The first speaker, applying to Freemasonry, always so lucid, so easy to understand, the for-somewhat obscure mules of German school philosophy, did not enter into an examination of practical means, and remained in the wave of abstractions.

Other speakers addressed the same topic, treating it with Much elevation of thought and style clearly indicated-
They explained the purpose of Freemasonry, saying what was appropriate to to do to achieve it. The discussion of this question was therefore full of interest and useful lessons.

The second question concerns improvements to be attempted in favor of
of the working class, was thoroughly dealt with; we arrived at the means practical instead of remaining in the vagueness of generalities, of which the Freemasonry too often comes at a price. Opposing opinions were issued: a speaker claimed that the Masonic institution could not, as such, concern itself with the position of the class worker; 1] relied on the good to be done to the latter through the action per-bell of the brothers. "Freemasonry," he said, "can, through this action,
"to ensure that the specific institutions emanating from it, that is to say the different cults, the centers of learning and political powers are interested in the situation of the classes female workers, let them take care of providing them with food intellectual and material development, both by cultivating their minds and by...
"guaranteeing them a decent wage, which they pull from them
"ignorance and vice, and seek to instill in them notions"
"of virtue and justice, the love of work and feelings"
"Humanity for their fellow human beings."

"The isolated mason, either as a member of a community"
"religious, either as a follower of a scicuce or as
"As a citizen, you are bound by duty to contribute to the improvement and

- "to the improvement of charitable institutions; because the

"A Freemason must dedicate himself entirely to the service of humanity."

"But, in my opinion, it is the order itself that would need it."

of a charitable institution of his own; it would be an institute of inasonical education where Freemasonry in general and a kind of complete initiation of the disciples into religious life, scientific and political aspects would form the subject of teaching professed in a Masonic manner by our Freemasons

"more capable for the use of our sons and young men than we

"Let's admit it."

"What immense benefit this would be for all humanity, and by

"Consequently, for the working classes as well, such an inst-

» Tuition | »

After this speech, of which we are only giving a part, the ora-

The author proposed creating Masonic high schools. The discussion was lengthy, and, in the vote, the request was rejected by this consideration.

tion that the lodges were themselves humanitarian schools in which every F.-. can come to learn and refresh his convictions; that, as for youth, the sons of masons could to be admitted from the earliest age of reason to participate in our mys-

In the past, the need for special schools was not as great as it had been for the past.

The author of the proposal must have thought so.

This vote did not end the discussion; it was resumed.

by another speaker who, in a brilliant speech, passed review of institutions created by the lay world to improve the material and moral position of the working class, institutions which alleviate misery, but are far from destroying it. He made comto recognize the need to unite and work together for the goodman's happiness, a happiness which Freemasonry cannot provide.

would never remain a stranger. He concluded by saying that, for

To achieve the planned improvements, it was necessary to:

1° To improve the education of the working class;

2. To give good direction to young people who have finished their learning and their instruction at school;

3. Find a way to secure the future of industrially disabled people.

"[1] it seems to us," he said, "that the solution to our problem

"rests on these three bases, and the immediate application of these

"rules would have, for the happiness of the working class, consequences" mathematical sequences that cannot be called into question.

"One of the main causes of the misery of the working class,"

It is ignorance. The Lodge of the United Brethren has already sought to to remedy this problem by establishing evening adult education programs, which You've been able to see the beautiful fruits... These encouraging results should encourage us to persevere in our work, to the utmost—to express our full concern for making him produce all the benefits it may offer, so that our sisters may... based on our experience, may in turn equip their

Must the laughing woman remain in a state of eternal stupor?
must she never be emancipated by intellectual regeneration?
Tuelle? No, it is not so, nature opposes it;
Man, created in the image of God, must not be reduced to the
the condition of the brute.

The speaker then developed his three proposals in turn, and he concluded by presenting a comprehensive plan to establish by the Freemasonry, a large number of schools which, directed by means of from the many branches of our institution, would come to arrive at a common center; he indicated the means of providing at the expense of this creation, and proved with figures that a A small contribution from each mason would be more than enough to do faced with the expenses. He calculated the resources of Alsace alone, and establishes very clearly that it would be easy to give this institution a very large extension.

The third question did not arise for the first times; it has been debated for half a century, and especially since The Restoration, repeatedly, without ever being resolved in a satisfactory manner. The causes of lukewarmness, of indifference—We have explained them in the course of this work; They are always the same and will withstand efforts for a long time that will be done to destroy them.

An excellent speech was delivered on this subject by the prime minister. the speaker who approached him; he attributed the indifference that seizes so—wind of the spirit of the masons to curiosity and satisfied vanity made, to the selfishness of individuals, to the lack of timeliness of the work

Masonic, and especially the lack of evidence of immediate results diats. He proposed remedies to remedy the problem, which should to be capable of curing him, and yet will never cure him. His peroration, in particular, was remarkable:

"Right now the earth is rumbling, muffled cries can be heard-
 "addresses various points. Sometimes it is the proletarian who, unable to-
 "Before living off excessive work, hurls curses at the rich"
 "selfish man who wants to take away yet another piece of bread that doesn't » is no longer enough to feed him; sometimes it is the worker who asks for "work and that indifference lets fall, expiring at the foot of the » boundary marker. Here is an unfortunate family whose head has just
 "To die a victim of a harmful profession, where he suffered, in the eyes of "All of them, poisoning lasting several years. There, my brothers,
 "Isn't there anything to be done? Isn't the harm obvious enough?" And of-
 "Are we going to remain inactive, contenting ourselves with recording..."
 "Disasters that can be remedied? Our pre-
 "Is not our first duty to find the remedy for the current ills?"
 "The quickest and safest?"

The speaker concluded by proposing that social issues should be...

items placed on the agenda of Masonic work, which one attempted the most rational applications to which a study further investigation would have led to.

On the fourth question, it was proposed to establish a fund general and mutual aid society whose aim would be to come to aid to two kinds of misfortune: to widows and to the children of Masons who died without fortune, to the poor and needy of the order.

One speaker pointed out, as an abuse that overloaded the order Masonic requests for assistance, the ease of admissions; He proposed establishing stations along a specific route for a trip to innkeepers where, upon presentation of a card, These travelers would be fed and housed, and would even provided with the small sum necessary for the continuation of their travel. | |

A very serious question, and one that was not included in the The program, was incidentally raised in the discussion, and gave rise to fascinating debates. The Prussian lodges, forgetting the principles of Freemasonry which proclaims all men, equal before God and before society, had inter-said the Masonic temple to the men of the Israelite communion in the various locations where they are situated. We do not have to investigate whether specific facts had led to this decision Absolutely contrary to Masonic doctrines. That the manner including German Jews who practice certain professions attracted the animosity of the peasants, this is an undeniable fact.

OF FREEMASONRY, 419

ble, the truth of which recent events have only too clearly proven;
but that this hatred should rebound on all members of a Religion is what is impossible to accept. In all the
In this case, Freemasonry, a school of tolerance and charity, cannot to embrace these hatreds, nor to serve them; 'she can even less seek in the worship of motives to keep certain men away from the sanctuary dedicated to the Great Architect of the universe, before whom the indi-
People of all races and colors, the powerful, the wealthy
. bleak, the rich, the poor, the cities, the hamlets, the palaces and
The cottages, everything is equal to everything else.

The Prussian lodges had therefore failed in their duties that the order imposed upon them, disregarding the feelings of a brotherhood which The precepts are preached from our pulpits, the laws of the ins-
institution, and when a voice was raised in protest in the congress From Strasbourg, she found echoes (1). The speaker had the right to say it: "Masonic love is not confined to a
"temple; it does not only spread its fires on privileged beings-
"Legii who drew it from the hearth of our sanctuaries, it overflows
"From their hearts and bursts forth upon the masses. He has no predilection"

(4) It was Brother Hirsch, one of the orators of the Grand Lodge of Luxembourg, who he was the first to point out, in a speech relating to the occasion, the measure in force in Freemasonry in Prussia. The lodge "Les Amis de la Vérité" of Metz, on the proposal-
The position of F.-. Landau, addressed a protest to the Grand Orient on June 19, 18435 against this act of intolerance, by asking him to demand that all Freemasons of his obedience, without exception of religion, were admitted to the meetings of the lodge Prussian. The workshops of Lyon made the same wishes heard in the senate, in denigrationmonitoring the conduct of the three Prussian grand lodges. Finally, the Grand Orient addre timid observations to these. The English Grand Lodge, for its part, declared formally that it would cease all relations with them, if the paragraph relating
The exclusion of the Israelites was not erased from their statutes and regulations.
Three grand lodges backed down in the face of this disapproval. The unfortunate law was reported.

|
 "For no one; it is a fire that engulfs and consumes everything on
 "The altar of brotherhood."

To utter such words was to establish one's right to protest—
 to fight against the exclusions imposed by the Prussian lodges certain members of the human family; the speaker did so with au—both firmness and propriety.

In the following day's session, a new protest was made against the way in which the Prussian lodges understood Fraternity. The entire congress applauded with a triple battery to the principles of tolerance and equality proclaimed by

. Voorateur, and invited him to formulate in writing a wish that he had just to conclude with a brilliant improvisation. The proposal—
 The formulated proposal was referred to a committee, then presented to the congress. A very long discussion ensued regarding the wording;
 The first one was rejected. Then this spirit of hesitation manifested itself.
 who shows up too often in the dressing rooms. A second draft was debated, but the congress was in its final session; the dis—
 The discussion continued, everyone agreed on the main points.
 But there was a fear of bringing to France the discord that had broken out in the German lodges on this subject. They couldn't agree—to discuss the terms; the venerable man very cleverly proposed to adjourn—
 to find the solution to the question, while accompanying this Postponement for the following reasons:

"Whereas, either by the speeches that have been delivered on the exclusion of some lodges in Germany of men not pro—
 not practicing Christian worship, but otherwise offering all the moral guarantees, speeches which were met with lively

| signs of approval, either through the oral discussion that took place, the congress made it abundantly clear that it disapproves of the | principles of intolerance that still prevail in some lodges from Germany.

"Whereas the R.—. lodge of the United Brothers and the works
 | published in the Erwinia would leave no doubt about the feelings
 ; comments of Strasbourg Freemasonry in this regard;

| » Considering the time remaining for the congress to finish
 His numerous works are too limited to allow for a full discussion.

|

more time devoted to an incidental question to the detriment of the questions on the agenda; |

"Considering further that such and such wording cannot to change nothing in the moral effect of the congress's opinion, and that, by- While fully agreeing on the substance of the issue, its members have not were shared only on the form to be given to Juda;

"The congress postpones the drafting of the resolution to be issued on this Incidental question.

The adjournment and the preamble were adopted; the resolution was not was no less clearly formulated and the question settled.

On June 5, 6 and 7, 1847, the lodges of Charente-Inférieure, of The Gironde and Deux-Sèvres regions met in congress in Saintes. It was in the temple of the Monthyon lodge that the work was carried out. executed. Unfortunately, the report of these has not been completed. It didn't receive the publicity it deserved. But assistants have reported- it was noted that orators of eminent merit allowed themselves to be drawn in distinguished by the fervor of their eloquence in the field of issues social or political; that they again proclaimed the all- power of Masonic dogma now written at the head of the laws constituent elements of the French Republic; which they traced in the past- See Masonic a new path leading directly to purpose of the institution.

The local press having given these meetings a completely different character Politically, the Grand Orient forced the Monthyon lodge to communicate with it. to tamper with the minutes of the congress sessions. He instructed against her and banned her for a period of three months.

On June 22, 1847, another congress opened in Toulouse.

A commission appointed by the lodges of this Orient had The program for these meetings was prepared in advance. It was designed as follows:

"In the first session, we will deal with the history of the Freemasonry: 1° before Christianity; 2° after Christianity; 3° in parallel with the philosophy and revolution of the 18th century. Each speaker will be able to address only one of these three points.

"In the next two sessions, we will examine opposing views- 1. What masonry should be today; 2. What that it should be in the future.

"In the last two sessions, we will search, by way of discussion, the means of improving masonry, either in its constituent principles, either in its forms. lei, serious examination general statutes and Masonic regulators.

"Apart from these fundamental questions, and without touching on Religion and politics will be topics everyone can briefly address. topics in keeping with the seriousness of the meeting.

"At the end of the congress, the results of his work will be communicated" screwed at the Grand Orient and all the lodges of its correspondence, so that what we have a right to expect from all will come to pass "Seriously conceived and properly formulated speculations."

The lodges of Toulouse had joined forces with those of Montpellier, of Montauban, Condom, Castres, Perpignan, Albi, etc., to hold this assembly.

The first question was addressed by several accomplished speakers. of erudition.

The section relating to the pre-Christian era was re-summarized in this proposition:

All initiations have had philosophy as their goal
"speculative or practical, veiled by symbols. Therefore, the franc-Freemasonry, too, could be defined as: philosophy
"symbolic, alternatively or any speculative set or » practice (1). »:

Another speaker addressed the part of the question relating to the epo- that which followed Christianity. He nevertheless believed it useful to re- to the mysterious associations of the ancients, intended to preserve towards the worship of the Supreme Being and universal morality. He made of it to bring down Freemasonry, then he attributed it to England honored having saved her from barbarity. He devoted himself to scholarly research, leading to interpretations that are more or less successful its causes to arrive at this negative result: the origin of Freemasonry The stupidity is still a secret. However, he added that the goal of This was sufficiently understood. "Doing good, preserving the principles of tolerance and fraternity, to extend and strengthen these principles among men, that, he said, should be the goal of the spirit of Freemasonry.

(1) Special report of the congress, octavo brochure, page 16.

A third speaker aligned himself with the Templar system which gave the establishment of our institution in Europe the era of the crusades, as will be seen later in this work. He delivered a brilliant eulogy of the Orders of the Temple and of Freemasonry—things which, according to him, disappeared from France at the same time.

A fourth speaker restricted the historical part of the pre-first question in the 18th century.

He observed the moral reform of Freemasonry in England, with its now philosophical and political tendencies, and showed it penetrating our country within a corrupt society broken, she strove to moralize and reform. Some of the facts recorded in this work are briefly recalled and harmed by him. However, after giving to Freemasonry a political character in England, he condemns any tendency — of this kind as harmful and dangerous.

A fifth speaker returned to all the historical parts of the islands... questions already addressed, and made a warm appeal to the Freemasons, not to fight barbarism, like their predecessors, the sword by hand, but to establish the law of progress.

The second question offered, in a way, more interest. powerful, more current than the first one.

The aim was to examine the institution down to its fundamental principles. in his mind, to sort of draw up his horoscope.

Followers who had been unable to attend the congress had sent speeches in which they dealt with the first part from this question to its true point of view, based on equality and fraternity. The reading of these speeches was not allowed, no doubt because political issues had summer effluvia. | |

A speaker proved that Freemasonry cannot exist. without union. He listed seven means of union "which embrace all the faculties inherent in our nature and thus allow Each person, to work according to their own tastes towards the common goal. The first three means are efficiency, benevolence, and

Morality in actions, in the continuous development of intelligence; the fourth and fifth are belief in
|

God and the immortality of the soul. The last two touch metaphysics and are contrary to Masonic doctrine; this are faith in the first revelation and faith in continuity of this revelation. This division, entirely methodical, could be accepted by a few placid minds in cold Germany, the speaker's homeland; but offending the truth, torch of France-Freemasonry, it must have found little success among the followers of Toulouse.

Another speaker fared better in his examination. We quote His words expressing a thought of the author of The Link of Peoples:

"Today there is a Freemasonry which the common people have become enmeshed in." adorned, which he composed of all types of masonry, and that he governs in his own way, without order, without conscience and without reason.

"There is another one, but little practiced, which has not ceased to be pure, and which has remained the lot of enlightened men, courageous, benevolent.

"The first one attracted the sarcasm and contempt of the world."

"The second, like science and virtue, has never had for enemies are the foolish and the wicked.

"The first consists only of futile and absurd practices" of; it often only serves private interests.

"The other, on the contrary, embraces the cause of the whole world; It is simple, clear, full of reason and truth; it is the code Abridged version of universal morality.

"The first only produces annoying controversies and tiring. Almost all his imitators abandon him after having known.

"The second binds men together, leads them to study, to the charity, to the love of all that is good, of all that is beautiful. We remain attached to it because it is the noblest ornament-In times of prosperity, the sweetest consolation is in times of misery. res that human weakness engenders. ee.

"That, I believe, is what Freemasonry should be."

He concludes by expressing his wishes for a speedy recovery. ancient traditions and moral soundness, which alone can, In these difficult times, we must rein in passions. (I summarize)

nn =

OF FREEMASONRY. 495

Masonic dogma in these two expressions: friendship, fraternity
nity, which, according to him, cover all kinds of duties, all the means of glory and happiness, all ideas of union, of peace and of concord.

Another speaker examined whether the Freemason possesses enough courage, enough selflessness to fulfill one's role in such a society as it is currently organized, the mission of apostle or missionary Zionist. In ancient times, Freemasonry exerted influence on the minds and hearts had a great influence; she inspired the Courage, devotion, virtue. That's what his followers were at the time.
possessed of true brotherhood and a sense of equality which
"Nowadays" has become an irony.

Selfishness has stifled our activity; by killing the spirit of our
As an institution, it destroyed man's morality. But that's not The blame must fall on the institution.

"Active by its very nature, Freemasonry leaves its followers, he exclaims, neither rest nor truce, as long as there is a little bit of birch left in to accomplish, and you know if there are any left... If Freemasonry is dying, or if it remains without results for the moment, do not Let us not accuse her, for in her principles lies the development-
the most complete improvement of moral sentiment, the perfection the highest form of intelligence. The life of a mason is not, Believe me, a sweet life full of roses; its path is sown.
of thorns; he must walk forward, without looking at his wounds,
and go on, as long as, encountering brothers along the way
He will not have offered help and support to everyone more injured than himself .
as long as, by shaking the folds of his heart, he cannot to say: Now I can appear without fear before the Great-Architect of the universe, because I have fulfilled all the obligations he imposed them on me by giving me life (1). »:

The cause of evil lies within man himself, and can be divided.
divided into three parts: fear among some, lukewarmness among others
others, and selfishness among the majority.

The speaker does not believe that shy people harm the institution.
but rather the indifferent ones.

(1) Special report of the congress, octavo brochure, page 30.

"Whether through ignorance or pride, they disdain to concern themselves with a work they do not understand or do not want see the range. They stop at the bark without ever daring to start.

the fruit; they fear difficulties, they dread sacrifices,
And, since learning requires work and perseverance,
They take pleasure in remaining ignorant. You see them, without within reach of the heart as without reach of the mind, to indulge in this indifference, and, by their conduct, by their uninformed remarks stunned, they denigrate the institution to which they have dedicated themselves by the
the most solemn oaths.

Speaking of selfishness, the speaker had a vast field to cover—laughter, corruption charts to be revealed; he remained in the limits the regulations by merely making wishes so that
The corrupt spirit of this time did not penetrate the lodges.

Another speaker, addressing the issue of Freemasonry in the present and future, says that the moral element, which should ab-
to absorb the material element, is, on the contrary, absorbed by it.
It is leprosy that is eating away at the Masonic body. He points out the admittedprofane actions carried out for profit; he shows the spirit of association disappearing under the breath of selfishness.

11. Freemasonry must be brought back to its former practices, the as-association in wealth and misery, charity and high Moral of the story. It takes courage, energy, and willpower to... followers to fulfill this goal of self-sacrifice. He cites associations of workers' charity, all living near poverty; 1] said to the masonry to incorporate them into its ranks.

"Call to the Freemasons," cries the orator, "the masses of laborers" valors who have already paid tribute to the spirit of association, of gold-and economy. Instead of uncertain or insufficient benefits from a small association, introduce them to the benefits of association-universal tion, and then do not fear that conditions of morality, however dubious they may be, repels and frightens them.
boast. You can be certain, on the contrary, that the most noble in all emulations, school of the just and the honest, sc will be responsible for making, for the benefit of the institution, the safest and the mos
"Legitimate propaganda."

All the speakers who took turns at the podium to address

em ee enemy ANR > "OU Ce Ce 00 Re RS SRE tte ue 00e

They agreed on the same point, that it was necessary to pre-to preserve the sanctuary of Freemasonry from all taint of selfishness and materialism; that it was necessary to preserve this center of devotion, of virtue, in all its purity; that it must operate in the future
the association of peoples, that is to say the end of all struggle, of all war, from all antagonism; that it was necessary to revive oneself, to unite, so to moralize and to become, within society, the apostles of friendship, of "fraternity.

One speaker also exclaimed at the end:

"Are we all determined to march towards the conquest of the regeneration of masonry, of the P company. See, consult,
Ask yourself! Can't you feel your heartbeat?

Who hesitates, who fears, who falters? Well then! Regain your composure, Fear no more. What we seek has been found. Do you not see?

Not the association that welcomes you with open arms? This young woman with robust forms, with passionate impulses, with quivering movements

Sants, don't you see her struggling in the embraces that...

awkward, in the narrow space that stifles him, in the embraces of the corruption that surrounds and devours her? She offers you the arms; go therefore to his aid, and draw from the industrial association technical, moral and intellectual, a new life, your regeneration
tion!"

The third question, relating to Masonic improvements,
was discussed intelligently and wittily by several speakers.

We say this with regret, in our institution we have always made magnificent projects, admirable regulations that have not summers were very rarely executed. We find the cause in the lack of perseverance on the part of the followers and incessant mobility health of the workshops, whose members are renewed too often.

To combat this evil, it would suffice to attach to the institution, by indissoluble bonds, the Freemasons of intelligence, of knowledge and of the heart. Now, it is almost always these that we wish to drift away because we don't know how to hold them back.

The congress formulated its plans for reforms and improvements.
in a large number of vows addressed to the Grand Orient. Among Among these, we note the following: creation of spc sessions-
social gatherings in the lodges to discuss social issues on the agenda

in oo

of the day from a philosophical point of view; centralization of emergency services to create charitable institutions; abolition of the high Masonic degrees as contrary to the principle of equality; reform of regulations relating to lodge representatives at Grand Orient; to compel the latter to refrain from making any laws of importance without consulting the workshops; creation of a certain number of Masonic centers to assist the Senate in its control; frequent communication between the latter and its administrators; publicity of the box sessions, competitions between them; encouragement of the Masonic press; strict admission to the degrees; Regulations to the candidates educated about the degrees they possess; creation of relief funds in each region; reduction in the number of lodges.

The Grand Orient, which had placed a workshop in Saintes under interdict, instructed against the Toulouse congress, reprimanded the lodges of this east and forbade that of Bordeaux from meeting the year next in congress.

It was a mistake; before acting, he should have looked at the path where one He was pushing it, to measure the extent, the depth. Nobody was seriously considering escaping his control, breaking the ties of unity within Freemasonry, to create new powers, to imprint on the order a movement that did not originate from the senate; But this movement was wanted, it was expected; of all the temples arose a voice that demanded teaching, of eyes that sought a guide; they hoped in vain, and when the The Senate did not know how to promote this movement; it had to resign itself to it. to see him leave, because a static society would be unc lost society.

Within the circle of grand principles that led to the creation of Freemasonry, which they preserved through the struggles of For so many centuries, through varying fortunes, the freedom of the The stand has been completely full so far; it has had no other control than the regularly expressed support or disapproval of the lodges in the annual election which continues or removes from the orators their functions. From the day this freedom no longer existed, the workshop would be useless; he could do nothing more for the propagation of doctrines. of which he received the sacred trust and which he must transmit intact.

OF FREEMASONRY. 429

Moreover, among the learned brothers, all must know this. cannot forget that if unity of direction is desirable, because While it coordinates efforts, it is not indispensable to the existence of tenacity of Freemasonry. This institution has a strength that gives it is clean, a victory that no one can stifle, a power that to the persecutions of the Inquisition, to the edicts of the emperors, to ordinances of kings, to the bills of parliaments; twenty times one has They thought they'd killed her, but they found her alive. They're trying to discipline her that the power formed by its representatives gives it wise laws appropriate to the times, customs, and progress of human reason—

Maine, that he outlines for him the goal towards which every society should gravitate under penalty of not being; but let him not seek to deprive her of her freedom of thought, freedom of speech; let her live in broad daylight, otherwise she would live underground.

What fear would then lead to the banning of P congresses? This prohibition Is it possible? You will knock on a lodge in Saintes, a lodge in Toulouse; Maisily has others. You will forbid some brothers;
New ones will replace them. Will you prevent the holidays from The order? They are ordered by the Masonic code. Will you that delegations from several parts of the East would not meet there?
That would be violating the law. Won't there be any discussions about
A question is posed, a vote is taken? Who could possibly oppose it?
You will defend the publication of the minutes, you will strike the organs of advertising; we will write. Who will see the end of this War? Once again, the majority of lodges want unity in the direction, but she also wants this active direction. Keep the reins, but drive the chariot.

Important questions are being raised, but why don't you ask them yourselves?
same; reforms are being demanded, but why don't you call the lodges to deliberate on it. No one will think of challenging your power once that we will see you use it in the interest of all.

As in the glorious days of the Empire, Freemasonry is always ready to follow our armies onto the battlefields, to to establish themselves in conquered territories. It gives courage
Before the battle, she ignites hearts with love of country,
She heals wounds, celebrates victories, consoles in the

to em

Qt + Een 0e + ee 0 ee SUR RS ee Ce OR ie te ne

Tunes D mms and gun ne +

EE

430 PISILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the task that France was accomplishing in Algeria; the times were Having changed, the warring generations were no longer in command.
By the same men, Freemasonry had lost none of its activity.

Our troops, having landed in the cove of Sidi-Ferruch, had to
The Arabs had barely been dislodged from their position at Staouëli, and the area swept av plain of Cheraga, blows up the Emperor's fort and penetrates
in the nest of Algerian pirates, that the Masonic institution was going to settle there with them, to take shelter under their flag. Algiers and Temples were opened in Bone in 1832, Oran in 1834, Bou-

gie in 1856, Gigelli in 1841; then Blida, Sétif, Constantine, Cherchell and other Arab cities successively erected temples to the Great Architect of the Universe. There is today in Africa French, and following the banner of the Grand Orient of France, eleven lodges, three chapters, a council of Kadosh.

Some natives joined Freemasonry, but a very small number; there are also men initiated into our mys-
among the Arabs who came from Egypt where our soldiers created lodges; however, both are far from our temples
by the fear inspired in them by their fellow believers, who are full of everything
both intolerance and distrust towards Christians.
The ideas, hopes, and interests of the Arabs are not yet Ours; the education of this society hardly allows it to
He understands neither Masonic politics nor philosophy; there is no
We need only elevated minds who can appreciate our precepts; it is necessary, Furthermore, long-term contact and ongoing relations on both sides complete understanding of both the Arabic and French languages, for that our Freemasons make converts in Africa; it is necessary especially since Muslim prejudices are losing their power, and much time will pass before this progress is obtained.

Those who have closely observed and studied the Arabs believed they had found the traces of a mysterious link between men of the various tribes which cover the ground of the French part of Africa, to glimpse

'the signs of a Freemasonry that was still practiced'

ee 0 me me ee meme meme

know the principles (1).

We have seen Freemasonry in Switzerland obey various powers as a result of the political events that had brought the Grand-Orient of France to establish lodges of its obedience there; many influential figures strove to completely separate Switzerland from France from a Masonic perspective; they succeeded in this to a great extent. In part, without however the fraternal ties, the good relations between the workshops of the two countries would suffer. These fragments-Elements of the printed direction in the order are always unfortunate, for they take away the power he has, prevent him from to conquer the one he naturally aspires to, but they give satisfaction to national pride, and one would fight. It is futile to try to prevent them; they will cease when fanaticism, hatred, the evil passions that fight against Freemasonry will make them understand the need to unite more closely, but only then.

However, the institution was divided in Switzerland between the Grand-Orient helvétique-romand and the provincial grand lodge of Bern; a concordat signed in 1822 united the workshops under the obedience of a Swiss national grand lodge established in Bern. He remained in-core the Scottish directory of the rectified system; conferences took place in 1836, 1858, 1840, in Zurich, Bern and Basel, for to bring about a merger; a provisional act of union was signed at Locle in 1849, ratified in 1845 and finally put into effect in 1844. The Scottish Directory and the National Grand Lodge decreed a social pact and formed the Uxtox of the Swiss Lodges, under the obedience of a national Grand Orient based in Zurich, and which took the ALPINA name.

The act establishing this new power has generally

(1) During a trip that F.-. Kauffmann made to Africa in 1846, he was put in relationship with an Arab chief, from the land of the Mzabites, from where the caravans and A journey to Algiers across the desert, and which involves a number of workers the province of Algiers. The Mzabite belonged to a religious sect which, without having all the characteristics of Freemasonry, however, bear a certain resemblance to it; its aim is to maintain the original religion of Muhammad, and the followers recognize each other through words and signs.

The tm mm — comes + ru

vo ut eus mme + vero D em +

7 ee mm on Ge Re n © :

452 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

This satisfies the Swiss masons, but it is regrettable that, in the speeches delivered during his installation, the role of the franc-Masonry has been diminished; many brothers have found Islands the speaker's ideas were not in keeping with the grandeur of the institution. tion; fortunately speeches pass and are not articles Keys to faith.

A serious question, which we have already discussed in relation to the The Strasbourg congress had emerged in the Masonic world, it was that of the admission of Israelites into the lodges; in its First report, the Alpina approached it, but did not solve it (4).

In Geneva and Carouge, three lodges are of the obedience of the Grand-Orient of France; a fourth march with the Supreme-Advice.

While Switzerland was trying to establish unity of leadership, the Belgian Freemasonry was fighting against a Catholic clergy which, supported on the memory of the 1850 revolution in which he had participated contributed significantly, had the ambition to dominate the country and showed the intolerance he usually has in all the places where his Preponderance is established.

The Belgian followers were persecuted and oppressed by the priests. Attacked in their material interests, their special positions, They were driven to their family home by relentless enemies. linked with the French lodges and sought help and support there; Freemasonry erased the barriers that politics had placed between two factions of the same people.

"Everywhere," said a report on the situation in Belgium, "by- wherever there is a man who is a friend of truth and eager to see it spread, wherever there is a man who is an enemy of superstition- tion ct of fanaticism, there is a persecution to be carried out by these priests.

These truths, consistently confirmed by experience, are of a very old date; but is it the fault of enlightened men of this century?... What is even stranger, because it is insane and monstrous- Trueux, it's a sentence of excommunication issued against us

(1) First report of the administrative board of the Grande Luge Alpina. Zurich, 4845; pages 30 and following,

DR. FREEMASONRY. 433

at the time, against all Belgian Freemasons by the archbishop of Mechelen. What is cruel and barbaric is to aim in cold blood. to the ruin of an honorable citizen is to bring unrest into his family's aim is to make him an outcast, someone no woman will not be able to marry according to the religious law of his fathers, unless Catholics must not haunt, under pain of disapproval, the tomb from which, finally, it will even be forbidden to weep.

"Yes, the persecution against Belgian Freemasons is ardent, incessant, relentless, and it is the Catholic clergy who preaches openly (1).

Masters of the minds of youth through public education, the Priests encouraged children to distance themselves from their fathers. affiliated. Each bishop felt obliged to thunder from his pulpit. against the Freemasons, to excommunicate them; some have carried Forgetting Christian charity to the point of regretting the era when the church could make martyrs (2).

The temple door was closed to Freemasons who wished milks to marry; the confessional was used to torture the hearts of the wife who was forbidden to love her husband, was advised -to flee the marital home. The president of the senate was removed from office, the governor of Brussels, like Freemasons, and yet the Belgian constitution was the most liberal of all those that re-Europe was lying, the king was a Freemason and a Protestant.

This may be enough to give an idea of the power that was acquired. by the Belgian clergy. The Freemasons fought ardently, opposed the free university to the Catholic university, publications frank, loyal, to the anathemas, and the preaching of truths eternal of their faith to the intolerance and ambition of this theocracy.

Freemasonry is distinguished in Holland by its work | serious; the workshops are followed regularly, institutions | Important institutions were founded by them. The Dutch Grand Orient a few years ago it had seventy-five lodges under its obedience. |

(t) Minutes of the meeting of the chapter lodge of Henry IV, Orient of Paris. August 26, 1839.

(1) Same report.

|

In Prussia, the question of the Israelites, which we have | spoken while we were dealing with the Strasbourg congress, and which had been raised by two of the three Grand Lodges of Berlin. The Jews, in Germany, unfortunately, forms a class apart; they do not as MR on our home, with the other citizens under the
 a grand banner of political equality; they have made interests apart from the industries they practice alone and in the exercise of-which they have often stirred up complaints. But none of this could justify refusing to admit them into Masonic templesniques, from the day they were initiated into the mysteries.

It is important to establish the principle clearly, because no one should trans-to gain. A lodge to which a non-initiate requests initiation has the
 the right to refuse it to him, as a man, if his morals, his habits-
 His actions, it seems to him, do not merit this favor. As for His religion could never be a reason for exclusion.

There are some specific grades whose regulations pertain to...
 They argue, in truth, that one must be a Christian to be admitted; but as they have never been anything but a deviation from the principles of the Freemasonry, that they were created only in circumstances-these passengers, and in exceptional cases, they ceased to be of general use, and tolerance has long since triumphed exclusions that they indicated in the very lodges where they are still given.

Nothing, therefore, justified the Berlin lodges in their a to exclude Jews because they are Jews. They are free not to conferring upon them the title of masons; but from the day they had taken no power had the right to have a place in the great family

| legally prohibit them from entering the temples, unless they

| had rendered themselves unworthy; in that case, a judgment rendered

| only in the established forms could establish their unworthiness and | pronounce their exclusion.

At the time when this question was causing a stir in Prussian lodges, the
 The king's brother was initiated and accepted the protectorate of the Freemason woman.

| laughter in Prussia. It is the same man who today, having arrived on the throne,

| publicizes the oaths he has taken and fights against the national assembly-
 Final. Will Freemasonry finally understand that princes they no longer ask her for initiation except to control her, to enslave her.

A On = — ee ee ee

|

D

+ eee Ne eme in 0e 2e in Re Ge qu nr mn ot nn, in OP Er oo <<

OF FREEMASONRY. 455

After mistaking it for Marchepied? Will he be in Prussia an orator brave enough to remind the king of the oath he resounding throughout all the Grand Orients of Europe. Carried in An-England, it provoked energetic protests and brought about the suspension of relations between several English lodges and the lodges German women who had violated the sacred principle of brotherhood, foundation of Freemasonry.

In the same year that the Prince of Prussia took the lead of the Freemasonry of his country, in 1840, the Grand Master of the English Freemasonry was dying out and was being replaced by the Duke of Zetland. |

We have traced the actions of modern Freemasonry in England; respected, honored, powerful, our institution
exerts a real influence in Great Britain; it
A few years ago, there was one bricklayer for every five hundred inhabitants.
From England, Freemasonry was carried to all continents.
nents, on all the islands where the English flag has flown; the com-
The East India Company brought it back to its birthplace.

The English character harmonizes well with the philosophical spirit and methodical of our order. Until 1813, two grand lodges
The management of the English workshops was shared: that of the former masons, then presided over by the Duke of Kent; that of the Mo- masons dernes, presided over by the Duke of Sussex. A merger took place in 1813 and 1814 under the auspices of the latter (1). The modern rite was abandoned.

The rite of the ancient masons of the English Grand Lodge is performed installation, according to the regulations of the Grand Chapter of Royale-Arche, of four grades (2), namely: apprentice, journeyman, master, master of the Holy Royal Arch; however, the latter is only regarded as a dependency of the master's degree, although it has its

He lent his services as a bricklayer.

The question of the Prussian Jews was too serious not to be addressed. Assemblies, its chapters, its officers. This, then, is Freemasonry.

(1) The treaty of union was signed on the 27th day of the 40th month 5813 (December 27, 1815). The new constitution was printed in 5815.

(2) Concordat of 5813.

Re of D

me mm te = to

436 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The symbolic system in use in England; the other grades of chivalry is scarcely more in use than in India and English possessions in America (1).

The English lodges took an honorable initiative in the matter of the Prussian Israelites and protested vigorously against the anti-Masonic claims of the Berlin lodges that excluded them.

There are several Masonic charitable societies in London. Their sessions funded by lodges, masons, subscriptions, Their purpose is to help masons in distress. to educate their children. The Duke of Sussex, Grand Master, he expressed himself thus at the jubilee celebration held in his honor in 5839:

"The main strength of our institution lies in this, that its chain embraces all brothers, and a ring cannot be broken. pre without the whole being visibly affected; therefore our motto is: Honor and equality before the law.

Germany has eight Grand Lodges or Grand Orients independent on one another: the Grand Orient of Hamburg, the Grand Lodges of Hanover, Saxony, Frankfurt am Main, of Bavaria, and finally the three Grand Lodges of Berlin.

These powers coexist peacefully, albeit divided. simply, but temporarily, on the exclusion of the Israelites pronounced in Berlin and condemned in Dresden in 5841.

Throughout Germany, the political division caused the division of Masonic sion. This is a serious error that subordinates the free-Freemasonry to the various governments and takes away its character

(1) 11, however, has been founded since 1846, in Edinburgh and Loudres, two supreme advice, following the modern Scottish Rite consisting of 33 degrees. The first was for author Walker Arnolt d'Arlary, whose titles were later disputed. This advice was regularized by F.*. Morison de Greenfield, member of the Supreme Council of France, during a trip he made to Scotland. He was invested with all regular powers. The the second council was created by Brother Crucefix, editor of the Freemasons Quarterly Review. The Supreme Council of Scotland refuses to recognize that of London because its Grand Master asked the Grand Orient of France for the sanction and the correspondence of this body; that is to say, the Scottish council has taken up the quarrel of the Supreme Council of France, which denies the regularity and orthodoxy of the Grand O France.

437

OF FREEMASONRY.

The association ceases to exist among all when the orders originating from the summits cannot be received until the very last depths instead of a large body full of strength and power, Freemasonry now consists only of small re- bodies due to atony.

Now that the German Confederation has understood the need to form a bundle obeying general laws mandatory for all its members, regardless of the rest difference that exists in their political constitution, perhaps Will Freemasonry, in turn, understand the necessity of having only one senate governing the entire scattered association on German soil, 0 of

In Sweden, King Charles John; in Denmark, King Christian, In Holland, Prince Frederick became Grand Masters of the order in that same year 5840 which saw in this respect so much of changes. Christian died a few months ago, in 5848, after having served in his position for eight years.

In Poland, Freemasonry is working mysteriously to to regain the country's independence; in Russia, to conquer Freedom. It became national in Poland, revolutionary in Russia. Here is an anecdote about this, told by Jean Czynski. excerpt from the newspaper Le Franc-Maçon (1):

"In a salon where the Russian aristocracy used to meet" and Polish, during the short stay of Emperor Alexander "In Warsaw, a Russian showed disrespect to a polo officer" » birth; heated words were exchanged, a reparation of-

"The Russian is injured. When the police saw it as nothing more than a quarrel..."
"Provoked by national jealousy, history later, has revealed that it was a clever ploy to thwart surveillance launches spies. Three Polish patriots and three liberals
The Russians, under the pretext of a duel, formed an alliance with
"in the name of two peoples, by swearing an oath to work towards the re-
"Reconciliation between the two countries, to extinguish religious hatreds and"
"National antipathies to work together in agreement"

(1) First year, 5th delivery, page 158.

me qe pee + cn

458 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"To the happiness of both states. On one side, they were the founders of the "National Masonic lodges in Poland; on the other hand, the leaders"
"True and loyal children of Russia."

The least civilized tribes saw the dawn of a ray of this marvelous star of Freemasonry. In the
In Senegambia and the Fouta-Toro territory, one finds a a kind of Masonic institution; the members are called Almous-Seriously, but the purpose of their association is unknown, as it has never been revealed. To

Initiation still appears among the Howas of Madagascar;
among these barbaric populations of the coast and the interior, it is A powerful safeguard for the stranger. From the day a Howa chose him for his brother, exchanged a palette of blood with him pulled from the arm, the European can count on a friend, on a defender sister who will watch over him.

OF THE FRENCH-NACONNERIE. 459

CHAPTER THIRTEEN.

Higher degrees. – Appreciation of this annex of Freemasonry, – Do Ramsay. – The Scottish-earthquake generating high ranks – Ancient expressions preserved to this day. – History of the Grand Lodge of Heredom of Kilwinning. – Successive introduction of these Scottish England, France, Germany, and other countries. Charles Edward and George I supplied them
The pretexts. – The Lyon Freemasons adopt Ramsay's Templar regime and create the degree of Kadosh. – Creation of Masonic sects, such as the Order of Felicity, the Knights and The Nymphs of the Rose. –The Grand Master and his deputy neglect the administration of the

again the number of Masonic innovations. – Rite of the Old Brut or of the Faithful Scots, – Order of the Splitters. – Scottish Rite established in Marseille. – The Knight of Bonneville Chapter of Clermont. – Creation of the Chapter of the Emperors of the East and West. 1] gave powers to one of its members to spread Scottish Rite Freemasonry in America. [II] instituted In Bordeaux, a chapter of the Prince of Royal Secret – Great influence of the three lodges when Martinès Paschalis founded a workshop there under the title of Temple of the Scottish Rite. This innovator. Exposition of his system of the Elected Coens. Martinès is denounced as an atheist by a lodge in Toulouse. – The French lodge takes up his defense. – His lodge is closed. His Death. – Creation of the Council of Knights of the East. – Influence of Freemasonry on the society at that time. – Unrest in Germany. – The Moravian Brethren brotherhood existed there when Ramsay's system was adopted there under the title of the Rectified Dresden Regime, – De Hand founded the Strict Observance regime. Its methods, its tendencies. – Order of Clermont of the Strict Observance; its claims, its ranks. – Zinneadorf Rite originating from the Swiss 11 is modified and achieves great success. – Swedemborg and his system; his grades. – Weishaupt; his doctrine, his tendencies, his ranks, – Cagliostro; his innovations, his trials. His flight, his death. – Rectified Rite preserved by the lodges of Besançon; grades. French

Its degrees. Scottish Rite; its degrees. Rite of Misraïm; its degrees. New Grand Lodge started

February revolution of 1848.

THEN the introduction of the tops
Masonic degrees in France
This, discussions almost SU RS continual, often oral –
SL LS ES geuses, agitated the order.

QE From the very beginning of this invasion,
SNS followers, until then peaceful and tranquil
In the workshops, they became agitated and divided themselves to ®. form two camps. [here, under the red banner of KA Ramsay (1) sided with the supporters of the new

of What

ani
|

(fl

(LIL

In Scotland, in 1686. His father was Earl Dachausic, a zealous Freemason.
P to: De Ramsay was initiated into Freemasonry at an early age in the lodge of

Tone

At RS Canongate-Kilwinning, in Edinburgh. FH ent of frequent reports with the Templars who persuaded him that the Masonic order was merely a

QD RP PP mm mn

440 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Freemasonry; there, under the blue flag of the Grand Lodge
The initiates of the primitive grades remained unshaken.

Innovators, like illustrious warriors, are reformist geniuses.
amateurs had their historians, their poets, their fanatics.
But the harsh criticism, which only respects unbiased historians, tiaux, the true poets and enlightened zealots, searched the hearts of dissidents, and, by striking them, inflicted serious wounds on the institution.

However, if the latter were to suffer from the libels that launching the antagonists, which the profane world laughed at, she saw his principles and ideas spreading more rapidly

titude by this very agitation. This state of affairs could be harmful to its original mystery, but it was to contribute to its popularity and to continually increase the number of its followers.

Looking back today to that era which saw the birth-
the existence of this multitude of more or less Masonic institutions known as Islands, names of high degrees or masonry of per-feclion, it is recognized that these have often met the needs and to the demands of the times. The high ranks were then this What have Masonic congresses and banquets been like in our time?
reformists. Democratic ideas, the pure essence of France-masonry, unable to make itself known through the press, they dressed themselves in allegorical costumes, and were often placed between two opposing doctrines, they arrived clear and pure to the intellect-the licence of the initiate, who divulged them according to his ability.

Ordinary men, who see no evidence of Freemasonry that its seductive ceremony, covered themselves with silk cords and of gold jewelry, without worrying about the ideas that could not

His pictorials amused the crowds of curious onlookers drawn to the islands. libels and thwarted the plans of the institution's enemies, the true followers understood each other, made progress, and moved from one rank to another. grades the investigations of tyranny.

Also, after the great act of social emancipation of 1789, an annex of theirs, and that Godfrey of Bouillon had been its leader. From there came his [He died in Saint-Germain-en-Laye, France, on March 6, 1743. He had been,] It is said that Fénelon's friend had composed various esteemed philosophical works.

|

Ds – 7th

FREEMASONRY. &41

Do we see the high ranks as so important, so sought after at first? to diminish, to gradually fade away and to be summed up nowadays in two culminating points: religion and philosophy; that is to say in the degrees of Rose-Croix and Kadosh.

We cannot agree with those who wrote... volumes to criticize and combat the high ranks, because, According to them, they were harming the cold mysticism of Freemasonry. primitive, nor of those who approved and defended them to because of their pomp and seductive shapes. Some and the others, by serving prejudice and error, have been quite happy-rous to contribute unwittingly to the triumph of truth and of reason.

Of all the disputes that the creation or importation of High degrees engendered among the frivolous masons, the light historical events should have emerged and the truth should have become clear after The struggle. Nothing of the sort. The night is almost as black today. in this labyrinth, as in the last century.

Scottish Rite Christianity is obviously the primary generator of all the regimes that have crisscrossed Freemasonry within the space of a century. Some of his followers, in their delirious enthusiasm-rant, have gone so far as to give it an origin prior to that the first symbolic degrees, and they were only surpassed by the followers of the Misraïm regime, who have traced it back to God, the birth of their institution (1)! |

For the sake of clarity and precision, we will follow the order avoid repetitions that are sometimes useful, but always in-boring.

At the time of the general meeting of the members of the brotherhood
in the Grand Lodge of York, no institution having relations immediate with one or more of the higher degrees did not exist again; at least the chronicles of the order retain a profound Silence on this point.

We would first like to explain some common expressions.
ancient ones, on which the new followers were unable to focus

(1) History of the Order of Misraim, by Marc Bedarride.

———— ———— 2 Se Q mm

nn

442 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

their attention, and present an overview of the revolutionary turmoil-areas that stirred up order before its peaceful establishment.
This is a profound lesson in philosophy that our brothers will know appreciate.

Robert Bruce, founder of the Stuart dynasty in Scotland,
won, the chronicle says, an important victory over his enemies made possible by the valiant cooperation of the established Freemason brothers in his country (1). As a reward for this noble action, he founded the Great-Kilwinning Lodge and declared himself head of the brotherhood. His successes-
The sisters retained the title of Grand Master of the Order. From there the royal art name that some old masons still consider as a synonym for Freemasonry.

In 1744, the Grand Lodge of Edinburgh conducted the general census
ral of all the lodges of Scotland, proceeding in order of seniority
The Kilwinning one was notoriously the first; but,
as it had lost its authentic titles, the Chapel of Saint Mary of Edinburgh usurped her birthright. Wounded at justifiably justified this act of iniquity, contrary to the teachings of ma-Connic, the Kilwinning lodge abandoned its castle on the mountain
Heredom, and came to establish his seat in Edinburgh, next to Sarivale.
It took the title of Royal Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of the order of Heredom of Kilwinning. She ceded the administration and knowledge of the three symbolic degrees in the lodge of Saint-
John, from the same direction, and reserved for himself the right to confer the high

What were the number and titles of the higher degrees? conferred by the Grand Lodge of Heredom, under the patronage of Saint Andrew? We give up trying to establish that. History tells us that the English lodges, necessarily in communication with those of Scotland, only knew the three symbolic degrees until 1717. The only insignia worn by the followers was an apron. of leather; only the officers of the lodges wore it in silk (5).

(1) Battle of Bannochburn.

(2) Mr. Murdæch, his secretary, gave instructive details in this regard, in a letter addressed to F.:. Matheus, dated October 14, 1787, and preserved in the archives of the former Provincial Grand Lodge of Rouen.

(5) Masonic Bee, vol. in-4v.

OF FREEMASONRY. 443

It is to this period of political unrest that we must look back—to introduce Scottish degrees, first in England, then in France, in Germany, in Holland, in Prussia, and AUQUE in the New World.

George [, Elector of Hanover, had just ascended the throne of the Stuarts. Since Robert [, all the kings descended from his line had been the grand masters and protectors born of the French masonry. In the name of the Stuarts, the Scots attached Memories of glory, of homeland, of independence. In those times so bordering on barbarity, it was for this people a flag of freedom.

It should therefore come as no surprise if a large number of masons wanted to share the misfortune of Charles-Edouard, nicknamed the Pretendant, and accompanied him even into exile. It is not necessary to be even more surprised to see French Freemasons welcoming fraternity eminently this last token of a royal race and provide him abundant aid. If some schemers were thinking of restoring the removal of a crumbling throne, the majority had not no other thought than that of granting fraternal hospitality to a unhappy follower.

Among the Scottish supporters of the Stuarts who mingled In London amidst the political unrest was Sir Ramsay.

He had brought or created a new rite there, composed of three ranks: the Scotsman, the Novice, and the Knight of the Temple in harmony with that of the suitor, was not appreciated by English, staunch supporters of George [']. The Grand Lodge rejected it, although several of its members had already adopted it.

Ramsay left Scotland and England to come to France, where He was happier.

Political unrest was followed by Masonic unrest in London. Discontented individuals formed a Grand Lodge under the auspices of the original mother lodge of York, as we have already mentioned in a previous chapter. The new institution took the title of Grand Lodge of the Ancient Scottish Rite, and gave to its rival, the name of the modern rite. The Grand Lodges of Scotland and People from Ireland declared themselves in her favor and refused to correspond.

444 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

with the first. So she added to her title of elder that of acceptance, and henceforth bore the name so well known today of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. She created lodges and chapters very much in various countries, and it was undoubtedly she, says Thory (1), who A few years later, the Council of Emperors was established in Paris. from East and West.

In 1745, Ramsay's innovations began to develop In France, the Freemasons of Lyon were always the first at work when it comes to reforms, but the last to conserve towards the remains of their work (1), as if they counted For nothing, islands of the present time, postponing all their hopes In the future, the Lyon masons had adopted the temporary degrees Ramsay's folds. They had commented on them, developed them in a political sense, and had formed one of the higher ranks more importantly, that of Kadosh, then known under the title of Little Chosen One. This rank was successively developed and divided into Elected of the Nine or of Pérignan, Elected of the Fifteen, Illustrious Master, Knight of the Dawn or of Hope, Grand Inquisitor, Grand Elect, Commander of the Temple (2).

Ramsay had been a political and religious innovator. He had successors who, at first glance, seem frivolous, but who, after a serious examination of their works, are entitled to some Consideration. Among this number was M. de Chambonnet, who, in 1742, He created, in Paris, the Order of Felicity.

The ranks, offices, and allegories of this institution were modeled on those of Freemasonry. The Men and Islands Ladies were admitted to this society under the title of knights. The work consisted of a sea voyage. to the Isle of Felicity. The brothers and sisters, or the knights and Navigation. An eastern port was called a roadstead and a temple a squadron. It was composed of four ranks: the mnousse, the boss, the chief squadron and vice-admiral.

(14) History of the founding of the Grand Orient, p. 16.

(2) The archives of the Lyon lodges contain no old documents of some importance. It is the lodge of the Rectified Scottish Rite sitting in Besançon that has their greatest claim to fame. This supports the minutes of the important works of the Convention of the Gauls.

DB LA FRANC-NAÇONNERIE. 445

A major pollster, inspectors, commissioners of the order.
The marines comprised the government of the order.

One of the reception challenges was reminiscent of a comical scene from the passage under the line. The head of the candidate who recited a prayer in bad verse to Saint Nicholas, head of the order.

The oath was roughly modeled on that of Freemasonry. Balls and concerts followed the receptions. society was composed of men and women from high society. Although it had caused no scandal, nor deserved any She was criticized and subject to reproach. In 1745, she was ridiculed. in a brochure entitled: The Way to Reach the Top naval rank without getting wet. The followers replied the following year by another brochure entitled: Apologie de la Félicité.

This society, so frivolous in appearance, and which has caused so much groaning poor masons, fixated on purely material uses, were nevertheless a powerful agent for the propagation of principles and Masonic doctrines. People from the high aristocracy-cracy, which, under ordinary conditions of life, would have disdained unwilling to mingle with the bourgeoisie and the working class, he allowed himself to drawn by the allure of novelty and artistic festivals, literary works, etc., which were given away in the harbor by the fortunate followers of Felicity.

The speeches, the songs, the music, the banquets, every favorite- These meetings foster a fraternal rapprochement between the islands. various classes of society. The principles of equality, liberty and A sense of brotherhood began to take root in their hearts. In '89, they led the nobility to make the sacrifice on the altar of the fatherland of his titles and privileges.

temporary in this era of muted unrest. Lacking bass though solid, it weakens with the zeal of its principal members who... were leading. We will see it reborn in other forms and under the name of the Lodge of Adoption. But beforehand, it gave birth to- nce to his society of Knights and Nymphs of the Rose.

This one, like the previous one, was modeled on masonry.

446 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

but dedicated to the worship of the most powerful of gods. The lodge was the Temple of Love. The presidents represented a hierophant and a high priestess. The introducer of the aspir- Rantes was named Sentiment, the lady who accompanied him wore The name Discretion. A knight's age was the age of love. The age of the nymphs, the age of pleasing. In 1780, this society gave a splendid celebration in which the Duke of Chartres filled the functions of a hierophant. The performance was completed by an interlude appropriate to the occasion and interspersed with songs and of dances.

In 1744, the Prince of Clermont succeeded the Duke of Antin in the important functions of Grand Master of the Order. He had appointed a banker named Baure as his substitute, more suited to financial operations than to managing a philosophical society. The Grand Master and the deputy are occupied- fathers of their pleasures, their personal interests, and let- The lodges were left to their own devices. They wanted, as This still happens today when there is a failure of direction. lack of fraternal harmony, competing, surpassing oneself in power- see, in precedence. To assert their authority, they created starting from new workshops, they took on the ambitious title of Mother Lodges.

Charles Edward Stuart came to add fuel to the fire of the unrest minds, to administrative anarchy. His favorites, his supporters who had accompanied him to France, sold to fanatics, to speculators, charters of mother lodges, bulls of canni- tres, etc. These titles were property for those who acquired them. They exploited them throughout France.

Without the ideas of emancipation and progress that these new societies had borrowed from Masonic principles, our order might perhaps have succumbed in France in this new invasion; but, placed like a lighthouse at the summit of all the associations, he enlightened them, and light dawned among the people. In the year that saw the creation of the Arras chapter by the Pre- tending, a new rite was established in Toulouse under the denomin- Nation of Vicille-Bru or of the faithful Scots. The chronicle reports that this was in recognition of the Freemasons of this East who had favorably welcomed Sir Samuel Lockard, aide-de-camp to Charles-Édouard during his passing through this city.

The Old-Bru rite, composed of nine degrees, was divided in three chapters. The first was made up of the three sym- grades bowls and the secret master; the second of the four degrees following, more specifically designated under the title of elected officials, or of The Templar system; the third, initiates into the secrets of Scientific Freemasonry. These three chapters were called Consistoriale. This rite was administered by a council whose members bore the strange name #Menalzchims, which means, They say, Supreme Chiefs of the rite.

The Grand Orient refused to admit him in 1804, outside the re-union of all rites, because it did not present a moral purpose or fairly precise scientific. It continued, however, to be practiced in the south of France until 1812 (1).

Other creations from the same period include those of Log splitters.

It is attributed to the knight Beauchène, the most fana- the tic of the irremovable masters of the old Grand Lodge of France, they said.

The Order of the Cleavers, like that of Felicity, was andro- gyne, that is to say, instituted for people of both sexes. The The president's name was Father-Master; the candidate, Briquet; the initiates, cousins; the lodge, construction site.

Beauchène inaugurated his construction site on August 17, 1747, in Paris, in a vast garden in the suburb of New France, the same district where the Order of Felicity previously existed. This new The Masonic workshop was named the Workshop of the Globe and of Glory. Other construction sites were soon established in Paris and in various cities of France (2).

"Bored by the pompous and gallant ceremony of the Order of Ja

(1) History of the founding of the Grand Orient, page 562.

(2) Chroniclers have traced the origin of the Fenderie back to the reigns of Charles VI and Charles VI. She was born, they said, in the ferrets of Bourbonnais. The woodcutters of this country had welcomed the outcasts of the civil and foreign wars. manages. This hospitality had been the origin of the charcoal burners' duty.

Félicité, known as the Masonic Bee (1), riders and ladies, in blouses, in aprons, in clogs, arm in arm, under the name of cousins, male and female cousins, ran to the construction sites of the father-master Beau-oak. There, it was no longer a question of minor care and gentle phrase, but of laughter and drinking, so much the ceremony of the single grade (2) The Fenderie is likely to provoke genuine gaiety, cheerfulness popular. "

Socialist authors, who since the first revolution have written about Freemasonry, they formed a strange idea of our association; after reading some bad books on the androgynous societies that we deal with, unaware or ignoring the indelible character of morality which has always been dis- They distinguished Freemasonry, they considered it from the point of view the gallant and easy morals of the reigns of Louis XV and Louis XVI. If they had undertaken a careful examination of its annexes; if, setting aside from their minds all unkind prejudice, all criticism- that biased, they would have evoked historical memories of our fathers, the orders of Felicity, of the Splitters, and some others would have been identified in their works as so- societies of emancipation, charity, and progress. Despite their intelligence and their education, they paid their tribute to the pre- judged by the crowd; they criticized and condemned what was good and commendable. Let us not be like them, let us give to Caesar what is Caesar's. belongs to Caesar.

At that time, high society eagerly sought out joyful recreations of the people. Listen to Voltaire speaking about the people of the noble and financial aristocracy:

"No," he said, "there is no pure joy except public joy," and the true feelings of nature only reign over the people. Ah, dignity, daughter of pride and mother of boredom, never the "Did sad slaves have such a moment in their lives?"

We have before us a very old handwritten notebook on

(1) 2nd year, no. 47.

(2) There were several ranks called foresters, because their emblems were modeled on the trades of wood splitter, charcoal burner, sawyer, etc.; but that of Beau-Oak was obviously the type of the genus. Carbonarism adopted one of these grades. which has been published.

a rank of the Splitters. The order had probably undergone somewhat reforms when it was written, because this grade is rather political that frivolous, and there is no mention of ladies, although the The society was androgynous. Here are some of its main steps-wise; they will suffice to make known these trends:

"This rank is created with all possible regularity. Among them (the followers), charity and hospitality are perfectly observed They follow the seven beatitudes:

"I was thirsty, you gave me something to drink."

"I was hungry, you gave me something to eat."

"I was naked, you clothed me."

"I was in prison, you visited me."

"I was sick, you helped me."

"I was cold, you warmed me up."

"I was grieved, you comforted me."

The followers hated lies, loose speech, and mis-Discipline; they honored decency and kept the greatest secret regarding the masonry. "The construction site is being held at the computer-naturally in a forest or at least in a garden where it There is a grove or a tree-lined avenue. If that is not possible, We decorate a box with tree branches and lots of wood shavings. The room should be littered with them. Bundles of them should to serve as seats.

To keep the construction site running smoothly, the officers had to be present. whose names are as follows:

The Father-Master. – The Cousin of the Oak (godfather); the Cousin of the Elm (introducer); the Cousin of the Beech (wine keeper); the Cousin of the Service Tree (guardian of the bread); the Cousin of the Hornbeam (guardian hospitality); the Maple Cousin (guard of the seat); the Cousin of the Ash Tree (honour guard).

The reception ceremony was bizarre enough that it was It's interesting to report on this.

The Father-Master was sitting on a large oak log, the

A crown of oak leaves covered his head. He had at around the neck a green silk cord from the end of which hung a corner of boxwood. He had an axe in his hand and a pipe in his mouth. His

450 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

His habit was made of coarse linen. Was this a parody of the temporary ranks? Pliers or Scottish tartans, so rich in ornamentation? We do not know; but All these measures were taken to draw the attention of followers among the lower classes of society, to wear them to know their poverty, their misery, and to work towards the ame-improvement of their lot. Among these men, seemingly so dis-Despite their inheritance, they still practiced virtue and friendship. Love, gratitude. Wasn't that a great lesson? for the candidates who at that time mostly belonged to the nobility, to the wealthy bourgeoisie, and who would soon be called What are the means to regenerate France? All these mysteries, all this work These bizarre things, therefore, tended to strike the candidate's mind, to instruct him. to bring the upper classes closer to the lower classes through bonds of equality and fraternity.

When the candidate arrived at the construction site gate, the father-
The teacher told him:

"My boy, is it truly your wish to be received as a good companiongnon and good cousin splitter?

– Yes, Father-Master.

– Isn't it out of curiosity or to go and discover other things?
Think about our homework P. Think about what you're going to do.

– No, Father-Teacher.

– If you were cowardly enough to betray us, our axes, our
"Scics, our wedges, our axes would avenge us."

Here the father-master, rising hastily, was putting the
with the edge of his axe to his forehead, all his cousins imitated him.
A striking allegory of the horror that virtuous men are inspired by Denunciation, betrayal.

Once the candidate had taken the oath, he was made to sit down.
In the seat of honor, he was served bread and wine from the hospital.
bed, and they gave him five sous for his journey.

To determine if the construction site was under cover, the master craftsman would say:

"What's the weather like?"

"The wind is calm and the leaves are still."

Otherwise, on the island:

"The wind is strong, the leaves and branches of the tree are agitated.

OF FREEMASONRY. 451

To close the construction site, we would say:

"Good life! Cousins, let's leave our work, here comes the night which come. "

The completion of the works was followed by a scene reminiscent of again the candidate of modesty, humility, poverty. We will serve—each had a simple soup in earthenware dishes with salt. had an earthenware plate with a boxwood spoon, and they drank in stoneware cups. The sacred words were: iron, coal, steel (1).

The Scottish or Templar rite, already established in Lyon, Paris, Arras, Toulouse was established in Marseille by a traveler whose story, So generous to a few, he did not record the name. He was probably also from the sequel to The Pretender.

This Scottish Grand Lodge, known as St. John's from Scotland, creates new workshops in the Levant, the colonies, in Provence, in Lyon and even in Paris, already the center of all the regimes, of all the innovations.

In 1754, French creations and English horus had made such great progress that weariness manifested itself in the most intrepid, and that some others were seized with despair—pear. In this grand manipulation of Masonic forms, serving as a cloak for liberal ideas, there was a moment of fear that no longer able to recognize himself. The Chevalier de Bonneville tried of a new rallying system. He had a new one built at his own expense. magnificent temple in the suburb of New France. He called immediately to the Masonic commission of men of all classes of society; at the same time he formed a chapter based on the Templar system, which he modified and expanded. Men members of the high aristocracy came there to receive enlightenment, to mingle there with the bourgeoisie, and begin the revolutionary alliance.

This institution took the title of Chapter of Clermont, without doubt in honor of the grand master of the order, an honor of little nicety, for we have said how this great lord took care of the matters of order.

(1) A ruling of the court of the Parliament of Paris dated September 3, 1781, prohibited to the wood and coal workers of Berry to meet in a company, under penalty of extraordinary prosecution.

452 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Four years later, the grand lodge of the old and accepted regime founded, in Paris, a chapter under the title of the Emperors of the East and of the West, sovereign princes of Freemasonry. It is from his lineage that In 1804, the improved Scottish system of thirty-three degrees. In 1761, this chapter had given to Stephen Morin, that Commercial matters in America required a patent of Grand Inspector General, to spread throughout the New World Scottish Freemasonry. This, forgotten during the revolution, will be brought back to France in 1804 by a man named Grasse from Tilly, with an additional eight new degrees. For example From the Stuarts, this new schemer will find ways to generate resources. these higher degrees, and will proclaim himself grand master of the new rite calf.

Some time after its founding, the Council of Emperors of East and West established a chapter in Bordeaux under the Prince of Royal Secret name. It was in this council that... examined and regularized the degrees of the Scottish Rite, numbering twenty-five; their titles and the order in which they were classified have not undergone any changes since then.

The council of the Emperors of the East and West had sent to the Bordeaux council of commissioners to participate in the tra-grade ranking system. As we can see, the capital does not He did not consider it a disgrace to sometimes submit to lights of the province, and Freemasonry was not doing any worse for it.

One year after the founding of the Royal-Secret council, Bordeaux enjoyed another innovation. The three lodges of this east exercise- then wielded considerable influence in society, because they comprised Among their members were the most reputable men. The Frenchwoman had initiated prominent figures into the cult. in the magistracy and commerce, and his reputation had grown from it increased.

It was on her that an intriguer focused his ambitious designs. Martinès Paschalis, who had already founded a lodge under the title of Scottish Temple of the Elect addressed some members of the Frenchwoman, showed them a sign covered in hieroglyphs inintelligibles that he said had been ceded to him and his descendants. teeth, by Charles Stuart. As he already enjoyed a certain reputation, the followers he had taken as confidants let themselves

They easily charmed him and welcomed him. It was then that he addressed the French the following letter (1):

"I humbly beseech the most respectable lodge to want to do the honor of affiliating him, and he will do in gratitude wishes to the G.. A.-. of the U.. for the prosperity of the spreading masons due on the surface of the earth and of this R.-. L.-..

"Signed: Martinès, Esquire."

Martinès was affiliated and presented his system of the Elus-coëns.

"The idea for this system was borrowed from Swedenborg."
the creation of man, his disobedience, his punishment, the penalties of body, soul, and the spirit he experiences together form the whole of the doctrine of initiation in the rite of the Elus-coëns.

Its regeneration and reintegration into its primitive, innocent state cence, as well as in the rights he lost through original sin,
that is the goal we set for ourselves.

"According to this system, the man who presents himself to be received
In the eyes of the sect, it is nothing but a mixture of mud and silt.
The leaders of this theocratic society give him life, on condition-tion that he will abstain from tasting the fruits of the life-giving tree. He He is seduced, he forgets his promise, he is punished and thrown into the flames. But soon he is reborn to a new life; he is reinstated in its original dignity, if useful works, if a holy life and His exemplary nature makes him worthy of it.

"That's what first-class initiates are taught."
in three stages which are called apprenticeship, journeyman and mastery, of which, as one may judge, Genesis provided the program.

"The man having recovered his original rights and having re-brought close to its creator through a speculative path, is animated by divine breath. He becomes capable of knowing the most sacred secrets.
creations of nature; advanced chemistry, Kabbalah, divination, the

(1) We owe these previously unpublished details to Brother Noah, Honorary Worshipful Master

History of the lodges of Bordeaux.

|
eeen

454 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

For him, ontological sciences are merely knowledge municipalities, in which it can be easily taught.

These privileged beings form the second class in the order of the Elected Coëns. These classes are subdivided into several others in which are taught to initiates, because of their tastes or their genius, the cabal and the occult sciences in all their parts (1).

This system was very popular in Germany and England, where it He found many illustrious supporters. If Paschalis was among them The author, Saint-Martin, was its Saint Paul or organizer.

The Elus-Coëns admitted only a small number of men. chosen, and observed the greatest secrecy about their mysteries; These were only revealed by manuscripts found in the libraries of Saint-Martin and Lavalette de Lange after their dead. It is claimed that many philosophical works are graduates of this school, to which Baron d'Holbach belonged, Duchanteau, etc. |

The lodge La Française, to which Paschalis had been affiliated, took In 1764 she received the title of French-Elected-Scottish, which she retained. to this day.

Finally, doubts about Paschalis's morality and sincerity began to emerge among the Freemasons of Bordeaux. A workshop in Toulouse, under the name of Lodges of Saint-Jean reunited, having learned that the Frenchwoman, with whom he was in an intimate relationship, had been caught off guard by the pre-tense inspector-general of the Lodge of the Sluarts, wrote to him the August 26, 1762 to enlighten him on the perilous position of this personage. During his stay in Toulouse, he had left behind dishonorable memories. According to this letter, Paschalis was not than a simple car mechanic, who had not been initiated into the trade. a lodge; its titles were of his own invention, etc.

The Frenchwoman did not want to take advantage of this warning; she She responded with an apology for Paschalis. She saw in him only a powerful mason whose authority was envied.

(1) History of the founding of the Grand Orient, page 242.

DB FREEMASONRY. 455

members, resorted to the grand lodge which had the temple closed Paschalis's place. The latter, no longer enjoying any credit, penniless, he made his way to Paris in 1768, where he made new dupes; then he secretly left for Saint-Domingue, where he was supposedly going to collect an inheritance. He died in Port-au-Prince in 1779.

From the Council of the Emperors of the East and West soon emerged another swarm of malcontents, who founded a new institution under the title of Council of Knights of the East. Following the example of the other chapters, he established workshops and wrote to the lodges to invite them to fight the system of kinship between the Freemasons and the Templars, whose beliefs they had tried to promote. He proscribed any rank having any connection with this regime.

So our institution was secretly expanding across France, like a vast genie whispering in the ears of intelligent men his ideas for progress and reform.

The constant agitation she maintained in people's minds, the discussions, even quarrels born of rivalry, consequence of the various grade systems, accustomed the citizens to take care of social interests, to present themselves in the public assemblies to discuss their rights and learn their duties.

Germany, more so than Scotland, England, and France, was tormented by sects, orders and rites of all kinds.

The Brotherhood of the Moravian Brethren of the Order of Frankish Religious Freemasons, or the Order of the Mustard Seed (1), the Society of Brothers of the Rosy Cross, etc., already existed there when the regime Ramsay's Templar was introduced there.

Two lodges, one from Unverden and the other from Dresden, adopted this system under the name of the Dresden Rectified Regime. Other at- The leaders followed their example and successfully propagated this new diet.

Charles Gathel, Baron de Hund, received into Freemasonry in Frankfurt-sur-le-Mein in 1742, affiliated with the chapter of Clermont in 1754, he then created a new regime in his lodge in Kitilitz

(1) The motto of the order was: None of us lives for himself.

456 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

that under the title of Strict Observance which surpassed all known limits of Scottish Rite Freemasonry.

Following his system, a bizarre amplification of Ramsay's, The Order of the Temple had not ceased to exist. Its assertion rests on a fable enacted in two grades: the Chosen One of the Nine and the Chosen One of the Fifteen, and here is the outline:

In 1503, two unworthy knights, who represent us the allegorical authors of the death of Hiram, Noffodey and Florian, were punished for crimes and deprived of their commanderies. They asked the provincial grand master of Mount Carmel to... They had possessions they could not obtain. [They murdered him, hid his body under debris from bushes and fled to France. Upon arriving in Paris, they accused the Templars of the crimes the most abominable, which led to the dissolution of the company ...and the death of his grandmaster, Pierre d'Aumont. provincial of Auvergne, two commanders and five knights... They fled to Scotland disguised as stonemasons. There they found a contingent of followers with whom they resolved to continue the order. To escape persecution, they borrowed from architecture symbols under which they sheltered their doctrines, and took the name Freemasons. In 1771, the seat of the Grand Master was transported to Old Aberdeen, and from there the order spread throughout Germany, Magne, in Italy, in Spain and other parts of Europe and the East India Company, in Holland, which possessed great wealth, immense properties, and whose members obeyed nothing less to the laws of the country.

The goal of the followers of the Strict Observance was not to continue to seriously maintain the Order of the Temple, because they recognized that, the time of fanatical crusading having passed, it would have been for them It would be madness to venture into such an undertaking (1). But they wanted to form a separate society in Germania, in a political and religious purpose, aiming at the happiness of its members and to the improvement of society. [They took as an example the company of the East India Company, in Holland, which possessed great wealth, immense properties, and whose members obeyed nothing less to the laws of the country.

(4) Statutes of the illustrious order of the Strict Observance, published by the provincial in 1767. – Anti-Saint-Nicaise, 2nd vol., pages 181–202.

The main means on which they based their success

Their undertaking was: 1° to gain the protection of the princes,

in order to spread freely throughout the world under a high influence; 2° to acquire land in order to establish businesses, charitable institutions; 3° to give encouragement-transfers to commerce and industry; it was, in a word, of to veil their plans from the eyes of the common people without, through works philanthropy projects.

The name of the order they were continuing could harm the pros-The peril of the enterprise had to remain secret. Freemasonry would serve as a cloak or shield for this order until it could safely show herself in broad daylight; she would be the base, and it is from among its members that it should recruit its followers.

The names of the initiates were followed by characteristic denominations. ristics. A large number of princes, statesmen, savans, etc., were affiliated with this institution which had distributed Europe in various provinces (1),

Other sects with Masonic forms soon emerged drawing from this fertile stock. The main ones were those of the Clerici, or Clerics of the Late Observance, of the High Observance, of The Exact Observance (2), of the Zinnendorf rite, of Illuminism of Weishaupt, offshoot of Swedenborg's spiritualism.

The Cleres, surpassing their elders in foolish pretensions, boasted that they alone knew the secrets of Freemasonry the places where the Templar treasures had been hidden. 1] It was necessary to be a Roman Apostolic Christian and to possess all the degrees military personnel of the Strict Observance to be admitted. Their rite was divided into ten grades in which the principal tasks were handled-element, according to the practice of other German sects, of alchemy, of

(1) Here is the designation: 1st province Aragon; 2nd Auvergne; 3rd the West or

Languedoc; 4° T,yon; 5° Burgundy; 6° Great Britain; 7° Lower Saar, the Elbe and the Oder, Prussian Pulogne, Livonia and Courland; 8° Germany AMPÉTIERRES the PO, the Tiber, Italy and Sicite; 9° Greece and the archipelago. (Acta Latomorum, 2nd vol., p. 134.)

(2) The Strict was the continuation of the Templars; the High was dedicated to the en-signification of magic, cabal, divination, etc.; the Exact participated

50

ee —

an Le mem ee ee en mie em qe

— me

nm um =

ee

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

magic, cabal, divination and evocation, that is to say dreams, lies, everything that had no connection to the healthy Freemason.

The superiors of this order, founded on hatred and rivalry with the Strict Observance, known in 1788, included Baron de Raven, the private advisor Duffel and the Protestant theologian Starck.

Zinnendorf, chief surgeon of the Berlin General Staff, was Knight Commander of the Strict Observance and Director of lodges in Prussia when a man named Cklach, an accomplished juggler of Sweden, informed him of a new Masonic system.

Zinnendorf modified it and gave it his name; after great sustained struggles against other rites with courage by the nova-
The new regime, with its leader and followers, was consolidated. In 1772, Louis-George Charles of Hesse-Darmstadt was appointed Grand Master of Zinnendorf, deputy grand master of the new rite. It was composed of seven degrees divided into three series.

Some authors report that the deputy used his influence on grand master to obtain from the Grand Lodge of England a constitution of the national grand lodge of his regime at the seat of Berlin. A treaty was concluded with her in 1773. She imposed on the new The Ja regime, on the condition of fighting, the Templar system and the order of Strict Observance.

The Zinnendorf rite was a great success. It was followed until...

Berlin declared it was abandoning the 'high degrees' system so as not to to now follow only the symbolic ranks. One year later, the The grand lodges of Hanover and Hamburg allied themselves with her ct embraced his system which is today the main one in Germany as in England.

The Templar system, which absorbed Freemasonry, did not fix not all the attention of the curious. Spiritualism counted in the German passion, a crowd of believers divided into several sects.

Swedenborg, one of the most famous secretaries, had been, thus As we said earlier, the creator of a religion new into which he had introduced ideas and forms Masonic. He had studied our mysteries and traced them back to them. our doctrine to the Egyptians, the Persians, the Magi, and the Jews.

OF FREEMASONRY. 459

He wrote The Heavenly Jerusalem or The Spiritual World to serve Gospel to his followers.

It was in Tartary, a land ruled by patriarchs, that the word lost, that is to say, the original innocence had to be rediscovered. He considered Jesus Christ the creator as the one true God, the source inexhaustible in life, love, wisdom, warmth and light—First. According to his system, death was only a transitory act during which man left earthly life for life celestial or eternal.

Swedenborg had established his system within a Masonic rite divided into two classes of grades called temples.

First temple: Apprentice, journeyman, chosen master.

Second temple: Companion, master craftsman, grand architect tectate and knight commander, Kadosh.

Swedenborg was succeeded by Weishaupt; his system, more positive, more political than Swedenborg's, tended to bring together Germany under a single government and to do all the Various nations, one single nation. The princes and the nations disappeared—

They will rail from above the earth, and all fathers will be like Abraham. the absolute ruler of his family, and reason will be the only code of man. Such, in a few words, was the doctrine of the sect.

His main axiom was: The end justifies the means.
docility, unwavering submission, passive obedience towards unknown leaders, considered to be the most perfect and the most enlightened of men, such were certain laws of the order.

Weishaupt, the antichrist of the unreasoning crowd, had recognized the necessity of German nationality. Firstly, these were the first to recognize efforts were aimed at gaining followers among the Franks Freemasons. He explored the various regimes, boldly casting his nets.
and made a great catch of men. He promised the masons to reveal to them secrets contained within the ranks superiors who existed only in his imagination (1).

(1) Barrue! attributes to Knigge the creation and organization of the grades of the illu-ministries,

860 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

One of his most skilled and enlightened disciples, Philo Knigge took advantage of the presence of a crowd of masons from all over the countries gathered at the Wilhelmsbad convent in 1782 to propagate
the sect. Several members were initiated into it and took it with them.
their homeland. Avignon and Strasbourg are cited as having had lodges of Illuminati. But this was mainly in Italy, in Austria-it was in Russia, Holland, and Saxony that the doctrine made the most of progress.

The known ranks of the Enlightenment were divided into classes
or buildings, as follows: |

First class or interior building – Preparatory grades
tion, or enlightened: Novice, minerval, enlightened minor, enlightened major.

Intermediate grades: Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master Novice
Scottish, Scottish knight or enlightened director.

Second class, or upper building. – Minor mysteries:
Epopot or enlightened priest, regent or enlightened prince.

Great mysteries: The mage-philosopher, the man-king.

A government of order was, as in the Strict-Observance, established for each country.

Among the most famous innovators of that era was Joseph Balsamo, nicknamed Count of Cagliostro. Born in Palermo

sent by his uncles to the Benfratelli convent in Cartagirone, where he learned the first notions of chemistry from the apothecary and of medicine. From her departure from the convent until the time of his Masonic inventions, 1} traveled to all countries, leaving After him came scandals and dupes.

According to the chronicle, it was in manuscripts dealing with magic, Egyptian masonry, from which he drew the core idea to to which he attached all his thoughts, the cement that served him to connect all his projects, the cornerstone of his ritual Egyptian.

Having established this ritual, he worked to give it the charm of the new-beauty, prestige of origin, number and variety of ranks, Finally, the magnificence of the ceremony. He first wanted to speak to the eyes of the crowd, for he knew that, once seduced, he would easily triumph over the intelligent part of the nation ma-conical. Its success was rapid and complete.

OF FREEMASONRY. 461

This system, at first glance, offered a laudable goal. It tended to human perfection through physical and moral regeneration. The the first nalière or philosopher's stone and the acacia were the first means of preserving the strengths and attractions of the youth; it was a potion of immortality. The pentagon was supposed to to restore man to his original state of innocence by purifying him of any original sin. He was making people re-examine the origin of Freemasonry-laughter at Enoch and Elijah, as Ramsay had brought his own to the Templars.

Enoch and Elijah had spread their institution throughout the parts of the world, where little by little it had weakened and become corrupted; Cagliostro came to regenerate it. That is how the Templars, According to Ramsay, they had spread true Freemasonry throughout country where it had lost some of its original purity, when he came restore.

Cagliostro recognized two forms of Freemasonry: that of men and that of women. His mission was to reform them and their to print a new activity, a new strength. Cagliostro

He was given the Egyptian title of Grand Copt. All his followers of-

were to have the utmost confidence in his promises. 1} obtained the gifts he bestowed upon them through visions and evocations

These evocations form the main part of the ceremony of Cagliostro; they are developed on an immense scale of ninety degrees.

"Apprentices, journeymen, and mistresses," he said

"Thory (1), formed the entire adoption lodge. The two

"The first classes were considered schools -in "which the initiates underwent their novitiate to achieve the "Mistress rank. Only mistresses were the "great secrets, such as the mysteries of physical regeneration"
"that and morality, the art and power of evocations, etc."

"The first established mistresses had received, through the

(4) History of the Foundation of the Grand Orient, page 215.

"no personal power is born to the one who receives it"
"the success of magical operations. They themselves were supposed to em-
"to use the intermediary of a young boy or girl," who took the name of pupil or that of dove, depending on his
"sex. These children were supposed to be in a state of pure innocence-"
"Cence; the high priest, or, in his absence, the mistress who "presided, gave them the power to operate; they alone had the "Visions and CN reported. Everything was hidden from the eyes of..."
people present.

"The lodge was led by a grand mistress who was called » active mistress (M.*. A.-.). She was usually accompanied accompanied by twelve sister-mistresses, a number necessary for the per-» perfection of the works; the number could be increased to twenty-four-three. Each of them had a distinctive name borrowed from "Those of the Sibyls, such as: Hellespontica, Erythraea, Sam-Nian, Delphian, etc.

"In all important matters, and especially for the admission-
"Regarding the mistresses, one consulted either Moses, or the genies, or the angels, whether the high priest, or any other person
"Dead or alive."

"For these mysteries, it was necessary to evoke them, summer."

"Not only did the mistresses conjure away supernatural spirits"
"relatives, they still had the power to reveal the events-» ments which took place in places far from the one where
"They acted at the very moment of labor; they predicted"
"also the future. Here are the details of the operation necessary for

"This operation was not part of the ordinary work of the lodges," that she carried out her actions in the world, even in the presence of people sounds that were not initiated.

"On a table covered with a green cloth, a carafe will be placed"
"of pure water and nine lit candles."

"The acting mistress will enter into adoration during which-"
» a few moments; after which, making the en- kneel before her "Fan, who is to act as an intermediary, will impose both on him."

3

There

THERE
v

462 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"The breath of the high cophant, the gift of his power. These..."
» transmitted to their companions; but this faculty did not give-

OF FREEMASONRY. 463

"Hands on her head; she will remain in contemplation for what-"
"a few minutes and will say to him: Child of God, I command him to repeat-" » First WITH Me:

"Great eternal God! by the power you have given to
"Grand-Cophie, founder of the order, and by the one that procures me
"My innocence, I beg you to stop your benevolence!"
"to dedicate myself to my individuality and to give me the means to act"
according to your wishes and those of my mistress.
"After this prayer, the mistress will remain in ecstasy for some-"
"Quite moments to invoke the power of heaven upon the child, and"
"Finally, he'll place it on a chair at the same height as the carafe, summer."

It was in the vase that the apparitions took place, which were not visible only to the child.

As always happens in such cases, the innovation found a
A crowd of believers and followers. Extraordinary events were reported.
foreseen or predicted in advance by the pupil or the dove, the may-active braid. But these were only games of sleight of hand.
cut by acrobats in front of the crowd to attract them into the inter-laughing man of the temple.

After traveling to the main cities of Germany, where he sought to spread his rite by fighting others and saying Assisted by God, he founded adoption lodges and performed miracles in employing its usual means of a dove or a pupil commanding the spirits.

_ [visited Saint Petersburg, Warsaw, where he obtained only a success- This disputed. He came to Strasbourg, where he practiced the profession of charlatan, and the cures he performed there, he said, were in such so numerous and so wonderful that in a short time his house found itself full of crutches left behind by the cripples. cured. He acquired a country house there which was named Cagliostro. Comine in Germany, he aroused enthusiasm among the masons, and "received during his stay in Strasbourg, according "His story, many honors, courtesies, distinctions, and * a large quantity of gifts in silver, jewelry and other » effects for him and his wife (1). »

(4) Life of Joseph Balsamo, Count of Cagliostro; a flight. in-So, Paris, at Onfroy, 1791. 1

He went to Naples and returned to Bordeaux, where, for eleven months, R he attended to his ordinary Masonic work. Having done the dove test behind a screen in communication with the angels, she displayed extraordinary clairvoyance. naire, which he took advantage of with gullible people.

From Bordeaux he came to Lyon; there he visited a lodge of the High Ob- service which brought him great honors; there he spoke with em- phase of his rite which attracted some followers; he commanded them to choose twelve masters and an innocent young girl to create a lodge of his regime. The next day, he held the assembly and en- He taught that every man must be an apostle of God. He had a lent He swore an oath to his followers according to his system, and declared to them that Among them was a Judas. Indeed, says his historian, the len- tomorrow, after the dove exercises in front of the carafe and behind the screen, exercises that had the greatest effect, one 'of the twelve deserted the society. According to Cagliostro, this man was He was punished some time later; he was robbed and ruined.

The eleven disciples who remained faithful founded a magnificent lodge which It cost a lot of trouble and money. She had three apartments. distinct, each dedicated to one of the first three degrees. was called Triumphant Wisdom and was to have primacy over all the other lodges of which she was to be the mother and mistress.

He himself founded the lodge with a pompous ceremony described in a book that he left to his sons (his followers), as well as his a seal that depicted a snake pierced by an arrow. IT was named:

to whom he communicated his divine power. He gave them the model of a patent of institution on which he affixed his monogram, so that, he said, they might possess the sealed plate bearing the cipher of their founder (1).

His wife and he received rich gifts, mainly in Masonic ornaments, then they left for Paris. Some time later, the consecration of the building erected in Lyon took place. sent two deputies to preside over this ceremony which was of extraordinary magnificence. One of the followers gives

4G4 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

ee roc ee nn ce

(1) This piece is reproduced in the Masonic Review of Lyou, second issue quarterly, 1849.

eq ee

22 22 20 oo 2 + ne Eee ee ee ee teen ne— ten

OF FREEMASONRY. 465

some details in a letter addressed to the Grand Copt (1). J In 1782, Cagliostro founded an adoption motherhouse in Paris. of high-ranking Egyptian Freemasonry. He received a large number there of people and worked there following his rite with two pupils. Their prayers, the seven angels descended from heaven, what they had not dared to do so until that day. He founded it in his home a second lodge, no doubt in favor of his most devoted disciples educated. No longer able to manage his task, his wife came to his help. M^{re} de la Motte having once attended one of his sessions, wanted to know the sex of the child a mother was carrying within her. The pupil, questioned by the Grand Copt, replied—said without hesitation that it was a boy, which fully satisfied the mother and the assembly. The chronicle forgot to say whether the prophecy is accomplished. In any case, Cagliostro, like all the most Even great seers could not foresee their own destiny. Implicated In the Affair of the Necklace, he fled to London, where he held several Masonic meetings. Forced to leave London, he moved to Basel

(1) "Our companions," this letter says, "have shown a fervor, a noble piety and the work and the preparation lasted three days, thanks to a remarkable combination of circumstances, we were gathered 27 strong in the temple, the blessing of which it was completed on the 27th, and there were 54 hours of worship.

"We will not attempt to recount the divine ceremony to you... We will tell you, however, that at the moment when we asked the Lord for a sign who made us know that our vows and our temple were pleasing to him, while our master was in the middle of the air, and the first philosopher appeared, uninvited, of the New Testament. He blessed us, after bowing down before the blue cloud, whose appearance we obtained, and which rose upon this cloud of which our young The dove could not bear the splendor from the moment it descended to earth. "The two great prophets and the destroyer of Israel gave us signs" capable of their kindness and obedience to your orders; everything contributed to making: "The operation was complete and perfect, as far as our limitations allow." (Life of Joseph Balsamo, book previously cited.)

We made fruitless searches to obtain some remains of this site ancient lodge. Its existence cannot, however, be called into question; it is confirmed by the following facts recorded in documents reproduced in Acta Latomorum.

In 1785, Cagliostro, having been summoned to the convent in Paris by the Philateles, he proposed. He decided to go there; but he soon changed his mind, demanding that they make themselves previously initiated in the Egyptian mother lodge of Lyon. They refused, and invited—rent the members of Triumphant Wisdom to bring to the convent the tribute of their loyalty. They replied that they were obliged to comply with the prescribed rules. by the unknown leader of true Freemasonry; they abstained.

ES 1;7+y CRE

HAS

466 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

and created in his home an Egyptian lodge modeled after that of Lyon, and to which he gave the other of mother lodge of the country Swiss.

He then went to Biel, Aix, Turin, Genoa, Verona, to Rovcredo, in Trento, etc., where he successively occupied himself with nonsense. But his destiny, in some ways similar to that of the bird that the venomous reptile fascinates and attracts to it by an irresistible and miraculous power drove him towards Rome, where The inquisition and death awaited him.

He arrived in this anti-Masonic city in May 1789. He appeared. He learned that a lodge existed there and wanted to visit it. As elsewhere, He advocated his rite there, which people wanted to know; he communicated his manuscripts to several followers who considered him from then on with the lodges he had established everywhere, hoping to profit from them new financial resources. These eventually closed he paid attention to her requests and found himself in deep misery. Until now, he had shrunk away from the fear of the Inquisition. by refusing to create Egyptian lodges in the States of pope. But need triumphed over his scruples; he threw away the pre-the first foundations of a women's lodge, believing they would find there resources. His plan failed. He communicated his ritual to some followers who refused to pay for his constitution-tion. The fear of being betrayed by one of his initiates caused him to fall to feet of a confessor to whom he confessed everything in the hope of obtaining his pardon. He wrote to the lodges of his correspondence that, victim He had been imprisoned following a denunciation, and was seeking... prompt assistance. What he feared soon came to pass. 11 was 'arrested; his manuscripts containing the entire system of his rite, his His ornaments, Masonic jewelry, and correspondence were put under the sealed islands of the holy office which conducted his trial.

But most of his followers already had their eyes opened. They knew that it was just an imposter who had wanted to shoot pro- They acted in good faith and abandoned him to his judges. Some Only fanatics pitied him.

After a lengthy legal process, he was sentenced to death as dogmatic heretic, etc. However, Pius VI commuted his sentence in a perpetual prison in a fortress.

OF FREEMASONRY. 467

Some time later, it was learned that he had died at the castle. Saint-Ange.

The desire to give our readers a succinct notion of these famous sects that men with little knowledge of history and Masonic knowledge has been confused with our institution. because they had borrowed its forms and uses, has taken us beyond the scope of our topic. Let's return to our steps.

The creation of lodges, chapters, councils, colleges, of regimes, by simple irremovable masters or simple at-bound by at least a problematic skill, had thrown anarchy in the administration of order, both in France and in Germany and other countries.

The Grand Lodge was often troubled by its creations. recent ones who claimed a right of supremacy over it (1). The latter demonstrated to the workshops of her obedience the futility to the moral qualities of the followers; but to reason these latter pre- would create ranks, titles and ornaments.

The Grand Lodge was therefore led to take a measure of rigor that his dignity demanded.

On August 14, 1766, it abolished all the constitutions of chapters. very, and forbade his constituents to recognize any in the future of these illegitimate powers.

This stoppage was like the prelude to the one that would break the The Grand Lodge itself a few years later.

Protests and scenes of disorder disturbed the proceedings. These members of the Grand Lodge grieve the true adepts who see Ja Freemasonry in its principles, in its dogma, and not in empty formulas, in more or less pompous ceremonies Its meetings were banned by order of the government.

It is undoubtedly such facts that have led authors to

(t) Like the English Grand Lodge, with which it formed an alliance in 1767, it did not conferred only the three symbolic degrees.

PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

to write that Freemasonry counted its most dangerous enemies placed among his followers.

The work of the Grand Lodge was not resumed until 1771. During his inactivity, disaffected individuals known as The banished brothers had held secret meetings and formed workshops. [Their aim was to replace the Grand Lodge with a new power, they had appointed the Duke of as their Grand Master Chartres, which we have already discussed. But when the Grand Lodge resumed his work, the constitutions granted during the interdict were cancelled, and all the lodges were obliged to renew their titles. Commissioners were appointed to reorganize the Masonic order and hierarchy. These, in concert with the Banished brothers and the Duke of Luxembourg, substitute for the grandmother three, met to form a new constitution.

On December 24, 1772, they declared that the former Great- The lodge had ceased to exist and a new body would administer it. the order under the name of Grand Orient of France.

The new government appointed a commission in 1773 to examine all known grades, recast the most important ones and

The commissioners became lost in a maze of rites and regimes my, sects, etc., and presented no project.

However, in 1781, the Grand Orient established within its ranks a chamber known as the chamber of high ranks, to which he entrusted the special mandate—a task that the first commission had been unable to accomplish.

The Senate committees of that time did not contribute any more than those of today's senate, a great speed in their work. The chamber of high ranks did not present its report five years after her appointment. She had divided the top grade of four orders: the Chosen One, the Knight of the East, the Scotsman and the Knight Rose-Croix. The three symbolic degrees completed the sacred number of seven. Each grade had its own instructions and code. The Grand Orient adopted this project under the name of French Rite, and declared that it would only one admitted and practiced by the lodges of its correspondence.

A large number of French lodges refused to follow the new rite, and the foreign lodges did not welcome it any better.

OF FREEMASONRY. 469

However, time has proven the Grand-Commission right. East; he went further than she did in the reform of the thirty-three rungs of the Scottish ladder. Twenty-eight have worn out; there are none. Only five remain in practice: those of apprentice, of companion, master, Rosicrucian, and Kadosh. The others do not are more than just historical relics.

The chapters of the foreign lodges ceased their relations with the new rite, which nonetheless persisted in its system, and carefully took care to secure the support of the dissenting orders which were to ensure its existence and consolidate its power.

In 1775, the Grand Orient received Scottish directories from the Reformed Freemasons from Germany established in France Meeting request.

These directorates had a name and a seat of authority. individuals; each exercised supremacy within their jurisdiction Masonic. The one in Strasbourg was called the Directory of Burgundy, the 5th province; that of Auvergne was based in Lyon, under the title of Directory of Auvergne, 3rd province; that of Occitania was in Montpellier, and was called Directory of Occitanie, 2nd province. These three distinct institutions, united by the same principles, the same doctrine and the same Masonic forms, were designated under the general name of French Language.

This rite was a continuation of the reformed regime of Dresden, and was based on Ramsay's Templar system.

The initiation ritual is divided into two distinct but related parts. by an intermediate grade. The first is called the external order-laughter, and the second inner order. The outer order comprises the grades of apprentice, journeyman, and master, which are the same as those of other rites; the internal order is composed of the equestrian chapter, of the novice and the knight. The intermediate grade- The diary that unites these two orders is the Scottish master of Saint-André.

Here are some of the practices followed in the initiation process. of this rite (1).

(4) We owe most of our information on the rectified regime to the ebli-

"The honor of the Freemasons." Pernot, Venerable Master of the Besançon lodge, and Aubry, provincial of the rectified regime.

470 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

No one can obtain the first level of education without having was deemed worthy of this favor by his morality, his intelligence agency, his education, and a certain fortune that put him at shelter from the need for help. Once admitted, he does not manage to second degree, after having proven in writing that he has taken care of the rank he holds and makes known his opinion on the order Masonic. The same applies to the third degree.

To reach the Scottish master level, the recipient must give evidence that he has acquired all the necessary knowledge to the one who possesses the third symbolic degree, considered as the ultimate in true Freemasonry. |

The Scottish master or intermediate grade includes instruction- tion of all degrees of the Scottish scale, from the third up to the eighteenth, excluding the rank of elected official, formal- prohibited by the reformed regime. The Scottish Master degree granted as a reward for services rendered to the order by a large accuracy in fulfilling one's Masonic and civic duties. It is in this rank is chosen for candidates for the Knights of the Benevolent Order. saints of the Holy City.

The reception of a knight is in accordance with that of the other orders of chivalry; it consists of a profession of faith, a vow of order, an act of obedience to legitimate superiors, novitiate of at least one year, armor of the knight receiving a name of order, escutcheon, coat of arms rules and motto.

A commission had been appointed by the Grand Orient to examine the request of the directorates. On May 25, 1775, elk present a report entirely in favour of the proposed meeting.

The merger treaty was formulated in twelve articles; by article V, the Grand Orient of France and the Scottish directorates conserve respectively and exclusively held the management, the administration, the monitoring of their rite; they promised to maintain such discipline in their workshops, that the political government-tick would never have any reason to make any reproach on their occasion to the Grand Orient, a natural guarantor of good order and of the tranquility that reigns in all the lodges of France.

The same treaty of union made the two rites compatible and

— mm
oo mm mt

OF FREEMASONRY. 471

allowed members of one to affiliate with the other. The establishment—the formation of a Scottish lodge, far from harming the French lodges already established, this offered them the advantage of extending their relationships by—everywhere the Scottish regime existed.

On August 19, 1776, the Grand Orient decreed that the treaty of union would be notified to all lodges of both rites.

A Masonic code of the united and rectified lodges of France and a general code of regulations for the Order of Knights of the Order of the Knights of The laws of the Holy City were discussed and adopted at the convent national of Gaul in November 1778. They were executed in all the lodges and chapters of the French Language up to the General Convent of Wilhelmsbad, in July and August 1782, where they were retained (1).

The revolution of 1789 interrupted the work of this regime which we see reborn in 1807 in Besançon.

The Freemasons... Knights of the Holy City and members of the committee to gather the scattered materials of the reformed rite and the Sincerity lodge and Perfect Union. They urgently issued the following decree:

"Whereas the members of the Burgundy board, sitting in Strasbourg, scattered, cannot attend to the interests of the institution, the officers gathered in Besançon take the title of Directory of Burgundy, 5th province of the order, and decide that a deputy will be sent to Paris to prepare for the election of a national grand master, a chancellor and a grand directory of France, composed of nine members.

The lodge at the Centre des Amis, affiliated with the one in Besançon, had The amended system was adopted. A committee was formed with the participation of two workshops, under the name of the Directory of Neustria, which elected for National Grand Master, F.*. Cambacérès.

From this day forward, the Neustria Directory met every weeks. An active correspondence soon developed between the isolated members of the former directorates. Those of Septimania and of Occitanie, sitting in Bordeaux and Montpellier, approved

(1) These codes were published in the Masonic Review of Lyon, 11th year, pages 59, 244 and following.

ie es – open 2–0 een rene

2 to nn 9 oo oo mm

479 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

the works carried out in the name of the Burgundy directory. We are– it was hoped that the directorates of Lyon and Marseille would follow this for example, and that the rectified order would soon be restored in France in all its splendor.

On January 31, 1808, the Burgundy directory decreed that the The lodge Sincérité el Parfaile Union, of Besançon, would be the great– Scottish lodge of the rectified regime of Burgundy; that all its members would move from the rank of master to that of eco– master I know, with communication of all the grades of the French rite until– than to that of the Rosicrucians, according to the old custom of the regime.

On January 24, 1808, it was decreed that the knights would not recognize would treat in the adopted system that the three degrees of masonry–

Benevolent knight.

On May 14th, the Scottish directory was confirmed by patent-your specials from the grandmaster.

Finally, on January 29, 1810, a decree established the prefecture commandery of Besançon and invited the grand master to elect a provincial grand master of the 5th district, the 2nd and 3rd districts having The choice of this appointment was left to the sovereign grand master. F.-. Willermoz was appointed to the post of Grand Chancellor of the 2nd, sitting-giant in Lyon, and F.*. Allut to that of the 3rd, sitting in Montpellier. The Grand Prior had his seat in Basel.

On April 24, 1811, the Grand Orient adopted the Rectified Scottish Rite under its special protection and frees him from all submission (1). The lodge of Strasbourg renounced its former rights and declared general-how to no longer want to compete except through feelings of friendship and of dedication (2).

(1) At that time the directory of Burgundy, 5th province, was composed as follows:

De Bry (Joannes, Eques à Siclla, Maltre Prov.-., prefect of Doubs; de Raymond (Ludovicus), Eques ab Herba, provincial chancellor; Branch (Felicianus), Eques at Ramo Oleaceo, prefect of Besançon. Ledoux (Cæsareus), Eques in Tritico, treasurer, president of the Committee. Ferroux (Stephanus), Eques to Vitibus, dean. Pourcellot (Marcellus), Equ to Gladiolo, prefectural chancellor. Darlin (Ludovicus), Eques ab hyssopo, master of ceremonies, mayor of Besançon. Marchant (Carolus), Eques to Nubibus, inspector of "ovices, Seguin (Artouius), Eques in Quercu, seat of administration. Ordinary (Joannes), Eques at Manua Argentea, id.

(2) If the chronicle is to be believed, followers of Strasboury would have vainly attempted in 4817 to re-establish the provincial lodge of Burgundy in this direction.

has

ne Con tm

OF THE FRENCH-NACONNERIE. 473

| N

The combined lodges of Sincerity-Perfect-Union and Constant-Amüié, of Besançon, alone professes the rectified regime today (1).

In 1786, the Grand Orient made a treaty of union with the chapter-general of France, into which the council of

In 1799, an incident occurred between the few former members of the Grand Lodge and the Grand Orient, a concordat that put an end to the division of Masonic powers that existed in France, since 1773.

However, its integration into the French rite was not unanimously sanctioned

Followers of the Scottish Rite had refused to recognize the obedience of the Grand Orient. The latter had forced them to close the gates of his temples. Some disgruntled masons had gathered in a cellar at a caterer's, and had established there Secret meetings. – Lodges, without consulting the rule or reason, embraced their cause.

The famous Stephen Morin, whom we saw depart in 1761, for America with full powers to spread the ma- Scottish nonsense in twenty-five degrees, was returning from Charlestown and became part of the small church. Other travelers arrived Also from the New World: They all took the lead among the dissidents. Parisians who openly displayed the flag of dissent. De Grasse-Tilly, whom we have already mentioned, created a supreme- council of 53 degrees which bore the title of Pompeii, because of the name of the gallery in which he held his meetings. He conferred his new ranks for vain and unconcerned followers Masonic orthodoxy. He created workshops which, animated without doubts of a good spirit, unwittingly brought anarchy into the order.

The lodge of Saint Alexander of Scotland, which had replaced that

(1) The board is currently composed of the following Brothers*:

Jansun (Carolus), Eques at Nubibus, provincial master; Pernot (Augustus), Eques to Charitate, general visitor; Aubry (Joannes), Eques à Flore rubro, chancellor provincial and prefect; Proudhon (Claudius), Eques in Corona aurca, doyeu; Jussy (Joannes Francisus), Eques ab hyssopo, treasurer; Craplet (Ludovicus), Eques at Columbis, Inspector of novices; Vivier (Claudius), Eques at Columnis, prior.

Two members must be #imis to complete the number nine.

31

ès – ee a CRT Es ee ee

of the Social Contract, favored with all his efforts, under the pretext of tolerance, the Scottish schism. His authority was accepted, and She chose Prince Louis, a brilliant name, as her Grand Master. Dubious authority, negative power. The officers were elected among the distinguished figures of the time. But, to the vanity of Human things! The names of simple initiates devoted to the order have remained in the annals of Masonic history, and none of Those from this lodge did not survive.

However, the French rite, which had long had in mind He was watching over the building of Masonic unity in France. He knew- He knew the schemes of his new rival, he knew her vulnerable side- He reportedly bought the powers of the American founders.

their mysteries, their science, their ranks, and there was no misfortune in them.

The process was no further advanced. It was then that the pact of union took place. Signed at the Hôtel du Maréchal Kellermann.

Thus, the Grand Orient, which already held bare ownership of the twenty-five primitive Scottish degrees, had just added to his domain the eight new ranks of the King of Prussia.

Through his successive acquisitions, he embraced all the rites, all regimes. But this truly imperial power was of short duration. When, like the archangel, he crushed with his all-powerful foot the serpent of discord, the latter proudly raised- They are the head. Followers without principles, without character, without dignity, sought to break the concordat.

The Grand Orient, it is true, provided them with a slight pretext. He had declared, on December 19, 1804, that he would profess all rules, provided that their principles were in accordance with general system of order. However, on July 21, 1805, he had decreed a directory of rites with full power to reject or admit all Masonic systems not yet recognized by nominati- This creation, a consequence of his initial declaration, was interpreted differently, and the fight broke out with more with more fervor than ever. The Scottish Americans declared of new independents of the French rite. The sensible followers of this- el, now abandoning the means of conciliation attempted up to That day, they resolved to let the dissidents go. However, it was agreed in Pamiable that the Supreme Council would have an existence a mn eu:

independent and that it could issue constitutions to workshops superior to the eighteenth century; that the Grand Orient admitted—would nister the workshops below the nineteenth century, that is to say at starting from that of Ruse-Croix. The Grand Orient, possessor, As we have seen, of all rites, of all regimes, temporarily retreated into the French rite which embraces the eighteen Scottish degrees, reducing them to seven. But his rivals drew a serious conclusion from this. They have claimed that he had renounced the exercise of higher ranks on the 18th, and they have always disputed it with him since then; and they dispute it with him. Even today, the ability to set up workshops above of the 18th. |

It is from this period that the incessant struggle which divides these dates. Two rites cause so much harm to the Masonic order.

We cannot enter into all the discussions, the stories—tations, the quarrels that have divided two powers for so long made to understand each other, to love each other and to administer order together masonic in France. The questions raised by pride and the vanities are of little interest and offer only the spectacle of human poverty.

With the Supreme Council of Pompeii had come a rival a new council, that of the Prado; then with these another council, that of Misraïin. It was disorder, an into— anarchy maple in the temple of reason, justice and fraternity.

However, one of the most courageous members of the dissident movement resolved to triumph over evil; General Fernig, in concert along with a few other distinguished initiates, worked on the reorganization—the establishment of a single Supreme Council. In 1822, the table of its members were arrested. The Count of Valence was appointed Grand Commander commander in place of Cambacérès; the Count of Ségur, lieutenant—

Grand Commander; Count Muraire and Baron de Feruig, Secretaries of the Holy Roman Empire. Members who did not possess the 33rd degree were called upon to form a lodge known as the Comman—derie, which was presided over by the Count of Ségur.

On September 12 and 15, 1815, the Grand Orient created in within it a chamber of high ranks, under the title of Council supreme of the rites, and at the same time established a superior workshop,

2 rm min min Pen 0 Qu On min nn een eme

476 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

under the title of Grand Council of Rites, which later took the name of Grand College of the Riles, Supreme Council for the France and its French possessions.

He declared himself, by virtue of the 1804 treaty, the sole legitimate possessor time of the ancient Scottish Rite accepted, considering the Supreme-Council as schismatic and irregular. This claim offended the tolerant spirit of some lodges in the provinces, which, through wise men observations brought the Grand Orient back to more fraternal towards his rival. Finally, on November 6, 1841, on the instances of F. Bouilly, special representative of the Grand-master, and according to the report of F.*. Desanlis, then president from one of the chambers of the Grand Orient, the latter left to workshops of his obedience the ability to receive as visi-the masons of the Supreme Council, and authorized those of his correspondence to visit Islands workshops of the rival authority. This A wise measure, aimed at the reconciliation of the two parts, and which were not sufficiently taken into account in the Grand-Oricnt, was coldly received by the Supreme Council. February 1st 48492, he sent a circular to his workshops in which, after Having announced the great act that had just taken place, he made them the following recommendations: |

"Remember that nothing has changed, as far as our obedience is concerned-
"Diction, to our constitutions, to our rite. Scottish Rite Freemasonry remains entirely "In its entirety, without alteration. When you are in contact, either with "lodges, either with masons of the Grand Orient obedience"
"From France, you will continue to welcome them with all the feelings-
"Means of concord, union and fraternity that Freemasonry"
* imposes on the children of light, without however the ranks
"The vestments they may wear entitle them to honors"
"which belong only to the masons invested with authority by the "Supreme Council."

The Commandery lodge, annexed to the Supreme Council, took later the name of the Central Grand Lodge. The chapters and the Scottish Rite lodges were able to be represented there by mandates. silenced, but with very limited powers. The chief inspectors of the 33rd degree retained sovereign power and administration of the rite.

"After the February Revolution, the Grand Orient joined to the new system of government. The Universal Monitor reported on this approach in the following terms:

"A delegation of members of the Grand Orient, who have renewed their membership in the Grand Orient, came to place in the hands of the provisional government an act of accession to the Republic.

"This delegation was received by Messrs. Crémieux and Garnier-Pagès, members of the provisional government, and by Mr. Pagnerre, secretary-general, who are also: wearing the sash which indicates their affiliation with Freemasonry.

"Mr. Bertrand, second deputy grand master of the order," former president of the commercial court, representative of The grandmaster then spoke, saying:

"TO THE GLORY OF THE GREAT ARCHITECT OF THE UNIVERSE."
"The Grand Orient of France to the provisional government."

Citizens,

"The Grand Orient of France, on behalf of all the Masonic lodges—
"Chronicles of his correspondence, lends his support to » provisional government.

"Although placed by its very statutes outside of the discussion—
"Since the struggles and political battles, French Freemasonry has not been able to..."
"contain the universal surge of his sympathies for the great movement—» national social movement which has just taken place.

"Freemasons have always carried on their banner these words: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity; finding them again on the waving the French flag, they salute the triumph of their principles and applaud themselves for being able to say that the entire nation has received by you the Masonic consecration.

"They admire the courage with which you accepted the a great and difficult mission to establish on solid foundations the freedom and the happiness of the people; they value devotion with which you know how to accomplish it, maintaining the order which in is the condition and the guarantee.

"Forty thousand Freemasons, spread across nearly five hundred workshops, forming among themselves only one heart and one

has

ee LT <q

478 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

"In the same spirit, they promise you their support here to complete"
"fortunately the work of regeneration so gloriously com-» started. | |

"May the Great Architect of the Universe help you!"

"Mr. Crémieux, a member of the provisional government, has re-
laid: |

|
|

"Citizens and brothers of the Grand Orient, | |
"The provisional government eagerly welcomes and |
"Please accept your useful and complete support. The Grand Architect of
"to support him. The Great Architect of the Universe wants all

"Let men be free; he has given us the earth as our inheritance."

"to fertilize it, and it is freedom alone that fertilizes. (Long live ap-(Probation, applause.)

"It is true that Freemasonry does not have politics as its object;

"But high politics, the politics of humanity, has always"

"Found access to the Masonic lodge registry. (Yes!) There, » at all times, in all circumstances, under the op-

"Freemasonry has constantly repeated these sublime words: Liberty,
"Equality, Fraternity."

"The Republic is in Freemasonry, and that is why..."

"In all times, happy or unhappy, Freemasonry has

"It has found members all over the globe. It is not

"a workshop that cannot provide this useful testimony, which he has"

"He constantly loved freedom, which he constantly practiced"

"Fraternity. Yes, across the entire surface illuminated by the sun, the French-

"Freemasonry extends a fraternal hand to Freemasonry;

"It's a signal known to all peoples." (Applause.)

"will become the shining pledge of the Union of peoples over all the "points of the globe, on all sides of our triangle; and the
"The Great Architect of the Universe, from high in the sky, will smile upon this"
"Noble thought of the Republic which, spreading from all "parts, will unite all citizens of the » (Icrre.

"The universe gave the sun to the world to illuminate it, freedom"

» pressure of thought as under the tyranny of power, îa

OF FREEMASONRY. 479

"Citizens and brothers of Freemasonry, long live the Republic-» which» | |

"These words were met with unanimous applause."

"The delegation withdrew to repeated cries of 'Long live the Republic!'"
Long live the provisional government!

For a long time: a reform had been requested in the composition and organization of the Grand Orient; also it had been decided, on December 17, 1847, by a solemn decree, that henceforth-but this Masonic body would then be composed only of the deputies elected by the workshops of France. Thus were promulgated the equality of rights in Masonic representation and the admission of all workshop representatives on an equal footing to the general administration of the order.

The political events of February 1848 had suspended
for some time the implementation of this measure;
but, by a circular dated March 25, the Grand Orient invited all the workshops of France, without distinction of rite or obedience, to send deputies to the new general assembly, called to now compose the Grand Orient, and which was to meet the following June 8th. It was in this assembly that the second The deputy grand master and his representative submitted their proposals.
sees into the hands of the assembly, which immediately appointed dignitaries in charge of administering the order, and decided that, until the adoption of the new Masonic constitution, the
The Grand Orient, divided into three chambers or sections, functions-would be as before.

Later, the new assembly appointed the commission in charge

In April 1849, this project did not appear to fully meet all of the requirements. the hopes of enlightened followers, but it is at this moment (June 1849) submitted to the discussion of the Grand Orient.

In 1814, the Rite of Misraim or Egypt, whose invention is, as we have said, due to Cagliostro, had been reintroduced in France, by two merchants from Naples. This rite claimed the right sovereign to direct all regimes as stemming from his single source.

ee ee + + = eee ee ee

489 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

Several skilled and cunning followers of Paris are credited with the drafting of the main degrees of the immense Misrai- scale moth.

After the creation of the notebooks, a constitution was formulated. It fell far short of meeting all the requirements. Serious abuses

'had already infiltrated the administration of the rite. Also some FF.-., dissatisfied and scandalized by the traffic that the first importers tators performed this rite, and with the laudable aim of putting a In the end, they resolved, in 1816, to purify the ark and create a new supreme power of the rite. They formed a Supreme- Council, 90th degree, composed of Brothers Joly, man of letters, Anzou, private secretary to HM King Charles IV, Ga- Borria, former inspector and organizer of lotteries in Italy (1), Decollet, an employee in the administration of coins and medals, Méallet, secretary of the academic society of sciences, Ragon, head of office at the National Guard headquarters, Venerable of the Trinosophist lodge, Richard, head of the institution, Lange, trader, Amadiou, trader, Pignière, escalator leader dron, and Clavet-Gaubert, artillery colonel, who resigned, Member of the 90th degree of Naples. Ees FF.-. Joly, Ragon, Gabor- Ria, Decollet and Méallet were charged with filling the offices.

F.-. Joly claimed to be authorized to create, establish and constitute in France the rite of Misraïm in its four series and all degrees. who compose them, by virtue of the powers which had been delegates to Naples, in 1813, by the power of the established rite in This city.

They declared in their statutes that they would not be recognized in France other Masonic and legal authority than the Grand Orient of France, in which they wished to settle and work according to the

the first two series, symbolic and philosophical, comprising the first 66 degrees, which corresponded roughly to 18 degrees of Scottish Rite Freemasonry. As soon as the merger took place, the 90th degree It was supposed to be composed of 17 members instead of 9. The 8 new members

(1) Auzou and Gaborria, both Souv.-. GG.*. MM.-. absolute, at 90 and last degree of Misraim, valley of Naples, residing in Paris. (Great Book of Arch., (manuscript, from the Supreme Consistory.)

eme

OF FREEMASONRY. 481

followers to be elected were to be chosen from among the officers of the Grand-Orient. The 90th degree thus formed was to create a chamber distinct and independent under the name of Grand Consistory. Ccdernicr, guardian of the dogma of the rite, would constitute and administer would treat the last two series of grades from the 66th to the 90°. Such were the bases of the project to address the Grand Orient. As we can see, this organization was none other than that of the Current Supreme Council. The proposal was made to the authority of the rite French; commissioners were appointed from both sides. The discussion dragged on. The officers of the Grand Orient, contrary to those consulted in particular had promised their support; but, when When the time came to decide, the proposal was rejected. Grand Consistory, which had already delegated powers to the consul from France to Cairo, to establish in that city a sovereign misraïmite power, in order to justify the title of rite from Egypt, abandoned his hopes and his work.

However, the rite had made converts during the short duration of the consistory. The Lodge of the Scetateurs of Zoroastre, founded at that time, was numerous and brilliant. The F.+ Gannal, who presided over it, had employed physics, chemistry, etc., to to move and greatly impress the novices during The initiation. Trials took place outside the temple. Freemasons from all regimes wanted to attend this new genre of the show, which was a scandal for many.

-Grand Orient, as we have said in a previous chaptercedent, spoke out against the innovators who were forced to close their lodges.

hopes, suffers the same fate as those of the capital.

After 1830, some Misraïmite lodges were reconstituted in Paris, Lyon, and other cities. Lyon was annexed This adoption lodge, whose work was active; but one morning We learned that the Grand Master and Grand Mistress had disappeared. It appeared. The lodge fell asleep.

The two obligatory festivals of the cc rite are fixed at the equinoxes. of spring and autumn. The first is called the awakening festival of nature, the second crack in nature's rest. The four

=

[]
489 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

The final degrees are specified under the title arcana arcanorum, and contain, it is said, all Masonic science (1).

After the 1848 revolution, the Rite of Misraïm refrained from to join the new government. It is administered by two great conservatives or two great administrators. The the Rainbow lodge of Paris, to which is attached a lodge of a- The option, it is said, is flourishing.

At the beginning of March 1848, one saw posted on the walls From the capital, a poster calling on Freemasons of all rites, of all regimes to meet in general assembly to establish to achieve Masonic unity in France. At the bottom of the poster were the names of some members of the Central Grand Lodge and of the Grand Orient.

A provisional commission was appointed which proclaimed the foundation - union of a national Grand Lodge whose active members of all The rites were part of it, and it did not recognize any rank. above that of master. This commission, accompanied of a large number of followers, presented himself at the Town Hall to to demonstrate adherence to the Republic.

"The Masonic delegation of March 10th, reports one day- nal (2), composed entirely of Freemasons of the Su- obedience First Council, departing from the Place de la Bourse, flag in the colors national symbols at the forefront, surmounted by Masonic symbols, and bearing On its folds these words: Freemasons. Three hundred FF.., marching In pairs, they attracted all eyes with their solemnity. They arrived At the Town Hall, seven FF.. received the apprentice's tablar. It- Among others were the FF.*. Vanderheyem, Duplanty and Jules Bar- "They entered the room where Mr. de Lamartine received them." Brother Jules Barbier then spoke the following words with emotion:

"Citizens, members of the provisional government, a meeting"
"of Freemasons who belong indiscriminately to all the "Rites comes to present itself before you with the apron as its badge,"
"That is to say, with the symbol of equality and work."

(1) Philosophical and interpretative course on Initiations, by Brother Ragon. 1 vol. in-8°, page 545. – See this book for the analysis and explanation of the four degrees.
(2) The Freemason, year 1848.

OF FREEMASONRY. 483

"We are all, in fact, workers working with a
"equal ardor to the construction of a social edifice where everyone has his s place and the share of happiness that is due to him.
Accustomed to seeing brothers in all men, imbued with
"The sublimity of this divine saying: 'Love one another'"

"others," we greet with the most enthusiastic acclamations the governor–

"Republican movement which has been inscribed on the banner of France"
"This threefold motto, which has always been that of Freemasonry:
"Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

"Yes, citizens, our humble banner is that of unity,"
» of sympathy between all French people as between all "peoples. It is in this capacity that we come to offer it to the government–
"Provisional measure at the expense of Vivila République!" (All the deputies
(The tation shouts: Long live the Republic!)

Mr. Lamartine replied:

–"I do not have the honor of knowing the particular language that You speak; I am not a Freemason, I have never been one.
My life has given me the opportunity to be unaffiliated with any lodge. I will speak to you
So, in a way, a foreign language, thank you.
However, I know enough about the history of Freemasonry.
"to be convinced that it is from the depths of your lodges that are
"emanated, first in the shadows, then in the twilight, ct
"Finally, in full view, the feelings that ultimately made the
"a sublime explosion which we witnessed in 1790, and
"which the people of Paris recently gave to the world"
"of days, the second and, I hope, the last performance.
"These feelings of brotherhood, liberty, and equality, which are "sometimes courageously scrutinized, propagated, professed by you"

"in the specific enclosures where you have hitherto kept your "Sublime philosophy. These feelings, which had had to be hidden,"
" can now be proclaimed openly; their propagation-
"The lion will be all the more powerful as they spread from all over"
"mouths on the entire nation without the need for » to conceal them under some kind of symbols.

"Reason no longer needs symbols; today it is the

484 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

A cloudless sun, our eyes are strong enough to fixate on it, and if You keep these flags, these signs of, for a few more years.
freedom, equality, work, with which you present yourself
In our presence, you will no longer consider them a necessity.
you will keep them as a faithful and glorious memory of the tra-
values that Freemasonry has endured in difficult times ciles, and whose testimony she now presents to the genre human.

"Just one more word, gentlemen."

"I said earlier that I didn't know how to speak the language"
"of Freemasonry, but I know how to speak like you this "Great language of the people, which the people have spoken so nobly"
» for us for three days, |

"I thank you, not on behalf of the provisional government-
"evening of the Republic, which is nothing but a passing emanation-
"manages, fleeting and disinterested, which is nothing but an acclamation of the "People, who have no other right than that of their devotion"
"The circumstances under which I speak to you as a government; but
"I thank you on behalf of this great people who have made the
"France and the world, witnesses to virtues, courage, and moderation"
"ration and humanity that he drew from your principles which have become
"Those of the French Republic."

The delegation presents a banner in its colours as a tribute national, surmounted by the attributes of Freemasonry. It he retreated, shouting "Long live the Republic!"

A general assembly was held on May 29th. More than 500
Followers, without distinction of rites, attended this session, presiding Dedicated by F.-. Jules Barbier, orator of the Central Grand Lodge.
Several assistants protested against the creation of a new Grand Lodge, considering it harmful to order or anything else less as useless. They based their reasoning on the good intentions that the Grand Orient had just shown for the head of the Masonic movement, and it was not necessary to cross its march. They told the commission of the new Great-Lodge: If you so ardently desire the merging of rites, the unity In order, why didn't you come to an agreement with Île?

LB FREEMASONRY. 485

Grand-Orient, with the Supreme Council and Misraïm? This one folds-quait, through the voice of one of its members: "When you want to demolish a house, we will ask the pictures that compose it if "Will they consent to let themselves be overthrown (1)?"

At the president's suggestion, after the debate, the following procedure was followed: appointment of a new provisional commission which would sc-to present a draft constitution in the next session:

This constitution was sanctioned on 15 ab 1848 and promulgated. The Grand Lodge was inaugurated on May 1, 1849.

Freemasonry in France today comprises five rites. assets monitored by four different powers; these are: the Scottish Rite ancient and accepted, practiced simultaneously by the Grand Orient and the Supreme Council; the French rite, by the Grand Orient alone; the rite of Misraïm, by the power of that name; the rectified rite of Alle-Magne, by the lodge of Besançon under the obedience of the Grand Orient of France (2).

All these rites are based on the same principles: Freedom, equality Union, fraternity; on the same doctrine: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you I would like them to make it for you. They differ only in color. their banners, their cords, their arrangements, their emblems Order, a few words and a few signs; they are indistinguishable that by their regimes from a political point of view and offer in this to conscientious philosophers of strange anomalies.

Thus, Misraim is the living embodiment of autocracy; a He alone governs the workshops of the rite, and he is irresponsible: he is a almost divine power. The Supreme Council is the personification of tion of oligarchic power; its dignitaries, appointed for life, are irrevocable. He calls to him the men who suit him, directs and administers, according to his will, the workshops placed under His obedience. He reportedly grants his lodges a great deal of freedom. But this freedom is fleeting, because it is not based on any law.

(1) The Freemason, year 1848.

(2) The Grand Orient also possesses the philosophical Ecissnie rite, that of Hé-

In Brussels, the first of these rites is practiced. No workshops are currently operating. to the other two.

++, -

486 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

= - — — — — —

constitutive; it emanates from a sovereign will which len-Tomorrow can replenish the benefits it spread yesterday.
Grand Orient follows the democratic system, but tempered by restrictive laws.

These various rites are for us so many links in the great Masonic chain broken by the passions of the order itself is called upon to fight. This division of an ephemeral power between men gathered in society to set an example of self-denial, love for one's fellow human beings, in-Intelligence and wisdom aside, this division is a true scourge.
for our fine institution. As long as there is no one among us unity of powers, just as there is unity of principles and doctrines.
We will be weak and powerless. Let us stand aside, no more.
Let us wait, under the true banner of order, and let us all march.

together in the pursuit of social improvements, of happiness of hurricane-ness.

OF FREEMASONRY. 487

©

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

Adoption Lodges. — Degrees of apprentice, of journeyman, of mistress, of perfect mistress, Scottish, a Knight of the Dove, a sublime Scottish woman, a Knight of Benevolence, of illustrious Freemason sovereign, of Princess of the Crown. — Extinction of adoption loc
— Masonic baptisms.

X called @drogynes, and who
A, CE LS, | preceded the adoption lodges
YA AU R % tion, did not have, despite RER "appearance of frivolity, a lesser influence"

AR the others on morals and public spirit. They CT undoubtedly felt the effects of the gallery, the stamp
ST from the time when they were founded; their ceremonies,
their forms, their uses had been created for the a-

closer to social classes divided by pride wealth.

Freemasonry, entirely French in its chivalrous spirit,
Its artistic forms had gradually become imbued with the character
English, and had donned in our temples a cold rigidity. In the beginning, therefore, the ladies could not be | initiated into its mysteries. But soon they plunged their glances from beneath the veil of the temple, and if their husbands did not dare

They still allowed them entry, at least

488 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

approach. Then these companies were created, which we we spoke.

These were not yet adoption lodges, but trials of this beautiful order which, by recalling the influence that women and the daughters of the priests of Egypt had exercised on the mystères, the participation of Greek girls in the pu- ceremonies
the customs of initiates, the role of ladies in chivalry
The Middle Ages, linked by a chain of flowers, ancient times
in modern times. oo

Reporters indicate that abuses are taking place in some of the orders that preceded the adoption lodges,
but it is presumed that the enemies of Freemasonry,
always eager for pretexts to spread slander, transform-
They turn purely fraternal ceremonies into scandals.

In any case, in 1774 the Grand Orient adopted the lodges of adoption and covered them with his responsibility. A large number of Freemasons, held back until then by some golden scruples-they hastened to have their wives and daughters initiated into the method, their sisters. Adoption lodges spread throughout Germany, in Russia, in Holland, in Italy. England alone *OpPoss to
V. Introduction within this institution.

We will review the grades of pro-adoption a-prement said. : |

Thory only counts four adoption grades, another writer
vain brings the number to five.

We have before us a handwritten book in which we
We count eight of them, whose titles and order are as follows:

1. Apprentice, 2. journeywoman, 3. mistress, 4. journeywomandone, 5th elected, 6th Scottish dignity, 7th princess of the crown, 8th ct last English amazon.

We possess other handwritten notebooks which bring the total to ten.
number of these ranks.

These are: 1° nnprente, 2° compagne, 5° mailresse, 4° mai-perfect braid, 5th Scottish, 6th dove signet ring, 7th sublime-Scottish woman, 8th knight of the Order of Charity, 9th sovereign illustr-three masons, 10th princess of the crown.

OF FREEMASONRY. 489

of Ts DR

"This list being the most complete, we will follow it for presentations"
to analyze each of the grades it contains.

The temple of an adoption lodge, built according to the rules
ordinary of Masonic art, bore a name full of sweet memories. It brought back to everyone's minds that stay described with such... of charms by the author of Genesis, where the man and the woman following God's laws, reigned in nature in the scepter of purest happiness. The teachers of the adoption lodges were fortunately inspired in naming the temple Eden intended to receive people of both sexes, more specifically-destined by a providential favor to work at progress of humanity.

The East was called the climate of Asia, the West the climate of Europe.
The northern climate is that of America, and the southern climate is that of Africa. The Regarding Masonic exercises, there were ladders, and one
The toasts served in banquet attire were called "Lamps".
grades were stays in the Garden of Eden.

The regulations of the adoption lodges contained a certain social conventions.

No pregnant or sick woman could be admitted to Initiation; no one could be received before the age of eighteen.

without being recognized as having a pure life and morals. The greatest circum-
"Conspersion was recommended to the FF.". and the SS.*.; penarules were linked and fines were established against those who violated them
the regulations.

At the apprentice level, the recipient was confined in a dark place, assisted by a sister, usually the last received; she addressed questions to him relating to the situation-preparation of her mind for the trials she was about to face. She replaced-had the recipient's left leg garter fastened by a blue ribbon, removed the sleeve from his right arm and the glove from his with his right hand, he covered her eyes with a blindfold and introduced her in the temple.

After the trials, the headmistress addressed these words to her:

" Madam,

"You will be admitted into a very respectable order; it will not

490 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

—

Nothing contrary to religion, the state, or virtue happens there.
Listen then carefully to what virtue and honor have in store for you.
order them to do it.

Then the lodge's speaker explained to him in a circumlocutionary speech consistent with the symbols of initiation.

After the speech, the novice swore an oath to listen,
to obey, to work, to remain silent, and received consecration Masonic. The chief inspector presented him with a garter on embroidered on them were the words: Silence, Verlu! The ceremony ended as in an ordinary lodge.

At the rank of journeyman, a painting representing the garden
d'Eden was to be placed on a table in front of the high mistress.

"The senior inspector led the recipient into the room-that every true Freemason must despise vain ornaments. She told him covered her eyes and led her into the temple, where she was subdued. She was then subjected to several symbolic trials. at the altar; the Grand Master addressed him with a speech for the en- to commit to practicing virtue.

At the rank of mistress, a painting placed in front of the altar represents- He felt the weight of various biblical themes, such as the sacrifice of Abraham, the burning of Sodom, etc.

On the table, placed behind the inspector, was a box opening by means of a spring and containing a core on which were These words were written: Silence, Verlu! Next to them were a small mallet and a small pair of scissors.

A large veil, as a symbol of modesty; she was led towards the high mistress, who made her restore the light and ordered her- born from striking the box several times with the mallet and the Scissors: it was the allegory for work. The box opening, the heart that which she left exposed was the symbol of the work accomplished. that is to say, a good, upright, virtuous, sincere and discreet heart.

The grand master questioned the inspector about the ranks that We have just analyzed it.

On the first day she had used the scissors to chase away the bird- Veté, mother of vices, and the false prejudices about Freemasonry.

mm mn ee mme ent

mt ES

Digitized by Google

RTS RNANELELLLLLEEREE ALAN NUL AAA LEE PRE D Enr EE
RSR RNA NA N QE LL LL M ES, X LS RARE ALAN EURE A GR RU, RS RSR NS RSSNNNEUS CASE QU LEE ANAL AAA AA A NA #1"
NS SS RSR RSR ERA EEE EEE AA EATTANE MAN, 17 1} DL fr, WY 4, # L 7 GS
SSSR SSSR ENTER THE in And A 11) 1 1 VW, W) 1, 1 / 1 4 L RSS RE ALAN NS 1 Wu UN, WW 1) # LLC I LE, È RSS ARR LS À nee ÿ, D; WI
NS NS | RSAEE A APE 9) A 7,
RS S NN NE NS ù Ne" 117 LM ne 0 VAS 7
MS" IN, 14
(Ve LL, LD)

HP, LPS li LES 5 .

ANNE
HE IHIURUNE HIM
NL TNNNEIRUrANT
MAN A TIR PES
ORAN RTE
Ut OMR TA MTS

2 fil ie MTS

RSS LR CEST

NS DR

pe so à AOL ne Er dl
1 HI Re è j SNS UN ;
a Un LL à Ÿ: NE VE 008 T0 A0) NN

The 0 EE PAT PET 77220 I EN
1} THE R Ÿ F\ JAN ch he mon 1 a.m. a: AN NNIT JU 1:
will say to mt HS: SARA A AT AE | li)
RSR to A UE No. DE Ai TN ns NEPAL HN

UE il li u NS À E À É ù 4 ce à L/0 44 AU Jan |
a It ul AE UE (Hall | Ÿ To Q We \ | 5th * » SAME AE ë: 1482 7/2 Lo AREA tn ll JU TE UE A nr) { Ÿ AN $ to ' to BA #5 "AA : « 4 j ñ | QE jh {il {IL | LI) |
UE ANA ANS. 7° 0 SE An du
op AS CEE weie) To ke 271 || E NS
RTE D cs. : re hi 2 À L. A ANT! Ll VAE Hi [Hal (UE tt ŒAP Ÿ =) – TO NE NN LU
f ne AE ? $à un 7 dl à" 2 EN (ll | REA
Hit l nt nt Met (M [AT INTIME TOMATO TT EITUNT | QT
| pu) MENU 2 CS AINNNNn TI |
il nl {} ann JAN NI FRE ALU | RUN
JU | rm 0 74 EU At
neither Ds EN | | (UE LH ji}
D Din |, NS | Ÿ/ 1 nn | + | ; y H " vs Ah l 4. jy mit Al jt " 4,

Fe (

PPS POP ELECT

OF FREEMASONRY. _ . 491.

me

On the second day, she had grown stronger in her work and had _ recognized the excellence of the order. hu |

The third day had given birth to a heart that had learned that the art of Freemasons is to cherish honor, to |
to make even the toughest men gentle and compassionate, sympa- |
thiques the most cruel souls.

The grand master gave the recipient a reward
two garters on which were engraved these words, shared Between each of them, on one: Virtue unites us; on the other:
Heaven rewards us.

{1 he gave him a golden hammer and a gold and silver ring which opened and in which the secret was contained; it was uncorked shaped like a five-pointed star, suspended from a cord to be Worn as a necklace.

This grade was followed by numerous allegorical explanations,
At the rank of perfect mistress, the recipient's curiosity was put to the test; while she was left to her own devices, one
He presented her with an opaque vase turned upside down on a concave tray.
In the vase was a bird; these objects were presented to it.
like a precious deposit, forbidding her to touch it. If she had discovered the vase, the bird had flown away; she received a
She was severely reprimanded, and her reception was postponed. Had she resisted Intrigued, the reception continued. After several others Through trials, she was led to the altar beneath an arch of wands.
that the SS carried... and the swords with which the Freemasons were armed...;
She knelt on one knee, and the grand master removed the chain which had been placed on her arm in the rank of apprentice, told her:
"It is time to break your chains, to break free from slavery; the pro-
The mass you are about to celebrate requires complete freedom.
She took an oath.

At the end of the ceremony, the grand master was brought the deposit we were talking about, then he said to the recipient:
"You are beginning, my dear sister, a new life with a "Great favor; raise this vase quickly." She raised the vase, and the bird flew away.
The Grand Master added:

"Of all possessions, the most precious is liberty. Let us endure"

me

492 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

patiently through the harshest setbacks. Sooner or later, a sccou- hand rable, guided by Providence, takes us out of it and returns us to ourselves.

Upon receiving the Scottish degree, the recipient was led to the temple her eyes covered with a blindfold, her head bare and her shoulders hidden under a large veil.

The initiation ceremony offered nothing remarkable.

When the initiate had taken the oath, the grand master released her. he lifted his arms and restored his sight, saying, "I am freeing you from the The bonds of vice to lead you in the path of virtue; go "Give a fraternal kiss to your Brothers and Sisters." In the re- Presenting herself in Scottish dignity, he adorned her with a white apron. lined with yellow, and he fastened a silver jewel around her neck, in star shape.

The sixth grade, Knight of the Dove, was, it is said, instituted at Versailles in 1784. It offered some similarity to that of the Log splitters.

His painting depicted a fast-moving mountain on which Noah's ark had stopped; a dove had taken flight towards the ark. At the bottom of the mountain were piled up livid corpses.

The grand master was called Father Noah, the dear supervisors eldest sons; the chief inspector alone had the privilege of inter- to maintain a particularly good relationship with the grand master, who addressed him info

Father Noah was seated in the east on a throne; above his their heads were the transparent image of a dove and a dove alive; he wore a red and green cord across his neck to which were suspended a trowel and a silver dove.

The recipient was ushered into a room where the son the eldest, carrying a lamp in his hand, entered accompanied by a sister; he would throw a white veil over the neophyte's head. his sister sharply reproached him for his indiscretion. She was calm; she took off his jewelry. The brother comforted her and gave it back to her her jewelry, placing it in her left hand. Soon the reci-

The eldest son questioned him.

a – My sister, who brought you here?

"– The desire to be received as a knight."

OF FREEMASONRY. 495

"– What have you done with your chains?"

"The kindness of my brothers has broken them."

The eldest son then spoke to the grandmaster, telling him about the Recipient:

"It's one of your children who is looking for employment in the ar-
I questioned her; she seems to me to have enough virtues, enough of courage and discretion to fulfill his duty towards the Signer's depot (1). »

The recipient, blindfolded and holding a sword...
The hand was brought into the temple. The onlookers applauded.
and exclaimed: Gloria in excelsis!

She was subjected to various trials, consisting of journeys simulated on and around the ark. She took an oath, covered the light, and Father Noah placed on his heart a A piece of jewelry representing a trowel: it was the symbol of love.
work.

In the Rosicrucian Order of Freemasons or Knights of the Charity, under the allegory of the Holy Sepulchre of Palestine in In Jerusalem, the lodge represented a chapel. On the altar stood a bluish flame. When the recipient, dressed in white and veiled, she was brought in, she knelt down; they lit nine candles, and the grand commander exclaimed: Tenebris succeeded vera lux! Addressing the recipient, he said:

"Would you still be willing to sacrifice your life to die?"
under the holy banner of the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman?

"I promise," she replied.

The ceremony continued, then the candidate took the oath

"I promise to God our Savior Jesus Christ, and to the blessed-O Virgin Mary, to observe religiously and with all my to be able to uphold the statutes and regulations of the Order of Knights and Signet Rings of the Benevolence of the Holy Sepulchre, in good and faithful knight.

(1) Handwritten receipt book.

J
|
'|

=
e
.
, -

- 494 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

She would stand up, and the Grand Commander would decorate her with the ribbon, of the garter (1) and the apron of the order.

The mere existence of this entirely Catholic rank could have been considered a victorious response to the attacks of the enemy-members of our institution, who accuse him of impiety and irreligion; their Their diatribes and calumnies continued, despite the evidence.
because their interests and their power are based on ignorance
and the superstition that we seek to destroy.

The ninth degree, or Illustrious Sovereign Mason, necessi-three apartments. The first was to represent the city of Bethulia, the second the valley of that name, the third the camp
Assyrians preceded by the tent of Holofernes; these arrangements

Local names indicate the action of the rank. The recipient represented

Judith, and the grand master, called the high priest, the governor of Bethulia; the tragic death of Halophernes was perfectly simulated, but for a purely moral purpose.

Bethulia was the image of happiness, the high priest that of 'The soul, Judith and her servant, that of the faculties of the soul. The principal-its members. Holofernes' army was the embodiment of passions, Judith's charms referred to the illusions that seduce us.

The virtues recommended by the grade were friendship, unity,

'submission, discretion, loyalty, prudence and temperament'

rancid. The vices he aimed to combat were hatred, discord, pride, indiscretion, perfidy, recklessness, and slander.

The decorations, with the exception of the color of the cord, had many similarities with those of the ninth Scottish degree, that of the chosen one.

The tenth and final grade was that of Princess of the Couronne. The lodge represented Solomon's council chamber; it was draped in red and adorned with garlands and wreaths of flowers; a magnificent throne, raised on seven steps and covered with a The canopy was meant to represent the ivory throne on which sat the

(1) On this garter, of violet color, which was worn on the left leg, Engraved on it were the initials: FEC, which stood for: Faith, Hope, Charity. grand-cordon was a purple scarf worn from right to left.

OF FREEMASONRY. 495

A great king to deliver justice to the people. The lodge was to be illuminated by twenty lights; next to the throne stood the armchair of the headmistress. To the left was a table on which Several lamps, a cup, and a loaf of bread were placed there. On the left side was the ornate altar on which the recipient was to take an oath.

The grand master was called the Most Wise King, the grand mistress represented Solomon's wife; the inspectors were the first members of the council and called Favorites, the recipient represents

She smelled like the Queen of Sheba and was called Mighty Queen.

The SS officers were to be decorated with a sky-blue sash. at the end of which hung a silver fringe, and knotted on The shoulder with a white rosette and gold tassels. The jewel

It was tied with a pink rosette at the end of the scarf; it represented—felt a circle that contained a scribe, a hand of justice, and in the center an antique crown. Every sister thus decorated.

was to be received as high mistress and take
Make way for the East.

The work began with a lengthy interrogation which related to the virtues of Solomon and the visit of the Queen of Sheba.
The reception ceremony was a scene depicting the queen of Sheba received by Solomon. The recipient was decorated with a a scarf and a bracelet; the scarf symbolized nobility, the grandeur, the dignity of the rank; the bracelet, formed from a ribbon blue on which was embroidered, in gold, an antique crown with these

Two words: Wisdom and Candor, represented the most beautiful ornament:

rare.

Such were the degrees conferred in the adoption lodge until the end of the Empire. In this disastrous era, Freemasonry in Mourning closed its temples; if it reopened them a few years later,
She never saw the ladies flocking to her work again; the politico—
The reforms of the Restoration had altered French customs.

After 1830, when liberty had been regained, the ladies returned to their lodges to celebrate, but their adopted workshops did not were not restored. The Sovereign Power of the Rite of Misraïm whoever tried to raise them obtained only a negative result; thus This brilliant phase of Freemasonry has come to an end.

mm f

mo mm mn one 0

496 PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

me ee ee ee ee —

The chivalrous spirit, the feelings of brotherhood and in—

However nobly developed the adoption lodges, they could not entirely
They soon reappeared under a new name,
in new forms; Masonic baptism was created.

To get a true sense of this contemporary institution,
It should not be considered from a religious point of view. Baptism Christianity was established with the aim of erasing original sin and traditional. Freemasonry has admitted children into its temples to spread early into their minds and their heart the seed of liberty, equality and fraternity;
she shares some of her ideas with the young initiates
paramount through striking images, in a ceremonial sometimes moving, so that they remain engraved in their memory and that they serve as a torch for them in the darkness of life. Their mothers, who adorn these celebrations, see our institution in its true light, that is to say, full of a-
He died for God and country, out of tenderness and devotion.
For humanity, respect for the laws. Prevention against the Freemasonry they might have received through prejudice, gradually fade from their minds, they become tolerant and they end up admiring and loving this much-maligned order.

Masonic baptism is therefore a work created by philosophy.
Isophy, and not an act of faith and renunciation. Its origin is still too recent to have been fully understood.
It is intended to receive extensive development, to become fruitful in social improvements. When it has reached the degree of improvement that we foresee, the child admitted masonry will receive from this company, in certain cases, a seat-
a truly fraternal rebuke; if he is an orphan, the lodge he will join part will become her guardian, will provide for all her needs, until that she gave him the means to live honorably in the company of the fruits of its labor.

We draw the serious attention of our Brothers* to this inst-
tution which still exists only in embryo among us; it is important to The honor of Freemasonry and the happiness of humanity that it may grow and actively prosper.

OF FREEMASONRY. 497

CONCLUSION.

We're nearing our goal. We've traced the origins of the company.
Masonic. Through the rubble of antiquity, the ruins piled up on the earth by peoples who have seen turn after turn their laws, their religions, their governments, which survived wind to their power, to their splendor, and from ancient times

found the first steps, the beautiful times, Islands days of decadence and resurrection of this mysterious association to which So many men were affiliated, and so many followers still carry on.

the insignia without understanding it.

We saw this order formed in secret, in the depths of society, slowly continuing its work of destruction against the tyrannies that have always enslaved or oppressed mankind, to suddenly reveal himself through his actions at times of great struggles of humanity, then to bury themselves once again in the shadows. A step taken on the path of progress, we hasten to exclaim that the association no longer has a reason to exist, as its principles have been realized. that her work is accomplished, and she herself, without protesting well Up high, she seems to accept this decision; it looks as if she is dead, or that it still vegetates only by clinging to memories of the past, that they protected.

Error! Already, in the intoxication of each triumph, she she shows herself dissatisfied; amidst the common joy, She searches, she worries, she watches to see who will be the first conquest to attempt. Amidst songs of joy, commemorative celebrations Morative celebrations, joyous feasts, a rapping voice always rises highlighting social inequalities, listing the pains and needs of

oo

498. PHILOSOPHICAL HISTORY

TS

poor, calling for reforms; brothers are still leaving the banquet hall to carry far and wide the ideas gleaned from the temples; we always send encouragement to those who persecution strikes in less favored regions than the knot. There are always these voices, these departures, these communications make a burning passion resonate in the hearts of true Freemasons and rap- They call for reality. First-class life is the struggle.

Freemasonry is seriously fighting today in France? No; it is in a dormant phase, a phase which reproduced periodically and which needs to be explained for to be understood, as it is so far removed from the true Masonic spirit-fuck. |

Freemasonry has suffered the fate of all human institutions. Maines; in its days of battles and dangers it tightens and and sees his strength diminish. As long as one can make one step stool, to take it for a pedestal, she sees everyone approaching Those who abandoned her during the battle. They come to pay the cold water of their sterile eloquence on the impulses of its orators; They come to hinder all projects that might thwart the ambitious desires. In other words, as long as it remains an association-- secretive, she keeps her religious faith, her philosophical dogmas phiques, its political principles, and like any force in the

The company rests on these three elements. It resides in them, it exercises a true power. When it can safely expand its network, opening its temples" to a multitude of brothers, delivering its chairs with opposing ideas, from the day she agrees to hear speakers who are not closely united by the links that we have just indicated, faith, dogmas and principles, she It loses its original essence, it changes, its purpose seems to also modify; it seems that it only retains the tradition and no longer pursues him.

Many men, even within her own ranks, share this thought, and appearances seem to support their position, but the äppa-only rences. Nothing of what those want, nothing of what they attempt Those who look beyond the present, do not achieve their goals.

The multiplicity of temples in the same east absorbs the

PP CESSE 0 00 eee eng

TS, or CR

.

RS

OF FREEMASONRY. | 499

resources of society and reduce it to LHApUBSAN Ce de-secou- to usefully laugh at those who suffer; it is proposed to have only one temple in each east, than a lodge; self-love They wake up and become restless, each one wants their own little church, their own little

The unity of the temple would lead to unity of doctrine and opinion.
of direction, an indispensable condition of life; of power; this Unity is not established, society remains a union.

Widespread everywhere, scattered across the soil of France, the ma-stupidity, could at some point direct public opinion, throw itself in the arena and, measuring its actions against the new political laws,
to have one's personal ideas prevail in electoral struggles, because nothing can withstand everyday propaganda which highlights profound humanitarian truths; but it is di-targeted, she no longer has any thought that Ini appertienne, her followers
they act as individuals and not as Freemasons.

Free discussion, previously reserved for lodges, becomes a conquest of the country; platforms open on all sides and hold-weave together ardent words; the most arduous social questions,
The most difficult ones are addressed by speakers who stir things up.
passions; Freemasonry, instead of opening its own platforms public, to contribute the fruits of his studies, to make them shine

| the thought that guided it, Freemasonry remains silent, ren-

| closes in its temples and, need I say it? descends; even to the point of discussing
if she is allowed to operate in the shadows that envelop her the social issues that have always been addressed by its orators, whose solution is her duty, if she wants to remain true to her motto!

Such is the current situation, full of inconsistencies and sterility.

We have been searching everywhere for the influence of Freemasonry since
In February, we find her nowhere energetic and powerful.
There are two kinds of action: one material, the other intellectual.

one that overturns, the other that builds upon the ruins of the overturned building.

Which of the two did Freemasonry have "worked" in this , Mmoment.si critical? Neither one nor the other. It seems that she has _no more worrying about how the world works.

ee è

:

Does she have nothing left to do? Is her role finished? Does she have nothing left to do?
More lessons, more examples to give? Does he need, like Hiram falling asleep under the grass?

We will awaken him, because nothing is over. The problems are still there.
burning hot. Who will solve them?

Society is in turmoil from top to bottom. Who will give it the calm?

Humanity is searching for its path towards the future, amidst a profound darkness. What torch will shine to illuminate it? Is it Freemasonry, which will support him, which will defend him, by preceding him
And by following him, whoever will hold it in his hand?

Misery is menacing, hunger roars, but brotherhood is a myth. It exists in name only. Is it almsgiving that is the Fraternity? Is the hospice itself fraternity?

Ah! If masonry only used willpower! If she had the courage to to constitute a powerful authority, to order that each
In the East there will be only one lodge, and the teaching will be by-all the same, that the receptions will be serious, that the adept-
They will be enlightened, devoted, energetic, without any self-esteem,
All individual wills will yield to Masonic duty.
So Freemasonry could once again take the lead in the civilization, to discuss social issues within itself, the
to solve in theory, to try the application outside of itself.

At what time were the questions more numerous?
more important? The proletariat, public assistance, the organization-labor, pension funds for workers, the obligation-
The granting and free education of education, all these questions are raised in the temples; but does Freemasonry have a doctrine, a thought fixed on all these points which concern so Looking forward to society? Alas! No.

However, it is only at this price, only on this condition, that she will regain its strength; then, actively involved in all classes of society will impose its views on those in the interest of the people.
who govern them, it will be part of the powers of the State; its ban-
the flag will fly on all ships sailing the seas; to all the Flags of our armies will be hung, a few sheets of acacia; on all the citadels the sacred tree will flourish.

There is a remarkable fact in Masonic history, which is that the revolution of 1789 proclaimed as dogma of society the new motto of the order, which that of 1848 repeated this motto. They didn't achieve it entirely, but perhaps they ask this order for the motto of the future.

Freemasonry seeks to achieve freedom in its fullness.

Freedom of conscience. – It fights fanaticism.

Freedom of inquiry. – She wants only reason as her guide.

Freedom of thought, freedom of discussion. – Inalienable right, the negation of which reduces man to the lowest degree of the scale of beings.

Freedom of speech and action. – In all that is not harmful to others.

She wants to achieve legality.

Equality gilding the law, without distinction. – Equality in all things,

Everywhere, in that order.

Equality in education.

Equality of rights.

Equality in duties.

Equality in public functions, imposing on all the same rights and responsibilities. responsibility for their actions.

She wants to achieve brotherhood.

The brotherhood that, by destroying unbridled antagonism, would settle the relationships between men.

– The brotherhood that would not allow a man to die of hunger at the door of another man saturated with pleasures, who would renounce humiliating almsgiving to come to the aid of misfortune in a nobler and more dignified way.

The brotherhood that abolishes war between peoples would make the universe one big family whose true law would be Love; not love as an orgy of the senses, but the love of the heart

the decent love of a man for his partner, of a woman for the father of her children; the love that is devotion to her similar.

The fraternity that, by lowering customs barriers, would leave the products of the earth circulate throughout the earth and the products of The industry goes where consumption calls them.

+. ee 2

The fraternity which, carrying civilization to all points of the globe, it would perhaps be implanted there more slowly, but not sul- would not shed blood, and would not use it as a pretext for abuses and to the murders.

RG

2 —

That's what you want, from our holy Freemasonry. That's what destinies you wish to make for the people. You will struggle, you will suffer- Ras, but Lu will accomplish your work. From the day you were born, You have been a protest against the evils that besiege the so- companies, an aspiration towards better days. You put yourself in walks with a sword in one hand and a torch in the other, no the torch that carries the fire, but the torch that illuminates.

You've lived through empires, you've seen them fall, and you are still standing; at what funeral did you not attend Arpuis the moment of your appearance, from your Indian cradle of the Hima- laya up to the narrow temples where your followers gather Today? You preceded all progressive revolutions, that is to say, the great, the true revolutions, by shedding light on the road.

You have fought many battles; your steps can be counted by blood. of your martyrs who fell along the way. You saw oppressed humanity- You helped her shake off her chain, break it. You continue- True to your work, you will triumph. In the midst of society's struggles, Your progress is slow, we will not see your victory, it will shine at other ages, but at least, faithful Freemasons, followers conscientious initiates who have understood initiation, we trans- we will pass on intact to our successors the sacred trust that you have given us entrusted.

TAN TIM
ef FIN. Rore-OMG AND

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAPTER ONE.

Freemasonry considered as a philosophical school. – The direction given to her studies; her decision to proceed; the objects to which she limits her examination.

Freemasonry considered as a religious school. – She doesn't call herself the daughter of the revelation; it is not personified in a man; it is tolerant; consequences. – The circumstances in which Zoroaster, Moses, and Jesus appeared

Christ, Muhammad, are different from those in which Freemasonry was born.
– Origin of societies; migration of peoples; selection of leaders; birth of the idea
Masonic; its god; its flag. 4 to 24

Li

CHAPTER TWO.

The Birth of Freemasonry in India. – The two Indian Genesis accounts, that
The Valmiki cave, the oldest, and the Manou cave, much later, contain two completely opposed religious and political systems. – In the first, no distinction between men; in the second are created the castes which form the basis of inequality between citizens. – A striking analogy between the system of castes in India and that of feudalism in Europe. – First secret societies; their reason for being, their purpose, their temples. – Temple of Elephanta, of Keneri, in the island of Salcette, of Elora. – Striking similarities between these temples and those

'Modern Freemasonry. – Buddha; his reform. – Secret societies in Persia; Zoroaster; his initiation into the mysteries – Comparison of his doctrine and that of present-day Freemasons. 25 to 72

CHAPTER THREE.

Freemasonry in Egypt: the march of the Masonic faith from East to West.

in Ethiopia; their doctrine. – Government and religion of the initiates. – Myth of Isis and of Osiris; Typhon; Horus. – Explanation of this myth; the third sym-
The ideology of modern Freemasonry reproduces it in its entirety. – Religion has the astronomical system as a basis. – Thebes, capital of the government of the uninitiated. – Sais; Festival of Lights. 75 to 91

504 TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAPTER FOUR.

The story of Freemasonry in Egypt continues. A revolution deprives the priests of power. He established the country and founded a hereditary monarchy. – The myth of Isis and Osiris went. – Gross errors of the Egyptian people perpetuated by the priests.
– Invention of astrology; of talismans; one lends a soul, an intelligence, A life, an influence on the fate of men, in the constellations. – Divination: horoscopes; the supposed power of the moon; palmistry; magic; necromancy; Human sacrifices. – Empiricism; personification of the planets. – The Apis bull. – Aberrations. – The role of Freemasonry during this period. Its philosophy, His struggles, his suffering. 92 to 127

CHAPTER FIVE.

Freemasonry among the Hebrews and the Greeks. – Initiation of the former by Moses, of the second order, by Orpheus. – New phase. – The institution takes on a character a more decisive line. – Restoration of the Indian Masonic idea by Moses; his Natural progress. – Unity of God. – Clearer proclamation of the principle of Liberty and equality. – Laws of Moses. Hymns of Orpheus. Greek mysteries, mysteries

Hebrews. 128 to 137

CHAPTER SIX.

Solomon's Temple; a new date for Freemasonry. – The Jewish temple is the temple of initiation; it resembles that of the sun. – The seven branches of the chan- to loosen. – The twelve bulls drinking from the brazen sea. – The two co- lonnes. – Temple degrees; Fellow Craft grade. – Myth of Hiram; grade of Master. – The primitive symbol of Osiris, of Eleusinian Ceres is completed by Hiram. In addition to its great significance in the struggle of light against darkness, it In Egypt he represented marriage, in Greece the family, he will represent it in Judea the association and thus envelop a magnificent trinity. – Companionships. – Secret societies of the Hebrews. – Mysteries among the Romans. – Christianity; it

CHAPTER SEVEN.

Freemasonry did not appear during the early centuries of Christianity; the wars, the unrest, the struggles of the Roman Empire, the insurgent movements. The traditions of Gaul, the Barbarian invasion, the misfortunes that followed, the triumph of the Christian faith prevents Europe from seeing its action, from hearing its orators. – The East, the cradle of Freemasonry, retains none of this no trace of the period; the secret doctrine founded after the death of Muhammad has not of identity with it, has nothing in common with the principles, the goal, the means of former societies from which it originates. – Transformation of Freemasonry; Freemasons in France and England; the word Freemason is written for the first time in the acts; the associations organize themselves, – Establishment of lodges. – Foundation of the Grand Lodge of York. Hierarchy, Masonic code. – Conduct of the clergy in France and England at the time when the association reveals. – A Masonic organization is emerging in Normandy; its goal, its battles, his defeat; tortures, mutilations of the followers. – Leaven that remains in the country. – Unnoticed for more than a century, the brotherhood is gaining some prominence in England, in 1041 and 1066. – His work; his meetings. – Crusades. – Their influence on Freemasonry. – The Templars. 201 to 235

TABLE OF CONTENTS. 505

CHAPTER EIGHT.

The English clergy joins Freemasonry; the kings oversee it and give it his officers. – Persecution; Parliament suppresses Masonic meetings by a Bill; the bill soon ceases to be executed. – Alternatives of prosperity and impotence under Henry VI, Henry VII and Elizabeth. The Earl of Essex and the Duke of Somerset, successively Grand Masters, are beheaded. Charles I enters the Freemasonry. – Masonic brotherhoods in Germany and Switzerland, – The initiation– The lion of the ancient Egyptian mysteries is substituted for the reception ceremonies; the first symbolic grade is taken from antiquity. – Political tendencies. – Formation of the Great Lodge of England. Strange period: ceremonies, modifications, rivalries, orgies, quarrels among the head waiters, quarrels among the aprons, disputes on jurisdiction between the two powers; encyclical letter; division of Freemasonry English mania, pamphlet war. – Brilliant resurrection. The Freemason– It appears simultaneously in all parts of the continent. It is constituted in France, in Russia, in Holland, in Italy, – The masons were soon prosecuted; Imprisonments, riots, proscriptions. – The Inquisition and Freemasonry. – Extension– sion of the order in France; the English Grand Lodge declares itself Grand Lodge of the Realm. Movement of the provinces. Creation of the Grand Orient of France. 236 to 267

The state of Freemasonry in Europe at the advent of the Grand Orient. – In Russia. – In Poland. – In the Netherlands. – In Germany. – In Sweden. – In Denmark. mark. – In Switzerland. – In Italy. – In Avignon. – In Spain. – State of the institution in France, – Extension of the Order. – The writers, the philosophers, the Politicians are members of the lodges; reception of Voltaire. – Situation of the Freemasonry in the Americas. – A serious Masonic question raised. by the War of Independence. – French Revolution; influence of Freemasonry Nonsense about the revolution, 268 to 505

TENTH CUP.

Freemasonry in France from the Directory to the Restoration. – Festivals of peace and victories. Under the Consulate and the Empire, it became military without ceasing to be bourgeois. It revived the most illustrious names in arms, the sciences, the humanities, and it experiences immense growth. – It triumphs with our armies in Germany, in Spain, in Holland, are based in all conquered countries. – Freemasonry in England, in the states at war with France, and in America, during the same period. 306 to 543

CHAPTER ELEVEN.

Freemasonry under the Restoration. The Grand Orient at the fall of the Empire. 1814. 1815. Hostile ideas towards Freemasonry. Many lodges are closed; the spirit of The party seizes some of them for the benefit of the new government. Reaction The clergy's animosity towards the Masonic spirit. The Freemasons. The ambitious 506 TABLE OF NATURES.

abandon the institution which is no longer a means of obtaining jobs or of getting involved

Advance. Rite of Misraim. – A large number of former officers come seeking in the workshops the memory of happier times, the philosophical religion that they loved, whom they had followed. – Reappearance in France of a second power leader; supreme council. Gradually, the attacks from the clergy, the awakening of the liberal spirit, the struggles Public protests against the restoration bring the crowd back into the boxes. We begin with to feed on regrets, to entertain hopes, then to resume with activity The preaching of the institution's eternal maxims. Invasion of Carbonarism. Persecutions against Freemasons in Italy and Spain. Bloody scenes. in both peninsulas. – The role of Freemasonry in France towards the end of the Lyon. July Revolution. Masonic celebrations. 544 to 588

CHAPTER TWELFTH.

Freemasonry from 1851 to 1848. – France: the ambitious, Project to endow the great misconduct to the Duke of Orléans. Indifference of the July Monarchy towards the institution. This idea is developed in the lodges that the Masonic principle Having triumphed in the last revolution, order is now useless. Error of this doctrine, which disregards the progressive law of humanity and the true role of Freemasonry. Subscription for Poland. Political unrest in the lodges. Law on associations; resolution of the Grand Orient.

Intellectual works: Masonic press; newspapers, speeches, discussions; their high character. – Foundations of rewards and prizes for virtuous actions, of courage, of devotion, Subscription for the flood victims of Lyon. Second recognition Situation of the Order of the Temple. Activity of the lodges. The Grand Orient promulgates new statutes. He created in Paris a central relief center for the badly-built masons happy. Traveling masons. – The Fourierists are beginning to enter the franc-Freemasonry, lively discussions that their presence raises. New debates between the G.:.-Orient and the Supreme Council; they resound in the departments. Attempts at rapprochement; they fail. The resulting state of stagnation – Creation in Lyon of a council of venerable elders; it is replaced by a central council. Consequences important aspects of this institution; it is fought against, it succumbs. It reinstates; the hope it inspires. The Grand Orient takes from it the omni-he believes he sees in it the seed of a new power; he writes a circular to this Subject: The council is dissolved. Results: Foundation of a patronage society for poor children. – Act of tolerance between the two powers. – Congress masonic: congress of Strasbourg, of Toulouse.

The Ihenacconnere in Algeria: a type of Arab Freemasonry, – In Switzerland; a matter of Zurich. – In Belgium; struggle against the Jesuits. – In Holland. – In Prussia; questions of the Israelites. – In England. – In Germany, – In Sweden. – In Denmark. – At Baden; erection of the statue of Erwin, at Steinbach; reorganization of Freemasonry in the Duchy, – In the United States. – In Haiti. – In the Senegambia, – In Madagascar. 559 to 458

CHAPTER THIRTEEN.

Higher degrees. – Assessment of this branch of Freemasonry. – By Ramsay. – Scottish Rite religion, the source of higher degrees. – Preserved ancient expressions

+ GP GP ee

TABLE OF CONTENTS. 507

to this day. – History of the Grand Lodge of Heredom of Kilwinning. – Intro-successive introduction of Scottish degrees in England, France, and Germany, in other countries. Charles-Edward and George I provided the pretexts.
 The Lyon masons adopted Ramsay's Templar regime and created the rank of Kadosh. – Creation of Masonic sects, such as the Order of Felicity, the Knights and the Nymphs of the Rose. – The Grand Master and his negligent deputy the administration of order which is delivered into anarchy. – Charles-Edward, nicknamed
 The Pretender arrives in France and further increases the number of Masonic innovations.
 niques. – Rite of the Old Brut or of the Faithful Scots. – Orders of the Splitters.
 – Scottish Rite established in Marseille, – The Chevalier de Bouneville founded the chapter of Clermont. – Creation of the chapter of the Emperors of the East and West. It gives powers to one of its members to spread Scottish Freemasonry in America, he establishes in Bordeaux a chapter of Princes of royal secrecy. – Great influence of the three lodges of this city when Martinés Paschalis founded a workshop there under the title of Temple of the Scottish Elect, – Letters of this innovator. Exhibition of his Sysleric of the Elected Coëns. Martinès is reported as an imposter by a lodge of Toulouse. – The French lodge takes up his defense. – His lodge is closed. His death.
 – Creation of the Council of Knights of the East. – Influence of Freemasonry on society at that time. – Unrest in Germany, – The Brotherhood of the Brethren Moravians existed there when Ramsay's system was adopted there under the title of Regime
 Dresden rectified. – Baron von Hund founded the Strict Observance regime.
 Its means, its tendencies. – Order of the Clerics of the Strict Observance; its pretensions, its ranks. – Sinnendorf Rite originating from the Swedish system. It is modified achieves great success. – Swedemborg and his system; his grades. – Weishaupt;
 His doctrine, his tendencies, his ranks. – Cagliostro; his innovations, his triumph,
 His flight, his death. – Rectified system preserved by the lodges of Besançon; its ranks.
 French Rite; its degrees. Scottish Rite; its degrees. Misrain Rite; its degrees.
 New Grand Lodge resulting from the February 1848 revolution. 459 to 456

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

Adoption Lodge. – Degrees of Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Mistress, and Master perfect, Scottish, a knight of the Dove, a sublime Scottish woman, a che-Valiere of Charity, illustrious sovereign Freemason, Princess of the Cou-Ronne. – Extinction of adoption lodges. – Masonic baptisms. 487 to 496

CONCLUSION, sos 8 0 css sue os 0.0 0606481 supra 497: 902

END OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Er

he exclaimed, »

Page 409, 40th line, – Instead of: “The lodges of Paris and Lyon are becoming more subdued

Page 456, 24th line. — Instead of: “and other parts of in Europe,” read:
“And in other parts of Europe.”

INDEX OF STRIPE PLACEMENT.

FRONTISPICE. 45 Under eos ee 2 ss... opposite the title.
e

CUSTOMS des nesiiserdieshese insu page 44

HirMoi is des rs-ai sc. 466

Adoption Lodge. rase RES 491

.

- _ - — ee ee -.- — —.#

wall = sea ee

L VOX. — Bounsv Printing House, Merrière main street, (6, near the Prefecture Square.

" /

ERRRATA

Page 395, line 27. — Instead of: “Leipzig a Latomia,” read: “Latomia à Leipzig.”

Page 427, 9th line. — Instead of: “An orator also exclaims,” read: “An orator

Digitized by Google

se |

ETS

| N

My

be eV h

AU TO

1%. 72

As '

F + ing \

has YL
to be amd
dE +
LA | 47
>
Ye
tr
#

Cal A0 Z
BE ae AA Ÿ
A | 4

EM 4

PR Lg
" Iron

L in «
è DOTE TRS
ADD, ad 2 08 "dt 1

- +
Re re

,#.

" F ee AS to

F +

PL

L4
/
No

4 10 ques
E .

ce S'stt Ÿ

pr

seen'
What

pr

LP

And.

AT 7%

CRETE

CEE |

RS,
14

4
HAS

ù
.
*

Ar

1
THERE AA UN .: x

naked will ALARM
A2, A x

RENTED
* XL ALERT AT)

"

& Me an LT:
al

t
4

Ent

SN

LALLLT I" (REDEMPTION

. ... -

(Mn
A. |

E 4"
se +"

1.4:
REIN

AC

era

Gr

4

ES

2

Pa

SL

=.

22

CS

ARTIST

AT AND

has)

seen

Neither

12

DA

*

.

\

THERE

t

. »

1 ie es

your

S

'+,

PL°

AANTUE

+

An L

ES

Wio!

"THE

7:

You

has

ÿe

\

: + L

THERE

. HAS,

+

k

D

+

+
+

•
[LA he ARXX]

dv.

1st"

•
HAS"

ut
D
•

—

THE |

PR

fs to

ANAN! L

View TU ed)
ONE RP OE

LR ILE D LS

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized
by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google Books

<https://books.google.com>

Google

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves. It is made available to you as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the world's hidden treasures. This work is in the public domain in the United States of America. It is also in the public domain in many other countries. We have taken precautions to ensure that the quality of this digital copy is as high as possible. We have also taken precautions to ensure that the work is not used in a way that would be harmful to the public. We have also taken precautions to ensure that the work is not used in a way that would be harmful to the public.

This book being relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and now belongs to the public domain. "Belonging to the public domain" means that the book in question has never been subject to copyright. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our knowledge. They are also a source of inspiration for the future. They are too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced in this digital copy. The long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to the internet is a testament to the power of the public domain.

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them available to you. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

+ Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

+ Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the servers of Google. For research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field of research, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of these works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service to you.

+ Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential to our project.

No cases.

+ Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is y Be sure to respect the law. If a work is in the American public domain, do not assume that other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country
The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply pos Book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to wh
The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages contribute to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

der inv
NS MTL

"73 this
THE EU
CL af

-
L: | PRE EN" #
to - Lis Fr Pouf V2
H [e = v «
Born
"LES es 2 n
. / + of
- ut. Fa

- to e + * To: + L sn # c
L af | « , |
KE ee" Letter * N v EST: h TO 4 A2 of the EME 7, (x DES Besides 1 hour. NE l ss s: ;
to x ' to 1 nr es jt or g 1
ERA CRUSRES) 2 1 to Le) ur HT PET to AS LL 5 , TE ITRE
" EVs . y û + ' PU" IE Fa) ' À Ô AE + ju CEA
% TU + 4% 21 ns in L2y0 | : 4 . y "Lt the | u : b : re + 4! P ; : n'as au QUE

r 2 The # F1 20 (7 to " DA ME + 7th dx
4 É#r \@ | | L_/ - l 2, LEE MAS HAN
4 Er ve M , " g far ' À. | n Co tet {ia 2 TR PY .
4 2 3: "1 LR TEE 4: ... | Us DE
(FROM "CLOSE-UP) VIEW TR dt Pre K&
: ù 'TR to La L T4'; PLQ =: The of UNS AL PA. (ag CRE L to s GUN 7 417 v + ; The -
AL OT role ATTE * | | ex - YEARS: 7 CASES NT
"HAS

The Quran and 7%: Financiers support the State
HN ART This 2 EoRE the rope supports the hanged man.

SENSE 7 (Marquis pe Souvré, cited by Voltaire)

The CI x E; r NY AS e ay ; A 6 ' PU dr PA Û _ f #
M pre AR ne Le Re RUE AE
NEW ANNOTATED AND AUGMENTED EOINON

© | FINANCIAL LIBRARY

24, Rue Feydeau _ PARIS (2nd arrondissement).

4 Ur
#ri
"26:

|

NEW PARISIAN BOOKSTORE
ALBERT SAVINE,

/ 2 Pa
#7 2 PL. + :
nave

RAT 18, RUE 58060 TE

ES L denies LF -

14.08 122 TPE EAN Ke HRST ES Hu

di.) STOMAS +. All rights reserved

| LEE £ ï ! j Évk F ré À PRE | é 24 NW «
To eo

THE PENNSYLVANIA STATES UNIVERSITY and LIBRARIES

summer

| -= Re nn nue
REA The NE. to L.

ee Ve

|
|

HIGH BANKING

AND THE REVOLUTIONS

Free delivery upon receipt of payment in stamps or postal orders.

WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR

The Kings of the Republic, History of the Jewish Quarters. (New Annotated and enlarged edition, 1888). – 2 volumes... 7 francs.

THE NEXT REVOLUTION (1886)..... ls "RE WHERE LETTERS FROM A MARSEILLE MAN ON THE UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION OF

1867, with engravings (1867). – 1 volume..... 5 francs.
Venality in Journalism (brochure)..... 0 fr. 25

UNDER PRESSURE:

Historical banditry. Speculation under the Third Republic

Republic. (Contemporary History, 1870–1887, with plates)
colored.)

Summary of this work: I. CENTURIES–OLD SOLIDARITY:
Historical routine. – Characteristics. – Incubation
of the Third Republic.

II. ANARCHIC PROGRESSIONS: Struggle over the corpses
(1870–1872). – Multicolored Vultures (1873–1875). – Evohé!
Jehovah! (1876–1878). – Delilah's Scissors (1879–1881).

Trumpets of Jericho (1882–1884). – The Tarpeia Rock (1855–1887).

III. RESULTS: Scientific control. – Forecasts.
– Conclusion.

2 volumes..... '7 francs.

Typography A.–M. BEAUDELLOT, 9, place des Vosges.

AUGUSTE CHIRAC

te 4" a ns 2" 2,

THERE

HIGH BANKING

k | AND THE

REVOLUTIONS,

| :
| "The financiers support the State

"Just as the rope supports the hanged man,"

)

id ET Ci
LA f. A = ee
Ne -s ns...

(in Voltaire.)

NEW EDITION, ANNOTATED AND EXPANDED

NEW PARISIAN BOOKSTORE
ALBERT SAVINE, PUBLISHER

18, RUE DROUOT, 18

1888 mms to

ES RG
nn

INTRODUCTION

Variations in public opinion.

December 1887.

This book, which has been impossible to find for the past ten years, was written

| in one fell swoop under the impression of the events that had marked the period 1873-1875 (1).

A mere spectator of the shames, scandals, and intrigues whose political rivalries surrounded themselves in order to seize

All the disorganization, including

I could clearly see that the upper echelons of the banking system were solely to blame.

I wanted to shout it from the rooftops, and, above all, demonstrate that the chan-

The movement of men would be useless as long as the revolutions
The lion-holders of gold would retain their power.

That was the aim of High Banking and Revolutions.

Since 1876, and now more than ever, the facts have sadly proved my thesis right.

(1) The history of this period can be found in my work on Speculation.

SU ETS Je ts sn dt

that

me

VI INTRODUCTION.

The thing is, between 1876 and 1887, nothing changed, except that we can now say and write the truth without incur the wrath of the law; but we shall see that this will not
It doesn't mean much, because writing the truth isn't
It's useless if you can't propagate it.

In any case, eleven years ago, they faced the kings of gold
was a legal danger; the press enjoyed only a freedom restricted and the feathers were often very timid.

Therefore, from its very publication, my book had to undergo all the vexations of censorship.

s

Should I attribute to this circumstance the noise that one surrounded it, the rapid depletion of all its editions and the absorption of several print runs by a newspaper then in the process of being founded (the Lantern) and which sought to attract

– Popular confidence in giving my book as a bonus to its readers?

Or am I to believe that the public spirit of 1876 was,

more than today's, eager to know the des–

under financial arrangements?

I will simply note that seven to eight years later, in 1883, although, by law, the press had recovered its freedom, it was almost impossible for me to make known to public a new work, complementary to the previous one, and which recounted the history of the Jewish quarters, in two volumes entitled the Kings of the Republic.

This time, a conspiracy of silence had been organized. and the press law has been of no use to me; hence I conclude that, although free according to the code, newspapers had been enslaved by another mysterious power.

IN

HAS

INTRODUCTION. | NI

Remarkable thing! It's in full operation of the the liberal constitution of 1875 that the voice of truth could to be more completely stifled.

Let us not be mistaken about pseudo-liberalism of this regime. This liberalism is only apparent, and with gold From the world of high finance, he knows how to reliably cancel each of the freedoms which he registered in the Bulletin of Laws, with the DrRyante

e.

So in 1876 we were still living under the cent-
preventive security exercised by the peddling commission.

She couldn't delete the book itself but, on the other hand, she immediately pounced on the posters which they announced it.

The display was heavily monitored, under the pretext of defending the walls against the prose of the pretenders.

So I wasn't the only one who couldn't display this.
that I needed to make known, and we will be able to cons-later, by reading the following excerpt from the newspaper Le Corsaire,

Published on May 25, 1876:

Another poster was not rejected, but this time censoredrée. It was the announcement of a book full of revelations about the mysteries of speculation, for which the government
The French seem to have as much respect as the Pharaohs.
from Egypt for the mysteries of Isis.

The poster bore the title of the work: High Banking and the revolutions, and, in addition, the book's epigraph and titles

VIIT INTRODUCTION.

chapters. The epigraph is borrowed from Montesquieu, it is This one:

"Financiers support the state like a rope supports the hanged.

This opinion of Montesquieu did not seem to the prefecture police images worthy of being displayed on the walls, alongside professional images
"grams from café-concerts, or perfumers' spiel, of charlatans and liquidation houses that have "finally done bankruptcy.

The prose of the author of The Spirit of the Laws could not find favor before the prefectural censorship. This time, the prefecture, which consult the embassies to see if they are willing to grant

consult with the financiers to remove the phrase from a poster by Montesquieu.

As for the chapter titles, they were worded as follows:

The Revolutionary Bankers. – The Pickpockets. –
The English Plague. – Capitulation of Paris. – Our Farmers
generals. – LaAFFITE. – OUVRARD. – CASIMIR PÉRIER. – ROTHSCHILD. – MALLET. – $SEILLIÈRE. – HAINGUERLOT. – DELESSERT. – The Stool of Madame de Rothschild. – The Billion émigrés.– The English Debt. – Thiers in 1840.
– Mr. Decases's Nose. – The Rothschild Bakery.

– 1848. – Imperial Cynicism. – PereIRE. – Mirës. –
The One Hundred Million of the Stockbrokers. – Tax on the stock market game, – The Socialists. – The workers are ac-

tionaries. – The Plunder of the Treasure. – 18931 – The old assembly and finance. – The new assembly. – Where al-Let's go?

The police headquarters was alarmed by these headlines. There were is the one whose removal she requested; these are: Our Farmers generals; The Stool of Mrs. de Rothschild; The Nest of Mr. Decases; Thiers in 1840; Imperial Cynicism; The

One hundred million from stockbrokers; The Socialists and The Looting of the Treasure.

INTRODUCTION. F IX

Apparently, there are words that require a fig leaf and which would disturb the modesty of passers-by, to whose wishes Advertisements for some kind of copaiba balm are displayed.
Mr. Thiers' name, the words "imperial cynicism", "so-"Specialists" are removed from the vocabulary of the display, like the word "amnesty".

We had to resign ourselves to it.
Undeterred by this altercation, I still had the audacity to go and claim the stamp, which was then essential to be allowed in bookstores in train stations.

At that time, Hector Pessard held sway in the office of the press (Ministry of the Interior).

He's a former journalist, I told myself, he'll understand me.

So I went to complain to him about the narrow-mindedness of his views

the peddling commission.

Alas! Pessard was no longer a journalist, he had become official.

Very graciously, but very bureaucratically, he told me

replied that my book was "too full of personalities"
"ism".

'Later, I received a similar reply signed Massicault.

The more things change!.... etc.

The reader will be able to appreciate the value of the alleged motive.

It is believed, perhaps, that since the law of 1881, something

* The choice has been changed in this respect!

That is not the case, or at least, if the thing has remained, the
Only the names have changed; for, instead of being called Pessard or Massicault, the imprint is now called Hachette.

L:

X INTRODUCTION.

While pointing out the administrative hassles which I was the object; the Corsair had overlooked the most delicate point.

It was Aurélien Scholl who put his foot in it.

He dedicated one of his "Letters" to him in L'Événement.
Paris.

With him, Judaism and Judaizers were put on the spot.

And, as we shall see, he amused himself at the expense of the Princes.
of Abraham, the Marquises of Astruc and the Dukes of Isaac.

His article is, moreover, so brilliant and so eventful that
The reader will appreciate it if I reproduce it here:

“

Montesquieu's saying has often been imitated and reinterpreted:
"Financiers support the state like a rope supports the Hang him!

Scribe put it in the theatre, and it was cited as being by Scribe.
From that moment on, it could be found everywhere. Alphonse Karr was there.
is sometimes served; the Echoes of Paris picked it up, and one of These days it can be found in French.

Montesquieu's quote serves as the epigraph to a book that will be published this week, and of which I am sent the proofs: The High Banking and Revolutions, by Auguste Cnirac.

“Since 1789,” the author says, “financial people have put to the fashion, a series of complaints, always the same, about the revolutionary spirit, the perversity of the people, of their aspirations
tions to chaos and disorder. »

And Mr. Chirac proves that the revolutionaries, the pillagers and

The troublemakers are precisely the gamblers of fortune.
public, in other words the financiers.

RS

INTRODUCTION. XI

do the managers of public funds.

"Depending on whether these managers escape control or are subject to it, wealth circulates to spread and grow among the masses by the individual, or on the contrary to accumulate and grow in A few individuals against the masses.

"Strength and prestige are summed up today in one word, ac- systematic characterization of the PADFSSeRENE sign of the exchange: money.

"And the two aristocracies unite so willingly that Milo Ou- V rard becomes Duchess of Rochechouart, and Miss Say becomes Princess de Broglie.

"Men simply buy the titles that girls acquire"
They seek through marriage, when the counts and barons will be Worn out, we will have the Prince of Abraham, the Marquis of Astruc and the Duke of Isaac.

"Those who would be irritated by this caricatured domination will be treated as Communards, and will have to atone for their wrongs in the present and future penal colonies.

"The feudal aristocracy, which made and unmade kings, is replaced by the financial aristocracy, which makes and unmakes governments governments.

While billions are being divided among a few men, ten million citizens, named Martin, Durand, Chapuzeau, Boulard, Chabert, Bonneau, Duval or Batandier, plow the earth, they hammer iron, they cut stones, they erect frameworks, They operate machines, they suffer from hunger when there is unemployment. and leave children in rags when one of them falls

from a scaffold where he found himself caught by a strap

transmi issi n,

em vie D

XII INTRODUCTION.

"A tax is created for specific reasons. The reasons disappear and the tax remains.

"We have never abolished a tax; we transform it into the ac-croissant. "

These are the intermediaries between the state and individuals who
They do the job; the only benefit goes to them.

"When you take out a loan, you pay it twice:
once by exchanging your money for the security, a second times by paying ADAL, with which they promise to reimburse you to stock market.

For thirty years, the savings of French labor, the savings of the countryman, the merchant, the petty bourgeois, the worker,
They leave France in cash and return in paper.

"However, there always comes a time when this paper is no longer worth Nothing. "

Batandier paid a sultana for a pearl necklace and a sword enriched with rubies for some bey or other. Molinchard built One kilometer of railway in the Orient. Molinchard and Batandier have no more bread, while the Count of Abraham and the Baron of Moses, – who served as intermediaries, – gild the grid
From their hotel, they fill their stables with thoroughbred horses, and buy landscapes for 60,000 francs to hang in their office.

To attract the gold and silver coins scattered throughout so much drawers, hidden under so many workbenches, buried in so many
For cellars, you need "suction pumps".

That is why counters and sub-counters have multiplied tiplies.

Then you need a lever or a big engine, and it's called a king or emperor.

It embodies the country's confidence; people borrow in its name;
We get rich under his responsibility.

1
:
nn _ _ to ts +
F ER tn
ee ; "é
CR CE

INTRODUCTION. XIII

And it is not those who use the instrument; it is those against whom it is used pay for its civil list.

When the big engine has run its course, and when, through sheer force of prosperity, we find ourselves with empty pockets, there is a small revolution.

People who need a lever or an engine are looking for to rebuild the machine under another name.

This is called "conspiring in the interest of order".

Have we subscribed to any of these bonus and prize loans?

Have we given enough of our labor and money to these amiable Tirelaine and Co., who make us shout: Watch out! by their coachmen.

Don't we feel tempted to shout at them: "Watch out yourself?"

Individuals are ruined; states are struggling. Where

Where did our funds go?
Take the stock market price, and read the fund prices

foreigners: |

PÉTUVICRS: 02 es QE ounce re 231 »
Egyptian loan. + 42 »
EUTC as dr Le -srenens 47e 12 60
Ottoman obligations 55 »
Spain outside . . . , 14 »
Honduras. DS ee 8 50

Oh my Mexican! Oh my Transcontinental, where are you?

What have we done with our funds?
Who benefited from them?

XIV INTRODUCTION.

Why is the ticket window where they disappeared still there?
green, smiling, and ready to start again?

Tomorrow, perhaps, we will read an advertisement worded like this:

TWENTY MILLION LOAN

FROM THE LAND OF DELOUNDATION

"Guaranteed interest: 8%. Two lots of 500,000 francs. Eighteen"

lots of 100,000 francs (with a guarantee from the government of the Desolation and all the sorry bankers).

"Issuance of 200,000 shares of 1,000 francs each" payable:

"10 francs when subscribing."

"And 990 francs for distribution."

"The government of the land of Desolation offers, as Guarantee to subscribers:

"1° The sterility of the soil;

'« 20 Blocks of ice of inestimable value;

"30 Entire schools of walrus tusks."
"

– to the bearer, –

No one denies the importance that the defense of walrus in European trade. This commodity alone would suffice to pay the loan interest.

"Subscriptions are taken out in Paris, at the Comptoir des Râfleurs, and in province, at all the correspondents' offices.

And this is not a joke,

We'll do it again.

"Twelve and a half cents (1/8 percent) give the agents 100 million brokerage transactions annually, » So that means annually,

_ ln 4 7
. desmsmsite 'ho

soul and sea ide

ee —
We have Mr. Le
: : -s

_ L-- ns mnt
the. 210 RE, -

INTRODUCTION. XV

}
|
|
: Also, the sum of the nonunal stakes amounts to on the stock market 80 billion!

It would be charming in a country where everyone had the arms crossed; but when, on the contrary, one is dealing with a people active, tireless, never shrinking from any labor, we grieve to see this wound on him, through which his blood and strength are escaping.

Let's finish with a few sphorisms:
|
' - Sir, I would like to know when you will pay me.

"1 - You are very curious.
| (PRINCE OF TALLEYRAND.) .

You can imprison me, enemy fortune,
1 But make me pay, by Jove! I dare you!

"But give the money back!"
(ROOT.)

If your debtor is experiencing discomfort, wait until they are more
If you forgive his debt, it will be more meritorious for him.

CRAZY
! (The Koran.)

Lending money means jeopardizing your own and risking your friend.
(Léon GozLaN.)

Gold is a chimera.
(SCRIDE.)

Parisians, stamped paper is eating you alive.
(FOURNIER-VERNEUIL.)

I only have one penny.
(RomIEu, former prefect.)

XVI INTRODUCTION.

My dear Méry,

Lend me five hundred francs, which I absolutely need.
Your friend,

GÉRARD DE NERVAL.
My dear Gérard,

If you are not my friend, I have no reason to be with you.

lend me five hundred francs. If you're my friend, why would you give them to me?
you ask?

Everything by the people, nothing for the people.
(A former senator.)

While money doesn't buy happiness, it certainly contributes enormously to it.
(Duvert and Lauzanne.)

Honor to the unfortunate brokerage firm.

NAPOLEON.

And just for the record:

AURÉLIEN SCHOLL.

*
* +

Except for the brilliant columnist for L'Évènement, who was hiding
Beneath the biting irony lies the serious core of his criticisms, the
The press, in general, carefully avoided highlighting any which concerned the Jewish quarter.

Naturally, Figaro and Gaulois remained silent.
Deeper.

Before going further and briefly mentioning the apprehensions from my book, I ask for permission to correct an error that I helped to perpetuate of which, I believe, the first culprit was Toussenet.

Moms. Sunday... —
. ns. ti : er:]

bot

L

|

INTRODUCTION. XVII

By using as an epigraph to my book the phrase attributed to Montesquieu: "The financiers support the State as the
"The rope supports the hanged man," I had simply copied one epigraphs appearing on the edition of the Jews Kings of
The Era, published in 1847.

Since then, and on several occasions, but unnecessarily, I have
I leafed through Montesquieu's work to find out what was the point.
he had written the phrase that everyone in Judaism borrowed;
Ultimately, it was in Voltaire that I found his true origin. |
Or indeed, one reads, in the Mélanges (1), the following anecdotesells:

One day, Cardinal de Fleury, while presenting the king with Farmers general, who had just signed a lease: "There you go,
"€," he said, "Sire, "the forty columns of the State."

Here, the editors added the following note:

– "Yes," said the Marquis de Souvré, "they support the State"
"Like the rope supports the hanged man."

This, I believe, is the truth about this famous joke.
which, moreover, is in the character of the Souvré, a soldier covered in...
enraged, whose story recounts his valiant conduct, during the capture of Bruges, in July 1745.

Montesquieu did, it is true, address the harmful role that Bankers could gamble in an Étot; but, no
For my part, I couldn't find a sentence that resembled the one that Toussenel blamed him.

Therefore, Souvré must be given back what legitimately belongs to him.

(1) VOLTAIRE, Complete Works, Volume XIX, page 333, edition
Lahure, Hachette, 1860.

De mie f nmt =
= se Jr CT Re
4. re

XVII INTRODUCTION.

THIS

Montesquieu, moreover, being quite rich in his own funds so as not to suffer any damage.

Having addressed this minor historical criticism, I will now retake the examination of public opinion in 1876.

L'Courrier de France was then directed by Guyot-Mont-

Payroux, with, I believe, the assistance of Robert Mitchell, all two old acquaintances for me.

This did not prevent the fact that in the May 7th issue, 18%, I was executed in the following manner, which I have no knowledge of resentment, because at least I wasn't being suffocated!

Here is what was written:

A book entitled "The High Life" has just been published by Amyot. Banking and Revolutions. The author, Mr. Auguste Chirac, has divided his work into three points: the starting point, the journey ascending and the arrival point.

The starting point is, in a few pages, a brief overview on the old summary of royal finances, on trade in coins and England's role in all political matters and economic factors related to international traffic.

The end point is a somewhat fanciful induction of the increase in debt and the influence of bankers. The author himself gave the chapter the title "Utopias". dedicated to the reforms he deems necessary. What do you want? to tell an inventor who carries out the task himself so willingly And in advance? One can only find him charming and in good spirits. Easy.

The most interesting part of the book is the one comprising under the name of the ascending step. It is the one that holds the

me ER ne

mn —

ee ne

THE

INTRODUCTION: 19th century

the largest space in the book, and it is also the one that offers the more attractive.

The generation of 1830 was well acquainted with the financial particularities—ceremonies that had followed 1814. Perréaux, Ouvrard, Lafitte and many others were so intimately involved in politics, that the chroniclers of the time followed them step by step and Every day. In our time, all of this is fine. forgotten, and, except for the rare survivors of this turbulent period, it Very few people know this story.

In a humorous style, affecting the form of the summary and In this sketch, Mr. Chirac scrolls before the reader's eyes, rapidly—slowly and effortlessly, from 1814 to 1870, all the per—financial surveys that have been intertwined with our movement century. At the same time, he recounts the history of our debt and of various combinations that have brought it to the point where we are now are,

There are 4, in this presentation, a host of curious anecdotes and Cleverly chosen words that bring cheer to the numbers. Everything This is being carried out at a very rapid pace and is unfolding at a dizzying speed. The sheets are rotated like the plates of a stereoscope.

It's a real magic lantern; you have to see it.

It was this "lively and cheerful" way of calling the attention to the shameful wounds I have revealed that I (fs allusion in the preface to the third edition)

The Century was more serious; it expressed itself thus in its issue of May 21, 1876:

Mr. Chirac undertook the difficult task of studying the role of the high finance in contemporary revolutions. I] is uncon—

vs um Them +

XX INTRODUCTION.

testable that the financial potentates of all times, either by their personal initiative, either through their operations, have exercised a considerable influence on political events; and, from

of brilliance and power than in past eras. But this in-Fluency does not easily lend itself to analysis; one senses the effects rather than us seeing them. Attention is drawn only to administrative or military acts, on mo- phenomena deraux or the economic facts that it determines, and for the de-
To cover it, you have to go looking for it in the background of the story.
This is what Mr. Chirac attempted for the period from 1789 to 1870. He

he focused only on state operations, i.e. he rewrote the history national loans.

He outlines the competition that these loans have generated, namely:

embarrassment caused to governments by the demands of the High finance, the struggles of financial groups and their disastrous consequences results on the conduct of public affairs: it shows the bankers' unions, in their early days, operating within a circle limited combinations, then, emboldened by success, becoming indispensable, dealing with power on equal terms, and arriving to dictate their will to him. He shows how certain schemes policies that had very important consequences were the revenge of thwarted interests and unfulfilled greed. He establishes

you

finally, that for sixty years the support given to the State by the | major banking houses have been among the most expensive for the Treasury, and has contributed significantly to increasing national expenses.

We outline a general summary of the book, and, while cons-
while we would have to discuss a few points of detail, we acknowledge that Mr. Chirac's assessments are accurate and demonstrate a thorough understanding of the subject. This publication cation is not a work of circumstance, but it comes to this is especially relevant today given the prestige of high finance begins to decline. It is useful, it is necessary that the public this way of working closely with this oligarchy of speculation, which has caused so many ruins and continues its plundering with impunity.

=

has

Nor do I find the note of revolution in Human Rights.

: pair; but we will see to what extent the sound was veiled

And how much, today, by writing more bluntly, we

:| achieves as little result as in the past.

k:4 Human Rights were then under the direction of Sigismond-Lacroix, with the unapologetic collaboration

: by Yves Guyot; Rochefort simply signed X...; Paul

É Bouquet took it upon himself to analyze my book.

if These various writers, who at the time represented with self-

The "public spirit" is now distributed among different

) newspapers. |

Only the Rochefort newspaper recommended it to readers my Kings of the Republic; I cannot say the same of the sheets on which Sigismond-Lacroix and Yves Guyot write.

Why? My theses from 1883-85 are the same as those of 1876!

Who has changed, them or me?

In any case, here is how Paul Bou-quet, to whom I am grateful for having given his article the tone seriousness that suited him; he expressed himself thus in the Human Rights, dated May 25, 1876:

From Le RE

x The: F3

era

The epigraph of this book, borrowed from Montesquieu: "The "Financials support the state like a rope supports a hanged man."
indicates sufficiently how Mr. Chirac appreciated the political role of high finance. He did so, with figures to our century. 11 has shown the princes of finance lending to

XXII INTRODUCTION.

Napoleon, lending to the Bourbons, receiving commissions from foreigners, speculating on France's misfortunes, sleight of hand borrowing for their benefit, making advances to the Treasury at usurious rates, executing, in short, high-level exercises voltise, that is to say high financial piper, y,

Mr. Chirac restores the true character of the revolution 1830, prepared and exploited by figures in the financial world political commentator; he cites facts, he names people, and de- The picture of the financial shenanigans to which a- Mr. d'Orléans was in a state of shock for eighteen years. He is merely summarizing the financial history of the Second Empire, to which he devotes a A special book, a story that is quite scandalous and saddening in a very different way.

Perhaps there is something in Mr. Chirac, a financial student, it seems, of Mr. Mirès, a bit of personalism: he attacks a lot of Rothschild, while somewhat overshadowing Pereire and Fould, Mirès and others, no less responsible than the extremely wealthy banker quier of Lafüite Street. It is true that it only grazes the second empire, and that he perhaps intends, in his study

later, to distribute responsibilities among the main

members of the financial staff.

Mr. Chirac concluded that the loans should be eliminated, and preferred to strike directly at the sources of work or income, without alienating the future, without providing a vast field for manipulation and to expensive games for the Treasury.

It is difficult to be systematic and absolute in any particular matter. the question being the most complex of all and not being resolved only in parallel with others. But it seems to us that in Indeed, we should be concerned with "closing the great book of the public debt, to settle it through amortization, reduce the expenses and keep the high bank away from any interference. vilified in the state budget."

It is obvious that the bank should not enjoy any immunity. Speculation, stock market gambling, necessitated by a kind of flow and The ebb and flow, that is to say through supply and demand, must not be leading, as we unfortunately see, to speculation

|

ii

INTRODUCTION. XXIII

unbridled tions. In our economic environment, given

4. The unequal distribution of public burdens, the monopoly of a . : class, the lack of scruples of a certain number of individuals,

;
ie
1 se ni

1 day |
{

"has
.
There

|

;

:|

– In

me

Excessive speculation can only have consequences deplorable for our social and financial future,

Paul Bocqueer (1).

This article provides me with the opportunity to state that, in
In the current edition, I have taken into account the observations of his author in relation to the imperial period.

I did, in fact, plan to dedicate a part to this story
a particular book; but in this one, the absence of comparisons between the financial excesses of the Empire and those of the Other regimes may have exaggerated in the eyes of my critic.
the place I had given to the Rothschilds, although this Their pity was due to them, for they truly dominate this century.
entire,

Bouquet describes me as: a financial student from Mirées.

I had indeed said, in the 1876 edition, that "Mirès, defeated, he showed me the dark underbelly of the world's galleries money.

What I retained most from the demonstrations of this Master, this is the indisputable evidence of wrongdoing and...
corrupting manipulations of the upper and lower banks, which, from-
Then, more than ever, it devoured the vital forces of the France (2).

(1) I have since learned that Paul Bouquet's real name was PAUL STRAUSS, currently a city councillor |

(2) Charles Virmaître, in his recent book entitled: Paris-
Canard, recounts almost exactly my beginnings in {a Press,

XXIV: INTRODUCTION.

I'm continuing my exam.

In 1876, I collaborated for a time with L'Écho, under the various directions, including that of Charles Savary deputy.

So it will come as no surprise to see me executed by the beautiful in this newspaper where finance played a major role,
just as the famous constitution was being drafted.

. under the direction of Mirès. It is quite true that I was completely ignorant-everything related to finance and a good part of it which was related to the economy.

But Mirès, by demanding my signature, forced me to in- to quit what I put above; moreover, one day, he told me proved doctorally that "a man, a writer, and even A POET, They were not complete if they ignored the finances of their country." So I began to seriously study what, in short, It was my livelihood.

As Virmaître says, "I gave myself over to my passion > in the Centre-left in 1870, this making that seem acceptable; but when, After Mirès' death, Mr. Debrousse asked me "how much I could have it reported in the financial statement," and that, naturally- I had replied, "Nothing!" He politely asked me to leave. go. .

Mirès, in fact, had never wanted his newspaper to deal with something other than his disputes with Péreire.

In the troubled times that followed my departure from the Press and which preceded the constitution of 1875, there was a determined effort not to offer salaries only for financial work; But I, on the other hand, was determined to succeed in the theater! But when I realized that, once again, finance played the predominant role, my anger

There were no more limits, and I definitively entered the countryside which I have always pursued since.

ne uit me

INTRODUCTION. XXV

Mr. Chirac started from the premise that people in finance are "revolutionaries, perverts, looters and troublemakers-" "theorists." The author argues that this is not a paradox; he will allow us to hold a completely opposite opinion.

By laying down similar premises, Mr. Chirac arrived at to conclude that, through the maneuvers of high finance, there is no No more selflessness, loyalty, or patriotism. These are These are conclusions which, fortunately, are supported by the facts.

As far as we are concerned, we cannot let this pass without protest the attacks directed, in this book, against the the most respectable and universally respected men observed in our financial world. We will say the same of the de-claims to which the author gives vent against men who played a glorious role under the Restoration and under the July Monarchy.

This review of opinions lacks a standard rating for...
Financial newspapers.

Here it is:

Édouard Cahen, the great broker of high finance, as charming as a man as he is disastrous as financier, he told me, in his Journal of Public Works, the following enormous block of paper, dated May 11, 1876:

Who knows how quickly budgetary expenditures have

...Increased over the last fifty years. The 1830 budget reached

1.095 million; that of 1876 resulted in expenses of 2.569 million lions. In the same period, the servicing of the Public Debt increased from 63 to 748 million. Everyone knows that wars

2

LU ROC ne ne Pme ti dt

4 ere É

XXV{ INTRODUCTION.

and the political events that unfolded during this period Time is largely the cause of this prodigious increase in public expenses. We also know that budgets are increasing. gradually, as the needs of a nation develop. They loppent year after year; sometimes it's the tools that need improving, Sometimes the country's defense needs to be completed; these are bonuses or the industry during the implementation of certain eco- reforms

These causes of expense have existed throughout history, and will long continue to feature in the reasons supporting ausmen-positions of credit or even government loans.

We have before us a rather original book, whose author

'strives to demonstrate, using singular aphorisms, that the wars or revolutions that we have suffered for more half a century ago, they were the personal and deliberate work of the high Bauque in France. The Revolution of 1789 created the great book of the public debt; but this great book has only just been opened, sometimes closed, only by the sole intervention of the bankers, who were preparing in advance all the events that we have seen unfolded from then on. The Hundred Days, the Restoration, 1830, 1848, 1851, 1870, and even the Commune, all these events, of which more

A great historian has indicated the causes, which are the exclusive work of high finance. This sudden discovery does credit to Mr. Chirac: it has the unusual merit of relieving all the previous governments made serious mistakes that public opinion could-
The Republic attributed this to them until now.

We, for our part, were unaware of the hidden role of the high finance; on the contrary, we knew it through the eminent services she rendered to the country on many difficult occasions cies. We find the support of his contribution in all the major emotions that aim at the development of wealth; it is associated with all urgent operations that the Treasury does not can undertake or complete within a fairly short period; its credit is as solid as that of the State, and savings constitute it dere rightly as the linchpin of major affairs.

INTRODUCTION. XXVII

Mr. Chirac undoubtedly wanted to try his hand at paradox. We Let us readily acknowledge that he did it with humor, if not with success.

As you can see, the note is quite steep, but it doesn't have absolutely nothing serious, and she is careful to pass omitting the aspect that Aurélien Scholl had highlighted and which was primarily what had earned me the hatred of the upper class bank.

I'll stop my quotations there; except for a few variations of
Of lesser importance, they summarize quite well the way
of which I was judged, both by the monarchist newspapers, such as the Gazette du Midi, which by republican journals
Caines, like the Courrier lilleraire.

Today, the thesis of my book accusing the high
The bank, being the sole plunderer and disruptor, is more than Never verified.

Eleven years of history have confirmed my conclusions and no one to This hour cannot deny that what happens to finance

leads to degradation!
AUGUSTE CHIRAC.

P.S. – The new edition I am offering to the public contains ab-absolutely everything that fell under that of 1876; I must say However, I have particularly revised the chapters dealing with of 1818 and the Empire.

I mentioned the latter earlier; as for what concerns

XXVIII INTRODUCTION.

1

In 1848, I felt it necessary to emphasize more forcefully the teachings events of history.

I also added new findings, such as the cominclude the events that have occurred since 1876 and the statistical figures most recently published ticks.

Finally, I included in Chapter VI, in the form of graphs,
the economic and social history of the last three governments,
and then, in the form of documents:

10 Curious clarifications on France's claim against England; |

20 Three draft bills drawn up based on findings
scientific and not political, precisely codifying the repayments that periodically bankrupt France.

AC

TT,

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

May 16, 1876.

MY DEAR PUBLISHER,

Imagine a doctor, probing a horrific ulcer,
would hear someone say in a harmonious concert: – “What A graceful gesture! What a white hand!

That's exactly my situation.

High Banking and Revolutions was a book by combat.

It was a cry of alarm in support of the threatened Republic, and not, as has been published, – perhaps treacherously, –
a book full of humor | |

It was above all a work of French patriotism!

And here I am, wondering about a third edition
the preface which I had thought unnecessary for the others, you inform that four-fifths of these went to The Stranger.

Even better, I just learned that it's also happening abroad.
that the reforms I have indicated be implemented: indeed, singular-
By sheer coincidence, a bill has just been introduced in Italy

E 2,

XXX PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

by which, in accordance with the conclusions of the previous day
chapter of my book, we tax the operations of forward contracts – that is to say, gambling.

Ultimately, what am I complaining about?

As soon as the book was announced, a bold columnist and spiritual, momentarily setting aside his mordant banter, He cuts open the book and asserts the bold thesis of the work. But it stops abruptly.

Almost immediately, others throw flowers onto the abyss: "The book is charming, the paradox is brilliant. The style is full of humor. It's dizzying. The number explodes there. Laughter, the anecdote is tumbling and flaming.

A more serious writer told me: "There is a lot of truth in it." in your story." But he doesn't write it down.

An editor-in-chief admitted to me that he didn't dare talk about the book.

Several other newspapers are reporting the accusations that I have formulated, they protest softly as far as they are concerned politically.

Others, finally, announce an analysis and offer their congratulations in passing. the literary friend.

But they all carefully avoid attacking the heart of the matter, of to talk about organized theft, about recorded events,

We're afraid of the high-level banks that pay, that much is obvious. tooth.

And this fear isn't unique to journalists. A bookseller went so far as to tell me:

"You are being too harsh on the Rothschilds. I don't

I won't put your book in my display case; – they are clients... etc... »

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION. XXXI

As for me, in deciphering, in the heat of history and with the support from his powerful assertions:

"That for eighty-seven years, we have not ceased to lose all the gains of 1789 on the FEUDALITY OF DIVINE RIGHT, to such an extent that the urgency of an 1889 against the FINANCIAL FEUDALITY, which replaced and surpassed the other,

I had thought that the French press, asserting its independence—
d'ailleurs elle pénétrée de son rôle de balise de l'opinion, signalerait
the danger and would reveal the pitfall.

I was wrong: the newspapers seem to be entirely dominated by this feudalism of money, which is devouring our country and whom I would like to unmask while she has still completed her crime.

They therefore serve as leverage for this terrible device, which I am reporting.
he who, sucking up France's money, only gives back half...
serenity, dishonour and demoralization.

They are therefore complicit in this system of fraudulent exploitation.
gale, which unfolds in the history of the country, and they tremble at unveil with me the pickpockets who are huddled in the ar-sections of our Code.

Perhaps they have taken their skepticism so far as to assume that... writing a patriotic book filled with harsh truths, at the risk to alienate my sympathies and arouse my anger, then—health issues — which, incidentally, I'm not too worried about — I wanted to re-
to add some praise for my style or my erudition, —
He himself, who knows? Maybe even extract some ransom from some Financial compromises!

It's such a common practice! In which case, in Darlageant.....,

XXXII PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

No, I could not possibly push the outrage of Skepticism. I prefer to blame indifference and laziness.

Finally, my dear publisher, you know which anonymous letter was addressed to me.

They are branding me a Communeard, they are charitably warning me that the government would be doing a pious act by sending me to Nou-Mya; and, finally, I am threatened with some kind of punishment.
if I publish the announced book on imperial finances.

In truth, you and I are daring scoundrels.

And while we are being buried like this, it will only take the daughter Z.
deceive his wife, or that Mr. K. steals the cash register, that

Ms. A. is throwing an oriental party, or Ms. B. a midnight party.

Prussian, so that our journalists might mingle in the countryside and be on edge with four columns of copy on the awareness ! .

And after that, you want to risk a third edition!

Would a reforming Egypt have requested the book?
after Berlin, Petersburg, London, Naples, Florence, Rome, ...
Is this New Caledonia?

Finally, if you persist with your idea, make some posters.
well detailed: public common sense will judge, perhaps, and put-
Please read this letter as a preface.

Yours sincerely,

AUGUSTE CHIRAC.

Qu Run nn - een cmenee-

RE Lo

THERE

HIGH BANKING

AND THE

REVOLUTIONS

THE STARTING POINT

I

THE REVOLUTIONARIES.

Since 1789, financial people have put to the remains, regarding "the revolutionary spirit, of progress of the revolution, of the perversity of the people, of his aspirations for plunder and disorder."

It is to address these complaints that this book has

has been written.

p. HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

It is mainly to demonstrate, with the evidence to the hand, to the aforementioned people of finance:

Let the revolutionaries, the perverts, the plunderers
And the troublemakers are them and them alone!

This seems paradoxical.

And yet history, inexorable in its deductions, makes this paradox an absolute truth.

This book is therefore a story.

As such, it contains no fact that is materially accurate.

And I am convinced that the thesis of which he is the
This development will be much less surprising, gentlemen.
financial experts that you yourself, reader, who are accustomed to long since trained to see in them the conservative values par excellence.

|
|

—

k

TT

He

PREMISES.

A government is never anything other than a collection of men who are made or are making themselves managers of public funds.

Depending on whether these managers escape all control by their omnipotence, or, on the contrary, are there strictly subject to the origin of their mandate, the Public brown circulates to spread and grow in the mass by the individual, or, on the contrary, circumscribe to accumulate and grow in some individuals against the masses.

Under the old autocracy, the vassal owed to the lord.

It was prestige that gave strength.

4. HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Under modern democracy, unity is absorbed in the tens and it is strength that gives the present.

Now, everything—strength and prestige—is summed up today. In short: the systematic appropriation of the sign representative of exchange: money.

— D ne —

“ + + 7 LL
ne nr
Lt -paquen, > Gr te pe

Ter

III

A SIMPLE OVERVIEW.

About 150 years ago, the best means of extracting from the citizen's pocket, – from the subject of the king, as he was then called, – the fruit of his labor, – public savings, as they would say in the past today – it was, purely and simply, to require for rot service.

In exchange, the dignities, the privileges, the orders, Noble titles were offered to a select few. ransomed people and the subject was happy.

It could have lasted forever, that is to say, also It's been a long time since there were any clever people in France. to collect the coins in order to exchange them later against a royal bauble, supported by a benefice or of some privilege whatsoever.

6. HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

France's financial system was then in a state of Absolutely naive simplicity.

A crowned man ransoms his court; the court extorted money from the tax farmers; the tax farmers– The raux extorted money from the tax collectors and the salt taxes; and these extorted money from the common people.

This system of successive and purely arbitrary decisions could not continue to assert themselves with a Such audacity.

Those who were its agents felt, themselves– same, as the common people, on whom, at the end of the account, weighed the whole burden, would not resign indefinitely serving as breasts for parasites the monarchy.

In short, the same result had to be achieved. but by changing the methods.

Skill had to be substituted for force, for burglary tion the false key. |

The highway robber was about to rise to the dignity of a pickpocket.

Such has been modern progress:

Indeed, the dying monarchy suddenly saw to create a system of rampant speculation; this system had a seductive side, because it held out promise, no longer only in the eyes of a few, but in the eyes
everyone hopes to accumulate in a short time
large sums of money, and to be admitted, in turn,

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 7

to the feeding frenzy of charges, now being able to acquire some.

It was then that France saw the emergence of the fantastic
Jean Law, who shone during the good old days of the street
Quincampoix and that the gigantic East India Company scam.

A general bankruptcy followed this fleeting moment.

The ruins that we had wanted to repair became deeper, more numerous than ever, and this
The catastrophe exasperated the countless citizens who had, too, glimpsed their million, but in Just a dream.

Some, however, remained standing on the debris of all; for there were at that time forscandalous tunes, like unheard-of ruins.

The financial theories of the beginning of the
The reign of Louis XV were more intimately linked than one might think.
one could not believe it at the cry of liberation that he uttered
the provinces were united in 1789.

No more privileges! Death to the aristocrats!
they shouted.

And, as a corollary: the execution of the king, that of the nobles and high-ranking financiers; and finally the bloody era which leads to this other era, also san-glante, but pierced by a little glory, called
First the Republic, then the First Empire!

If 1989 had pushed the theory of equality to its ex-

8 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

extreme limits, the return of a monarchical system, although affecting a plebeian origin, it provoked the reaction of an autocracy.

This reaction took place.

But like the monarchy, it had to adopt the plebeian form.

The Empire, in fact, aroused the greed of traitors so many, who, this time, organized themselves with energy and they even sought to ally themselves with the old nobility; They succeeded, since we saw a Rochechouart, last-to be Richelieu's heir, to marry M^{me} Ouvrard.

But this was the work of the Restoration.

But, pending this merger, the financial aristocracy—a woman of the Empire, bourgeois in manners and origins Gine, hungry for greatness, because she was eaten of pride blindly obeying its greed, cause of his fortune, he could not take long to realize that the master was too much, and to note that, in order to be subject to the passions of absolute power, it was worth The one with the bright, sparkling splashes was better. instead of simply being brutal.

So, we began to wonder if, with We couldn't afford the money to buy a pair of these prestige which is the accepted prerogative of old races royal and conspired for the Bourbons.

One initial fact clearly emerges from this tendance.

=. 2 Eee CPS "Sn |

to ES ù ll ____ 1" to

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 9

I

+ That's because until that moment gold was less resought for himself as for the elevation he

. could provide.

Since then, the comfort of life has replaced the comfortable of the name.

Even after 1789 and after the Empire, the theories re-

Publicaines were poorly understood or misunderstood.

"Me too" was the last word of the dream of the domination.

As for the solidarity of interests, to social well-cal, to the ease of each by all and of all by Each one, 1 liter, that was out of the question.

Despite the overly nebulous Social Contract of Rousseau and the Man with Forty Crowns, which is too anecdotal Voltaire, we didn't yet suspect the form practical applications that these beautiful theories could take on miserably aborted in 1851, both by . the extravagances of some, driven by ambition, erimi- + different from others. |

The revolution of '89 had itself prepared the ins- | a tool designed to destroy its restorative tendencies } and progressives:

She had created the public ledger.

It can be said that, through this creation, she had organized, so to speak, from that moment on, the mode a future according to which state finances would be managed.

Also, it is in this same great book that we

DS. Re ne — TT — —

>

10 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

we will find the irrefutable history of the spoliations of all the monarchies that succeeded one another.

but 1} was far from suspecting that his only result would be to prepare future peoples for the possibility to prove in writing the abuses of which, until then, they were unable to assess either the importance or the extent.

And when he explained in his report "how the nation would constantly have in its hand the {to of the Public Credit," he was far from suspecting that he created another aristocracy within that same nation dangerous, based on this credit itself, and which in would be outrageously abusing the system.

It is the story of these abuses that we are going to write.

And as, after barely a hundred years, we find ourselves again-'vons the tax farmers under the modern name of political bankers, it's against them and their nameless Janissary brables that we are pushing today the cry of '89. |

Let the example of the past serve as a lesson to them.

We don't want massacres, because 1l is in-core time to stop evil peacefully, by the probity, through logic.

We do not want the attack on the pro-neither prie- nor social liquidation, nor religious persecution grievous, but we want energetic suppression abuses and the fair regulation of the function-

Oh em de mu

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 41

the operation of these savings-suction pumps blique which is called:

Bank houses.

They have always seized power to exhaust the nation.

The feudal aristocracy, which made and unmade the kings, is replaced by the financial aristocracy, which It makes and breaks governments.

All retrograde developments, all revo-

The Restoration of 1814;

The Hundred Days;

The Restoration of 1815:

The Monarchy of 1830;

The Republic of 1848;

The Coup d'État of 1851.

Everything is their work, and their exclusive work.

And if, going further, arriving at later dates
current, we want, at the risk of raising, a word, the most ardent passions, continue our

Given this, we will prove that:
1870, 1871, 1872, and even 1874, are still dominated by the political upper echelons of banking (1).

Well! He's crazy to leave the destinies of a

(L) I wrote this in 1876. Since then, the illness has worsened; I have de-

- shown in THE KINGS OF THE REPUBLIC (History of the Jewish Quarters)

and the History of Speculation. (Author's note.)

qe

12 THE HIGH BANKING AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

country in the hands of money men, monopolized
fortune tellers.

There are wise economists who strive, I will say
I know, to demonstrate that the prosperity of these accumulators
Theirs is linked to that of everyone else.

That's not the case, and while we wait for other demons-

Tell me, French taxpayers, at what time from the period opened by the First Empire you have you seen a single one of the taxes created for determined causes.

Never!

Once a tax is created, it's finished; it's there in perpetuity; one cannot We don't eliminate it, we transform it by increasing it.

This is largely the work of the system odious loans.

But remember that when you subscribe to a loan, you promise to give back twice the money that you believe only gives one.

Indeed, you only give it once when you subscribe. then a second time by paying the tax with the—which we promise to reimburse you for.

But in this back-and-forth of money, there is always intermediaries who accumulate profits at your injury and that of the State, in such a way that at some point, it is up to these intermediaries that you are perpetually paying usurious interest recorded in your ledger under the misleading figures of 5, 4 'J2, 4 and 5 percent.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 43

This is how your fathers of 1814 did not have, debt consolidated, that 63 million in annual charges, and Thus, in 1876, we had: 748 million pay perpetually.

You will be told, I know, that depreciation and Several cancellations took place between the two dates that I have just quoted, and that, as a result, the great—The book was relieved of 585 million.

I take full responsibility for this, because, in this case, our debt public would no longer amount to 748 million, but to { billion 330 million.

And what was the point of these cancellations?

You can clearly see that's not the case.

You will also be told that the financial powers serve to do great things, to liberate the territories to alleviate suffering.

That's precisely what we want to examine. And We will conduct this review in a spirit of conciliation. and fair reform, not with bias war against the financiers.

Because we are pursuing only one goal: improvement of the public good, and consequently the prosperity of the Republic, and therefore still the prosperity of all.

3.

IV

THE TRADE IN CUSTOMS.

Before undertaking the examination we have just to announce, 1} it is necessary to explain our opi- agreement on the rational role of free banking.

The goods piled up at the merchant's in écus, the banker's capital, therefore, does not should not, in our opinion, represent anything other than work temporarily converted into stock in the form the conventional sign of exchanges between services yields: THE MONEY.

However, industrially and commercially, the mai- Bank sounds facilitate this exchange and fuel the work. | | |

But, from a purely financial point of view, 'poli- technical and economic, that is to say from the point of view

SR a ut en

TT

of their role as intermediaries between the masses taxpayers who make up the state and each of these taxpayers taken individually, it should not no speculation exists, this speculation having no other effect than to impoverish the individual in his unity multiplied, that is to say in its mass, for the benefit of the
the sole intermediary, thereby becoming a hoarder."

Industrially and commercially, free con-
The current rate is favorable to discounting, because there is no no public market, and because there is a regulation-Author: the Bank of France.

But politically: it is not so, and the ab-absorption of large public credit operations by High banking is ruinous for the taxpayer.

There are three reasons for this:

Competition is too limited, and consequently-
which is null in its effects. ...

There is a public market in which the public is enslaved.
and whose floor is engineered like a stage set theater.

And 1] there is no regulator like, for the es-account, is the Bank of France.

Develop these three main points of our documenttrine would fall outside the scope of this volume, and we will not
we will devote a particular work (1).

(1) This particular work was published under the title: THE NEXT Revolution (Socialist Code).

46 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

For the moment, we will only draw the pro-
the following position, which will be demonstrated by the facts in the course of our study, namely that it is absolutely false to claim that what the high
The bank absorbs it in one form, it returns it in another.
another one.

This is, in fact, a pure sophism, because, with the interest and large commissions – remuneration of idleness and economic uselessness – which comp- they lay the foundation for the bank's grand game, she manages to export the cash in exchange for paper which she then distributes throughout the nation.

However, when, at a certain point, this paper does not is greater than zero, which almost always happens, Who lost?

The nation, and the nation alone!

It would be too easy to put a name to this example.

And they talk to us about progress!

There is no progress today in finance, in comparison of the methods used by the farmers generals, as in the way savings are concealed public.

= The looting was followed by the breach of trust; where the The tax farmer promised no compensation in exchange for what he took in the name of his lease of farm lease, the modern banker promises profits and large dividends, under the guise of credit from the State.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 47

There's just one more lie.

Indeed, and this seems unexpected, when- that a state grants a loan to a house of bank, – and it's always like that, even in the case direct public subscription – it does exactly the same privileged operation that Louis XIV practiced towards its tax farmers.

That is to say, the State gives this house bank the right to house under its credit its opera- specific conditions, by appealing, according to certain conditions determined lions, for the sake of all.

This right is accompanied by a de facto monopoly which consists in the power to create scarcity or the abundance of the title, consequently its high or low price price, that is to say, again the rise and fall at vo-

So that the bankers, ordinarily depositing transitional areas of a large quantity of funds belonging to various sources, can temporarily absorb-taking out a loan, either by subscribing to it directly, either indirectly, and, in addition to the benefit of the concession-sion, they have that, entirely arbitrary, of the premium sale on the market, after the closing of the subscription period

blique, usually fictional.

18 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

However, the taxpayer (because we are reasoning here in the hypothesis of a national loan) acquired at a price arbitrary the enjoyment of a fixed income, and, in the the way the damping works, he will not find than the peer.

The bonus and the commission remained between the hands of the banker, hence a net loss for the contributor buable: much more, in the form of tax, 1l will pay of new this bonus and this commission.

This arbitrary taxation of a nominally based valueUltimately, doesn't an income correspond to a rare precision in the arbitrary taxation of sizes and Salt taxes?

Only the form has changed; the substance remains the same, and This is what we complain about, and this is what, at after a certain period, will generate the same ruins and, consequently, the same revolts as those which believed they were putting an end to the financial system of the previous century edent,.

|

DR:

ENGLISH CORRUPTION

It is to England that we owe the creation of Financial power in France.

That nation, with its selfish and mercantile policies island, only exercises the spirit of conquest by means of the territorial trafficking.

Unable to expand into Europe and having been forced to permanently abandon the pied-à-terre that she had long coveted, in northern France,
She took refuge in a taciturn, shadowy role.
and especially financial.

She has always embraced our sovereigns in the deher father; she nurtured them, raised them, and corrupted them to the point of...
milk from its financial system.

ent

20 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

And, ultimately, it is always from her home that
The pretenders to the throne have returned to us, like

It's also almost always thanks to his credit

that they may have paid the price for their joyous adventure birth.

Name me a single crowned contender, – Napoleon I excepted, who never returned from it, when he went there – whose starting point was not located on the banks of the Thames, or which has free from British influence.

Louis XVII three times.

Louis-Philippe once.

Louis-Napoleon, designating himself third, and by three times also returning from London.

And now, where do those who look now?

Do they dream of a new monarchy?

To England, always! For there is the qua-

We will not speak of the exiles from the various regimes, even less so those disinherited by ambition or criminals against the public good.

But we believe that the true martyrs of a opinion should not go to England to seek a consolation or a remedy for their disappointments.

We must also point out, in an honorable

(1) Is it necessary to point out that this was written in 1876?

gn RS me ne –

– D.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 91

An exception, this character is respectable in his loyalty. even of his stubbornness, and who, not wanting to return to France as a simple citizen, – not being and being unable to be anything else, – chose Froshdortff to house his alleged royalty there (1).

The English nation has always been very precocious.

Before France, it had its Louis XVI, and before her, too, had her Robespierre.

However, his Robespierre was a financier and his name was Cromwell.

And our Cromwell paid with his life for his folly of not being than Robespierre.

Thus, the financial wound developed, on– all over England, to the point of becoming contagious.

And, if she has not yet fully undergone the acc– the purulent process of this destructive force, it is because that, limited in its influence and in its activity military, having therefore had less frequent equal disasters, moreover, whatever the fate of weapons – she specialized in her role of octopus of the finances of all its neighboring states.

(1) In 1873, Bourbon-Chambord only had to want to reign. His scruples drew all the sarcasm from his clientele, who, Later, he wanted to replace him by creating the General Union. It is necessary to to break free from this promiscuity, and to do justice to the last scion of the degenerate Bourbon race, because he alone persisted in to align one's actions with one's ideas.

929 THE HIGH BANKING AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

Whether the harm came to him from Venice or he was born on its soil, we do not have to examine it; but this What is certain is that she communicated it to us. first in the form of the Scotsman Law, which opened up new horizons for traders born under Louis XIV.

This student and follower of William Paterson, the in-seller of circulation banks, we also endowed from an East India Company and a host of others companies D The always in the style of An-England.

Later, Mr. Pitt's office promoted the ideas of 1789 and greatly contributed to the fall of Bourbons, even if it meant subsequently adopting a policy opposite, still hoping to benefit from changes.

The English treasury also had the theory of subsidies.

England subsidized for a time three-quarters of Europe.

"The Empire of Napoleon I," which she had not foreseen, this momentarily disturbed her in her usual operations. raires; but she made it keenly felt at the Restauration, and was quite persevering and quite skillful, to the for the second time, to push his revenge all the way to the second Empire of 1852.

Already, under Louis-Philippe, she had invented the the Eastern question, still a thrilling one, moreover, and the

The Egyptian question, more relevant than ever since the acquisition of the Suez Canal.

Nevertheless, she always displayed a horror of the weapon-war ments, considering themselves sufficiently armed with the dagger commercial and economic, the point of which she sharpened with free trade, after having poisoned it blade with credit (1).

But that was enough to kill France. Since then Law, he was committed to it, and he was destined to devour successively-well-being of the royalty while waiting for him to have consumed the entire nation by becoming cosmopolitan like its propagator.

However, we are making such good progress towards this beautiful result. that after eighty-seven years we find ourselves again-vons in the presence of financial abuses much more threatening than those against whom men of 89 had had to fight so energetically.

(1) See also, in volume I of The Kings of the Republic, the Chapter entitled: The Example of England. Everything concerning Suez and the Orient are covered in HISTORICAL BRIGADES, Speculation during the Third Republic.

rs is

—

RE, 9
take

THE ASCENTIAL WALK

THE FIRST RESTORATION.

the high bank of 1814 in the first success of
The restoration of the Bourbons only has to remember:

That it is only through a series of betrayals that Napoleon I* owed all his defeats to;

And that these betrayals were committed primarily by the well-fed, whom his omnipotence had filled with favours and glory.

But, to get straight to the point, let's

26 THE HIGH BANKING AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

examines with a cold eye what might have happened in Paris
if, on March 31, 1814, Marmont, Duke of Ragusa, and Mortier, Duke of Treviso, had exhausted their resources of defense instead of surrendering.

This examination will necessarily lead us to de-
to cover the financial aspect of this astonishing capital-lation.

Napoleon's gigantic empire lacked...
weighting.

Cohesion could only exist with the help of

The constant threat from these big cops that knew strike the legendary warrior.

The various interests created by the Empire seek to break free from the tutelage of the hero.

And among these interests, the most powerful, those that summarized all the others, were precisely represented supported by the major financiers, the major capital-lists, especially those who, like Laffitte, had preserved, even in spite of the blockade, the ability to
to correspond with England for their business.

However, since the creation of a public fund market

blies, any change is far from repugnant to financiers, – on the contrary.

Perfectly positioned to be the first informed, like bankers, state suppliers,

They don't dream, as they did:

In 1870, during and before the siege;

> d

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 97

In 1855, the time of the Tartar of Sevastopol;

During the empire's wars, with the help of the new-constants of Napoleon's death;

And finally, at the time of Waterloo;

Than to carry out stock market deals;

That is to say, to rob the trusting public.

In any case, in 1814, twenty years of war had exhausted France in JOPUNES and in

money.

The savings suction pumps had been functioning thundered in every imaginable form, so that the firefighters themselves, I mean the financiers–
The carpenters were beginning to realize that the handle
the pump was visibly wearing out.

The handle, the lever, whatever you want to call it,
It's the political leader, the pretext or the label behind it.
which ones we hide in to operate the device pneumatic.

Done, it was necessary to change the lever, or at least

towards where this lever would become resistant and even capable,

in a jerky movement, to strike the front

those who were manipulating him.

This means that bankers feared, in the country's general shortage, a contribution that could reduce their profits by weighing only on them.

98 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Napoleon, First Consul, had tried in a to a certain extent this reciprocity, and we remember it-born.

But give it back? Never!

Consequently, the old comrades-in-arms of The heroes began to suffer from gout, the court was suffering; the state bodies, feverish with fear, were hesitant to take to their beds.

Imperial prestige was waning.

The Senate had just sworn to die between the tom-beautiful homes of his ancestors and the cradles of his children, which, in the end, wouldn't have served much purpose; but the Legislative Body, full of potbellied, pen-slaves after thirteen years of victories and gains, became Suddenly a free man!

This group of creditors feared bankruptcy.

Napoleon came and broke it.

It was too late.

What, a year earlier, would have been a skill – not a right – became at that moment a fault more serious: because the popular is formalistic and does not understands only belatedly what is unconscious liable between an absolute power and an elected chamber

This dissolution led to many defections;
that of Austria, the betrayal of Bernadotte, that de Moreau, then the defection of Bavaria, followed by

\
;

|

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 99

| Leipzig, who suffered the first serious setback of the great
Captain. And yet he was still victorious.

But, despite his victory at Hanau, the allies...
bordered.

Holland had just thrown itself into the arms of the House of Orange; Danzig, Utrecht, had capitulated; Finally, Murat, a Frenchman and the emperor's brother-in-law,
passed to the enemy.

A million foreigners surrounded France and were beginning to cross its borders.

The emperor performed miracles.

Winner on January 27th in Saint-Dizier, winner
on the 29th in Brienne, winner on February 18th in Nangis, victor, finally, in all the battles, on March 29th
He also won the victory at Arcis-sur-Aube, and on the 26th again in Saint-Dizier.

From that moment on, he could proceed on foot forced on Paris.

But the great Russian and other armies were... on their way to the opposite side, and they presented themselves at the Island
March 90th under the walls of the capital.

That same day Napoleon was two hours from the enemy.

Two hours of resistance and a helping hand

We were far from having exhausted our means of defense,

'and yet Marmont and Mortier capitulated.

eu A for des nf can où ae 6 is DORE ERENEE

30 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

—

The empress had left, Joseph Bonaparte man-energy quantity.

You really need to look at the dates carefully.
to realize that it is only 1814.

Finally, we surrendered.

Besides, why defend oneself?

Why give the enemy the opportunity to practice looting?

Who would have suffered from it?

Was it the people? They were ruined!

But there was one in Paris:

Mr. Perregaux, a Swiss man who became a senator, father-in-law de Marmont, and associated with the revolutionary Laflite.

There was this same Laffitte, whose name was Jacques and He was losing weight.

JL was there: Mr. Greffulhe, Messrs. Mallet brothers, Tourton, Delessert, Odier, Hottinguer, Florentin Seillère (drapier, then baron); there was also Mr. Collot, Mr. Dou- |

="

mergue, the great Ilinguerlot and the ingenious Séguin,
and finally the famous Ouvrard.
All these gentlemen were immensely rich,

[
L

\

owners of splendid hotels (all the hotels of Farmers-General had purchased them or their friends), several of them owned at Seals of pleasure houses, the castles of Raincy, Gros-Bois, Bagatelle, and many others:

Again.

HAS

|

matt

| HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 31

And finally, as we said, we had been conspiring since
It took a long time for the one who created dukes and counts.
[HS] and fleur-de-lis viscounts!

So there was no need to defend oneself; there was, however-less, to stop the enemy; it was necessary, finally, and above all,
a new political pretext, a new loophole
'the suction pump described above.

cms

the Empire to most of the gentlemen named above
"against; and as they despaired of finding these | 307 million in Napoleon, they imposed them on
"| Count of Artois, whereby they would open the
. | gates of Paris. | |

For his part, the Count of Artois arrived supported
'of a procession of old sun-drenched women, quite neatly decked out in financial leotards, which ma-were wielding, with a truly Gallic verve, the rake of ti Player.

And indeed, Talleyrand, that speculator, was there.
distinguished man, who had made and unmade his fortune twenty times over to in the stock market games of the entire universe.

"This friend of the Abbot of Espagnac was very worthy of
to come to an agreement with another abbot, a major purchaser of national assets and who was styled Baron Louis; he-
:_ ei became Minister of Finance.

It had operated under the empire and, consequently,
happened to be a direct link to the other menus

fr

32 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Capitalists not admitted to the great COR No Bourbonnian.

These, in elves, are mostly not wealthy,
because they had acquired national assets,
would have judged their situation to be only moderately reassuring with the prospect of the return of the ancient kings.

But everything had been well prepared, and finance everything
the whole group could greet enthusiastically and without this beautiful restoration had an ulterior motive.

Indeed, Jacques Laffitte sported the white cockade before everyone else, and lent his hotel to the various negotiations, particularly regarding the accession of the son-in-law of Perregaux, his associate (General Marmont, Duke of Ragusa), to the provisional government established at moment of the surrender on March 31st.

The first act of Abbot Baron Louis Fat de se
to procure around one hundred million.

He easily found them at bankers' houses, and just-

which appeared under the name of royal bonds, at 8%,
and refundable within three years,
but still convertible into 5% consolidated.

The backlog, it was all there!

Now, certain of recovering it, the bankers,
faithful to their system of speculation, they lent new

2. DRE

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 33

high-interest calves, their recognized capital, being able to-then double through negotiation on the market of public funds.

In March 1814, the annuity had yielded 45 francs; in April,
It was priced at 66 francs, and, which clearly indicates the frenetic gambling,
It is listed the same month, without any apparent political cause.
annuity, 49.50 francs.

In May, she made, at the extremes, 65 francs and 56.50 francs,
to reach 80 francs fairly quickly, by August.
the highest price of the period from 1814 that followed the capitulation of Paris.

Here, moreover, is a table that will indicate the game of:
market after the Restoration, by comparison with the final years of the Empire.

Movens course Higher. Lower. Annual.

1810.... 84.50 (March)..... 78.40 (January) 81.86
1811.... 83.40 (November)... 77.70 (May) 80.84

ons 1812... 83.60 (Feb)... 76.50 (Dec.) 81.18
1813... 80.20 (January)... 47.50 (December) 70.08
Empire., 1814 (Jan.-Mar.) 57.50 (Feb.). 45.00 (Mar.) 59.95

Restoration. 1814 (April-Dec.) 80.00 (August). 49.50 (March)

Hundred Days... 1815 (April–June) 69.00 (April). 53.00 (June) 63.45
Restoration. 1815 (July–December) 69.75 (July). 52.30 (December)

Let no one say that the last years of The Empire was less eventful than the short periods of the Restoration.

Wars were incessant, New Islands,

4.

possible;

34 THE HIGH RANK AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

true or false, many; and
announced the death of the emperor.

However, there were no suitors yet.

Therefore, no alternative rai-

suitable between the white cockade and the tri- cockade
colored.

, on any subject, someone

Therefore, greed or revenge without horizons were without boldness.

Once market fluctuations are observed,
Will it be said that they stemmed from trust or from Public distrust!

Who would dare argue that the public bears rents
or various titles were quickly informed of the secrets policies for buying or reselling with such Accuracy, according to the predictions?

milk, not even in the planning stages, and to surprise a TV-gram, 1 liter was needed, like Monte Cristo; to prevent the dormice eating the peaches of the tower attendant from Montlhéry...

In this situation, only the Bank had the market.

A coterie of tax farmers disguised as ban-Quier suppliers carried out the movements at his will and too easily found its counterpart in a mass of small speculators, made palatable by some fortunate acquisition, or even among the

—

Q

js

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 35

effarés of the second hour which, not deducting the news that market developments were de- the ousses in a flash.

It is in vain and quite treacherously that one seeks always to demonstrate that the stock market is the reflector sincere public opinion.

On the contrary, it is its most deceptive mirage.

It shows horizons of greenery where there are none nothing but arid chasms.

Whether we call it a thermometer or a barometer, be sure that a cleverly concealed tube corresponds pond with a reservoir where the cold can be produced at will or heat, vacuum, or pressure.

If we call it a compass, be certain that, under the parquet flooring is a steel bar that, always at will, directs the declinations of the magnetic needle.

At 1% in April 1814, the game on annuities was of au-

The number of negotiated services was lower.

Indeed, at that date, the consolidated debt did not amount to

_was still only at 63,507,637 francs of annuity at 5%,

of which only 174,193 francs represented the year-

old debt incurred.

So, when 5 percent fell below

90 francs, 1 liter was enough, on the cash market, of 633,076,370 francs to monopolize all of the annuities recorded in the general ledger.

CPE Q es MON ENT FT el + as TOI

30 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

—

However, the bankers were creditors of the imperial arrears:
they alone claimed 507 million, or half
at the above rate of the registered capital.

Once the supplies are paid for, the annuities, negotiate-previously recorded and thrown into circulation in already providing profits to the dealers
considerable, could therefore easily return

into their hands with a new profit.

This was well calculated, even by the ministers.
of that time, and yet they did not change their
a way of acting by using bankers.

They needed the scholarship, because the scholarship is the great instrument of unacknowledged and unacknowledged benefits.

No minister, for sure, would dare to give ostensibly at a bank, the clerk

house to be taken out of the public coffers.

Thanks to this already highly developed system in
In 1814, Abbot Baron Louis was able to easily find the
the first hundred million that he needed at the homes of Messrs. Laffitte, Mallet, Tourton, Delessert and Odier.

This initial success encouraged him, and, at the time of to draw up the budget, ll again resorted to the same process.

This audacious man even went so far as to present a budget not only balanced, but also,
showing a surplus of 70 million, even in recording

er

=

?

THE MAUTE BANK AND THE REVOLUTIONS.. 37

55 million for the civil list and 10 million
for negotiation fees.

Naturally, this surplus milk was devoted to the settlement of the arrears, hence immediate conciliation of all creditors, public satisfaction of other naive people who said to themselves:

"We are only paying these arrears because there is a "Surplus!" What a beautiful country France is!

Abbot-Baron Louis did even more!

The purchasers of nationalized property were trembling, Maloré Islands verbal assurances from the authors of the Restoration, and they demanded positive guarantees.

A law gave them these rights.

They were solemnly confirmed in their possessions; then immediately, by a strange Contra-
the saying, which can only be explained financially,

third parties, were to be returned to their owners: originating. Hence, both legitimation and disapproval-bation of the acts of the Revolution.

Finally, to crown the work, the immense abbot had also obtained payment from the Chambers for debts incurred by the king and the royal family, during their exile; 50 million in capital; in annuities perpetual, recorded in the ledger: 1,499,354 fr., enjoyment 1 January 1816.

The feeding frenzy was complete.

He

THE HUNDRED DAYS.

Up until then, everything was going well for the big bank.

She had once again performed with great success appreciable.

But because of, or in spite of, the bourgeoisies of Mr. Louis, two unsympathetic elements gravitated around-the throne of the other Louis, master of the previous one.

The operation of the RARE pump was very dis-whore.

The struggles and competitions were fierce, especially between the financiers of race and the financiers of species; for if the high bank formed the state-ma-of the National Guard, the high marquises for-were the one from the king's house.

—r = ë

_mn

ne. ne .
dé > ÉE S

The bankers had been made counts or barons, but the marquises were peers.

Finally, the financiers' weapons were heads to the golden chariot or the silver chevron, but those the marquises were azure, with a chief of lilies, with blackberries or croissants, which was much more: sérieux.

Done 11 needed to teach the powers that be a lesson, and him to prove that money was everything and nobility was nothing.

Master Jacques Laffite began to sulk: good that was adored, visited, and consulted daily by both abbots, Talleyrand and Louis, by the Duke of Arlberg and many others, although governor of the Bank of In France, Jacques Laffitte was not satisfied and he had _ said to his satellites or colleagues of the same rank:

This isn't going well!

Here's why:

Industry and commerce, which had ended up to adapt to a permanent state of war under the Empire, either by organizing itself for supplies, either by supplementing the blockade with transport by land and canals, either by replacing objects foreign imports through chemistry; industry and its leaders, Messrs. Audry-Puyraveau, Bethfort, Human, Delorme, Salleron, Balguerie, Gévaudan, and also the Special financiers such as: Collot, Seguin, Ouvrard and Doumergue, wounded in their pride, very concerned with Laflitte's interests, declared themselves relatively-idle people.

A0 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Abbot Louis's financial dealings had for a moment occupied their stomachs; but they did not had made short work of them, and then we couldn't always perform operations on only one side, even when one is the royal finance minister.

The king, for his part, expressed a desire to oc-

It is understandable that the financiers' camp turned with a certain unease his gaze towards the horizon and began to wonder:

Where are we going?

They resumed their conspiracy.

For his part, the popular, who saw himself in full return of a cursed era, may names resound—
The soldiers constantly reminded him, it was wonderful—prepared to play into the hands of financiers.

They continued to conspire.

Finally, Napoleon landed at Golfe Juan.

The news was kept secret for a long time, and one can to think about what the Stock Exchange did while waiting for the explosion.

Mr. Laflitte knew perfectly well what to expect.
And for good reason |

_ - =
;

- 1

and |

ge e
*

A TON TT

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. A

We do not need to retrace here the triumphant march—
Phalus of the fantastic emperor.

Before the financial people, the soldiers, and the people, who, if they had not received their share in money, had noble selflessness.

Entering Paris was dazzling.

But the European banking elite, assembled at Congress of Vienna, was watching. The blow was unexpected. The foreign banking elite had no involvement in it.

Hence the dismay, the drop in public funds, the rise the exchange rate, anger in England and all the allies.

None of this surprised the French bank; it He expected it.

War had been declared.

Popular patriotism, which had understood nothing about the sleight of hand of the capitulation of March 1814, He awoke full of enthusiasm.

Patriotic donations poured in.

Messrs. Delorme and Gévaudan contributed large sums sums of money.

Jacques Laflitte, with the same enthusiasm that He had displayed the white cockade, put immediately at the disposal of the emperor plus several million, against annuity deposits, taken from the sinking fund.

42 THE HIGH BANKING AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

1. There were, in addition, 40 million in the co-fires of the State; the Restoration not having the time to employ them, the bankers could, UNDER a to claim it without hesitation, in one form or another.

The Bank of France had provided 15 million.

That was not enough.

Laffitte had believed he was on the verge of becoming a minister; 11 Nothing of the sort happened.

Messrs. Gandin and Mollien had taken over the reins administrative. – Laffite was getting cold, because these officials, accustomed to the very harsh procedures of sisters and industrialists, on the other hand, had very little practiced by financiers bidding for loans), lacked what the latter called: audacity.

However, the overly ingenious Ouvrard was called upon to Tileworks.

More daring than Mr. Laffitte, or perhaps covering him up, He took it without ceremony from the same sinking fund, 5 million in annuities, 6%, 400, which he valued at 53 francs and for which he paid 50 million.

These 50 million were payable in installments of Q million per day starting June 1st. They were regularly, to the great astonishment of other financiers CIers.

This is easily explained.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 43

! 12 cent.

Consequently, by investing the 5 million Annuities at 59 francs 12 centimes, Ouvrard realized a premium . average of 5 to 6 ie per 5 francs of annuity.

Indeed, on June 1st, this financier had placed his annuities not only in Paris, but even in London he was in Amsterdam, and he collected 3 million commissions } sion, plus a 6 million bonus, for a total of 9 million. It was done swiftly.

Now Waterloo could come and second to

pe | new game for financiers.

On the evening of June, the day the news broke, | annuity, which was at 53 francs (Ouvrard's rate), it rose sharply to 55 francs 50 centimes on June 21st, n | to arrive at the 22 at 60 francs, the 50 at 66 francs and, Finally, the day after the second surrender of On July 4th, it reached 69 francs 75 cents.

This was, in large part, the triumph of the bank doctor who had taken 5 million in annuities from 99 francs.

As for Mr. Laffitte, he had not remained inactive, and 11

to not yet help with this capitulation of Paris in lending, always on deposit of annuities, the millions

EE to pay the army that was retreating behind the oire,

ke
L

IS! The annuity had been 69 francs 25 centimes and 56 francs in May.
Extreme prices; hence, as an average price, 59 francs.

44 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

But, amidst all these multi-million dollar loans, 1l ne
One thing must not be forgotten:

It's because these registered annuities, these realized profits-
CCS premiums, these large interest rates, will weigh heavily in the denitive solely on the mass of taxpayers, which, being completely unrelated to profits, will not have received nothing but blows.

» In

III

ae in

THE SECOND RESTORATION

Another setback, that's the outcome of the Hundred Days.
and the Restoration, faithful to its principles, more than never needing the resources of speculation,
will not fail to pay them.

And, indeed, we see the following items appearing in the budgets:
Nilfs, which were only settled in 1822:

Arrears of the Empire before 1814, 307 million. 433 million = in 4815, 196 million. Huons:

In 1815, 130 million.

Total. ses: 666 million.

ee RS fe em

Here is the consolidated debt at the mid-

AG HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

ment of the second accession of Louis XVII, in July.
let 1815: |

Total carried over to 1 April 1814.... 63,307,637 fr.

We had added since then..... 2,632,418
Debts of Louis XVIII...,..... sos. 1,499,654

Total, annuities 5 p. 100.... 67,439,739 fr.

The Hundred Days had added nothing to the great book.
His loans were consolidated only much more late,

But let us note, in the meantime, that during the courses of June 1815, 93 francs, and December of the same year, 52.90 francs, these 67,439,759 francs of annuities
5 percent represented approximately 675 million capital.

The arrears alone required 666 million.

It was, therefore, very easy to acquire at low prices
as many of these annuities as possible, to then become absolute master of the payment of this arrears, with luck
to double its capital.

This was done, and all the events were enjoyed.

Thanks to the panic of the common people, it had been possible to acquire at 53 francs the day before Waterloo, we resell at 66 ten days later. That's all! It was the first

This, moreover, was child's play for some

he

Er

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 47

men who were definitely playing, "not finding (as Talleyrand said) another way to gagner".

It is true that, a few months later, the annuity re- it was still at 52.50 francs.

It was another turning point, as we
We shall see it; for, from that moment on, the game will played on the country's back, no longer just between French bankers, but between the financiers of the Eu-whole rope.

This was the triumph of age-old tendencies of the Great Britain in terms of financial speculation candles.

This historical phenomenon is beyond all tales.
lation.

If the invasion that brought about the first Restoration

was the absolute work of the rapacity of high finance

local, punctuated by English greed, on the other hand, the invasion that imposed the Second Restoration on the country
fat a very clear conception of the European bank coalition.

This assertion is not only evident in games of the stock market, it is entirely written in the treaties
of 815.

The first treaty, concluded on May 30, 1814, between the allies and the King of France, had given a glimpse to all the countries that Napoleon had ransomed, during

48 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

the conquests and after their annexation, the possibility to also obtain payment of their arrears.

That was the word on the agenda.

However, this arrears were immense. All individuals, All the bankers, all the princes, demanded their backward.

And, as the Hundred Days had caused losses unforeseen events for allied players and governors, these-€i, violently angered against the nation that had had the bad taste not to immediately fit the

not to the king-makers financiers; against this nation, who had had the audacity, as long as the betrayal had not completed his shameful work, of their infliger, with a handful of men, about thirty humiliating defeats; the allies, I say, added to specific claims and territorial cessions a large cash compensation:

War compensation....:..... 700 million.
Miscellaneous complaints 4,600 -
In total... 2.3 million.

Of the 1.6 billion, there was arrears of 4,000 reîtres provided to Henri IV by a prinipicule German.

It was impossible to better unmask the intended goal.

These 2,500,000,000 were needed for al to manage the finances of all of Europe, and they appear-

D

end of a suction mechanism for everything that the
A French worker could produce annually
in the present and in the future.

Yet this is what we had reached, for having
In fact, in '89, it was only half a revolution!

I don't hide from myself everything that some hu-
Blind bureaucrats will find audacity in this

"proposal. |

But I implore them to consider that the historian, not-writing not under the influence of the current situation, only sees and should only see the results achieved, without
to stop and discuss the means employed...

I'll go further, because I can say it today.
with equal logic:

If the 1848 revolution had not been suppressed,
a little by herself and a lot by others, we would not have had 4870.

This is where we can talk about progress!

So, compare those poor 2 billion to 1815
of the 5 billion of 1870, and so continue to talk
the progress of our modern institutions!

Also, when, making a supreme effort, the mind human beings place themselves above the dazzling glare of figure, when pure reason, invoking sound law-
gic, seeks to probe the depths that cover
these heaps, with what immense disdain is there not-

5.

50 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS:

We did not understand in the presence of these pygmies, who believe statesmen and are only, that one Bismarck or Wellington label, what a bunch of short guys from the shop, because they don't see, the ignorant ones, that they work with admirable zeal to lead not the France, but Europe, towards a revolutionary cataclysmnaire, and that, if it is necessary to sacrifice to the fetishism of

It brought France to 1795, it only took Europe
a hundred years of international finance for the con-leading to 1893 (1).

In any case, the year 1815 solemnly inaugurated-
the political omnipotence of high finance European.

It was then that they shone, diplomatically and mitallically:

The Barings, from London, the Hopes, from Amsterdam,
the Rothschilds, from Frankfurt, London, Vienna and from Paris, the Sina family, from Vienna, the Slieglitz family, from Petersburg.

A huge amount of speculation set them in motion.

Our French financiers then cut a sorry figure;
Laffitte, the Ouvrard family, and the Roy family were left behind.

(1) This prediction, which I gave at the time by simple comparison |

land grabs are absolutely justified by economic calculations.

The most popular music. See especially my book: The Next Revolution.

-
at Re me

Fe ne
ee none ES

TT er Emi

THE HIGH BANK AND REVOLUTIONS. 51

ss

Catholics and Protestants were largely defeated.
by air.

The field was vast, moreover.

The 700 million in compensation and foreign claims

These were going to give rise to a movement of funds
and to a dazzling game of the stock market.

Foreign financiers had greatly admired our bankers, taking turns lending their support to each one of the governments, which succeeded one another so rapidly-lying to one another, and, so strong was it always
The wonderful prestige of this beautiful country of France, the
They wanted the most spiritual, the most civilized in Europe,
They too, the victors, lend to their vanquished!

This momentum has been strongly advocated by economists.
which they interpreted as a tour de force and a
The benefit of credit.

Ultimately, we must acknowledge that it is nothing-lying to obey a feeling of humanity and moderation in the laws of war than the Allies acted in this way, but only through calculation and by selfishness.

If they did not devastate the financial institutions
the thing is, they reserved the right to...
to more surely protect oneself, through their assistance, from fortune of each citizen.

Only the museums were looted, despite what-protests.

Lt

52 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

This is due to a kind of reprisal carried out against Napoleon's actions.

Because, in fact, a monetary compensation is not a work of art.
cannot, to any degree, replace possession
sion of the original. |

The European banking elite had therefore just affirmed
its power in protecting our banks, our homes
of credit, our pawnshops, our love banks-sowing.

the negotiations that were to lead to the famous treaty from 1815.

It is impossible to go back to that period without emotion. of our history, where we see a diplomat re-commandable due to its high qualities, the due of Richelieu, forced to implore the bankers' guarantee of the Holy Alliance and to fight every step of the way, so as not to not let them lay a greedy hand on the great-public debt book.

ee

IV

FINANCIAL OCCUPATION (1815-1818).

Richelieu's energy could not fully prevail. ment.

He had to agree to the demands of the high bank, with regard to the monetary compensation.

But he stood firm, as far as the payment was concerned. specific claims.

Richelieu did not want the governments foreigners were holders of annuities to be registered in compensation for losses suffered by their subjects; it does not wanted to admit that these subjects themselves, like creditors.

In this way, he achieved immediate dissemination, distribution tion and the dispersion of securities, and, consequently, it

54 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

averted the threat of a market crash, a crushing blow that would have left him at the mercy of the bank coalition, for all borrowing issues.

We will soon see how the al-and, at their head, England, to paralyze all

In order to pay the first 100 million of
As part of the war indemnity, a special contribution was levied.
social on citizens.

But it took time to carry out this lifting;
It took time to draw up the lists and to centralize—
serve the recipes.

The allies, or at least the bankers, who smelled
a splendid discount, they didn't want to wait.

The government was therefore forced to draw on drafts.
on the prefects, who were responsible for centralizing
to collect the general receivers and the negotiate.

The eternal Abbot Louis had returned to finance.

The remaining 600 million were divided into fifteen commitments.
payments, payable in quarters, every four months, starting from March 51, 1816, and exchangeable
thirty days before their expiry, against bonds of the Bearer treasury.

These Treasury bonds were, in turn, to be...

swum in such a way that there would never again be 50 million in circulation at a time.

n 1

[=
_ HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 55

This arrangement accurately reflects the struggle. The vouchers of the
The Treasury was a concession made by Richelieu:
But the 50 million restriction was his revenge.
Partial, unfortunately.

Until then, the ledger had been defended and the ordinary intermediaries of advances on annuities a slightly apart.

Concession.

A guarantee of regular payment had to be provided.
of these drafts and Treasury bonds.

The bankers stipulated for this purpose the delivery of a registration of an annuity of 7 million francs, on the & consolidated debt book 5 p. 100.

Forced to take this step, Richelieu stipulated to his which would be neither negotiable nor productive of arrears and could not be acquired that in the absence of regular payment; on the contrary, in GS of regularity, it should only be melted at-

with the last payment term of the last hundred millions.

Richelieu's intentions were excellent; he
It was said, and rightly so, that a contribution from The raised Burcrrre directly was a momentary misfortune.
born, but that lJa consolidation of a loan rem-Phçant, this direct lifting was a gnawing plague of eternal duration.

has"

56 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

This is what was completely overlooked in 1870.

At that point, a direct fundraising, necessarily proportional, would have struck right at the heart of property pecuniary, which was logical; while an emp-consolidated pruning created a vast field for the game of purse and concealed, so to speak, from the eyes of the population the odious aspect of the ransom paid.

And the people are so blinded by the so-fallacies of modern financiers, to which he does not comp-

more than what he would contribute directly and usefully.

Moreover, he believes that a public subscription to a loan, under such conditions, is a profitable cement and he doesn't realize that, against the sum he gives, subject to a 5% nominal, 10 to 15 percent will be imposed on him, so that he will receive with one hand at fr. and, on the other, will pay 15 fr., resulting in an additional 10 francs in debt to be paid!

Where is the placement?

Returning to 4815, we still need to examine the big unknown at the moment: the liquidation of specific claims.

They were of two kinds:
Some of them, those of the English, were the same

than those comprising the suppliers' arrears or

D Co

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 57

French bankers demanded from the Empire, and comprise also include the restitution of confiscated goods in the form of... properties or buildings, operated, since 1792, on all English or French owners.

Other specific claims, including still Those of the English consisted, purely and simply—ment, in compensation for loans or contributions
but, raised by Napoleon, or by his agents, sui—
before legal forms in the annexed countries.

The allocation was made directly, without any negotiation.
prior to contacting the bankers, a registration of 9,500,000 francs in annual income, 3% to creditors
8 times alone, and another inscription of the same value to the allied creditors, English, Prussians, Russians, Austrians, etc., dealing jointly.

One is specifically for the English, exclusively; the other is general. to the allies, including the British.

Both bear the date November 20, 1815.

The ledger therefore had to record, in this respect, 7 million in annuities, half for the English, half For the allies.

True to its resolve to outlaw speculation, Richelieu had taken the following precautions:

These annuities would not be negotiable.

Their semi-annual arrears would be exclusively Dedicated to buying new annuities on the

58 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

market, thus constituting the accumulated interest and com-

placed in favor of the recognized creditor until the mo- his recognition.

And finally, if, after liquidation, these 7 million of annuity were not exhausted, the balance, with the proportion of purchased annuities that would belong to him, would be returned to the French Treasury.

By this means, Richelieu achieved three results:

L stopped the export of cash; he raised the market as if by the action of a regular depreciation- her, and, finally, in the event of a forced competition from the high bank, the annuity rate being sustained, he finds himself- would see less at the discretion of the coalition of finance.

As we can see, this was a declared war on the high finance.

But that wasn't all.

After registering annuities of 5 percent in favor

to validate the claims, it was necessary to set the rate at which they would be calculated to represent the capital

Two types of cases could arise:

The first case was that of former carriers of French annuities stripped of their title.

JCI no evaluation; to whom did he have 100 francs of income?
We were paying back 100 francs in rent.

The second case was that of capital representing lost furniture or buildings.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 59

This is where an evaluation was necessary, and it was different in the two conventions.

For the Allies, the annuities had to be registered in the even, therefore at 100 francs, while on the market they were at 53.50 francs.

But this enrollment at par was subject to a condition.

For certain debts, the parity would not be permitted

that in the event that the annuity was quoted at 75 francs; France pledged to improve the difference between this course and the one actually quoted; therefore, at a rate of 55.30 francs, France was subsidizing 21.70 francs of capital; if the annuity rose to 70 francs, it only increased by 5 francs.

Which is to say that, according to the public course of the annuity, we recorded those granted at 100 francs. less 21.70 francs, or at 100 francs less 5 francs, that is, by consequently, at 78 fr. 50 or 95 francs, and so on continued. |

For other catalogued receivables, the same system—
The same was adopted; but the base, instead of being 75 francs, milk only 60 francs.

Thanks to this method of fixing the capitalization of France had all the odds in its favor when it came to paying out annuities. of the increase, and remembering that, on the day of the Upon signing these treaties, the annuity amounted to 55.50 francs. one might think if Ouvrard, and Laffitte, and Hope, and Baring would never have accepted such conditions.

60 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS:

We said that the capitalization rate had
It was a different summer for the Allies and for the British.

We have just indicated the rate granted to allies in general; let us now see the rate granted to English only.

In their specific agreement,
the same mechanism of non-alienable annuities, of purchases successive, with arrears, of restitution, in case of surplus after liquidation, and it was added:

That the annuities granted would only be issued by fifth quarterly cuts, which im- mobilized registration for fifteen months, even after its allocation to the recognized and justified compensation claimant.

Along with the English, who were individually very advanced in stock market matters required this additional pre- cautions.

But, victorious on all points, Richelieu was beaten on the capitalization rate.

We had to accept a fixed rate, without any uncertainties. common to all creditors, and it was he who res- would emerge, as an average, between par and the price of the day of the agreement. Therefore, 76.49 francs.

Such was this settlement in which participated, with a rare clairvoyance, Mr. Corvetto, successor of the abhé Louis.

The bankers were exasperated at being excluded from this settlement of specific claims; also took-

ERRRRRRRS j |
ee. |

Durs ge

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 61

They take their revenge by buying all of them in advance.
that they were able to find, so that Mr. de Riche-
the place was still bound to encounter, despite its precautions
the high bank behind each of these claims particulars, acquired by her at the lowest price.

It was in this type of operation that the young
James de Rothschild cut his teeth in Paris.

One more fact needs to be noted before proceeding
the examination of the payment of the war indemnity, at subject of which we will witness the revenge of foreign financial elites: this is the peculiar game of

The Stock Exchange since the occupation.
She had risen in power because of Waterloo.

From 53 francs in June, she had increased the annuity at 69.75 francs in August.

By what strange phenomenon, when everything was going well?
while the treaties were being signed, the annuity was being arranged had it fallen to 53.50 francs on the day of this signing and at 52.50 francs the following day, November 21st.

What reason was there in December for remounting?
first at 64 francs and then immediately falling back to 52.30 francs.

with a difference of 12 to 19 francs?
So many mysteries that the enigmatic pages...

will shed some light on this.

The end of 1815 passed, for the high profits, soon followed by disappointments.

War contributions were coming in regularly
Remont, 11 had to limit itself to discounting bills of exchange of the first 100 million.

But, while waiting for the time to decide on payment of the other 600 million, the market was maintained
in a state of weakness sufficient to be able to
to easily become the master at the opportune moment.

The financiers had therefore organized a fight
deaf to the increase, and this struggle continued
well before in the year 1816.

Indeed, during the course of this year, the annuity
5 p. 100 quotation its highest price 64 fr. 40 in fe-
From February onwards, it no longer exceeded 60 francs.

Average price for the year 99 fr. 25.

During that same year, the first credit requested from the Chambers and obtained by

Mr. Corvetto had received a pension of 6 million. None
The French banker had refused to take them.

The naive or the party men who told
This fact has been attributed to the impotence of finance.
French.

That's a bad joke.

Ouvrard, the least serious of the bankers, had been able to investing 5 million in annuities at a much more opportune time critics, and men like Messrs. Laffitte, Sanlot-

ÿ
£

»

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 63

Baguenault, Delcassé, Hottinguer and so many others,

They were powerless!

No! The truth is, here it is:

Mr. Corvetto had sought to lead his ministry in line with the ideas of the Duke of Richelieu.

He had sought to protect the ledger against the invasion of financiers from all countries and to
to reinstate the depreciation.

But this well-intentioned effort should not not resisting coalitions of interest.

The allies were impatient. They were not letting to the government, time to breathe.

Moreover, Blücher needed money, for the loss at Frascati, at Wellington, to pay his mai-braids, for the small monarchs, to close the mouth
to their starving subjects, including an unexpected victory had overstimulated appetites.

For its part, the foreign bank was burning to put the hand in our affairs mathematically, since
The sovereigns had not done it belligerently.

From multiple and highly competitive events to mummies; for everyone was speculating, everyone, including Monsieur, the king's brother, and the Duke of Osmond,
and the Count of Bruges.

It is only from this point of view that we must to consider the great financial debate of 1816, if naively or perfidiously appreciated by historians.

G4 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Their head, the young Rothschild, – who, modestly originally located on Rue Le Pelletier, had just expanded somewhat his offices, by moving them to rue de Provence – had limited themselves to buying the debts individuals, which were liquidated in accordance with Conventions of November 20, 1815.

As for the French bankers, they had made a identical operation on the national arrears, but with less happiness, however, than the German Jews, Prussians or English, for we were not yet there came to settle this unfortunate arrears.

Hence the general discontent.

The result of this situation was as follows:

The 6 million in annuities, made available to ministry, were very few placed in France, and went, for the most part, in Amsterdam, at the price average of 57.26 francs, or 2 francs below the average price for the entire year.

It was disastrous.

Another circumstance had displeased two princes from finance: Messrs. Laffitte and Ouvrard.

Mr. Corvetto had found it wrong that es mes-gentlemen would have accepted annuities taken from the fund depreciation.

However, we know that Mr. Corvetto was the most protective relentless and the most skillful restaurateur of this ins-

|

—_—

|

Hey
list

CH,

: d " LUS

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 65

titution, so useful in honest hands; nahless so, by pursuing Ouvrard and Laffitte, this minister was more driven by the need to defend his system

a preference rather than a convinced hostility towards the intervention of the major bank, of which, in essence, he enjoyed the competition.

So, Mr. Corvetto wanted to force these two financiers to return, one 5 million, the other 200,000 francs.
of annuity.

Against this final sum of deposited annuities,
Mr. Laflitte had advanced 2 million, - 10 percent, like Ouvrard.

Mr. Jacques Laffitte found a way to justify himself and He also saved his colleague. He wrote to minister's letter in which he explained that the circumstances had been serious -and exceptional-nelles, that the army had to be kept away from the army at all costs Loire, to protect the return of the beloved king; that he, the bank's regent, on which they wanted practicing a forced loan could not allow a similar extortion, and that, out of patriotism, he Avall himself raises the necessary funds to pay the army.

In proper French, this meant: "The bank
was going to illegally realize a profit of 10 percent,
I sacrificed myself in his place.

Faced with such an argument, Mr. Corvetto had no

G

(610) HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

that he had to bend down; he bend down, but he had to throw himself into

While this was happening in the offices of minister, the parliamentary struggle was in full swing-loppement.

On this side, the resistance was using another pretext.
Mr. Corvetto wanted to make money from the forests from the State, to pay the arrears, instead of continuing the ruinous issue of royal bonds at 8%, pratipped off by Baron Abbot Louis.

Hence the great anger of Parliament.

The wood mostly came from the clergy; sell
These woods were an attack on religion; moreover, mau-
a bad deal; no serious price was obtained from it, and
This would further lower the property value.

However, it is important to know that the parliament was composed of,
mostly large landowners.

Consequently, the Chamber readily granted

the payment of the arrears, but in the form of annuities from the State ct
No, forests are not for sale.

Therefore, once again, an immediate halt to this timber sale.

The ministry had to compromise; it settled the debts.
arrears through acknowledgments of liquidation,
non-negotiable, but transferable, however, by the ordinary ways, and the alienation of drink.

This success of Parliament cost him his life.

|

|

|

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

He was dismissed, and his replacement voted, from First attempt, quite the opposite. So we started again.
sale of the timber; the high bank bought it at the highest price

Low price possible.

This resource is not sufficient.

Meanwhile, Hope and Baring's supremacy was...
firmed every day.

On February 10 and March 11, 1817, Mr. Corvetto had duca, humbly, to deal with them and entrust them with the initial investment of 9,090,909 francs in annuities
5%;

Then from 8,620,689 francs of annuities at 5%:

In total, 17,711,698 francs of 5 p. 100.

The great book was finally reopened!

These gentlemen took the first ones at 52.50, the seconds at 59.90.

And, meanwhile, the annuity was making money on the market.

che: |

In February, 61.40 and 59.50;

In March, 61.75 and 59.50.

Which is equivalent to saying:

That was to be charged to the taxpayers,

the service, in perpetuity, of an annuity at 9% in average, to the benefit of foreigners.

This was absolutely the opposite of the goal that had been Richelieu proposed, in writing, so skillfully for-

so much, the conventions of 1815.

—

The king—

FINANCIAL LIBERATION, 1818–1820. — cure
OF RESTORATION.

We will not attempt to write the history of all the negotiations of this Restau- period
ration,

We must hasten our insights and, above all,
less to analyze the various predatory maneuvers from the upper echelons of banking, which point to their hyphen with their final result, which is the reversal of each government.

We cannot, however, remain silent
financial liberation and the crises that accompanied it were born, for it was through them that the

the first serious attacks that the Restoration had to suffer ration.

D y

ul

“it ki
lie |
“ing
"ue

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 69

The liquidation of specific claims had followed

His COURSE.

But those that resulted from the agreement made with the allies in general accused such exaggerated-

rations, which the Duke of Richelieu agreed with in this with Emperor Alexander, had to put some time into it. permanently.

We recall that, for this series of claims, we had to add a bonus to the even difference between the actual annuity rates and conventional rates, fixed, in one case, at 75, and, in the other, at 60.

However, the average exchange rate in 1816 was 59.25 and the average course of 1817: 63.90, it is understandable that the above-mentioned informations could not provide France in a more favorable position regarding its placement of annuities; claims based on 75 being far more numerous than those based on 60, the registration rate had almost always been high far from equal.

For 1816, it had been 84.25, and for 1817, of 88.90.

Furthermore, the first 5,500,000 francs of annuities Having agreed, it was necessary to add another 2 million. soil, in total, 5.5 million in annuities, which had were absorbed, and 1.5 billion still remained to liquidate; that, at least, was the claim of the allies.

These 1.3 billion, at the average exchange rate of 1817,

6.

are you

70 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

would have required 75 million in annuities to be registered in ledger.

From this perspective, therefore, the stipulation of ds con-

concerning the return of a balance to France was a illusion lost.

A deal had to be proposed.

The allies, moreover, were quite willing to acc-

They wanted to return home, to safety.
of French control, future compensation on the ledger, which were not easily acquireable by their bankers; finally, they consent-were preparing to retire with a large sum of these assets
happy annuities of 5 percent so ardently coveted.

Wellington had several reasons for lending the hand to this transaction.

First, they almost assassinated him; then the ezar,
mystical and devout, finding that his troops were becoming corrupt broke down upon contact with the French population, weighed on the English chief.

Paris had tamed the horse guards as well as the uhlands and the cossacks.

Because, if political finance did not prosper, the Parisian commerce extorted money from foreigners and...
enriched himself at their expense.

Cafes, restaurants, shops of all types, sell their goods or merchandise

at insane prices.

TE Re

Se

This was the era of great fortunes in this genre.

of commerce.

Therefore, everything encouraged the demand for a ransom. definitive, under the pretext of an evacuation, which we he wanted to, without wanting to admit it.

But when they got to the figures, the quarrel...

venima.

The force remained at least somewhat interested, the Tsar,

and at the most satiated, Wellington.

We didn't worry about the others. That's all for the enemy camp.

For France, it was a triumph of loyalty.

plomatic: because, whatever concession was made to him, she always gave more than we were entitled to give her ask.

The allies reached a compromise in exchange for the surrender of a Registration of an annuity at 5% of 12,040,000 francs, Negotiable this time.

This clause made them accept the large discount at their request, which amounted, as we have said, at 73 million in annuities.

As for the 700 million in war reparations, they were fully payable.

The English refused to accept any transactions lion; by a special agreement, they demanded the execution of integral and continuous cultion of the convention of the November 20th, in all its clauses, and they obtained

pt pet ee AE D Cf haie

72 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

a second deposit of 3 million in annuities, but no negotiable (Richelieu's last victory), for to complete their liquidation, in accordance with the prescribed

terms of the convention that were specific to them.

To achieve this level of success, the British government-

nique had argued that its claims were identical to that of the backward French and the owners stripped by the Revolution; that it was not the in the case of making a transaction, since it involved ordinary debts; finally, that he wanted nothing for him, but only for his own people; that in Consequently, these had to be, as if by the past, recorded in the public debt ledger of France, down to the last cent owed.

However, all of this was said in hushed tones, because, externally- Ironically, England appeared to be making a sacrifice, deceiving his allies by exaggerating his demands pending the negotiation, just as she deceived them later, by simulating a deficit, as we shall see.

The Spanish negotiated in the same way, against a one million annuity payment, except, as for the English, account to be done later.

Finally, the liquidations were intended, for the sake of ease, all, ending in the respective countries of the compensation-Nile-like.

The agreements that thus settled the debts specific details are dated April 25, 1818.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 73

nn aan

The remaining balance of 700,000 still needed to be paid. lions.

The loan taken out with the Baring house had profound—Mr. Laffitte, visibly irritated, and a newcomer to the political and financial world, Mr. Casimir Périer. anger united them; they fought relentlessly against the ministry in the 1817 session and, in a sense politically different, found themselves supported by a brilliant Gascon, M. de

City.

The result of this appearance of the two financiers It was not, as they had hoped, to make them successful bidders for the liberating loan, but of impeer dearer than, at least ostensibly, it was conceded to Messrs. Hope and Baring.

The 1818 loan was therefore offered to the public.

It is important to understand that the ministry does not could not publicly choose a French house Spanish, after having dealt, until then, almost exclusively with... vement with Baring and Hope, treasurers of the Holy-Alliance.

Moreover, we still needed those two wellsessions.

And if they seemed resigned to not imposing Their supremacy lies in the convention of the allies, who, in settling the specific claims, had still—12,040,000 francs in negotiable annuities,

ae mg

where CO Nr RS tn

Mrs. to us

74 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

had already somewhat satisfied them, to the point that they had partly admitted the young man's participation

They were not yet turning away from this rising sun,
which should not overshadow them for long.
In any case, it was under the guise of a public subscription by the high bank of Paris,

brought to repentance, was able to cover extensively, everything

as in our time, where advertising is also sincere,
the 45 million in annuities offered to his greed.

On that day, Mr. de Richelieu could have been just as triumphant.
Mr. Thiers had no idea in 1872. He didn't even think about it.
No, because for him there was no reason for triumph.

The negotiated rate was 66.50 francs (7.52 francs).
p. 100); at the same time the Paris stock exchange was quoting
5% at 69.60 francs and 67.25 francs, extreme prices
(May 1818). However, the very next month, through a movement—
The amount that had been due to the miracle rose to 74.50 francs.
probably because of the abundance of the title!

Historians will tell us that this was a manipatriotic celebration, so happy was France to what the high-level banks were extorting from him regarding his savings!

But then I have some concern about how the same historians will interpret this other sentiment—
France's situation, evidenced by the stock market, in de-December of that same year, 1818, a time when the Liberation was no longer a hope, but a fact.

75

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

solemnly announced by the king on December 10th, and where the 5% annuity suddenly fell to 60 francs.

Oh! The sincerity of finance!

This decline was the product of a struggle between French financiers and foreign financiers, and in this odious duel. it was only the contributorbuable who was injured!

Here, in a few words, is the secret of comedy.

Baring, by giving his support, had always wanted to be the sole master of the market.

After the liberation, the same inspiration had germinated in every financial mind: to achieve.

The high hopes had gone to people's heads. played on everything, even on liquidation certificates—ions from all sources.

However, while the holders of the loan of 1818 helped with the increase to unload, with a large bonus, at the expense of the public, the powers, Despite Richelieu's warnings, they were selling either either directly, or through their bankers, Rothschild among others, and especially Baring.

These two opposing currents neutralized each other. that time; but at the first weakness of one of both sides, this weakness degenerated into verstem which the skilled knew how to take advantage of, especially the English.

To put an end to these curious struggles between Less '

s |
Mu part

6. HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

the bankers, the allies, who had in their hands the

a way of beveling the cards, they simulated everything to suddenly hesitated, and seemed to want to suspend the evacuation. This sinister farce was admirably played and it turned into a complete triumph of Messrs. Baring and Hope.

It was then, in fact, that they had to intervene at

in the name of the interests of the Holy Alliance; they transported with Richelieu to Aix-la-Chapelle, separated—Rothschild was definitively silenced (who, fighting for his houses like Villèle, Laffitte, Périer, for them and Their shop had also gone to Aachen, (with the aim of offering their assistance), and finally succeeded to endorse the Restoration alone.

The evacuation took place.

The success of these gentlemen from London and Amsterdam cost our country dearly.

In less than two years they had found themselves adjudicial authorities, either indirectly or through official treaties of 57,238,955 francs in annuities at 5%, at the average price

from 59.75 francs. L |

And yet, during the same period, the course The average of 5% was 67.27 francs.

They had therefore been able to achieve an average bonus of Approximately 86 million, not including commissions and the subcommittees.

N

where file mr

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 77

They could then leave France and enjoy their savings.

And indeed they gradually faded from the great political scene.

This retreat by Hope and Baring resulted in the following to leave the field open to the Rothschild dynasty.

They had dedicated themselves to the specialty of liquidations of parties culières.

Strengthened by Metternich's acknowledged protection, as Hope and Baring had been from Wellington's. They quickly made their services appreciated.

Hope and Baring therefore remained the financiers policies of the Holy Alliance; but the Rothschilds became its sworn treasurers, so that England She herself soon adopted their support, for operations perhaps less extensive than those of their rivals, but certainly just as lucrative (1).

The future Baron Rothschild then tested his strength.

He was unable, in 1821, to wrest from Messrs. Hottinguer, Baguenault and Delessert the issue of 9,585,220 fr. of annuities, made on August 9th of this year, but he took

(1) I have described elsewhere by what strange method Rothschild managed to gain the trust of foreign sovereigns, (See The Kings of the Republic, Volume I.)

Fr sms dm

18 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

a glorious revenge on July 10, 1825 by taking charge giant alone. of a 25 million annuity issue 5 percent, thus outperforming all other financiers who surround the king.

In 1821 the Restoration could not yet straying too far from his political financiers.

She had clearly demonstrated this by refusing the baroness

Rothschild's stool, the one she had dared to ask for.

"Fool! You must be joking!" said the duchess. from Angoulême.

— Fingt bur cent! had grumbled the German.

This threat was the least formidable at that time.

Indeed, the Restoration had to reconcile itself with a-welcomed the services, which, however, had accompanied the General Staff of the National Guard and the Parliament: two forces to manage,

But Richelieu died in 1895.

To explain how suddenly at that time the very audacious James de Rothschild had been able to do—
By undermining the high bank of Paris in this way, we are forced to revisit the specific history of the liquidation of claims specifically concerning England earth.

Moreover, this story, always neglected by the writers, too little concerned with delving into the details, is more linked to events than one might think

ge. îamus céssm ue fa

of THE

|

.

THERE

PR TE TE TS D Se: 7

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 79

who overthrew the successor governments of the Restoration, and this Restoration itself.

We have seen that one of the conventions of 1818 had allocated, as a lump sum, to the allies, a registration of 12 million in negotiable annuities.

Baring had a share, Rothschild, as representing or as purchaser of the mass of re—

German lamentations, the other had, and it wasn't the smallest one.

At the Congress of Laybak and Troppau, Rothschild Vienna had already been able to signal its services to Met—

then separated from England and Holland on a political point of view.

On this occasion, the four Rothschild brothers were appointed barons.

The one in Paris, James, the new baron, had in

in addition to the need, to ensure its inviolability, to be Commissioned in some form by its government.

He was made Consul General of Austria.

Thus inviolable, because it seems that threats are occurring...

He had received anonymous, sarcastic messages, he was able to continue its operations.

In this regard, we cannot be too surprised of M's choice, of Rothschild as the focal point
of any threats whatsoever.

SE RU

D CC CR EC

and to Spain.

80 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Was his fortune threatened? But there was in Paris...

This moment of financiers richer than him! Mena-

Did we know his nationality? Why? The evacuation was Done.

This direction taken should not be seen as being taken by...
Hames are certainly blameworthy, as is the result of the deep involvement of this financier in the specific claims that I just mentioned and profits he logically, if not regularly, realized
rement, in place of the original claimants.

In any case, Mr. de Rothschild had trans-moved its offices to rue de la Chaussée-d'Antin, where 1 had bought the former hotel of Minister Fouché and there had expanded its operations.

In addition to the liquidation of general claims to allies, 1 had also taken over the service of the funds relating to that of special claims to Great Britain

On that front, everything was not finished and the final result could create a surplus in favor of France.

Spain may have escaped the banker's grasp, as a result of a special and secret diplomatic convention,
but England remained his.

For this nation, there were two operations to be carried out:
there was the responsibility of collecting the semesters of rents and reinvest them on the Pants market,

in accordance with the conventions.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 81

There was also the acquisition of the recognized receivables bares to the holders and to discount them when they would be tired of waiting for their final liquidation.

Moreover, their wait was generally very long;

It was also easy to make them consent to their impatience

After 1818, this latter type of operation could not—it was no longer going to take place in Paris, since the liquidation was continued in London; but during the first period period, containing the time limits within which claims Members had to produce their documents under penalty of decline, we had had all the time necessary to to collect what was worthy of being collected.

Baron James, after 1818, therefore continued alone—how to do the financial service of the commission London. | |

This commission, for its part, was conducting this liquidation proceeded with surprising slowness. In 1892, his method having long consisted of to appropriate annuities at 76 francs 65 centimes (capitalized tion included in the treaty), to resell them at the prices higher levels that followed the final evacuation, she had been able to pay all the claimants in cash, by plundering, violating treaties, and publishing, however—less, from 1821 onwards, a deficit.

This deficit was so real that in September 1892, the The Commission had been able to record at Roruascuiun's, between

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

LI

other funds, a million in annuities, useless for liquidation donation (1).

This one had lent itself to all combinations of the English commission; he had bought annuities with the arrears; he had sold others, in violation of treaties, and had, in every respect, so well conducted his affairs, which in September 4822 he had done with the French government, recently deprived from his Minister of Foreign Affairs, Richelieu, as well as his Finance Minister, Cor—Vetto, his first negotiation, consisting of taking 420 million Treasury bonds at 6%, with COMMISSION.

These Treasury bonds are traded on the market.

at 4%.

Building on this benefit and success, linked from then on with M. de Villèle, who, strangely enough, engaged in polite revelry tics, having become a minister, had broken with the Laffitte and the Casimir-Périer family, described as revolutionary, 1 became powerful enough to beat as we have said, in 1823, this same Laffitte, with him, Mr. Lapauze, a relative of Villèle, and finally Mr. Sartoris.

Regarding the settlement of English claims,

It continued to drag on; so we find it again

in about ten years, still slow, still

(4) See end of volume, page 195.

mm same year

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 83

violator of international treaties and, as if by a singular coincidence, always linked to happy events adventures of the financier baron and consul of His Majesty Austrian.

Louis XVII had died and was replaced by Charles X.

The financial edifice of Richelieu and Corvetto had could have survived for some time, despite some modifications cations of people; but the Restoration denounced him-tura will soon, inevitably producing a void in popular finances, and, amidst the triumph of Bank houses, a sudden glimpse of revolt was seen. of the starving people.

The Government had once again offended the political financiers by adopting a foreigner, and

These people, seeing the popular movement, had no more than just an idea, to put oneself at the head of the revolt, to appear to direct it in order to dominate it, and to seek a new handle more docile to their hand, to continue—to modify the operation of the suction pump of the public wealth.

This plan was adopted as if by tacit agreement, and became the watchword of the political financiers of the France. | |

This is what we will discuss in the chapter following.

| VI THE REVOLUTION OF 1830.

The financiers' triumph had been too obvious under the Restoration so that it would be left miserably to enthrone the great and the small barons under the galleries of the Palais-Royal.

So a special palace was built for them, in the middle of Vivienne Street, and it was inaugurated in 1823.

Meanwhile, on the rue de Rivoli,

the sad Ministry of Finance, which was so swiftly "Blazed" in 1871.

Despite this, what a poor kingship that of the bankers, who were in constant contact with the dukes and their peers, even when they were at home, at the palace—Leave Vivienne!

has ---- -

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 85

They coveted the Tuileries.

Jacques Laffitte and Casimir Périer did not have
They were ministers again!

Since the coronation of James, Baron of Roth- - Schild, the high bank of Paris, was idle.

She was looking, by c1 by there, for some adventure abroad, but it was impossible for her to fight her with the Austrian consul and financier.

The latter could only be distanced on one point.

As a foreigner, he could not be a minister to the king of France.

As for the public funds market, it did not offer
cashier for high speculation.

The annuity had exceeded par.

Buyers aged 52 or 60 preferred to enjoy their returned to 8 or 9 percent, rather than achieving a capital of a job that has become difficult.

Spain alone was currently showing some advantage.

But Ouvrard had thrown himself into it wholeheartedly, to finish
then to Sainte-Pélagie and succumb to the blows
from his former colleague, Mr. Séguin.

A Spaniard, Mr. Aguado, was happier; he had just invented subsidies for financial newspapers,
as England had once found the subsidies to the European powers. And, with this pendulum swing, if Perfected in our time, Mr. Aguado minted coins 7.

on France's back, just like | England on the back of Europe.

Amid this relative shortage of large operations, the sinking fund, according to the impulse that Mr. Corvetto had given him, was working with mathematical regularity.

It was not French finance, but the vigilant The Austrian consul, Baron, suddenly realized, first, that of buying back at 105 francs annuities sold at Baring and associates charging 52 or 60 francs was absurd. legal, and he threw the idea of a conversion.

In this innovation he found a new increase—the staking of its immense riches.

The ghost of a 3% was already dancing in the government brains.

We wanted to prepare for the advent of the loss of emigrants on the great stage of public debt. But a conversion from 5 to 3 p. 400 was something severe.

5% was almost entirely abroad and in the upper echelons of French banking; the public saw him little, which explains the indefinite rise of these funds of the State.

Moreover, for the mass of taxpayers, of What was it?

Is the 5% service reduction was going to be used to reduce taxes? – Not at all!

D

PS EE Te

g
js as mm ue ee Vu nm ar =
—

RU em iee

—
2

V— ns nn ne mm

The nt Teese Ne

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 87

=

The holder of 5 would receive 3, and would not pay any.

minus 10 or 15 in tax.

Double loss.

There was therefore a subject for controversy.

Industry and commerce, which had previously been largely overlooked, the feeding frenzy perpetrated by high finance, entered fully embracing the opposition on this issue, without to understand, in essence, the true scope.

Mr. Laffitte, too much of a gambler to have kept his arrears liquidations, however, welcomed this conversion, much to the astonishment of his colleagues.

Moreover, he was already conspiring for the Duke of Orleans, which was to receive 14 million in annuities, on the creation of 5 per cent, as we shall see.

But Mr. Casimir Périer, a large carrier of 5, was indignant; his indignation was, moreover, fueled by

Mr. Roy's:

forced!

The minister had to compromise.

He adopted an optional conversion, and on the 5th and the 4% made their first appearance.

The optional OdtRE conversion failed.

And to promote the new 3 percent, they transported the functioning of the amortization fund rests solely on him.

9 p. 100

weaving.

But why had Rothschild conceived the

ne PL qe aa nan ee to me EP ris

Es -n er-

_ x = Heads: ee th: D, ES year

EE ET re TE ee ne tr pe =.

A, Re ma Re ne. a . ; Mis 6

HAS

CARS ee mms

88 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

the thought of a conversion, and especially of a conversion forced?

As treasurer of the Holy Alliance, he was required to have a high quantity of 5%.

So what was his benefit?

Firstly, Mr. de Rothschild was not the kind of man to...

to peacefully enjoy an income.

It is the constant change that forms the basis of its

the increase in this fund to generate the annuities which He had been a porter.

Then Mr. de Rothschild was always very far ahead
in the settlement of special claims to British subjects.

There was a field there of 6.5 million annuities 5% that it was a matter of working and of the-stuff skillfully.

Since 1895 the correspondent banker of the cem-
The London mission had helped her in all violations of international treaties.

The majority of English subjects to whom these treaties apply had guaranteed annuities of 76.65 francs, had been skillfully stripped bare.

Others, in their place, had benefited from the premium that the exchange rate of 105 to 410 francs gave on the market.

And yet there was still a considerable stock-

nm Y a-

In

di

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 89

a source of income that was difficult to eliminate:
because the 1818 convention had not authorized the re-distribution of the capital that the sale of annuities allocated, but she had instead demanded

the distribution of these annuities themselves, by way of the annuitant's name recorded in the general ledger

However, the effect of a forced conversion of 5% into 3 p. 100 was going to be this one: |

England would complain loudly; not only—she had a deficit in 1821 (which was false), but also, they stripped his unfortunate subjects of two-fifths of their income!

So, it's one of two things:

Or, able to conceal the existence until the very end of an excess stock and maintain the deficit, she dared request a new guarantee fund;

Or, being forced to admit the existence of this stockpile, She argued that the conversion was her prerogative and thus paralyzing the last Preauton taken by the Duke of Richelieu.

This was the alternative that the Chamber dismissed, certainly without suspecting it in the slightest, and by spirit of opposition, ordinary lactic acid of the fractions that aspire to power.

The so-called revolutionary bank was then represented sent by Messrs. Casimir Périer, Ternaux, Jacques

90 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Laffite, another Jacques also called Lefebvre, then again by Messrs. Delessert, Odier, André Cottier.

In commerce and industry, there appeared, at the head of many workers, Messrs. Audry-Puyraveau, Kæchlin and even Mr. Human.

A destructive wind, caused by Bour- hatreds geois against the aristocracy, had begun to suffer to flourish on large estates, known as sergneurial estates, since 1818.

A meeting of financiers, nicknamed the gang black, had passed the level on all the beautiful do-Maines, which she destroyed, demolished and crumbled.

Despite this, the owners of the emigrants' property were not yet completely reassured.

Despite all the laws we made, they didn't believe them.
not to their safety.

On the other hand, the emigrants, who were not compensated at the time that we had paid a multitude of arrears of the same kind-ture, were exasperated.

Those proud financiers knew their place!

Ah! If only we would give them back their fortune!

Despite some alliances with them, the noble rui-
There were too many born for each to have one banker's heirloom.

To appease some, because they were rich, to feed
the others, because they were starving – hunger and Wealth being two equal forces, moreover, – the

ms
THERE

Æ

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 91

while recording thirty million in the ledger Renle, that was the option that was chosen, and Mr. de Rothschild was able, once again, to execute in 3%
The Treasury publishes from France.

This means that the popular masses, who were not not yet called upon to vote on the tax she was paying,
would nevertheless enrich a great number of privileged units.

This exasperated industry, commerce, and the ou-workers, who, seeing the fury of their employers, had not
no reason to conceal their own anger.

Mr. de Villèle was overthrown; Mr. de Martignac, director-
The owner of the Domains succeeded him.

The change was illusory.

* The most curious result of this gigantic indemnity was, at the same time as it sowed co-

Philip had the means to prepare for his accession.

Indeed, it enriched him prodigiously and cons-

killed a millionaire general staff who could have served him at the opportune moment.

Among the strongest holders of 3% of registered players

At that time, the following were included:

The Duke of Orléans (Penthièvre through his mother), 14 million in annuities.

Mr. the Duke of Choiseul, 1 million in annuities.

Mr. Duke of Liancourt, with a million and a half in annuities.

092 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Mr. the Marquis de Lafayette, 450,000 francs annuities.

Mr. Gaëtan de La Rochefoucauld, 420,000 francs of annuities.

Count Thiars, 357,000 francs in annuities.

Mr. Count of Lameth, 201,000 francs in income.

It was from this successful operation that the connection was established.
close friend of Mr. de Rothschild with the Orléans family.

The suitor was then residing in England.

This immense peace-seeking after so many others wartime raids, raising the expenditure budget to A,118 million (4823), – it had doubled in nine years, – was the decisive blow that the Res-
tauration, |

The revolt began in the House.

Since she had rejected M. de Villèle, she rejected

They gave it to him, so great was his foresight!

Mr. de Polignac; he lit the fuse.

France no longer wanted Gascons.

Mr. Laffitte, after having softened his position regarding the vote of the 30 million at 3%, became angrier than ever.

It's really strange to keep finding this large, leaky basket for hunting a few thousand lions. |

It had reached the point where its bankruptcy was imminent.

Go away

SR qe

has

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 93

With him, a host of small capitalists did not ask—
They said it was a wound and a bump.

Finance wanted power at any cost; it did not
He was no longer content with the wings; he needed the stage.

The future lever of the political pump existed.
Moreover, his name was the Duke of Orléans.

He was ready to do anything to avoid remaining idle, as he kept writing, from the banks of the Thames, for the last four or five years.

Idle! A delightful euphemism.

Heads were getting hot, because the sun was blazing.

Audry-Puyraveau and Ternaux had begun to

The 1830 elections had given the majority to high finance and commerce.

The Faubourg Saint-Antoine of that time was the street of the Trail.

The entire trading colony was revolutionary with high industry and finance.

As for the workers, that was only mentioned to throw them at the barricades.

Not accepted as builders of power, we _ judged them good for destroying a government.

Soldiers, yes; voters, no!
However, there were crises regarding the sa.

areas.

Finally, and this will tell the whole story, here is what the government was like-

RE M ©.

mn, ë
PT in

94 THE HIGH BANK AND REVOLUTIONS.

temporary arrangement which then gives way to the rot
Louis-Philippe:

Jacques Laflitte;

Casimir Périer;

Count of Lobau;

De Schonen;

Audry-Puyraveau;

Mauguin;

Anyone from finance or industry.

Lafayette was commander of the National Guard.

Rothschild had prudently withdrawn, waiting,
his millions frozen, the accession of Mr. the Duke of Orléans. |

Three days of fighting and it was done.

The lever of the suction pump was crowned

Louis-Philippe L^l°, King of the French, note well, and No, not from France.

And, to characterize the 1850 revolution in a word:
This was the insurrection of the 5% declussé against competition from the 3% armed;

All this, as always, for the greater good of Dom-taxpayers' image.

-

.

D

VIT

THE LAST KING.

The new order of things functioned for eighteen years.

This was the absolute reign of the merchant and the industrialist.
triel, both relying on the bank.

However, it was necessary to broaden the stakes; that is which explains the infinite number of companies that They were created under every possible pretext.

This finally marked the return of the generalized Law system. multiplied, organized, legalized, and deified.

For the second time, history was being forced to write Law near Orleans.

96 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Indeed, under Louis-Philippe I, as under the regent, any man who had 500 francs could aspire to become a millionaire in twenty-four hours.

The aspiration was certain and free, the result alone was doubtful.

But while waiting for the millions to be repaid, it was necessary that the king began by welcoming his shareholders.

Jacques Lafitte's influence had always been considerable, sometimes to the right, sometimes to the left, because this the financier readily displayed all the cockades, provided they served to fill his coffers, low-Empty days, unfortunately.

Lafitte had become the idol of the people.

Strange indeed, this blind enthusiasm of voters for certain men who stubbornly insist on believe their protectors and their friends!

Now, this man who had brought back Gus's father was called the Father of Liberty!

As such, by 1829 he was already ruined, but, As they say, 1 liter held up.

In the wake of the unrest that accompanied the advent- The birth of the new king, he declared his situation and filed for bankruptcy.

We would soon understand the conduct of this banker during the billion-dollar emigrant affair.

Indeed, the governor could not be left

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 97

of the Bank of France, the current minister of finance, which had appointed as undersecretary of state the young Thiers, who has remained young ever since, under the threat of bankruptcy.

And then he wasn't the only one affected: Audry-Puyraveau was compromised, and many others beside him, and he the workers of this esteemed industrialist had to be paid, who had started the sedition.

The treasures from the Casbah of Algiers had just arrived; these treasures, due to the expedition undertaken under the previous regime, and recently enlarged by two millions, loaned to the dey by a man from Marseille, named Bacri, arrived, very opportunely, to prove fitter to his successors, achieving once again the: |

"Sic Vobis non Vobis."

Gold is being distributed in abundance, except on Bacri, all-times, which, as a valid creditor, should not be paid.

But what was this Algerian treasure in the presence of the Mr. Laffitte's needs?

He needed 6 million, all by himself. The Bank of France hesitated to lend them to him, the banker's balance sheet seeming fantastic to him.

The king, then, remembering that the 14 million the 5% annuities he had received had been supported Mr. Laffitte gave him his personal guarantee by-towards the Bank of France etc. the act was solemnly passed on January 15, 1851 (1).

98 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Meanwhile, a national fundraising campaign... it was done penny by penny, up to a million, the poor financier's hotel, and in honor of him

d'Artois took the name of rue Laffitte, pending that it is called Rothschild Street.

To justify such popularity, Mr. Laffite, being in finance, had to show a bit of revolutionary-naire for himself.

He therefore announced an upcoming reshuffle of the tax, distributed national rewards to wounded in July and even some of the heroes survivors of 1789,

() Here is the actual text of this document:

"The Bank of France having consented, by order of the Council general of the 10th of this month, to be supplied to the Laffitte and Co. firm, of this city, the sum of six million francs, to extinguish entirely-rement its currently circulating acceptances, by means of
I guarantee to the Bank the receipt of this sum, I commit, in the event that payments have not been made in full or in part part by Mr. Laffitte himself, to reimburse the Bank for these six millions, which can only be taken from the list's revenues civil, without any commitment on my part resulting from it part of my personal property, and even less so of my children, at the following times: 1,300,000 francs on December 31, 1831;
4,300,000 francs on December 31, 1832; 1,309,000 francs on December 31, 1833;
4,300,000 francs on December 31, 1835; 800,000 francs on December 31, 1835.
with interest at a rate of 5% per annum, which will be attached to capital at each payment period. AGprose the above writing.

Paris, January 15, 1831. Louis-Philippe.

THE HIGH RANK AND THE REVOLUTIONS. 99

The waste was so great that the Treasury was emptied in one quick and easy.

Mr. Casimir Périer was put in charge of it fill.

Let's see what the atti- had been during this op study of the Austrian banker.

He had thrown himself into foreign operations, and he he had lost a large part of what he had gained In France,

Thus justifying our opinion that the houses of banks do not give back to a country what they give to it. sorbent, el que leurs profiteurs sont loujours un pearl dry for this country.

In fact, still treasurer of the Holy Alliance, which, seeing with some concern the revo- The July resolution had played a downward role on all the Mr. de Rothschild was in charge of the various positions in Europe. of a host of foreign loans, not yet placed.

He had the ducats of Naples, the metallic coins of Au- cheating, the Russian loan, the latest French loan at 4 percent; all of this was accumulated in paper and lost 50 to 40 percent.

The poor banker had hardly any operations to go on. permanent, if not regular, than the service of the London commission; the latter had not yet declared the closure of its operations, although the The actual liquidation had been completed a very long time ago.

100 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

The available funds, which were, moreover, considerable, had strayed and were circulating, here and there the part in personal expenses of George IV, part in the construction of the palace of Buckingham, part in the form of relief to the dis- tricks in distress, finally, in stock at Mr. de Rothschild.

This could not last indefinitely, and, in 1831, we decided to confess in the House of Commons that since 1826 the legal portion of this liquidation had been closed by the commissioners appointed in 1815. and a fantastic account was published which has no the same as in the more modern ones of Mr. Haussmann.

This account nevertheless showed a surplus of 700,000 francs in annuities in the hands of Mr. de Rothschild.

At that same time, the financial crisis of 1831, and it seems certain that without his brother Nathan, of London, James, from Paris, is said to have lost his mind. Also He was seen rushing about in a panic in the ministerial salons-riels of that era.

Moreover, a riot was brewing in the street.

The population could clearly see that this revolution had not changed anything about the financial abuses of the past; 1 A bold individual was needed at the Ministry of Finance, and Casimir P rier had to give way to the eternal abbot, remaining only the fanatical priest of speculation,

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 101

PP

and who openly admitted it to Baron Louis, in a word, the same one that a biographer in 1831 called, precisely, "the ministry trap".

Our abbot, as was his custom, went straight to the point: Tax.

Everything was increased with great vigor.

The rationale for such a measure is understandable.

The upper echelons of the banking sector deemed it necessary to tighten their belts, and This was the moment when Casimir P rier could count seriously with Messrs. Delessert, Lefebvre, Ganneron and Odier. | L -

The year passed; Europe was threatening; with this In his attitude, James de Rothschild had regained his strength. and, in a major stroke of speculation, found everything his credit; the Holy Alliance had played its hand.

One of the financial measures of 1851, which facilitated most involved in stock market speculation, was, assuredly recently, the one that created bearer annuities, and, by Consequently, it made possible the sale and purchase of anonymous goods. nymes. |

Many fortunes were amassed under the protection of this the muteness of the title, which, passed from hand to hand, thus it became almost a currency, retaining

Everything that existed, in the form of annuities, in the account of the English liquidation, therefore, could, for the sake of convenience payments, to be converted into annuities for the payer.

8

102

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

These methods belonged to the old school, said the opposition; Abbot Louis, moreover, personified all past governments, and the former The clique was visibly wearing thin.

Another financial school was emerging in the shadows:

The Saint-Simonian school.

Its author was none other, however, than the one named Saint-Simon, a count, and even a Vermandois, said it, but former employee at the pawnshop and, as Abbot Louis, having dabbled in national assets.

Saint-Simon died, but his theory survived. It was retaken and adopted by some young people whose The leaders, called fathers, were Bazard and Enfantin.

Around these two names appears Michel Chevalier, Augustin Thierry, Olinde Rodrigues, Émile Barrault, Charles Duveyrier, Fournel, Pereire, d'Eichthal, Stéphane Flachet, Léon Halévy, all of them, nevertheless, scholars, very intelligent and advocating the destruction of heritage.

This theory, a natural offspring of the acquisition of national assets and which, through it, had its raison d'être practical, fell with the newcomers, heirs, they too, of this doctrine, and not inventors,

in the field of abstract and purely speculative.

Nevertheless, widespread among the proletariat who do not grasp that the large side and put everything else there

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 103

something that Saint-Simon had wanted to put there,
 it could become a most dangerous threat
 uses for the Society founded on the principle of 1830.
 To attract attention, the Saint-Simon family-
 Nienne had resorted to the wildest extravagances.
 Economic theory had become a religion

with its cult and its priests.

The Pope was in Ménilmontant.

Yet it was this school that prepared the Revolution
 the 1848 revolution, stifled him with madness and he eventually succumbed to it.
 sitting on its ruins, also spilling into the property and wealth; for it has often been repeated,
 All the Saint-Simonians have arrived, which is Exactly.

Meanwhile, the July government,
 after distributing the annuities, or Treasury bonds,
 or pensions, or rewards, among the bourgeoisie, was forced to think about the workers as well.

We improvised for them the thing in the world that we can improvise the least, because it does not depend on a whim of power, but of an economic whole wisely and carefully balanced, – we improvise to them

Visa: for work!

It was, in another form, the milhard of the emi-
 Society's terms.

We will find the same mistake again under Ja
 The Republic of 1948, which died financially from it,

as the July Monarchy was destined to die from it,
as the Restoration had died.

Mr. Thiers was the head of this new school.
to deplete the Treasury. It was he who requested the 100 million needed to organize the work
to occupy the public and the workers.

Instead of proceeding by tax relief, they proceeded through accumulation, which is an eternal fault in policy.

With the workers occupied, the financiers, judging helping them was pointless or not profitable enough, they had oriented towards foreign countries.

The export of currency resumed; in

In exchange, we created paper of dubious value.
It was then that Mr. de Rothschild made his grand international loan on the occasion of the Relaunch treaty

Greece; then the loans of Don Pedro and Don Miguel.

First export series.

Another series of cash exports affected
the form of a payment of 50 million, made to the United States United, in discharge of a debt belonging to liquidations of 1815 and the treaties of that time
had refused to acknowledge it.

And while on all sides they were opening the French money was used as a sluice gate; little concern was given to

The result was being quietly suppressed, which could have to relieve the ledger, as it was being loaded, at On the contrary, from all sides.

Payment in the United States was part of the plan. policies of Louis-Philippe; but the claim to England, which had nurtured him, would not have benefited the A treasure that, by uncovering many depravities, and this took that away.

Besides, there were better options for the minor gentry of the finance, there was the Stock Exchange.

She began her maneuvers again.

We were at the height of the game's madness, and he

It would be curious to note that each of the many attacks, directed against the person of the king, were not Ultimately, it's just a stock market transaction.

The scholarship players having begun to depreciate To protect the banks of the rich, the government favored the creation of a bank for the poor: the savings banks savings.

The wonderful result of this institution, which, like the sinking fund, could have been very useful in honest hands, was, on the contrary, of to make available to governments a new average calf prone to hoarding money public, in violation of a sacred trust.

While the International Bank was exporting, while the scholarship recipients were playing, while 8.

Mr. Thiers made the workers work at the expense of the Treasury, the former industrial and revolutionary bank tionnaire also gave an indication of his activity.

Credit institutions came and went; Mr. Lallitte favored them; Mr. Gouin rose up, thus that Mr. Cul and Mr. Derosne.

Mr. Thiers, who had arrived at the presidency of the council of ministers, he said:

– You see!

He wanted to see further, and was always adventurous, felt the need to venture out on his own.

He had, it seems, maneuvered in such a way that one believed in an imminent war with England, first appearance of the Eastern Question.

Everything was already being prepared in this direction when, suddenly, the telegraph spoke, abruptly halting the flow of ideas and with it, that of the Stock Exchange.

They even went so far as to utter the word "blow." Stock Exchange,

And indeed, that was the moment of the most enormous fluctuations in European markets, and fortunes were made and unmade in one day.

Mr. Thiers withdrew.

Mr. Laflitte was dead. We were living in the height of luxury; the

The Rothschild house shone in all its splendor, and the government stated that it wanted to put in place order in the finances.

æ

born,

Mr. Gouin, successor to Mr. Laflitte, the serious Mr. Delessert, the two Périer brothers, successors of Casimir helped with all their might.

They even went so far as to discover seven million deficit for the Treasury.

This matter is known as the deficit Kestner; but everything was limited to the observation of the fact. Financial corruption had reached its peak.

The phalansterian idea had just made its appearance in the world. The ignorant interpreted it in the sense of promiscuity, and the worker entered into this demoralization that was descending upon him.

The player's gold had been left lying on the country's soil, leaving an oily trail that lengthened and widened. It lay there, a staining, not nourishing, grease.

The jerky movements had been followed,

Stock market, a series of regular increases. The 5% rate reached 199 francs. The idea was revisited.

in

of a conversion. It was renewing an old quarrel

real; 11 was too early, and the 3 percent should not triumphed only in 1852.

Moreover, it is still curious to note, precisely at the moment when talk of a conversion, the London commission was struggling against angry claims, supported by accusations

bold words, regarding the French indemnity

of 1815, and felt that it was necessary to bury it definitively

108 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

her misdeeds. She was to succeed soon, without the competition for a conversion.

We arrived in 1847.

The financial school of 1850 had used the leverage of its suction pump; the railways had then helpfully, and what should have been done first an instrument of public prosperity began, through speculation, by being an element of ruin.

The financiers absorbed the lines.

The system of the future consisted of grouping, under the Company names, countless quantities of workers, whom we would bend below the level of a district discipline, so that later, when one does not could do things differently, lead them to the polls, as they had been led to the barricades at the beginning of this regime.

It was therefore a sub-classification of the industrial forces

trielles, a regimentation of wills under the do-capital investment.

Mr. Thiers had returned to power, supported by Mr. Odilon Barrot.

The storm was rising, and no one saw it. The house of Rothschild had continued to monopolize credit, taking the flower and leaving the leaves of the tree financial to the capitalists of Paris.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 109

The year, moreover, was not a happy one, and the Nature did not favor the administration.

There had been floods; wheat was scarce.

Finally, on November 10, 1847, the Treasury, burdened with debt, had to turn to Mr. de Rothschild and award him a loan of 250 million.

This banker obtained it at 3%, for 75.95 francs.

From December 1847 this fund had reached 77.55 francs in less than two months; it was for the millionaire a bonus of 2.10 francs 5 francs of annuity, or, on average, 18 million profits on the entire loan.

While the Treasury was carrying out this operation, the industry, pushed to extremes, extorted by the bank and seconded by the dizzying array of associations, a pretext of a thousand swindles, had taken advantage of the worker, hence a terrible irritation among the people.

Popular writers, moreover, took care to alleviate this irritation by demonstrating to the citizens that the 1830 revolution was a sham, that they they had been deceived, that it was always the same the hand that held power, that it was necessary to take a resounding revenge.

The people, for their part, watched with perpetual astonishment how different his situation was, by how-comparison with that of his superiors, in terms of work.

410 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Was the boss ruined, through bankruptcy or otherwise? The worker lost his livelihood and was reduced to starve to death, while, surprisingly, the said The boss only sold his cars – when he sold – and continued to enjoy his well-being.

Alongside this, such a proletarian, yesterday penniless or mesh, was almost a millionaire the next day, without apparent cause, without any work done.

For what ?

That was the eternally posed question.

Political finance, entirely transformed into opposition, fostered this discontent, hoping, as in 1850, direct it and then absorb it.

Finally, there was a new pretext, a new lever to adapt to the suction pump, another duke d'Orléans, whose name was Prince Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte.

This one, nestled in the traditional den of contenders, England, where blindness more than The disdain of the Orléans family had let him flee, he spied on time to attempt an imperial restoration.

With him, the people were princes in their turn: Bonaparte was the plebeian kingship; Louis was becoming willingly socialist, phalansterian, everything that one wanted, provided he got his hands on the finances of France.

The opposition, however, took all forms,

has. –

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 411

from the rue du Sentier to the Saint- suburb Antoine, from the Chaussée-d'Antin to the street

Saint Dominic; in Lyon, in Marseille, and even in Carpentras, all of France groaned and conspired

in one direction or the other.

This widespread aspiration for change erupted in pro-, pos of a banquet.

Louis-Philippe had reigned, and, in turn, this king was leaving for England.

Let's see, for goodness' sake, these great financiers, this luxury, this whirlwind of money, companies, and annuities, railway annuities, annuities on the large book, therefore, had not brought rest and prosperity. of the country?

The Republic will respond.

1848

The men of 1830 were mistaken; they believed they could dominate the movement, once again, They could not.

The 1848 insurrection was both historical and social.

Those very same ones whose brilliant and bold theories had helped her: Messrs. Louis Blanc, Proudhon, Léon Faucher, Émile Pécqueur-Robert, Enfantin, Wolowski, Michel Chevalier, Cabet and many others, were powerless.

Amid numerous disagreements, the pro-reformers had a common part which can be summarized as follows:

(4) This chapter has been completely revised for the edition current, and because of the confirmations that the events that occurred since 1876 have contributed to the thesis of this work.

all

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 113
ro

Compulsory work.

Society is a vast laboratory where everyone must to find one's place according to one's abilities.

Society owes work to the workers.

War on capital, liberation from oppression of all by the high bank.

These programs and their variants had a Main drawback:

They lacked organization.

One could say that they were simply tables of materials, summarizing a set of criticisms; but They did not reveal a complete concept in any way. summary of the social organization.

However, theory without organization, thrown to the wolves Popular ignorance creates rebels, not...
revolutionaries.

That's what high finance has always done very well Understood. Having everything to gain from the Jewish uproar, She readily embraces the harshest criticism.
against the power, which she nevertheless dominates and which she surrounds, but in a hidden way; it provides,
even, his money to the most violent newspapers,
which these only tend to destroy.

But as soon as it comes to organizing the theory that has emerged, Logically, of all the criticisms, it stands out.
vade; so that if the call to revolt finds tou-

_ days at her house of trumpets and bugles, never 9

414 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

she didn't even provide a fife to the scientific revolution lific.

In this respect, the bank's position is logical. Indeed, there is no no social revolution is possible without prior-11, there has been no financial revolution.

However, finance itself being a per- revolution
manente, but silent, directed against the interests of the masses, we understand that the financial revolution Cière must necessarily be a counter-revolution, by consequently a destruction of the domi- organization
Nantes, whose real name is Capitalism.

For its part, capitalism being an organization eminently scientific, simultaneously encompassing all interests, it is clear that, in order to achieve it, 11
You have to aim and hit everywhere at the same time.

That's why, when you want to make a revolution
scientific, 1 liter is needed:

Or to achieve it gently and gradually by the skill of the means and the superiority of the ideas pra-
ticks;

Or impose it brutally once and for all, by systematic and calculated violence, so as not to do not cross the goal line.

BUT, IN BOTH CASES, YOU NEED TO HAVE A PROGRAM OVERALL AND IN DETAIL, CLEAN, FLEXIBLE, TRANSACTION-FREE POSSIBLE TION, BECAUSE A TRANSACTION. IN A PROGRAMME IS THE SIGN OF ITS IMPERFECTION.

DR UE.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS, 415

In 1848, the serious mistake was made of playing with the anger of the starving people.

On the one hand, those who, in sincerity, had no faith that in violence, they were not strong enough to to use it usefully.

On the other hand, the memories of 1789, with its confiscations and its hecatombs, were still too vivans for not having organized a non-resistance not only French, but European.

Finally, the corruption of the reign that had just ended had poisoned even the soldiers of the Revolution

tion.

However, to achieve lasting victory, a "revolution"

"must be pure."

Is it necessary to recall here in the middle of What rottenness brought down the monarchy of 1830?

Do we need to remind ourselves how widespread corruption and venality had penetrated the habits of everyone Civil servants?

Should we point out the strange resemblance of the scans? 1847 slabs with those of 1887!

Here and there ministers, generals, officials members of the highest order are convinced of Venality, treachery, fraud!

Justice, horrified, falters; false weights are elected home in its symbolic balance; the nation is demoralized,

416 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

—: How is that possible? — Why
Were these depravities hidden from us for so long?

Hey! Good people! Because those who desired to sit on these turpitudes, in order to commit them in
In turn, they wanted to have time to prepare.

Think about it! 1847–1887 are two different identities!

In any case, the men of 1848 had the beautiful part.

The July Monarchy having collapsed in the Public contempt, the provisional government had:
than to seize power; he therefore had, from the outset
First day, the most unimaginable conveniences
to reform all at once, without any possible resistance,
all the abuses of the past, to install an eco- regime
new economics and, to save France from all the catastrophes it has gone through since, leaving to each of them a few shreds of his honor or its riches.

Instead, what did he do?

For lack of having studied, for lack of having developed a plan of social organization, composed of ignorant people as much
He was ambitious, he groped for several months, tried partial systems; a strange surgeon, he began to

to dress the wound—misery—while sharpening the sword million.

It was absolutely restarting the work of the Da—

TT —

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 417

—

This fact alone powerfully incriminates all these pseudo-reformers, only capable of flooding Paris with their hollow prose and their bombastic phraseology.

Yet these men owed their notoriety than to their vigorous criticisms of the fallen regime; Easy task! However, it is so obvious that their discussions were superficial and directed only in an ambitious goal, which they achieved on the day they met, suddenly, masters of all this power, including, during For so many years, they had only hoped to obtain a The weak part, they appeared bewildered, powerless-sants, — or else they were traitors!

In any case, they waited so long, "repeated," they said, giving time to capital, the sole culprit of the Orleanist infamies, of organizing to nize, to appoint another leader, and, finally, to drown France once again in floods of blood.

At least let this lesson benefit the people; let it

Know well and remember that never 1! should leave twenty-four hours of vacation between an annual regime

a new regime and a new system.

He should be wary of those who systematically advise reversals or battles, if the same are silent on the new organization that will have to be substituted for the old one; on the contrary, it is necessary that this organization is ready-made, being condensed practical-necessarily in the form of four or five laws or decreets, not of a political nature, – politics does not serving only to satisfy the rage of passions, – but of a scientific and economic nature, the only one who knows to balance, for all needs and means, the consumption and production, and installing the good – to be Ja where there was misery, without it being done the slightest appeal to whim or arbitrariness (1).

In order to better understand the facilities offered to government of 1848, it's worth taking a look on the state of social transformations at the time of its installation: |

Since 1814, all aristocratic forces have been... were gradually being absorbed into FINANCE.

This is how we were able to see, as early as 1824, M^{me} Des-
"Teyère to become Duchess of Osmond, MM^{re} Roy, Marquise de Talhouët and Countess de Lariboisière;
M^{re} Ouvrard had married the Count of Rochechouart, Richelieu's last heir. For Messrs. Collot, it's...
It was simply an aspiration to the peerage.

Finances, in turn, had gradually melted away
small in industry and commerce.

(1) To clarify and to join the example to the precept, I give three main laws, which, if peacefully agreed upon, would render
The use of violence is unnecessary. These laws are based solely on based on scientific observations; they will be found, along with their explanation patterns, at the end of this volume.

LS

The supremacy of industry had been proclaimed
by Saint-Simon when he was in charge of L'Industriel.

A manifesto signed Saint-Simon, Augustin Thierry had established, in principle, that the death of an emperor triel or a chemist was a public calamity.

But the manifesto did not mention the cataclysm necessarily following the disappearance of a banquier; also those who subsidized the newspaper of Saint-Simon withdrew in the face of this proclamation. quasi-social; their names were Cottier, Vassal, Blanc-Collin, Hottinguer, Gros-Davilliers, Delessert, Casimir Périer (1).

These gentlemen hoped at the time to do business for France, and certainly, Mr. Vassal would not have still dared to rebel against royal decrees and Casimir Périer would not have helped to overthrow the rot.

They had reached that point, however, in 1830.

As we can see, a fusion of races and a fusion of ideas, everything had gradually moved towards the people, without the Fusionists are well aware of this themselves.

Aristocracy, banking, industry, commerce, and finally the bourgeoisie had become allies.

The progression had been as follows:

(1) See, in the second volume of The Kings of the Republic, the specific details concerning these various financial institutions.

490 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

It is

First, one hundred men governed thirty thousand lions; then a thousand men had become necessary-saires; then one hundred thousand, finally, five hundred thousand. On was at; it was the Empire that was to reach the million.

That is to say, thirty million producers, at

They had to feed a hundred families, they had to to make a million richer.

At the time we are studying, however, and all

By dispersing, the metallic force could still count easily.

When she heard the tocsin of 1848, she re-suddenly tightened and created a void around the new power-calf.

If he had been sincere, he would have been far-sighted; he would have sensed where the danger lay, and, through measures severe, 1 liter would have averted the European strike of capitalists who were going to overcome the social aspirations-lists demonstrated in France.

This government did nothing, did nothing wrong, and capitulated. very quickly, as we shall see.

Like any other government, it needed money. He solicited it from the financiers! These They refused him. – Naturally.

Europe, for its part, was surprised and moved; many cities were affected by the propaganda

has
um

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 491

French revolutionary. Europe had, moreover,

as we said, the hand strongly before diving

in the great French ledger, either by her or by the bankers, and she was horrified because the financial market-the crier was no longer dirigible, from the moment it no longer held the reins of political movements.

Europe, therefore, went on strike. The first act of this The strike was carried out by the Austrian banker of the Laffitte Street.

He had been caught in the act of playing in 1848. international stock exchange. Accustomed to going with confidence, the events he had experienced since 1814, him

having always demonstrated that his friends knew how to con-
to serve power, and that he himself always arrived

to possess their secret, he had organized, on the em-

taking 250 million, a vast financial combination candle.

The new government confused him.

How, moreover, can a financier and a banker international, of the Jewish religion, could he have to make Mr. de Lamartine, a poet, understandable;

Mr. Arago, a journalist; Mr. Marie, a lawyer; and,

Finally, Mr. Ledru-Rollin, who was preventing the reopening ture of the palace of stock trading?

Absolutely, it was impossible!

But he still had the Minister of Finance. This one was a fellow believer. His name was Goudchaux; 9.

1929 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

My.)

He was a second-rate banker, a small-time discounter
a businessman; there was also Garnier-Pagès, a stockbroker! Above all, there was Crémieux, the gold-Jewish Leanist, the restorer of Israel in France and in Algeria.

Perhaps salvation lay there.

With such elements, the famous baron did not just a bite of republican finance.

This was Rothschild's situation with regard to France at the time the insurrection broke out

He had submitted a bid and contracted, in no-.

In November 1847, a loan of 250 million, as We said it above.

As we also mentioned, he had been able to,
thanks to the upward movements of the stock market,
to generate approximately 18 million in bonuses.
Whether they had actually done them or not is not the point here.
question.

The only question is whether he was able to do it.

But he could have.

Of the 250 million, the banker still had to pay 470 million.

Mr. Goudchaux timidly asked him to comply.
cutter; the banker, citing force majeure,
– because the rent had fallen, – refused to do the
other payments.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 193

ns

He thus dared to do something that the famous Ouvrard

hadn't even thought of doing so at the time

Waterloo.

It is interesting to compare the two situations.

Mr. de Rothschild had obtained the loan at 5%
at 75 francs. 25, in November 1847.

Here are the lessons from page 3, starting with 100.

era :

Higher. Lower.

1847, November 77139. February 93 ... 76f »

December. 77 35. 74 90

1818, January, 75,920. 73,200

February....., 74 80. 93 February ... 73 70

March March 7..... 58 p

So, in December, Mr. de Rothschild could have placed at 77 francs, average price, the 9,966,800 francs of 3% annuities which would represent the 250 million granted at 75.25 francs, with a premium of 1.75 francs per 5 francs of annuity, i.e. a profit of 17 million 442,000 francs, not including the commission.

But Mr. de Rothschild, undoubtedly not having found the prices quite high for him (he was used to it). was for Spanish or Haitian profits), had otherwise organized his operation, when the days February erupted.

He had, it seems, only invested 2,569,415 francs. annuity, for a payment to the Treasury of 64,450,878 francs,

+

494 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

thus maintaining a premium of 4,496,472 francs 75 at the exchange rate average of 77 francs.

A bond of 25 million had been deposited, as a guarantee of the bidder's commitments.

Starting from February 7th and on the 7th of each month thereafter, it had to pay 40 million up to the amount of nominal balance, after deducting the arrears that the the government had declared payable in advance from December 22, 1847, and which he made pay by anticipation of the anticipation on March 6, instead of March 22, 1848.

All of this led to nothing.

Not only Mr. de Rothschild, after having made himself imperturbably settle, in February, half-

France did not continue its required payments.
but, again, he was released from his commitments and by
in addition, secretly admitted to a 13 million issue annuity lions 5%, at the same rate as that to which he had taken out the loan at 3 p. 400 (July 27-
(let 1848). | -

The theory is therefore quite clear; the bankers who
Those who deal with the State do not accept any risk against them.

Called upon to speculate on a nation, they all keep
the profits and make him bear all the losses.

They say it's justice!

Let us now examine Ouvrard's conduct, this

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 195

man so much discussed and, later, disgraced, while Rothschild was praised for his rigidity and exactute.

When Ouvrard had written a similar treatise to that of 1847 and when he agreed to take, at 53 francs,
5 million annuity, 5%, this annuity, listed
69 francs, fell to 55 francs (April 1815), then she did 62 francs, 25 and 56 francs (May) and on June 20, at the time of Waterloo, 55 fr.

At that last price, 1 liter lost its profit and a part of his commission; but, on that day, having still five installments of 2 million each, he could-would invoke the unknown of tomorrow, the case of force
major; he did nothing of the sort and poured out, on the 21st, the 22nd, the 23rd, on the 24th and 25th, down to the last million, also regularly relatedly that he had paid from June 1st to 20th the others millions.

So, Ouvrard had, in ten days, placed the 5 million
rent lions, in 1815; and Rothschild, in 1847,
with far more powerful means, had had two months to invest approximately 10 million.

By comparing the two results, should we conclude that the banker of 1815 was more skillful than that from 1847?

We will not make such a mistake.

We will only say that in 1815 it was a question of to support any monarchy whatsoever, and that in 1848 he

4926 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

the goal was to kill a Republic taken seriously by the people (1)!

The Austrian banker's conduct had exasperated the people, or at least that portion of the government popular, which had experienced its resistance.

He was forced to hide and, as just punishment, suffered at This was his worst crisis at that moment.

It was again from London that Jut received salvation, at

at the very moment when he was imploring Caussidière and denying his intention to flee abroad.

Finally, by a most singular coincidence, This influx of English funds was preceded by some barely a month before the final closure of the liquidation English claims, which began in 1815.

Indeed, everything having been spent, it was said, the Echi-who publicly gave discharge to his clerks saries in 1849.

It is quite extraordinary to note that at this era when the power of the Republic minted its own currency

(1) In the 1876 editions, my appreciation was marked of some hopes in the new power. Here is what I had written, alas!

"However, we will note that when it comes to dominating a market for public funds, and consequently to extract, through them, Other people's money is something that can be obtained through royalty, not with the republic.

mt

)

eur fé

| HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 127

with the old king's crockery, with the possessions of the civil list, the funds of depositors in the savings banks

– Savings, the 45-centime tax, loans to the Bank of France, the forced currency, even trying to Sequestration, of public subscriptions at 5% at 75.25 francs (as in the bad days of the invasion), who, finally, Soccupail, to draw up a picture of foreign claims, because, after having taken by violence our currency, the foreigner had also obtained it Through cunning and in various forms, he is extraordinary,

I said, that this same Government, forced to feed

one hundred thousand workers in the national workshops, at price of 9 million per month, and who, to achieve this, He vainly strained his poor brain, never having known the gravity of the atrocities that had caused the disappearance the balance of the 6.5 million registered annuities in 1815 on the condition that an accounting be made.

The strangeness of this gap can only be explained if we would like to recall the jealous care of the diplomats material to shroud in mystery everything related to this question.

Therefore, more science and more Convincing the rulers to decide to go delving into the archives and consulting correspondence

* Delightfully convoluted weights.

inseparable from that famous liquidation of which Mr. de

has

EE rm

498 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

There

Rothschild knew all the details, that if, today even today, even after public discussions that she raised from 1861 to 1869, in London, in the House of Commons, where Lord Lyndhurst declared—would say that this "affair" was a stain on the nation, and, in Paris, in the legislative body, where Mr. Rouher stated that everything was regular, you ask some of these former officials from the ministry foreign affairs directorate, which knows how to survive all You will soon notice the changes. due, to their absolute ignorance in this regard, as to many others, what are their unwritten rights? tibles to retain functions of which they make a si good use.

Finally, it's just taxpayers' money. which is a trifle, like the whole story that we have just written has not ceased to prove it (1).

(4) The newspapers often referred to this liquidation, in by virtue of which France still currently holds a a claim against England amounting to several hundred millions! In the early months of 1887, a member of parliament woke up this matter, and he even secured the appointment of a commission parliamentary.

On several occasions, I had been consulted about the circumstances treaties, origin of the claim, and their financial interpretation ceremonial; I was therefore asked to write a dissertation at the same time technical and diplomatic aspects. This memorandum will be found with some new documents at the end of this volume.

I

==. + =
es En, en nn

=
D -jf

- 2 "1

me -
es _nPme che - ni -
eme. me. "

mt Pan =

summer +2
HAS -----

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 129

In any case, the government of 1848 had both fear and horror of bankers and, strangely Mr. Goudchaux's joy, we saw succeeding finance the small systems of Mr. Garnier-Pagès.

Meanwhile, in Luxembourg, they were doing Beautiful theories about work.

But one day, the people, tired of being flattered, finally wanted to make his voice heard. Under the pretext In order, he was silenced; those very same people who had launched it - with words - took refuge trembling behind the dictatorship of General Cavaignac, which soon became conservative, that is to say that is to say, based on the financial element; therefore this Fat was finished, the Republic was running its first skirmishes towards the empire.

Credit was rising from the ashes, the stock market was reopened; the Republic, too! organized a public funds market, discount houses

somewhat at that time and which were called:
Messrs. Pagnerre, Hachette, Dubochet, Laveissière, Pinard and Boissaye. Soon Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte
was able to get himself elected President of the Republic.

In short, the upper echelons of banking, after a few months of Despite apparent defeat, he regained power.

As for Mr. de Rothschild, he had become more
A millionaire like never before.

IX

1852-1870

The entire current generation has been able to appreciate the power-
the role of finance in this new period of eighteen years old.

And yet, at the beginning of the reign, the high bank
The official had hesitated for a moment; she felt that the new sovereign had imperiales and that, perhaps, 1! would be willing to manufacture
He himself would find the bankers he needed. That was Fear of competition!

This fear was justified, as we shall see; but given that the priests of Moloch-Baal are arriving

(1) This chapter has been completely revised and considerably increased, for the same reason as the previous one.

_ HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 131

always agreeing, even when they seem to be By arguing further, we will eventually realize that the feudalism lost nothing from gold, and the people, theeternally sacrificed, suffers a little more generally the Shameless thefts and cynical plundering.

In fact, Napoleon III had studied the financial processes officials of the various regimes. He also knew that a governor-popular government was only possible if it was "Tidigitation".

Two forms of prestige were within his reach: that of the name or that of the race; but he had the name without having the race, even the one whose label he displayed.

He had the skill to take hold of the race where it was. That is why he chose Morny, and he was content with take the name for himself.

The preceding few lines summarize entirely—conventional grandeur and decadence real of the imperial regime.

Morny was the great manipulator and the great corrupter. and, in truth, fostered the emergence of a new financial ago-merization.

Rothschild had sulked; he had tried, with his clumsy, nouveau riche-like behavior, intervening between Napoleon and Changarnier (1). He had been dismissed rather abruptly;

(1) I recounted this fact in my Kings of the Rouboue cr volume, page 130.

132 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

but his anger became more furious when he saw one of his former clerks, Pereire, to set up aulél against hôsuch, and become one of the great financiers of the empire.

Finally, a new anger erupted when he saw Mirès blossom; He was also not a stranger to the gigantic struggle which arose between these last two financiers and who remfolded noisily for a good part of the period 1m-perial.

It should be noted that, from now on, the new Finance still flourishes in Judaism. But it is not Not everything.

What would I say if I had to list all the oddities of the Fuld dynasty, all the unreal-semblances of the Roman Duke Galiera, all the for-Nitures of the Seillière and Heine families and the mysteries of Thurneyssen's bankruptcy!

Should we talk about Girardin, the Crémieux family, and the Crochard, and Solacroup, and Gibiat?

All these names represent what Georges Duchêne, who, before me, dealt with the Empire, called it imperial banking, and when I have added the names of Frémy, Soubeyran, and Rouher, of Haussmann, Erlanger and Jecker, I will have, I believe, I listed the strong personalities and also the great ones plunderers of the French nation during the period a voracious regime presided over by Napoleon II.

=

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 133

With the exception of Fould and Girardin, all these people were almost to the nearest pen new; one would search in vain in the annals of the monarchy of 1830 a mention of some importance revealing that before being the adventurers of December 2nd, they had been something else something that servants in society run by the Orléans.

So it was a bunch of starving people that, precisely because of the... In his Chéliments, Victor Hugo has lashed out at them. its flamboyant rhymes.

With them, the Jewish community was in the Empire, and, naturally- In reality, he was supposed to die from it.

Initially, Fould established himself as one of the financiers the most famous and powerful cens; his the bank was already old and earned him certainly the official position he held.

This Jew had claims almost equal to those of the Rothschilds.

A chronicler said: "The Fuld dynasty is yet another pair of Moses' horns; but while Rothschild aims for the inter- crown nationally, Fould is content with the crown of France.

It was he, moreover, who centralized the operations in Paris.

nisant the general treasury service.

He had been a deputy under Louis-Philippe, had served in the civil service.

134 THE HIGH BANKING AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

like a good servant; he hadn't even stolen the votes who had elected him, because his cashier claimed that he had paid regularly; 1 liter therefore had the star necessary to make an imperial minister.

Her influence was considerable; she was, in the Sur-moreover, supported by certain alliances.

One of the Fould sisters, after having nearly terrified to be a marquis of Béthisy, had ended up marrying a Count of Breteuil.

We know, in fact, that the Saint-Germain suburb had, like Rothschild, sulked in his corner against imperial society, but that his sulking could not to stand firm against courtly robes and seductions of Saint-Cloud and Compiègne.

With Fould, the Empire was therefore organizing the centralization-financial sation, but its economists were of a-very embarrassed.

They knew very well that finance was the base of economic science; but, as, by fearing socialism, they had defended themselves to the newspapers financiers to deal with economic matters, they were somewhat hampered in their expansion, especially when they wanted to act for their own personal gain.

That's why, for a long time, the major the atrocities committed were ignored; the public knew only a few truths, when, like the dogs of Athalie's dream, the high financiers €

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 435

disputed among themselves and resorted to the tribes naux.

It is, without a doubt, to Mirès that France owes the revealing the hidden agendas of certain combinations

Without him, without his many newspapers, without his arrestation, without its oriental, Roman and trafficking People from Marseille, we would never have known the slums. des Pereire, Pontalba's mercantilism, the dilet-Solar's tantism, the independence of the expert Monginot and the extraordinary reversals of impe- justice riale.

The empire's high bank had to several times bit my nails for having bothered this chatterbox; ver-Tablement, his revelations passed through the loopholes in the law that muzzled the press.

The famous separation established between the questions economic and financial issues did not hold up more upright and, despite the hypocrisy with which one allowed the free creation of purely journals financiers, provided that they do not speak Never before had a politicized economy, and truths could emerge. Day. |

It is true that the separation of finance and the economy since nomy is a scientific falsehood, the tribu- the empire's officials could very easily accuse and condemn all financial articles for economism

in

136 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

candles that displeased the emperor's maintainers. But when a judge pleaded and published a ruling- It became impossible to stop the indiscretions. tions.

This is how we were able to find out that Erlanger, acting openly and with impunity, he had made people subscribe 15 million for the famous cotton loan at the time of the American Civil War, and had put 70 million in his pocket, while also dispensing with It is good to transfer the funds to the borrowing government. than to return a single cent to the gullible subscribers (1), all with the more or less direct complicity of Paris stockbrokers' union.

And now, if we compare the imperial monarchy- compared with previous monarchies, we find-even, that the Republic of 1848, without realizing it, they also employed.

These general processes consist of the following:

Whether governments are arbitrary or emp-risks, always imagine that a large alms public opinion is enough to make them forgive all their other abuses.

That's how the Bourbons got the billion emigrants;

(1) I detailed this fact in my Kings of the Republic, 1^o volume, page 275.

mm

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS, 437

The Orléans: railway concessions;

The Republic of 1848: the national workshops.

Napoleon III had many similarities: firstly, he restored the papacy, and thereby reassured those who Pius VII reminded them. Then the monopolies having trembled before the people of 1848, for they held the nation's assets, he also reassured them, as we had reassured the purchasers of nationalized property, that is to say, by legislating to consolidate them and extend: the Railways, the Crédit Foncier, the Bank of France.

Not content with that, he regimented all the industries, all private banks and, 'by The regularly organized anonymity made it illusory personal responsibilities.

With the high bank satiated, he took care of the promoters; in their favor, he created the function-extreme risk; he even ended up persuading them that they became capitalists because of its financiers had helped to establish direct subscriptions and public...

Moreover, it suffices to browse the list of the power acquired through financial concentration.

As early as 1852, the empire was converting 5%;
This operation involved 3.5 billion.

Next, several annuity issues for dota-

10

138 ' HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

awards, among others for the Legion of Honour and for the late Queen of the Belgians, amounted to 200 million.

In 1862, the conversion of the 4 1/2 per cent involved
4.5 billion; shortly afterwards, the conversion of the em-
Mexican prunts stirred 189 million.

Apart from that, and most often for the
During the war, the public donated their money; from 1854 to 1859
It provides 2.2 billion; from 1857 to 1859,
he or the Bank of France paid another
billion.

Finally, from 1859 to August 1870, the public: still more than 3 billion.

So there you have it, just in official negotiations alone, nearly of 15 billion that have been waved between the public and the bankers, on whom, most certainly, more one and a half billion remained in the hands of a few intermediaries, not to mention subsidies

more or less reputable than brokers, intermingling-Financial journalists and journalists have received various hands.

_ Stock market practices were thus able to penetrate even in the peasant's cottage and poison the
at the same time the middle bourgeoisie and the class of workers.

Such had been the result of the economic studies of the emperor: exaggerating the mistakes of the past, consla-
as long as we hadn't sufficiently broadened the framework of those admitted to the plundering of public funds, he had broadened the scope; thanks to him the nation had had to pay for the extravagances of a million families, and between Time finance, also building on the past: Laffitte was overshadowed by Pereire, Ouvrard by Jecker, Casimir Périér by Mirès.

Rothschild alone remained incomparable.

'Now let's summarize: the government system of the Republic had, as we have said, called upon to live at everyone's expense, about a hundred a thousand men.

But, in the meantime, she was dismissing or arresting in their operations 400,000 economic firefighters.

It was both too little on the one hand and too much of the other one.

The Empire, initially reaching the number of one million out of 30, had reasoned more algebraically; he had said to himself:

Given that a state possessing 10 million vital forces can, mathematically, be subjected by 2 million concentrated financial forces, of in order to attract the ee of the 8 million remaining.

The Restoration had not yet reached these 2 million funds. 500,000 deamentaux; the July government, a Million; the Republic, 100,000; and all had sunk 1

440 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

D

Therefore, it was necessary to force the progression.

had found 3,600,000 concentrated forces absorbing the total production of the 6,400,000 live forces res-aunts.

He gradually added 1,400,000 appetits, and the balance was, towards the end of his administration: 5 mil-lions against 5 million.

Having reached this point, the pressure was unbearable. table, because the appetites of the 5 million who were above consisted of the saturation of the old ones the voraciousness of the newcomers.

Everything, therefore, reached limits deemed impossible. sixty years ago.

The property, expropriated, worked, fragmented and reconstituted, required a rent of one quarter of income; while its normal figure should be represented by one tenth.

On the other hand, movable property includes shares; rents and money, reached, on the market of public funds, the most extrava-ganles. | |

The Stock Exchange, naturally, recorded the most Great scams of the century. Naturally also, The moral level declined more and more in all the classes of society.

If Balzac distinguished himself by stigmatizing the infamies of

k

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 141

the society of 1830, let us judge by what it can say Émile Zola, by throwing his ardent prose on cynicism of the company of 1852.

By 1857, things had reached the point where a magistrate, a public prosecutor, Mr. Oscar de Vallée, had dared to write a pamphlet entitled The Handlers of money, and that the emperor had felt obliged to re-Mercier publicly acknowledged its author.

What good is this hypocrisy?

Nothing was done afterwards; the law of 1867 (ten years later) only resulted in multiplying more than ever, general and particular spoliation deeds carried out anonymously.

There's no need to go into details here.

Let's just translate it into impi- numbers
The actions of governments are acceptable.

While French capital (buildings, furniture and valuables) had taken twenty-five years to increase by 28 billion, rising from 54 million liards (figure from 1826) to 82 billion (figure from 1851), and this amidst the ferocious appetites that As we have just recounted, it was not necessary with the Empire that nineteen years to load 40 billion these same capitals, that is to say, to transfer them from 82 billion (figure from 1851) to 122 billion (figure from 1870).

This means that at the end of the Empire the governors

10.

142 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

ER

nants and the propertied classes demanded the following from the population:

double royalties, while the ability to pro-
the reduction of this population had only been by a third.

On four or five occasions the Fifth Empire would collapse dré, despite his apparent power, if he had not de-trout of men, that is to say of consumers, and if he had not, by plundering outside, mitigated,
to a small extent, embezzlement and theft
that he committed internally, to the detriment of the police non-owning population.

By 1869, he had exhausted his resources; so s0n
system of consuming men and plunder
External factors were once again imposed upon him.

The upper echelons of the banking world were pushing for war; wouldn't they

that she had stolen!

Judaizing internationalism was on the rise, the Prussia and France could not be victorious. both; therefore, there would always be a people decimated who would borrow.

This people was the people of France!

Everything had been well prepared, by the way!

As early as 1866, part of the press had been purchased French, and one can read, in collections ofli-cielles, the famous discussion during which

Mr. de Kerveguen denounced these scandalous bargains them. |

LU Ê — nn,

= a —

| HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 143
It was a warning.

France was about to relive the dark days of 1814: she had to revisit the so-called disastrous days: of Ibera-

a financial institution, which was initially called 1818, and are then called 1872: she was finally to attend to the Spectacle of a 93 in reverse, which called itself 1871.

Meanwhile, the European high bank
The coalition was monitoring everything, including the smallest details. details of the intrigues and conspiracies that preceded led to the vote on the Constitution of 1875.

Alas! to this Constitution was reserved the care to bring Ja France back to life!

me

The Re nn

RE RS EE ES ES

!

Ru —

THE FINISHING POINT

THE BIG BOOK.

Everything we have just described is written in Indelible characters in the Great Book of Debt
public of France.

That's where we'll always find the criterion.
palpable, inexorable and indisputable,

Here, indeed, is the progression of the recorded debt,
which sums up, as one can easily understand,

the maintenance costs of the concentrated forces shown opposite listed.

446 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

D

Consolidated debt.

In 4814, there were 68 million annuities.

In 1830, there were 199 — —

In 188, — 24 — =

In 14870, — 3585 — —

In 1876, there were 748 — =

The 748 million annuities are annuities with di-towards rates. They were negotiated or delivered to taxpayers eleven and a half billion.

If, now, we want to know the progression of the islands annual expenses, including the service of the recorded debt, we will have:

Budget of expenditures in 1814..... 572 million.

- in 1830..... 4,095 –
- in 1848..... 4,771 –
- in 1870..... 2,200 –
- . in 1876..... 2,569 –

It should be noted that it is on the date following that of the forfeiture of the regimes cities that 8€ develop- to bear the consequences of this regime.

Thus, the monarchy of 1830 found the budget to 4.095 million and raised it to 1.771 million; J'Empire found it at 4.771 million and raised it to 9.200 million, then to 2.569 million, which is the figure to which the The government of 1876 found the annual budget.

Now it's up to him to change it!

You

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 147

I wrote this in 1876.
Here is what the figures from 1886 show.

Consolidated debt.

ASS ie cms. ST 94% millions.
1870 dar pon 5 358 –

ABTD Nissan 748 –
41886.....25.2 oc... 1,337 – (1)

And as for the expenses, here they are:

Budget 1876 9.569 million.

– 41881..... 2,887 – + ABB Ge euiese 3108 –
– 41886..... 3,827 –

And by adding the supplementary budgets, such as they were at the end of 1885: 4 billion 967 million

lions!

(1) In 1886, the perpetual debt appears for only 706 million lions; but it must be noted that the non-perpetual annuities, and as the number of years during
The number of servings that will be required varies from fifty to ninety.
In reality, this is just an illusion, as we will see.
see by studying the total budget expenditures.

CONSEQUENCES.

I was also urinating in 1876: .,

We do not want, in this place, to study the immixtion of the financial element in the disaster and the developments that followed 1870.

Everything looks the same, in fact, and as above,
we could find out under which nonis are hiding
today the Ternaux and the Puyraveaux of the Com-
The Laffitte and Villèle families of the government that crushed it.

Everything returns, everything evolves.

We have our Abbots Louis and Martignac; there is no
We hardly need anything more than a Richelieu.

We will not discuss loans any further.
recent, neither from the Morgan loan, nor from the liberator:

el

THE

îr

| ïl

II | | fl

»

min

3 i

|

(

|

Mr.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. '149

But if we lived five years in a
a permanent state of excitement, we must, we need it to observe this, to the perpetual revolt of the element financier who still dominated the old Assem-wheat.

What will the news do?

Will she understand that she must organize the fight?
by drawing inspiration only from the immutable principles of the justice and loyalty?

Will she understand that no one has the right to enrich themselves?
will she tear at the expense of others and oppose her strength to

This abuse?

Let no one cry out about an attack on freedom

commercial and industrial.

Certainly, everyone is free to ruin themselves or to

to get rich;

The game needs to be crushed by taxes; the player is not
Not nice.

We must ease the burden, for it was Judah who nourished
France and its parasites for a thousand years.

The game is a passion, it's pointless to try to destroy it.

Passions cannot be destroyed, they can only be guided.

Open wide the gambling houses,
as you open wide the doors of the Stock exchange.

11

450 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS:

SR

Only that the State is a croupier in the courtroom
like roulette.

Immorality!

No: necessity. I will prove it in a moment.

Do you know what annual brokerages are?
Stockbrokers only involved in gambling operations?

One hundred million!

These one hundred million are one-eighth of one franc
for 400 francs of invested capital.

Increase brokerage fees by 35%, leaving 1/8
p. 100 to the agents (which amounts to imposing the game in at the same time that the courts would have to recognize it to be born, as we explain in the chapters
following).

And you will have an annual yield of two thousand
One and a half farthings.

Let no one say that the game will stop.

Never has the high price of a hand stopped a Player:

But the public treasury will benefit from everything that
The fool who gambles will lose and will relieve the tax burden.
'who kill the father of the family.

However, absolute supervision is required.

Fake news and fake maps must
to be the object of perpetual solicitude and severity
tuelles. | |

We must ban borrowing and close the general ledger to close it off through amortization:

ee

D

RE ©

L

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS, 151

We need to reduce spending and move the upper class away
bank of any privileged interference in the budget of the State.

Not that I'm banning regular operation
from the bank, but if, eventually, the State wants to complete a value within a few months, for a cause or for another, he must only do so under the conditions requests made to the first merchant who came along, without privilege, without emissions.

We must finally reform taxation in all its aspects shapes, creating it progressively or retrogradely, and above all temporary.

If the new administrative organization of the country hesitates to boldly take this step towards the future by reforming with patience, moderation, but with firmness, all the abuses, the future will not wait, and, rushing forward
on today's despairs, will crush the resistance

LS

I made a point of reproducing verbatim the pages that I had devoted eleven years ago to the chapter of consequences.

Of the few reforms outlined in broad strokes, Only one was adopted, the one that consisted of doing to have stock market debts recognized by the courts previously described as "a game".

492 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

But, isolated from other reforms, the recognition Futures transactions were just another danger.

Furthermore, alas! instead of monitoring the games, We've been encouraging gambling dens!

That said, I do not believe that, any more than in 1876, I should In this place, summarize the period from 1870-87 as I have summarized the periods that make up this book.

This would, moreover, be redundant with mou History of Agiolage, of which the present work is finds itself to be, in a way, the hislo- introduction risk.

I simply note that this question posed in 1876: "What will the new assembly do?" I have not found only disheartening answers and that the story of these last eleven years must, more than ever, to instill in people's minds the urgent necessity and absolute reform completely, simultaneously scientifically... and above all, quickly, quickly, quickly!

I implore the reader to refer to the three pro-draft laws that he will find at the end of this book.

Three legislatures have succeeded one another; we have changed We have varied the policies of men; and nothing has halted the march which, since the first day of the era Republican France, leading to a new Calais clysm. |

IN

Es _

III

MORAL ASSESSMENT.

_ [One year ago, I thus highlighted the moral assessment

from France:

Each of the revolutions we have counted

the elements and the account of the march was marked not only through a progression of ruin but also republic, but also by the progressive degradation of spirit and morals.

In the past, when top financiers were similar- They were simply called Jews, before being called traders. or bankers, there was something floating around on gold and made it seem as if he were excusing it: it was art.

The first silversmiths were goldsmiths, artists,

154 THE HIGH PANQUE AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

skilled engravers or blacksmiths; their name was Jacques Heart or Samuel Bernard: one a goldsmith, the other an engraver veur.

Today, top bankers are really those whom Murger called Philistines, and as for their science, it is limited to the four rules with all the extensions that their profession entails.

In the old days, when art excused gold, kings bowed down were born in front of the rustics.

Charles V picked up Titian's brush.

gallery, one of whose ceilings Jadin was painting with this exquisite art for which he is known, he simply shouts at him, hat on head and cane held high:

– “Hey! Mr. Decorated Worker, come down!”
So, let me speak to you.

Jadin shrugged and continued his work.

In the past, when Jews became rebellious or insou-
Slow-witted kings became cruel.

Simon did not want to open his treasures to Henri HIT.

This king summoned him and had seventeen of his teeth pulled out, separating each of its extractions by this de-
order:

– Lend me your treasures.

On the seventeenth, the Jew gave in.

This method of borrowing has, it is true, been abandoned
by modern heads of state, but, so as not to

er

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 1455

e

to let the process be lost, the high bank applied it-
qué in his way of lending.

Today, in fact, it is the top bankers who pull the teeth out of governments until that they had handed over the money of their constituents.

But this balances that.

Under Louis XIV and Louis XV, equality tended to be done: finance rose, dignity fell.

A kind of complicity was established; but it was a fragrant, elegant, polite, witty complicity,
which did not prevent him from being absolutely corrupt-
chief and kneeling before the king, like the financier exhausted his farmers to please Louis the Beloved.

Nevertheless, however, the spirit and genius had their personal royalty.

The productive mass was stripped, but we were doing to experience individual talents. yes

Today, both they and they are dying equally.
element. |

Finally, the money men used to pride themselves, in the old days, to be sensitive to beauty, and the artists were their friends.

The wealthy man from La Popelinière, a Rothschild from 1730, had permanently stationed around him the Carle Vanloo, the Marmontel, the Vaucanson family, the Rameau family, the Boucher family, the Latour family, in their graceful house in Passy.

456 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

oo

It is not he who, like this modern Jew and so ugly, would have asked Vanloo to paint his portrait with the nose of Duke Decazes.

Nor was it he who would have bargained at Horace Vernet, one of his masterpieces, at the risk of to appear for no reason (which is terrible) in the painting of the Versailles Smala.

Marmontel didn't have to be witty to his boss, like Heinrich Heine for his own, and, at once Surely, if a Vaucanson had done the honor of Fould to manufacture their locomotives, the accidents of Fampoux and Versailles would not have had...

Finally, the Athenians of 89 and even the radicals 95 of them bowed humbly before the genius and The work: Talma, David.

But when they had outlawed the French financiers of the time, they had the mistake of remaining disarmed faced with the sudden influx of Jews from Switzerland and from Germany.

bishop of Autun, and the abbot of Espagnac, fraternized with the Paris Commune; but the future minister of Napoleon and Louis XVIII was the most skillful; he knew to leave in time and avoid the scaffold, which he did not avoid his colleague the Abbot of Espagnac.

We have seen that the nation paid dearly for this good sa-Mr. de Périgord's clothing.

DT RS

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 157

The Empire was a very rigid reaction; a single genius dominated: that of war.

Despite the corruption of suppliers, there was yet another kind of grandeur and the capabilities to-were about to emerge from the crowd.

But as soon as the coalition of high finance had seized control of the situation...

power, after having turned it to his advantage

popular audacity against the king, and as soon as the people, dominated in turn, committed the mistake of not applying constantly refer to Machiavelli's maxim, by leaving the force in the hands of its enemies, this the same bank which, through the king, had extorted money from the state, found much more: it was simple to extort money from the state directly.

From then on, kings were no longer a ray that covered the Bank, but a cloud hid it.

From then on, it was also over for the dignity of the

- characters, and if it were necessary to search for what the high finance has been able to constrain artistic glories and literary figures who have shone since 1814, if it were necessary to enumerate-to undo all the surrenders of conscience that have

would shake its wings, hastening to escape thus from the most terrifying of dreams.

The High Bank had everything under its control;

With financial slavery came the degradation of souls.

11.

458 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Kings and peoples marched so boldly towards this degradation than to the great victories of the first Republic 1, it was necessary to add the great defeat of 1870.

And yet the advocates of material well-being, of industrial progress would secure an easy triumph by comparing life in the two eras.

But they would certainly be forced to omit in their comparison this profound difference which separates——era always 92 of 70, that is to say that there it was the
a revival of patriotism that disdains sybaritism,
while here, it was the slumber of all aspiration—generous ration capable of throwing man out of the air—
session and comfort.

All governments since 1814 had strained towards the enslavement of life, whereas it is to
It is solely its independence that gives rise to the greatness of characters.

Even morals themselves, however civilized they may be,
have lost that exquisite form they once possessed
in times when the mind reigned over matter.

Today's High Bank, a product of the cri—
foreign vultures and French sparrowhawks
This country has abdicated all politics, crushing moreover the spirit of all the weight of its disdainful gold.

Sometimes, however, she received haughty elders lessons; some of them were very difficult.

Here is an example:

—

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 159

A financial tycoon was hosting a dinner party towards the end of

. half of this century, a prince of the German aristocracy—

order.

This prince was called Paul of W...

Both belonged to the German homeland.

Around the middle of the meal, the host, puffy with his coins, imagined he had the right to suddenly be informally, and without further ado, he began to address the prince, by his first name only.

A Republican would at least have said: citizen... so-and-so.

But the financier disdained it to the very end:
Sir.

"Paul," he said to him, "may I offer you some of this Château-Yquem?"

At the first question, the prince raised the she, then turned left, and noticing only his hunter, standing behind him for his service, resumed eating.

The imperturbable baron began again:

— Paul...

"Hey there! You scoundrel!" cried the prince, jumping up. and turning to his servant, don't you hear
Is it the Baron who's speaking to you?

And, leaving the room immediately, he
the hotel.

The financier remained sheepish for a moment, but soon,

came out of

460 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

oo

"Pah! pah!" he said, "that archer's horse, he'll do it again!"

Having money!

Everything was there and everything is there.

No matter how, no matter where, you have to have money.

And when a poor devil of a coachman, having found in his carriage a forgotten millionaire's wallet by one of these kings of gold, will hasten to give it to him If you report it, this king will reply: |

"Let's give this idiot 500 francs!"

This disdain for human loyalty has descended quickly from finance to the people, and in turn He doesn't want to believe any of the good moves which sometimes, rarely, alas! manifest themselves among the financiers.

And we are surprised when, during the hours of its descent-
nements, the people blindly obey their grudges
and to the hatreds that swell his robust chest
no point in making it burst!

We will give an example of skepticism which,
In a just return, it seized the proletarian; and
On this subject we must also mention Mr. de Rothschild.

If this name comes up often in our writing, it's because that the immense personality it encompasses sums up and condenses within itself all the flattery of financial world.

0, 0 - mm SR 7 min - NAME

In nn. ,, nn EEA, | do not have –

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 161

That was in 1846.

The harvests had been poor and the high

Bankers, fearing famine, sensed the coming of the anger of the exasperated people.

Among them was Mr. de Rothschild, whose son was not yet naturalized, a precaution that dates back only of 1848, after the protection of Caussidière, was the more exposed to the threats of the proletariat; the latter, in Indeed, he held a grudge against the baron as well as the acci-tooth of the Northern Railway than enormous profits that he continued to make on the stock market.

The baron tried to avert the disaster.

He gave orders for things to be done in his name, on all the markets in Europe and America, huge grain supplies.

The wheat and flour were to be sold, at the Paris market hall, below the courtyard, and, after deduction–

taking into account the costs, the net product had to be converted into bread vouchers intended to be distributed among families needy people from each district.

A special bakery, located in La Chapelle–Saint-Denis was supposed to provide for the poor at a rate of 15 cents discount per four-pound loaf.

This major charitable operation was carried out and announced with great fanfare.

What happened to 1 liter?

The people no longer wanted to believe in the loyalty of the banker that he hadn't believed in his own, and cried to hoarding.

"Beware," they repeated every day, "of his bread"
It is not bread; its flour is not flour.
It's sound, it's plaster, it's crushed glass mixed together
"Arsenic!"

These popular musings could be read in the newspapers.

The National newspaper printed that "the baron was drowning his
"flour in the sweat of the people"; which, he adds
A writer of the time, it must be admitted, had to provide
A truly awful loaf of bread.

They even went so far as to repeat a terrible blunder.

The baron, it was said, was having flour brought in from... which were delivered at a very low price, and which he concealed milk of poor quality by mixing them with Sweet almonds!

And those unfortunate souls who believed that were not thinking not that the price of sweet almonds is three times higher higher than that of flour.

But the people weren't calculating.

The famous sweet almonds weighed more than one does not believe in the February revolution.

The financier had achieved the opposite goal to that that he desired; he wanted to avert the crisis, to the precipitail.

His selflessness, sincere in material terms, if-

SES PE

mn teR + - ne. vomit, ame st. +

Hey

MO A,

Not morally, since it served to avert danger,
was called agiotage, speculation!

The banker, moreover, committed another mala-dresse which finished leading the people astray.

The members of the charity office having informed that a large number of poor people in the 12th arrondissement—
The children didn't even have mattresses and pillows.
They fell upon the bare earth, the charitable Israelite
They were eager to send them... a cartload of straw!

The consequence of this was that the supply philanthropy became a detestable operation, in Jaquelle, the banker, couldn't even find his expenses
generals; he therefore lost a considerable sum.

This loss played a significant role in his refusal to make the additional loan payments
from 1847, which we studied previously.

Thus: charity, philanthropy, dignity, all the Beautiful feelings are killed by the reign of finance.

Labor is oppressed, the artist is subjugated, the writer pledged, the industrialist enlisted, the merchant consumed, the devoured people.

Degradation! Degradation!

What will I add in 1887?
What more can I say than I have already said in all my RE +. xt =.

en RE eme — 2 ee rem ee.

164 THE HIGH BANKING AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

books, on the Royalty exercised by parasitism July
in the middle of our so-called Republic?

And yet, a final shame was able to redden
our front.

He was hiding; to set up his counter, he searched at night, for dark back rooms and
The deep cellars; that was too modest!

Selling and buying being holy, trafficking being god,
God was to show himself, and suddenly we saw him
to settle proudly in our palaces, to receive the ambassadors, ruling over an entire people, pardoning the assassins, but condemning France to dishonor!

Degradation! Degradation!

born

IV

UTOPIAS (1).

Every time in politics, in morality, in
In science, in the arts, one dares to publicly assert the impos-
perilous need for radical, immediate reform
As routine awakens, the established order fades away, and
A thousand voices cry out to the innovator:

(1) I leave to this chapter and the next, which, in the editions of 1876, they concluded the book, their particular physiognomy. So little However bold the proposed reforms may have been, however timid the allusions to the social question, reforms and allusions have appeared monstrous at the time I wrote them. This can be useful to to gauge the state of mind of the public to whom I had resolved to address myself ser, and who, since then, has heard many others! We must remember also that I was writing five years before the new press law, and that, even in its moderate form, my book has suffered all kinds of persecution – unavoidable. As for the comprehensive reforms that have become indisputable...
As I've already said, we'll find them at the end.
of the volume.

SRE PR ne

4166 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

"Utopias! Utopias!"

And yet this innovator, this hard worker, this daredevil, is not Most often, it's just a simple echo repeating, after a thousand others, the eternal lament of the oppressed of The eternal routine.

Utopic! had said the routine to Laurent Coster, to Gutenberg and his colleagues, who mixed the impression-
Chinese tabular system with movable characters Cicero.

Utopia! to Papin, who added the cauldrons of Zeno to the Aeolipile of Heron of Alexandria.

The list of names would be inexhaustible; let's skip ahead.
centuries.

The routine also dealt with utopians:

Montaigne's friend, Étienne de la Boétie, who,
as early as 1548, he outlined in advance, in the Contr'un, all the complaints formulated in detail in 1789 and all those that we had to rehearse in 1876.

Sully, Colbert, Terray, Turgot, were ulo-tracks, and those who viciously demonstrated this
They were called Fouquet! Law! Necker! Calonne!

And from all these contrasts and all these contra-
One thing stood out from the statements:

The eternity of abuse.

All reformers have died because of their reforms.

and, if statues were erected to them, it was with the hundred draws from their ideas.

CS

b

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 467

Such is the encouragement of the ages.

Why be surprised? The cause is so natural!

It is clear that the oxen, seeking to defend themselves
The tiger or the lion, are pure utopians according to
of this lion or this tiger! | |

Sometimes, however, the oxen form a square and offer the enemy an impenetrable wall. But This barely lasts a republic, that is to say, as We know, a second on the dial of history.

I will therefore not be at all surprised when, having demonstrated that, for sixty years, we have been eaten away by the ulcer of illegal and dishonest gambling, especially when requesting and applying iron redness at the wound and the irruption of a ray of sunlight
In the dark den of the Stock Exchange, routine will scream at me,
in a tremendous leonine roar:

Utopias! Utopias!

After the town criers will come the writers.

The scholars in us on in æ who, by antiphrasis,
They call themselves economists, and will strive to demonstrate
by $A + B$:

The more a nation is taxed, the more it is rich;
The more a state borrows, the more opulent it is;
That a state's resources are inexhaustible:

* That tax is the best investment and a stimulating for industry;

168

That the rapid enrichment of the individual is a principle of cohesion and not disintegration;

That wealth and well-being are synonymous

So many proposals, so many lies.

From the painful story we have just written,
It is quite clear that patriotism and finance are words, if not antitheses, and that there is no real in politics that the struggle of interests or, if you will,
the battle of selfishness.

But one can lead a battle and it is possible-

It is possible to trigger a struggle, provided that...

k
to grasp, not in their individual units, but in their mass.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

HAS

F

ï

To achieve this goal, before resorting to violence, there is the peaceful force of the law. It is therefore through law that one will be able to discipline selfishness and make it serve well-being of all exclusive trends of whichques-uns. l

However, I spoke earlier about the game and its organ- 1

legal status. I

|
(

Here, the accusation of utopia will not fail to add that of immorality. I don't know that | it is more immoral to regulate the game when we do not |
can remove it as easily as stemming a torrent when one cannot stop it.

As it stands, despite the law, gambling misuses savings public, concentrates it in a small number of hands, exports it abroad, just like the torrent |

|
|

|

which crosses the field carries away the earth and destroys the harvest.

It's not about removing the game, but about...
to direct, to contain, to channel, Te de
to moralize one's immorality.

Ultimately, if stock market speculation were honest,
it would be no more immoral than insurance, the _ready for a big adventure, the agricultural annuity, which are aleatory contracts recognized and governed by the Code.

Why make distinctions?

Why, above all, raise the formidable reproach
of immorality against any light shed on the opera-stock market speculations, where everything is black and anonymity reigns Does the title only serve to thicken the darkness of the trafficking?

If I were the government, if, therefore, I didn't
I could deny that, long before each of my administrations, I know the causes that must influence the price of public funds, even assuming that my power did not give me the ability to create them at will, I would like to escape at all costs from the accumulation, - a hundred times more formidable than that of immo-reality, - to operate with certainty, benefiting from my motivated prescience or of my constellated power,
to appropriate other people's money.

Let us examine, however, whether all legalization is impossible :

In the random contracts we just

SOU 2 ER 7 mé

470

To list above, there is a condition that | To made legalization possible.
This condition is as follows:
That the uncertainties that serve as their basis are above ct
of the intervention of human skill, and that this |"
Even skill is considered a crime. Such are the con-; L fire insurance, life insurance, and |"
life annuity, of which only a crime can become the risk; | %
Then, in a different vein, the large loan k
adventure, where fraud results in a severe penalty.
Therefore, with regard to other contracts
random, that is to say the party, which embraces them all,
we manage to melt above the intervention of the skillful – let's cut to the chase, swindlers – the randomness A!
which is its essence, we will have brought it into the
The above-mentioned legal conditions apply.
However, in order to escape this other accusation thrown at | every critic and every innovator who is labeled as dis-
moulder and never an architect, at the risk of being ap- |
Pelé the utopian, here's how it would seem logical to us
to organize the legalization of the financial game.
First, a pro- demarcation would be established based between forward transactions and transactions cash.

|

For government bonds, for example, it would suffice to report the law of 1831, which created the titles to

|

carrier.

:

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 471

However, their transmission would still be necessary.
and their delivery was as easy as that of a mar-goods that are delivered on a stamped invoice; this
The invoice, drawn up in duplicate, would serve as a power of attorney.

tion and would verify the identity of the new holder.

In this way, the spot market freed itself-

would suddenly eliminate all the oscillations of the random speculation, it would then represent only the natural movement of serious investments and depreciation.

On the other hand, anonymous securities would be created, not giving any right to the collection of income, intended only to represent the differences, and which could be called: exchange vouchers.

These vouchers, similar to the Bank of France notes France, would be issued in denominations of all kinds for the greatest ease of payments, and do not-

would only be valid for a limited time, of the following type:

liquidation to the other, for example.

They would be acquired subject to a surcharge of x p. 100 in addition to their face value, and would be today exchangeable for their intrinsic value at In equal amounts, in cash or in annuities.

For example, assuming a surcharge of 5.400, the purchaser of a 100-franc voucher would pay by taking 103 francs. But when he performed the operation conversely, that is, when, restoring the correct one, it would demand again in cash or income-producing securities In intrinsic value, he would receive only 100 francs.

Read

479 THE HIGH BANK AND REVOLUTIONS.

There would be no problem with the agents of exchange were the intermediaries of this new-new issue; the State would transfer the bonds to them with a discount that would represent their brokerage fee.

the State would require all agents or brokers to deposit prior to a guarantee against delivery of a equivalent sum of the aforementioned vouchers; unnecessary to add that all liquidation settlements do not would only be valid if they had been operated on using these good. 2

A criminal penalty would complement the legislation to in this regard.

The same organization could be applied to all other random operations where the game is done using differences, taking into account However, there are variations that nature would entail. of said operations.

It is to this system (if we are willing to give this name to the combination we have just described) which corresponds to the calculation indicated above.

But the annual figure of 2.5 billion re-coming to the State is based solely on the opera game tones practiced on the Stock Exchange.

And there's nothing extraordinary about it since, as we re-

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 473

Let's peel, if 12 and a half cents ($\frac{1}{8}$ percent) give For agents, 400 million in annual brokerage fees, that's that annually also the sum of the nominal stakes- The market capitalization on the stock exchange is 80 billion!

But this is a rigid and indisputable proportion. like any deduction obtained mathematically.

So this is how, in our opinion, it would be suddenly moralized the current game, certainly the more deplorable and ruinous, especially when 1 focuses on government bonds and low-value stocks noples, as are railway shares.

The shareholder and the bondholder, naive holders and the more often ignorant of their true interests, do not would be more at the mercy of the skilled speculator, sort of a magician who ruins them without them even realizing it doubt, without being able to defend themselves, n1 even complain.

Finally, by isolating the investment security from the security of speculation will make the formation of as-fictitious general assemblies, composed most often of a wind of transient players, who have no interest serious about safeguarding the share capital.

On the other hand, the player could satisfy his passion, without disrupting public savings and credit.

Work would no longer be extorted and plundered by Idleness.

Finally, the State would collect the most proportionate and the | 42

4174 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

fairer taxes, the only truly sumptuous, this dream of all economists and the

the only truly popular one, this dream of all governments (1).

With this tax, 1 liter would quickly reach amorur public debt and to build up a substantial reserve maple tree which, in case of emergency, would free him from all the hassles and all the usurious squandering that accompany the loans.

Then, a host of problems become solvable. and on the front line:

The takeover of the railways.
That is to say, for the State, its liberation from-

(1) In 1882, I attempted to have this organizational plan accepted by the . by means of a petition containing a fully prepared bill.

On June 6, 1882, Mr. Florent-Lefèvre, deputy, concluded in the order of the day on my petition (no. 110) in the following terms:

"What is striking at first glance about the proposed system, this What is shocking, to put it more accurately, is that the legislator would organize the rules and conditions for the exercise of a passion that is his duty
If he were to be prescribed repression, it would mean that he would have to formulate provisions by means of which speculation could flourish. That
The legislator tolerates the manipulation of financial values, whether it happens even to recognize as obligatory the debts which are part of it
Consequently, this can be justified in a pinch; but that he regulates—[This refers to] operations whose moral character is highly questionable.
which may often only have the appearance of loyalty, it is not
Not to stem a necessary evil is to elevate it to the level of a
To establish a social institution is to place on a dangerous level the honest transactions and those that might not be.

This member of parliament voted for the agreements with the companies of railways. (Author's note.)

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 475

the end of the tyranny of these immense associations
of greed, which are called public utility companies
republic, and for taxpayers a double social security

This was certainly a completely new experience for them.

Then we would take care of organizing the instruction public.

This reform is the most feared by financiers.

It seems certain to me that if they did not fear her
No, they would have created it a long time ago.
voluntary instruction of incentive bonuses
just as lucrative as insurance premiums.

How! Financial ingenuity has managed to find a gain, even over the extinction of life, and it would have powerless to discover a profit on the poker—
The lies of intelligences!

We cannot do him such an insult.

But we maintain that high finance had deployed for popular education the same energy

of national wealth, we would not have to draw up certain maps where dark colors clash so the terrifying look.

Universal suffrage, this vast obscurity, becomes—would be a huge flash of lightning, but the reign of the financiers ICRC would be finished.

And that's precisely why, as I said,
First, this chapter is a utopia!

476 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Never mind, let's keep shaking the torch.

We have stated above that one of the benefits of a financial system, based on the legalization of random contracts of the stock exchange and public markets blics, would be to achieve the definitive elimination of funereal loan operations.

Eliminate loans!

Never, surely, will there have been a more enormous utopia struck the ears of the gentlemen of high finance.

Well! Whether they like it or not, besides the benefit of a reduction in public charges, this sup—pressure would produce an unexpected advantage to the point of international view.

It is unfortunately true that, as long as she lives in the midst of a monarchical and authoritarian Europe, France will not be able to give the signal. of disarmament moment.

And, if disarmament were necessary at all costs, it would be good the case of repeating the famous saying of the gardener-florist who was Alphonse Karr:

"Let the assassins begin!"

However, with the current system and with the shortage constant and verified from the Treasury, as soon as it is necessary To arm itself, the state begins by borrowing.

So, it's one of two things:

Or he wants to borrow in silence;

And, in that case, he is at the mercy of the high

|
|

|

r

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 477

A coalition bank, which is the worst kind of cutthroat,
as our history has sufficiently demonstrated,
and that doesn't even guarantee him the desired silence;

Or he borrows publicly;

And, in this second case, besides the fact that it does not avoid the cutthroat above, as well as the same story has proven, he denounces, as if by a diplomatic note-tick, the maneuver or precaution he wants to hide:
1870!

However, arming oneself silently when forced to do so is-that is to say, to hide the money in order to steal from the men
In the eyes of the enemy, this is half the victory:

1870!

Finally, to conclude our series of utopias, occulet us consider another army, constantly feared and monitored by the conservatives, and yet, by them, always excluded from conservation.

I want to talk about the army of labor, let's call it what it is,
of the social question.

Another scarecrow.

Well, by the formal severance of all ties

direct between the spot market and the market
In the long run, we will arrive at a solution for this one.
unexpected.

This break, by consolidating the real value of utres representing public and sincere participation

to a privately owned, industrial enterprise, 12.

478 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

commercial or otherwise, would facilitate in a mer-
night light the worker's access to capitalization
of his work, which is the hope of his old age.

Accumulating work during the validation period
dité, to extend it through a more lucrative service, or to live off it during the period of his disability,
Such is, for the ant, as for man, the dream
honest and forward-thinking.

All workers have this dream constantly; one never allowed them to seriously realize it.

However, 11 is not just one of our societies of credit, industry, commerce, and even pure banking, if one can use this epi-thete to describe special finance, which does not have to his orders a considerable mass of those that we are agreed to call them proletarians, no doubt because their sole function is to proliferate... for their pa-trunks.

These companies distribute money or...
titles among certain writers, who became very biased since this shower of gold.

I wouldn't want to focus on current personalities,
but it is common knowledge that, under the monarch-
July shit, the process invented by Mr. Aguado, Marquis de Las Marismas, was in full bloom.

No one is unaware, for example, that Doctor Veron had demanded one hundred and sixty shares from Mr. de Rothschild

=}

of the northern railway shortly before the accident
Fampoux, who remained famous.

Mr. de Rothschild had the imprudence to reduce the
The figure was one hundred and twenty. But, immediately, Mimi thundered from higher than his councilor, so much so that The baron had to give in and dispatch the islands as quickly as possible.
forty actions that were missing from the roll call.

Nowadays the process has become much more refined and the financial men who hold a pen
they say very clearly that, as long as there are wolveslynxes, trimming their portion and their nails will be to do a pious work and that, moreover, their silence, as their eloquence would be uniformly suspected, so much has the practice become ingrained and so much the century has little faith in selflessness; that finally, to be
To be disinterested with Haute-Banaue would be to be its dupe.

So be it. But, on a different and more legitimate basis, in awaiting the reform of these strange customs, – another utopia – it would be opportune, profitable and more just, at the same time, to give manual laborers,

as with writers, a share of interest in the work commune.

In short, the workers are shareholders.

Instead of freeing up their contribution through work
Having accumulated previously, they are now being released and daily, through successive work, –

future accumulation as a result.

180 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

However, the salary is only a partial and poorly calculated discount.
Calculated.

Why not allocate to the workers, colla-workers, employees, etc., a number of actions whose dividends would be partly distributed accumulated as a retirement pension.

1. There is a calculation that is one of the most elementary and most fair.

It will be objected that several institutions have established participations. But these institutions proceed by delaying wage increases. They expect a Discount! They deduct from a fire deficiency.

Therefore, it is a reduction, not an advantage.

A dividend varies, it is true; but opening it contributes to this variation through its greater or smaller.

To interest him in the prosperity of the joint endeavor, show him his number, not arbitrarily fixed for Jui, but enlarged or diminished by his contribution and, in all cases, common to his bosses, as to For him, according to proportions easily established, it would be, at the same time, justice is satisfied and emulation is doubled.

And finally, I fully expect that no one will dare oppose me. here an alleged aggravation of social capital.

We all know how the capital of a public limited company or other.

See ie
37

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 181

And the worker's capital is just as respectable as that of the other participants.

The only difference between these capitals is that which separates a man made of a teenager.

Capital-money-is a tree laden with fruit; the Capital-labor is a tree still in bloom. Here is the fruit will return; there it will come. That's all.

And then, to all these disruptions of the balance of the an- In any case, we can add to this old routine. a weighting, that of insurance.

Deaths, mutations, disabilities, are not
than a game for insurance calculations.

But let's not dwell on it, because the subject is inexhaustible.
and we have accumulated enough uloptes.

There's more: we had announced a story of the past and now we are exceeding the limits of the future.

However, this makes sense: history is a cycle;
everything returns illuminated by a new light; therefore
It's perfectly natural to say to oneself: |

We come from there, that's good.

But now, where do we go?

here
4 ban
D bar
Who
|
? kt
v | el
?
5 A]
| 5
He
| | k

Yes, now, where are we going?
What feeling should be appealed to?
There is no selflessness; there is no ù
loyalty; there is no patriotism, |
Only one thing is eternal: the struggle of interests.

brulaux,... that is to say, the maneuvers of the haule
bank.

Under various names, it has traversed humanity since its highest origin. |

The first person concerned was, according to Genesis, |
Cain, freeing himself from Abel's competition. Seu-
Today, Cain is without remorse.

The golden calf, the money changers in the Temple, the pa-

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 183

Tricians of Rome, the raffines of Pericles: high bank.

Then, progressing in the security improvements—
Laires, feudalism, the clergy and the old papacy,
who made and unmade kings: high finance.

For their part, the people, a volcano that remains dormant,
threw a few flames here and there.

The first of the Christian era was Christ; the Second, Luther; third, Voltaire.

Then came the great eruption.

At that time, the old high bank, the clergy, collapses, having been stripped of its strength — that is to say of his assets, — but the modern bank takes the two, succeeds it and encompasses it.

With her, there was no more formalism: where the clergy se-
led or fanaticalized souls through the marvelous Divine, the modern bank buys and pays them with the positive human element.

Religion! Principles! Ridiculous words with which Among other terrible years, 1572 was bloodied.
1682, 1795 and 1852.

That is to say: The Saint Bartholomew's Day Massacre;

The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes:

The Red Terror;

The Green Terror;

In other words: the triumph of the dagger, of the saber, guillotine and lead bullets.

As the centuries pass, the more closely the dates are drawn together, what |"
is a threat.

However, history, in these periodic dates, tells us clearly reveals the eternal mode according to which ar-rounds off human evolution.

Let's take the two most symptomatic periods- |
ticks: |

4572? First revocation of democracy!

1793? Last abolition of feudalism.

Here and there, same process, same effects:

1572: Simulated conversions, ordered massacres,
confiscations carried out.

1793: Priests sworn in, massacres legalized, |
sequestrations carried out.

Only there, it was the king against the people: |
drying up of work, therefore irreparable ruin.

But here, it was the people against the kings: proserip- |
reduction of idleness and parasitism, therefore improvement possible ration.

But the aristocracy, defeated by the high bankers,
rejoined its ranks through alliances and made, from
then, common cause with it; also the revolutions |
have they since proceeded by wild leaps, suddenly burdened and still paralyzed by money.

Corruption, which had subdued the old resistances
tances, was applied to every prominent revolutionary.

|

\

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 185

From then on, any reform became utopian; any debasement-

It was over!

O Paul-Louis Courier, our master! you who have writing :

"France is a nation of servants."

What would you say today?

What would you answer to someone who asked you: Where are we going?
We ?

We were criticized, you know, for having done a revolution under enemy fire.
So what is this revolution, you might ask, since

| High finance is still so dominant, so vibrant, so
'It's enormous that she has killed Turkey, that she is in the process of

to slaughter Egypt, and that we ourselves, France,
Are we still bleeding from the after-effects?
Almighty gods! Who will tear down the Republic?

to the deadly embraces of these vampires?

13

VI LL

CONCLUSION OF 1887.

The gods turned a deaf ear, no one came to |;
to wrest the Republic from the vampires, and those have continued their deadly embraces.

Nothing! Nothing! Nothing! Such is the result of dixsenll years of suffering.

Thus, all revolutions have been useless!

When will we realize that something | always survived after them and always repaired
the following ones.

When will we understand that Monarchy, Empire|
or Republic, are simply different names covering the same accumulation system parasites, making up a quarter of France (the only IQ

|

|

_ substance and the work of others,

3

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 187

possesses) a coalition of cannibals, living, following before Toussenel's energetic expression, "of the
that is to say, of.
blood and the life of the three who do not possess
nothing (1). |

Do you want proof of what I'm saying? Do you want to be certain that political forms are nothing and
Are economic forms everything?

Please examine carefully the three following graphs.

They summarize, stopping the text with lines,

through a drawing, through a silhouette, the march of needs met and consumption deficits
under three governments: the Orleanist Monarchy, the Empire, the Republic, which I call Orleanist to because of its constitution, which is absolutely modeled on the Louis-Philippe's system.

They are calculated scientifically, based on data not arbitrary, but verified and official; they are structured. by a general law that I believe I have

The first one formulated, here it is:

lico-economic, when, IN RELATION TO NEEDS

(1) We can ascertain this by examining the final budgets of finances over a period of fifty years, that one hundred deaths annuals never open, and on average, more than twenty-five subscriptions transfers:

1

4188 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

social, the line of the nericirs and that of the sarisracrions have a movement such that they tend to meet at * at a given moment, that moment is also the moment when, more or less violently, the governing bodies mental processes are destroyed and where a commentary manifests itself

social liquidation process, more or less generally read.

(satisfied care or consumed products) and those marked D (consumption deficit).

Whenever the two lines tend to be visible! to meet, we read opposite the dates 1848-1850, 1870-1874, that is to say those where history places the violent upheavals that shook France.

The graph of the current Republic stops at 4885; but if we extend the dotted lines and we | will see that the summit is located where it will be | marked the year 1888 (1). |

*

(A) As early as 1885, in the second volume of my Kings of the Republic, I had announced this result; I had obtained it by a formula ge-general, which I had called the formula of catastrophes. The reader who will want to study in all their technical details and the formula and the calculations used to draw up the graph, are asked to Please refer to the work indicated above.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS,

Orleanist monarchy.

YEARS :: SCALE %

B

Re 882% 18.4%:

Puanene No. 1. ONLEANIST MONARCHY

189

490 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Second Empire.

YEARS | SCALE

End 4851 © 5

40-45%

its number

Re En

us V

55

_56

AND,

_58

_59

22.61% 23.22%
+ Plank No. 2. Second Empire

191

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

LS

Current Republic (Orleanist system).

LADDER %

79 _ 80
_81
_ 82 83 = Los
2 EE RES BU CON HUE

End of 14885

4584% 2%
PLATE NO. 3, CURRENT REPUBLIC (ORLEANIST SYSTEM)

Thus, every eighteen years it must be started again.
From 1830 to 1848, 18 years old.

From 1852 to 1870, 18 years old.

From 1870 to 1888: 18 years!

409 THE HIGH PANQUE AND THE EVOLUTIONS.

It took four years of bloody liquidation between 1848 and 1852.

because the liquidation was twofold, being accomplished

almost simultaneously outside and inside laughing.

#

And now the dreaded deadline is approaching.
new.

So I am right to say that nothing has been exchange.

Will the government of the commune be cited for me?

But this government, paralyzed by the presence of Prussians not only on French territory,
but even around Paris, all he could do was struggle.
impossible; I would add, however, that even tree of its movements, 1} would have, for lack of studies, due to a lack of overall planning, a lack of scientific plans, simply restarted the sterile discussions of 1848
And this is all the more important since we are still at this stage.
at the time I am writing these lines.

As for the government of 1872-75, it was more Still ignorant, and above all, even more guilty.

Perhaps, in 1876, one could hope that, seeing
The abyss, he would change his system; today it's the same.
There is no longer any hope!

It's very late! Even wanting to repent; perhaps-
Would he no longer have the time?

EE in

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 193

mm

Capitalist markups have been even more _ overwhelming than those of the Empire.

In sixteen years, he loaded 193 BILLION islands with ca-French hospitals! He had received them from the Empire at a figure of 122 billion: in 1885, 1l brought them to 245 billion.

He has accumulated all the previous forms of corruption.

To the Orléans' peace at any price, he added the Bonapartist expansions, but unable to wage war continental, he attempted colonial conquest.

Nothing has mitigated the original flaws of the Constitution. |
tuition. |

So what does he have left?

A liquidation, probably a bloody one!

How could one not reach this conclusion after
to bring together the facts of which this story is | Full?

After observing the perpetual march
The rising burdens that crush citizens?

After noting the debasement of the characters, tou-days aggravated by the depressing influence of the high bank, perpetually revolutionary, to its only Profit, against the people and against humankind
all of it?

Finally, having shown in my other works
all the members of this same high bank implacable enemies of truth, of justice, of all that 143,

494 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

who is pure and honest, taking off all the masks

Doctrinal: economic and political; religious:
Jews and Christians, what could I say about
more ?

The next revolution must be to annihilate all of this which gives strength to these appalling worshippers of Moloch-Baal of the Jews.

DER, ARR Pl | WHEEL, +

DOCUMENTS

THE CLAIM AGAINST ENGLAND.

We know that the Chamber of Deputies voted on the consideration of a proposal tending to to obtain from the English government the restitution of the unused balance of a 6 million guarantee fund and a half francs in annuities of 5%, paid accordingly in accordance with the stipulations of international treaties.

Many people were surprised by this that the liquidation of this guarantee fund being terminated since 1826, and the English government having solemnly acknowledged that he still had a sum considerable amount of available annuities left in deposit in Rothschild's hands, never again the government The Frenchman did not receive this surplus.

496 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

All astonishment will cease when we know the The following facts:

First, let us clarify that the English in question... knows how to compensate for confiscations suffered in 1792 were to be registered nominally as rentiers in chapter 5 p. 100.

Consequently, the treaties had formally prohibited to the commissioners to sell the annuity registrations forming the guarantee fund.

However, the English commissioners, tempted by speculation lation, – because the 5% annuity which had been made 33 francs at the time of the handover of the fund of guarantee arrived at the rate of 106 francs, which she harnessed – towards the end of 1823, – had sold the ins– confessing their fraud, they had presented in 1826 a complex erected as if the annuities had never sold.

These frauds were committed with the assistance of of the Rothschilds of that time, and he being a friend of Orléans, we'll see how we managed to prevent any control by independent French people. Firstly, the final account of 1826 was not printed and published only in 1831; however, precisely in In April 1831, Louis-Philippe issued the famous ordinance-nance authorizing the owners of nominal annuities-dives to demand their conversion into bearer annuities.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 197

In this way, all traces disappeared and Roths-child, like the English, was beyond control.

Louis-Philippe owed that much to Rothschild, and Here's why:

Among the English subjects whose name reappears the more often in liquidation accounts and for enormous sums of money, including a certain Boyd, banker-quier in Paris in 1792.

However, this stems from a letter written by Louis-Philippe. to Mr. d'Ivernais on January 27, 1794, that the same Boyd had concealed it on behalf of Philippe- He valued some sixty million that he stole thus to its creditors.

Louis-Philippe adding that he had proof of the depot, 1 liter, there is no doubt that it has entered the millions from his father.

Nevertheless, when, in 1825, Rothschild issued the the famous billion-franc loan for emigrants, Louis-Philippe was listed there for 14 million, which allowed him to more easily seize power in 1830. Thus The Orléans family were able to get paid several times the the same quantity of millions in various forms.

It is therefore understandable how much Louis-Philippe

must have been willing to confuse anything that could to allow control over the use of the fund's annuities of guarantee that Rothschild had manipulated during nearly ten years.

It is also understood that, throughout his During his reign, he made no demands on the English; this is understandable. Finally, given that the Rothschilds were all-powerful in London as in Paris, no more Gladstone, than Rouher, than Decazes, did not let the truth come out.

Having explained this, here is the report which was questioned... tion during this present volume.

REASONED STATE

SOME OF THE HIDDEN EMBEZZLEMENTS
IN THE ACCOUNTS
FROM MAY 1894 AND JULY 1896
PRESENTED TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS IN 1831.

Convention No. 7.
November 30, 1815 – April 25, 1818.

$4. – General, concealed violations of conventions
in the final account of 1826–1831.

When, in 1818, the settlement of claims under convention no. 7 passed from the hands of the com-
a joint mission in the hands of the British commission

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 199

Nothing had been changed in the liquidation procedure of the claim.

Article 5 of the 1818 convention expressly statedsement: |

"The liquidation and distribution of funds will have place according to the principles contained in the stiputhe agreements of May 30, 1814 and of the convention of November 20 November 1815.

This article has been violated and its violation has been concealed.

But let's say it right away:

It is less in the judgments rendered by the liquidators than in the payments made by the commissioners of the depot where the embezzlements reside and the violations to be reported.

The stipulations of the treaty of May 30, 1814, have as their purpose object :

England's renunciation of the entirety of the surplus related to the maintenance of prisoners of war.

In exchange:
of the full compensation of British subjects including the property, movable or immovable, had been seized very much in 1792.

This clause was violated and its violation was concealed.

The stipulations of the convention of 20 no-
The purpose of the events of November 1815 was:

To clearly designate the nature of the claims to be ad-submit for reimbursement;

200 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

To carefully adjust the payment method by annuities 5%;

To indicate how to accumulate and compose the arrears of these annuities in favor of the creditors recognized;

To formally prohibit any sale or negotiation annuity registrations, including those of the commissioners were seized as mere custodians.

This series of clauses has all been violated and their concealed violations.

The 1818 convention further stated, in article 6:

"The debts already settled and on which he One-fifth remains to be paid and will be settled. to the deadlines that had been previously set.

This express clause was also violated and its violation concealed lation. ;

However, what makes all these violations even worse is that at the same time they were carefully dissimulated in parliaments using writing artifices, they were also accompanied by detours-actions having a particularly unavowable purpose.

The very care that was taken to hide some and the others is a decisive argument against the theory of those who claimed, despite formal texts, that the 1818 convention excludes any subsequent claim.

Indeed :

|

THE ITALY, THE BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 201

If the liquidators had been in charge of acting at at their leisure, they would have: .

4° Ostensibly sold the annuities by converting them then weaving into chessboard bonds.

(And they could have done it all the more ostentatiously-clearly that the status of Georges II, 59th year, the formally authorized it.

= 9° Ostensibly paid the compensation recipients in cash

or in Exchequer bonds.

After that, to obtain a discharge from Ls management, the same liquidators would only have needed to to present two accounts to the House of Commons:

4. An account detailing the sales of registrations annuities with the result of the monetary realization, or of the conversion into Exchequer bonds;

2. An account detailing the distribution of these sums or of those vouchers thus obtained.

Was it that way?

Not at all.

On the contrary, on several occasions, and especially in
In 1821 and 1826, proposals were presented to the Parliaments accounts drawn up as if the agreements had _ were respected in all their parts and, finally,
showing a very small surplus than we have
They didn't even consider offering it to the French Treasury.

This oversight is not without reason, and especially without serious grounds for the honor of the liquidators.

202 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Any offer to settle accounts with France
would have been accompanied by a check of it, no
out of distrust, but also out of delicacy.

However, this control would inevitably have led to the discovery
green of the embezzlements committed.

Exposing oneself to such an adventure was impossible,
especially at the time when a palace had been allocated royal over 6,000,000 francs and where the claims men, poorly paid, themselves carried out against the liquidators, the most violent accusations.

No thought was given to checking the complaints.
but they tried to stifle them, by distributing to more irritated a portion of the admitted excess, which belongs by right to France.

However, even with this distribution, the re-

the claimants had received only a portion of what their was regularly due, according to the stipulations of the Convention No. 7.

The rest had disappeared, as we shall see.
to demonstrate, and this remainder would have sufficed not only to

to pay all admitted creditors in full, but also to return to France an infinitely super-prior to the one that had been announced before this distribution supreme goal, of grace and favor, like the pompously describe the minutes of the lords of the

But you would have to be quite inexperienced not to

ETS

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 203

not to conclude that after violent accusations formules against a financial administration, the graces and the favors of these are never a charilé, but a fransaction.

$2 – This inspired and encouraged the first diversions.

It can be admitted that the first diversions were not premeditated and, although the status of Georges JIT seems to authorize them, but we must consider that this status also targeted other conventions where the

Sales of inscriptions were essential to the liquidation

donation, because it was possible that the distribution to Marc the franc allocated to a claimant 60 centimes of rent, which was unacceptable.

Consequently, for us, it was not the statut of George III who first inspired the decisions turns (because they were only used later) to authorize transfers via special loans cified, and not by definitive allocations), but the occasiono, which was tempting, as we will see see.

Before going any further, let us declare that we donno, the name of the diversions to acts intended to to make sums of money disappear permanently, by falsifying the accounts, and not through loans

204 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

same accounts.

That said, here is the occasion on which the first diversions.

The annuities provided by France, as funds principal, represented for the claimants a capitalization specified by the treaties at 76.65 francs for 5 francs in annuities.

On the other hand, the way we had settled the composition and accumulation of arrears of these annuities assigned them a variable capitalization, but indicated by the semi-annual purchases to which the Jiqui-daters were to dedicate the semesters of the enrollments in storage.

These capitalizations varied between 57.60 francs and 67.76 francs, as evidenced by the annuity rates purchased in Paris from 1816 to 1818 and worn at the sla-

ment of cash (statement B, account of May 31, 1821).

As long as public funds remained below

of these various capitalizations, there was no-a lucrative operation to sell the inscriptions in deposit.

But from the day these same public funds begin-they are following an upward path, the reclaim-liquidated men to whom annuities would have been issued could, by bringing them to market, achieve a significant benefit.

a EN

- HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 205

It was then that the idea came to the liquidators to to replace annuity holders.

This was done, little by little, after some initial hesitation.

cuts in the liquidation from 1818 to 1821.

Initially, only the accumulation annuities were used, which offered sufficient enticement; later, the annuities The main ones also became lucrative, the rent 5% having exceeded the market price conventional of 76 fr. 65.

To fully understand our statement, one must souvenir: |

At the time the 1815 convention was signed, the annuity 5 p. 100 cost 53 fr. 30;

_ That at the time the convention of April 25, 1818, the annuity 5 p. 100 cost 68 fr. 30;

At the time the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapel, October 40, 1818, the annuity, driven by the speculation, which, anticipating all events, had thus anticipated the evacuation of the territory, arrived next to it, in August 1818, 80 francs.

This course, completely out of proportion with the situation-market activity triggered a flurry of sales; to a general crushing and the beginning of a genuine financial crisis.

Another maneuver made this crisis more serious. 'again.'

206 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

A Dutchman named Beerenbrock had imagined to establish with several banking houses in Paris a circulation against deposits of annuities and ordon-liquidation finances, by taking acceptances.

However, his effects, presented to the Bank, had been expected; hence a further scarcity of the digital raire.

The result of these various operations was to precisely to reduce the annuity of 80 francs, August 1818 rate, to 60 francs lecture of December 1818.

It was a complete disaster.

Count Corvetto, Minister of Finance of without us needing to study the means here that he employed, we must limit ourselves to noting that the extreme consequences of the crisis could be avoided and that, from May 19, 1849, the time when The status of George II was restored, the annuity was raised to 74.50 francs.

In September of the same year, she supported easily at 73 francs.

Finally, on May 31, 1821 – the date on which it was stopped the first accounts presented to the parliaments an-

In Glaus, the rent had exceeded 85 francs 50, so that in In August it was found at 88.60 francs.

Later, she surpassed her peer.

These various twists and turns in the fund market

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 207

public authorities, encouraging speculation, tempted the clerks-saires du dépôt des annuités.

And we do not want to examine here whether they acted for their own account or for that of the Exchequer.

In any case, it was in these circumstances that he We need to find the origin of the embezzlements committed and their influence, fatal to French interests, on the final result of the liquidation.

$3. – First embezzlement: 533,900 fr.

On April 95, 1818, it remained to deliver to the claimants liquidated assets in Paris, by the joint commission, a number of cuts from the fifth, of the total warned.

These fifth cuts, which the 1818 convention had declared that they should be delivered in pre-existing times

previously established by the 1815 convention and on the sole authorization of the British commissioners, amounted, in accordance with the Statement of rent in deposit (state A), at 654,720 francs. They belonged to the claimants, but the regular periods of deliverance They left them in storage in considerable portions. until September 1819.

Therefore, in August 1818, one could, consequently of their quarterly registration with the Treasury, to have delivered a significant portion.

208 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

EEE.

And, indeed, in September 1818, the state of Sus-men-Onné reveals to us that it had been registered with the Treasury 494,999 francs of annuities from this source.

It should be noted that the claimants do not become-were masters of their inscription only after this deliverance, that it was only at that moment that they could carry them to the market.

However, it was at this very moment that the liquidators to replace the claimants and read in their place the benefit that the then gave high price of 5%, without the Government French people could find out if the sale came from the owner originating from the registration or from a holder eventually.

But in order to be able to replace the claimants and to become masters of their inscriptions, it was necessary to find a way to pay them.

However, on the one hand, we couldn't offer them simply to buy their annuities; the simplest-

They would have sensed the trap island and, before accepting,

would have consulted the public funds market.

On the other hand, directly engaging in an im-

public, and we were still too close to liquidations Made in Paris.

Here is the method that was devised:

The practice of issuing medication by cuttings was abolished, by

7 ns –

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 209

Consequently, the waiting times, and we paid directly
ment ex money capital and interest. |

By acting in this way, that is, by paying the capital which was to be paid in annuities, immediately in With money, one acquired, in a way, the right not to
to calculate the compound interest on this capital only at par (i.e., 2.5% per semester), since 1816 until-than on the day of payment.

However, given the lack of market stability, it was necessary act with a certain degree of caution.

After selling the 2n deposit annuities (allocated)
At 80 francs, the August 1818 exchange rate, it was possible to pay the reclamations
as entries are made to the Treasury, by capitalizing their principal annuities, as well as their accumulation at 76.65 francs.

But, by December 1818, the crisis was in its acute period, and, the annuity having fallen to 60 francs, we took advantage of this circumstance to redeem, to the claimants registered during this period, their annuities at 4 or 5 francs.
above that price, even though they had been sold at 80 francs; this bomification was even given as a grace.

And, continuing this process until September 1819, the time when the last one was supposed to be delivered fifth, it was possible to constantly buy back below
of 72 fr. annuities previously sold at 80 francs.

This series of operations placed in the hands of

20 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

ee —...

î

HAS

ministers a surplus of 533,900 francs in silver, without which is perfectly explainable by the calculation su- {}

before: | donation

416,798 francs of annuities paid in capital at 76.60 francs!

They have 45 2nd of nn ue of 6,589,515! 94 el

Compound interest for qualre se- | |

mestres at 2 4/2 p. 400 est 665,514 17 of the

ea ao Al

Total to pay... 7,052,827! 11

The sale at 78.40 francs (average price) of the inserip-

Main items: 416,798 francs in annuities, produced a

x

Fr

(9

ol

tp

capital. . +. + 6,510,384 T6

The sale at the same price of;

68,771 francs of annuities which represent- \

these rents are accumulated

following purchases in Paris, during |

HS nos ll

Total obtained... 7,584,581 EAN

If, from this sum, we deduct- 4

"Let's make the payments... + "+ + ' 1,052,827 A |!"

you

the period 1816 to 1818, produced. . 1,074,903f 0 |
|

the remaining profit will be €534,760.68

which are very close to the 533,900 francs mentioned above.
The ease with which the commissioners swallowed
This initial diversion led them to expand |
their procedure for all future liquidations.
It was only much later, when the renk |
had surpassed parity, that amidst inctf complaints,

|

pi

»

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 241

health and to obey the silence, the commissioners

"returned to the claimants liquidated in Paris the sums

which they had frustrated them.

We also see the following listed in the March 1828 schedule:

* this restitution worded as follows:

1

"Applied in payment to the several persons whose claims were liquidated at Paris for the difference of the rate at which they had received their portions of French stock and the rate at which they were entitled

-to be paid, under the conventions. . . 21,356 &.

or in francs. 938,900f.

But, when preparations were made to subdue the same

'account to the finance committee of the House of municipalities,

This restitution was made to disappear.

Therefore, we no longer see it featured in the

"account of June 19, 1828, which reproduces that of the March 19th preceding, by completing it, and to which it was

Lord Lyndhurst alluded to this in a speech on August 4th 1853, presenting it as undisputed, having elected approved by the general attorney.

- This first diversion is therefore unknown to English ministers, because, as early as 1821, it was absolutely concealed, since, in the account drawn up for this at the time, the liquidation portion that had been carried out Paris and entrusted, for the delivery of 'fifths', to only English commissioners, after April 25, 1818

219 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

E -

is given as having complied with the provisions of | [ two conventions, that is to say, as having delivered, to the \ nn
predetermined periods and in annuities, the cuts | 3
allocated to recognized compensation recipients based in Paris. | jn
That's absolutely false. +

| pi

S 4 - Second embezzlements: 5,245,117 fr. 40 c. | «
| | (

In the period between September 1810 and

They consist of:

of a much greater importance.

4° of 0,251,498 » or 9,971 £ 10th 5d allocated to Canova
for transport of statues
_ Paris to Rome;

9 of 1,513,218 » or 60,000 » » Payment to the East India Company;

3° of 3,480,401 40 or 138,000 >» » Excess expenditure |
during the credit

allocated by -the | Chamber of:

commons for |

U
he
has 8

d

k

they crown him-

Geor-

Age IV.

Early. 5,245,117f 40 or £207,971 10:54 a.m.

E -_, —. mm

goose

FREIGHT

These various sums were taken from the semi-annual annuities, not yet allocated, but which, according to the conventions, were to be used to purchases of semi-annual annuities.

This is how the greatest disappeared part of the semesters of September 1818, March 1819, and September 1819, rising together (after deduction of payments essential to the functioning of the liquidation) at 5,398,757 francs, as can be seen from the statement B. of cash (account of May 31, 1821).

However, having given to the previously mentioned semesters a destination outside the convention, it is obvious that they could not be used to purchase annuities.

However, in 1821, it was necessary to include these purchases as having been made regularly; and, Indeed, a [entry] was recorded on the date of March 1819.

"purchase of 457,043 francs of annuities which would have cost

5,988,916 francs 93, at a rate of 61 francs 76, as he appert du même statement of cash.

However, this purchase is fraudulent and was recorded after the fact, just to conceal the disappearance of the aforementioned sums against detailed, amounting to 5,245,117 fr. 40.

And it's not even recorded properly, then—that it is placed at a date six months in advance of the one to which, regularly, there would have been possible to have sufficient funds in the till to cover it, In accordance with the annuities in deposit.

14,

Mrs. VE

— — — —

The course itself, which one is supposed to have buying these annuities at 61.76 francs is fanciful, because that, since December 1818, the annuity has been held at-above 65 francs, and that, notwithstanding, the purchase is ins-written March 1819.

Finally, it is presented as a whole, as a summary

three semesters, and yet, in a single slip,

whose number, No. 18, is also the one that contains the more detailed purchases of March and September 1820.

The same slip therefore contained the large purchase of March 4819, and the less important ones of March and September 1820. (Previously and subsequently,
Each purchase of annuities is documented in a statement.
(special.) |

But, after having thus registered these 437,042 francs of
For annuities, proof of their existence had to be provided.

Where did they get them from?

They were taken from the claimants, by way of bailiffs.
disguised as payment (as we had (made in 1818), and to the guarantee fund, by exaggerating
the awards seemingly paid to the rights holders.

We will prove the accuracy of these two afhrmations.

To make our demonstration clear,
We need to remember:

1° That the capitalized annuities at 76.65 francs correspond-corresponding to an income of 6.52 percent;

!

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 215

2° That the accumulations composed of these rents, at the various rates of semi-annual purchases, emerge as 3.5% and 4.5% per semester, for the period 1816 to 1820.

Therefore:

The final annuity granted to the creditor and created for him at the time of the liquidation represented a average income of 10% of the initial capital.

Now (and this is the case here to develop what we (as we said regarding the previous diversion), if, instead of paying the capital as an annuity, one pays it in metallic species, one acquires a kind of right to calculate only the compound interest on this capital and to even of the nominal value of the expected annuity, i.e. 5% per annum or 2.5% per semester since 1816.

By this method, the above 40% income specified is reduced to 3% on average.

And the difference represents the profit made.

A very large number of claimants owed, at the pre-First of all, eagerly welcome this mode of payment, without understanding its implications, since, as we have said, those very people who had been Those liquidated in Paris had accepted it at the first moment.

For them, in fact, it had several advantages:

First, they no longer waited for fifteen months (as a result of the quarterly issuance in installments) of the fifth) the full payment of their award.

216 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Then, they immediately took possession relatively large sums, long awaited—due, which appeared to them as compensation false, moreover, as we will prove), we give them differed by 45 percent of the total award, as follows expressly from the same account of 1821, page 41.

Finally, it spared them the inconvenience and expense of a transfer if they wanted to achieve their title, because, at this At that time, bearer annuities were not yet created (they were only created in 1831).

This represents a large number of claims settled by March 22nd 1821, in capital values (it is only as well as the liquidators published their figures in the Ga- (zette of London) and raising, according to judgments returned, to. . «+ . . 518,215 fr. capital values.

At the treaty rate, this capital, converted into annuities, would have become: 33,804 francs in annuities.

The accumulators |
regular lations-
res by way of acats semes-
triels, from 1816
in 1821 (March), increasing

this annuity of 43,859 francs (enjoyment March 1821).

Toraz.. . . 47,663 fr. annuities (enjoyment March 1821).

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 217

This total of annuities sold to The course of March 4821 gave in capital value 817,897fr. val.cap.

How was it paid for?

First, we paid the capital-tal above 518,915 - -
in silver.

Then, in money too, the interest composed of this capital during 10 semesters (1816 to 1821), at 2.5% per semester, or 145.144 - -

Toraz. 663,359 francs. val. cap.
Profit obtained on the realization-

Tora eGas. . . 817,897 francs. val. cap.

This example is not hypothetical; it is real.
a liquidation carried out between March and May 1821, but,
instead of sincere and regular accumulations calculated that we took, i.e. 13,859 francs.
annuities for the entire period of 1816–1821, the English account records 17,819 francs of annuities for the period alone from 1818 to 1821, that is to say for six semesters out of ten.

This is what we will demonstrate, thus justifying

our assertion, that:

RS

7

220 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

It is not surprising that, this process being extended to the entire liquidation of this period, we have could, from 1820 onwards, include 437,042 francs as purchased.
of annuities, drawn, in reality, from the funds
of annuities held in security deposit and partially deducted to the claimants.

And, indeed, if, of the grand total as of May 31, 1891,
we extract sums where they are confused—
due:

1° The arrears of life annuities con-
green. .« « + 25,067 in annuities.

2° Annuities of no kind 1816–1818 taken from the fund |
warranty. 08,494 –

3° The total of the annuities of accu-accused mulation in the column |
delivered for award. 350,977 –

We will obtain... 434,495

However, this total differs very little from the figure purchases whose falsity we have established above (437,049 fr.).

Moreover, this difference stems from the fact that we have neglected the reuse of metallic profits, opposite explained, and which, in part, was largely sufficient to make it disappear.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 291

It is by operating in this way that the commissioners of deposits could be registered in deposit in state A, under the dated September 9, 1820, a purchase of annuities

1 SQUARE "+ + + + + 207,189" of annuities.
While in state B, of cash

and on the same date, does not appear

than a purchase of... ! + 110,582 –
This was also how they were able to register on March 22nd

1821, in deposit in state A, by purchase route... ++ + + + 431,484f of annuities.

While the state B of cash

only justifies an actual purchase of 91,249 –
The concordance between the deposits of state A and the purchases by state B are only made after the latter registration; then only, also, the number of the slip succeeding the one that conceals these serious falsifications (no. 18) follow the numerical order (no. 19), This was practiced before that disastrous period.

All the losses caused by these processes plus strange things were suffered by the claimants, PART by the French Treasury.

But when we draw up contradictory the Account of amounts payable today to this last– To deny it, we will not seek the benefits made to Claimants' prejudice.

We will leave them to England, to make them such use that his conscience dictates.

15

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

998 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

4815, confirmed by Article 5 of the Convention of April 25, 1818.)

For what purpose did the English hydrators ef-Done?

Precisely to avoid this registration

special, which had the effect of stopping, at the death of the rentier, the rent service and, in addition, the rendered unsaleable by the commissioners at the location and position of the holder.

Already in 4824, a name had been recognized as founded-number of claims of this kind amounting to 427,000 francs in life annuities (it's still 427 or 437 which are found in ultra-combinations whimsical commissioners of the depot, peculiarity It's curious when you consider the alleged purchase of annuities. which we have been talking about).

However, this number was too large to have been born neglected.

But by carrying out a conversion of this kind, It was necessary to appear as if a reduction in the annuity was being carried out. A life annuity, because it will not be understood that an annuity temporary becoming here born could be encrypted The same way.

However, the method used succeeded in revealing a reduction in the expenses of the guarantee fund,

while in reality at ROGUE and Voici Comment:

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 299

First, after converting, according to a mode
The main life annuity is highly questionable; it is increased...
menta of the arrears accumulated after 1816 and after 1818, by wrongly counting these arrears against the fund of principal annuities, while they were supposed to be pre-raised on purchases of semi-annual annuities.

Then, we had taken as the basis for this conversation-
sion, not the actual prices, but the prices conventional of the 1815 treaty, which was still a premeditated exaggeration.

Logically and rationally:

The conversion of a life annuity into a perpetual annuity

Which one is:

The current discount on a mass of arrears of the

imitable rent,

Calculated based on the probable number of years that don-provide the rentier with survival tables at the time of the Conversion,

And paid in annuities during the time of the con-aforementioned version (average price between the even and the average of the day).

By applying these rules, we found some results infinitely below those accused by English accounts.

For example, where (according to slip D, account
(from 1821, page 56) they attributed to Mr. John Banna-Lyne (No. 23 of the register, January 20, 1821) an annuity

930 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

total of 4,716 francs in perpetual annuities (being the award 100 percent), we would have rationally attributed and mathematically, 2,622 francs of perpetual annuity (also 100% of the award).

How can we explain that an initial life annuity of 4,740 fr. 72 can become a perpetual annuity: 4,716 fr. annuity (24 francs reduction).

However, we must specify that, in our figure, we have understood all the accumulations of 1816 at 1820, at the actual rate yielded by the purchase of annuities, which is superior to that practiced by the English.

Here, moreover, is the complete comparison of the two conversions:

Initial annuity: 4,740 francs 72; life annuity:

English conversion: Rational conversion:

Conversion of principal capital, | Conversion of the same capital above assessed (slip D, page 56) versus assessed 52,143 fr,

at 52,143 francs... 3,402 francs, price reduced, but discount deducted.
Arrears accumulated at its 4,963! rte plaice
from 1816 to 1820 1,314 – accumulated arrears
| – ! less from 1816 to 1820 4,659
Total..... 4,716 rte plie Total..... 8,622frtepli

Difference: 1,094 francs of perpetual annuity.

The accumulated arrears according to the English calculation are at 6.52% (or: capital 76 fr. 65).

The accumulated arrears, according to our calculation, ra-uonnel are at approximately 7 p. 400 (80 francs); as for

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 331

the principal annuity, it is converted at par and market rate

future of the initial life annuity.

By performing the same calculations on all annuities. converted life annuities, we will find, as we have found that this conversion has, excessively and without avowable reason, absorbed into the principal annuity fund principal sums that should have been used to pay the claimants regularly and, ultimately, to constitute, in favor of France, the true excess—a tooth that was coming back to him.

But the opposite theory inspired the conduct of liquidators, because the more annuities they could allocate at lower prices, the more they could then realize—to realize a profit by bringing them to market at Advanced courses.

It was between August 1820 and January 1821 that converted most of these life annuities.

They represented an arbitrary capitalization at 86.65 francs.

However, in August 1820, the 5 p. 100 was valued at 79 fr. 10.

In December 1820, the 5 p. 100 cost 79 fr. 40.

In January 1821, the 5 p. 100 was valued at 82 fr. 45.

It is obvious that the French government cannot to admit this conversion which makes him pay perpetual—element of life annuities that have been deceptively modified for the occasion.

939 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

S'7. — Third group of diversions:
34,295,050 fr.

We now come to the diversions more important.

They belong to the period 1822–1896, that is—that is to say, the period preceding the closing of the liquidation and contains the death of the Duke of Riche—place, that of Louis XVII and that of the emperor of Russia.

cial drawn up on March 24, 1824 and dated April 4
Next.

Of course, they are completely hidden in the final account of 1826.

What is striking at first glance, in the sums
The enormous amount that could have been diverted is that they are almost equal to the total number of awards published in the London Gazette by the liquidators judges, for all the liquidation carried out in London under the agreement
tion no. 7. |

Indeed, this total was, in July 1826, at the time of Closure, after the judgment of twenty-eight appeals:

34,537,579 francs in capital, to be due since 1816 (this is the very mention they use)
the liquidators: "{o be due upon March 1816").

has

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 933

However, on May 51, 1821, the accepted values were in capital. «. . + + . +28,853,397f

Therefore, there was nothing left to satisfy all the awards that... 5,684,182
Total equals... 34,537,979

This proves that, virtually, as early as 18214, the
The liquidation was 9/10 complete.

It was a perfect opportunity, moreover, to continue the registration sales,

Because, in 1825, the 5% note was worth 104.86 francs and was heading towards 406 francs.

Here is a breakdown of the amounts mentioned at the beginning of the
this chapter:

1° To those receiving compensation for insufficient funds

war. . 1,269,071 £ 15h 9 1/2 or 51,726,775f

2° To Mr. La-debate, resti-

tulion de va-
their seizures. 99,331 45h 7 or 2,483,975f

3 AM.Mar- ;
T1 SEPARATE £3,400 » » ' or 85,000f
Totals: 1,571,802 g 6sh 4 1/2 or 34,295,050f

To fully understand the process used by the Commissioners to embezzle these sums and then,

93% HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

to conceal them, one must remember the situation in
May 1821.

We established above that Îles rentes ins-cries to the Treasury as being delivered to the claimants remained largely in the hands of liquidators, thanks to a payment method adopted by them. | |

Two results were thus obtained:

4° One could include, as originating from the reinvestment of semesters paid for by France, of annuities acquired in a completely different way;

2° We had possessed, since 1821, a stock of metal-considerable lique arising from the gap between the interest composed of 5% of the capital paid in cash and the in-accumulated and compounded interest on annuities, which derives-was at 10% of the original capital, apparently,
allocated or issued to the claimants.

We continued to proceed in the same way,
so that by the end of 1822 the stock comprised:

Besides metallic species,

And in addition to the annuities resumed after registration in Treasure: |

All 45% of the main award was post-nominated.
and the accumulations that belonged to him.

In order to avoid excessive overloading
this demonstration, already quite long, we do not
We will not go into detail at this time about how we

|
|

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 935

we solved the rather complicated problem which we was imposed by the search for this stock in 1823
and 1824.

The states and the calculations that depend on them are such-extensively, they would absorb, on their own, a space as considerable as that occupied until now through our demonstrations.

But we are ready to give this demonstration in the most precise way in the presence of our opponents.

For now, then, let us summarize our work:

'At the beginning of 1823, the entire amount had been paid awards after submission and delivery. (that is to say 100%), by way of a disguised buyback at 76.65 francs on average, of listed annuities elsewhere 95 francs in average, also, on the market for public funds
Paris public institutions.

This operation had exhausted the first stock of metallic so as to reduce it to 24 18sh 104 (631 fr. 10),

as evidenced by the account of March 1828
under this heading:

Libra in the year 1828. . 24g 185h 10d,

As for the stock of annuities, it had followed a pro-constant progression (because it had also been possible to employ at purchases (part of the available semesters), if

although after having deposited with Rothschild, for the first time, in September 1822, a million of annuities (the Duke of Richelieu had just died, May 17) 1829), we still possessed 1,300,000 francs. of annuities (round figures).

In 1895, the same liquidation processes and interest payments made by Messrs. de Rothschild had added to this stock, -in annuities, 120,000 francs. (round figures) of new annuities.

Then, the 5% having exceeded 104 francs, it is judged It is opportune to ask the bankers for another 300,000 francs. of annuities, in March 1824, on the million deposited in 1822.

So, at the beginning of 1824, as a result of payments Once that was done, all that remained was to deliver the documents to the claimants. that 61,890 francs of principal annuities, including the twenty-eight appeals judged in 1896.

Consequently, we can say that the liquidation was truly over.

So we had:

Stock in 1823. 1,300,000f of annuities.
Compound interest paid by
MM. of Rothschild. 120,000 -

Main trans- annuities
then put in place by the same. 300,000 -

pd

Total (round figures): 1,720,000 francs in annuities.

CR

Sold at 104.80 francs, March 1824 exchange rate, these masses of registrations generated a capital of (figures) (rounds). + + + + + 86,000,000f

With which the sums were paid
as indicated above. 34,995,050

So I stayed. 1,704,950f
to deal with the 937,772 francs 70 that were liquidated
from 1824 to 1896.

This last sum, with compound interest (in accordance with the procedures adopted and above) explained) calculated semi-annually since 1816 (and (without taking into account intermediate deliveries)
until 1826, it required 1,537,004 francs 50.

So on the first balance... 1,794,950f
The price was 1,537,004.
And there remained, , 167,946

By paying the 937,773 francs in this way, one could con-to keep intact 111,289 francs of rents, which would have represented the regular payment and in accordance with the convention, in principal and in accumulations, of these 937,713 francs liquidated.

938. HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

These 111,289 francs of annuities, sold at 106 francs, realized-were still a capital of. . . . 9, ET) 327!
Which, with the above availability. 167,946 946

provided the necessary funds

loan granted at that time to the woods

HE LONÈLS 5 on 5 4th le re ds 9.5106.9701
For the palace of Ro (mid-

Notes from the Lords of the Treasury dated

However, in September 1826:

Behind these sums and the 700,000 francs of rents declared as excess, & there was a stock, in Exchequer bonds, which we will deal with later at the time when we will provide the complete statement of the English liquidation from 1893 to 1896 and of which what The preceding is only a brief summary.

For now, it suffices for us to have established and demonstrated with supporting figures:

That :

Using funds from the conventions of 1815 and 1818, it had been possible to divert and conceal without any thought of return, to the detriment of the French Treasury, as in that of the English subjects in this category:

1° Funds relating to the maintenance of prisons war militias, to which England had (or—renounced by the treaties of 1814 and 1815,

|
sure |
me

he
|

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 239

to obtain compensation relating to the sequestrations of 1792; | °

2° A large part of what was lacking for pay the claimants governed by Convention No. 13 and The additional article from the Bordeaux merchants:

3. The costs of the coronation of George IV:

4. Payment to the East India Company, plus—several other payments mentioned above.

And all of this:

Apart from other allowances or payments

would in no way find a place in a
an international account of such a solemn nature than this one.

Finally, what is important to clarify is that Lord Lyndhurst himself was unaware of this situation, when he delivered his speech of the month
August 1853.

Indeed, I detailed a large part of the employment irregularity of the excess admitted in July 1826, but He never suspected all that the account he was holding in his hand.

IT

CODIFICATION OF THE REFORMS.

Here are the three laws I mentioned during this work.

I warn that these laws are interdependent, that they apply
Taken in isolation, they would be more harmful than useful.
As for those who will study them, I say to them equally-
they must, above all, completely detach themselves
the old habits imposed on them by the organization
current system. This is not an easy matter and I

I know, from experience, that the faculty of abstraction requires a strong will.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 241

$ I. - PROPERTY REGIME.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 544 OF THE CIVIL CODE.

EXPOSED,

The relentless increase in the price of everything has been a concern all the reformers, without, until now, any of them has found a practical way to remedy it, unless resorting to a violent liquidation, similar to that of 1793, which believed it had found its way in the dispossession of the pro-old landowners in favor of a legion of new owners calves, and discover a formula in the descriptions relating at most, . |

For many years, what is called capital has ceased to be a means of measuring the source of products which serve periodically to satisfy the individual's needs. On the contrary, the product is artificially forced to mo- to live off the exaggeration of capital value. As for living off a Periodic income is now an insufficient method and Outdated. They prefer to inflate capital, manipulate it, and obtain... through speculation, variable resources that serve as income.

But, through these actions, it came to pass that the means food and shelter, these two essential needs of Life, are absolutely disproportionate to each other, and that if, On the surface, the price of food seems moderate, this Moderation is largely offset by the exorbitant price of accommodation.

949 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

However, these two needs have an impact on the preservation of human life. maine, a considerable influence, and, however, our constitutions Civil protections have placed the individual in this alternative or to reduce his food intake to pay for his housing, or to deprive him of housing if he wants to eat to his heart's content: free, of course- their, of not eating or limiting their food, he becomes a slave devoted to the maximum, as soon as he occupies the housing or that he works on the land provided to him by the owner to be silent. On this point, he is never in a position to reduce his con- a summons or a fee proportional to one's means. There is Therefore, there is an absolute urgency to restore the balance between these two situations.

No one can deny that land prices throughout France It has been subject to continuous price increases for the past 90 years. Its real estate capital, which was valued at 30 billion in 1790, has high, according to the capital of taxed inheritances, in 1882, the mentation is such that these must progress infinitely; so the moment is near when it will be impossible to satisfy to the income required by real estate capital, whether it is represented per hectare built or per hectare unbuilt. The capacity of The royalty per hectare of agricultural land has already exceeded its limits. And, as for the tenant's strengths, they are already well beyond... through means of obtaining the enjoyment of the built-up hectare,

A careful observation of the past clearly demonstrates that the development of real estate capital is parallel to that of revenue budgets. It is, so to speak, mathematically-proportionally. If, for example, we take as a point starting in 1826, the period at which, according to the inheritance records Taxed, France's real estate capital amounted to 26 million 4/2 liards; if we then take the ordinary receipts of the the same year, 933 million, and finally, if we consider the revenues ordinary ones from any other year (for example 1840), in simply reducing them by the rents created in the meantime and which make up the consolidated debt, we will obtain, by a simple

HAS

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 243

TR

The rule of three, the value of real estate capital in 1840: or, The the figure thus obtained will represent almost identically that That will have been calculated based on inheritances taxed for the same year, that is to say, using completely different data; operating during the period from 1870 to 1882, a period during which the real estate capital, calculated on inheritances, to having increased from 66 billion to 119.5 billion, we find, by the same system, that is to say by comparing budgets, the same increase and the same agreement between the capital values real estate values obtained through completely different calculations. At At first glance, it seems impossible to stop this series of unlimited surcharges, because it is authored every Friday the seller who is reimbursed by the buyer for the aforementioned taxes duly paid: so that the buyer of 1882 pays the land at the cadastral price of 1790, plus all the taxes that this land has Supported in the meantime, even more of a benefit for the last seller. This profit alone would further exaggerate the increases already observed, without the judicial sales, which make a kind of counterpart; but this counterpart, augmente-reducing budget revenues, loses some of its strength and leaves in place the simple proportion which was indicated above-qua. |

We need not look elsewhere for the causes of our crises, the causes that have paralyzed agriculture, causes of the exaggeration

Once the problem is known, it becomes possible to find a remedy.

It is certain that the French nation has been reduced to this alternative: or to declare bankruptcy and undergo liquidation by violence and perhaps by blood and fire; or by demanding—to estimate the value of His real estate capital, as if it were a simple public limited company, forced to reduce its capital in order to continue its operations and to derive some benefit from them. Sufficient means of subsistence.

The e-aging of real estate capital also has another. A serious inconsistency is that each new buyer, in awaiting resale, it demands a higher royalty on its capital raised, in order to legitimize the price he will demand; hence it follows that the country's metal circulation has become insufficient to satisfy the exchanges of each citizen ; the reason for this is Simply put: every property owner demands their rent in metal and nothing else; for its part, the State (abstraction aside) services, which are insignificant compared to the budget total) requires the tax in metal and not otherwise. In both In this case, no credit intervention is possible. In 1882, by For example, the royalty paid in metal to the tax and capital real estate amounted to more than ten billion; however, the total of coins minted and in circulation at the end of 1882 did not reach not 14 billion. The mass of the nation therefore had before it less than 4 billion to satisfy the demands of securities transactions annuals, which, for 1882, were calculated at over 37 million liards. The deficit is therefore enormous, because the exchange capacity of The unit of currency is as 1 is to 3, hence it follows that, for To cope with 37 billion exchanges, free movement was necessary. approximately 12 billion.

“

244 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

The crises, which are worsening every day, demonstrate that the cash is accumulated in a small number of hands, which it is rare for a large number of individuals, and is absolutely lacking lument to a number of others.

Liquidation is therefore necessary, and if we want to avoid it If it is to be done by violence, it must be done by peaceful means. facts available to legislators.

Since the problem stems from the constant price increases and the the frantic mobilization that took place on the ground, it is necessary to im-

the right to dispose of it, by amending Article 544 accordingly Civil Code.

Here, placed side by side, is the old editorial staff of Article 544 of the Civil Code and the proposed wording:

Lens fine LE nt
LL s, er

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 245

Drafting of the Civil Code. Proposed drafting.

Art. 544. – Property is Art. 544, – Property is right to enjoy and dispose of | the right to enjoy French soil,

things in the most ab- | to enjoy and dispose of solue, provided that it is not made into | mobile or fungible things, in
not a use prohibited by the | complying with the laws.
laws or regulations.

“We can see immediately, from the difference between the two texts, that
The former division into real estate and personal property will be modified: that the land alone will be immovable, only the buildings will become furniture and finally that land ownership will simply be a usufruct, which will retain all its means of transfer and transmission, without the ground being counted as having a capital value tale.

This devaluation of France's real estate capital, being common to all citizens and to all landed property, do not find-will in no way affect the acquired situations, for the reason that lowering

A level across an entire surface does not destroy the equilibrium of.

this surface. We will enjoy the soil for its natural or artificial fruits.
skies, the constructions being considered as artificial fruits, we will be free to dispose of it as in the past, the fruit being anything movable and fungible, as well as any work of the hands of man. The mortgage system will, it is true, undergo some modifications, but, as it is entirely based on rede.
periodic changes and as production will be favored by the under the new system, the mortgage lender will only receive more regularly its interest and amortization.

It now remains to guarantee French citizens the enjoyment of land tenure. To this end, the old property titles senation conventionally taken as collective sovereign of French soil. The duration of each long-term lease would be of twenty-five years, this duration having no other purpose than to ensure to the usufructuary that, during this period, the tax he will owe

16

218 THE ITAUTE RANQUE AND THE REVOLUTIONS.

S I. – TAX BASE AND BUDGET CLEARANCE.

EXPOSED.

There seems to be general agreement on the necessity of... to eliminate indirect taxes, to base them more evenly, and, Consequently, more equitably, the basis for annual contributions—elements necessary for the nation's expenses: to eliminate all monopolistic concentrations benefiting individuals or specific companies, by allocating to the State the monohubs that exclusively concern services of public interest.

The elimination of existing monopolies, resulting in the removal of... session, can be carried out, depending on the case, either by a liquid-violent dation, or through economic liquidation. The latter This type of liquidation is, obviously, the most desirable, and it is possible if one wants to fully embrace the path of the great reforms.

Among the monopolies concentrating public wealth in the hands of certain individuals, there is one whose markups are so excessive that direct repurchase is impractical; This refers to the monopoly which consists of what the Civil Code calls: the property or the owner's right. Any improvement financial and social progress will be impossible until we have put in place... an end to the automatic and perpetual increase of value attributed to the soil. This increase is the primary cause of all concentrations that prevent equal trade between citizens of the same country, disrupt traffic normal wealth distributions and increase budgets.

Therefore, the property regime certainly needs to be changed.

|
|

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 949

but, for the sake of peace, it is necessary to avoid dispossessing the pro-current owners, and to disrupt the transmission of their goods. This result is achieved by now immobilizing the ground, by limiting the rights attached to its possession.

In the proposed system, the land alone would be considered real estate; all The other assets would be movable property. A right of enjoyment or of usufruct, transferable and transmissible, would be attached to the land and long could only dispose of other assets classified as movable property. The full explanation of this amendment to Article 544 of the Code Civil law is the subject of a separate bill; but it was necessary to specify, at the beginning of the current work, that the social capital of France was weakened by the elimination of all value venal with regard exclusively to the land.

Therefore, it remains to establish an applicable revenue system. to a period of twenty-five years, for example, and by means of the- which, while spending three billion annually, if it is If necessary, it will have been possible to repay, through annuities of a value at least equal to that of the expenses, a total capital of more of 80 billion; however, the most considerable of the capital to be re- The stock market indicators are: consolidated debt: 25 billion, and the pathways of iron: less than 15 billion. This clearly indicates that the The liquidation budget must be calculated in such a way as to achieve 6 billion and a quarter annually, and that's after eliminating all the excise taxes, the four direct taxes, all the other indirect taxes, retaining only Li ne revenues recorded in previous budgets.

The proposed liquidation budget would essentially include two types of recipes: one, fixed at a maximum and for a period of twenty-five years, which would represent a per- a certain annual reception; the other composed of variable elements riables, which will be listed below, would serve not only- element to be fully reimbursed for all monopolies taken over to individuals, but also to be relieved, by periods of five- every five years, annual revenues are set at their maximum, thus 16.

950 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

The first type of revenue would be called a contribution on the lands settled by emphyteutic contracts of twenty-five years,

The second type of recipe would include the product of public services placed under state control and various taxes which will be discussed.

LAND TAX. – The idea of distributing land on the usable surface area of France, the total of the necessary contributions the expenditure of the national community is not new; However, it had not been studied seriously, because especially the difficulty of communication between regions or the cities.

This is no longer the case today; the cadastral revision is an extremely easy operation, and we shall see that, even in adopt- both the figures from the terrier book, published in the bulletin of Statistics from the Ministry of Finance, we arrive | at the results They are as simple as they are logical.

According to this book, the total area

taxable in France amounts to..... 49,389,570 hectares.

Including: undeveloped land,..... 49144677 –

built areas,.,.,.,. 244,893

The aim is to distribute proportionally between these two last- nières areas the total of the annual fixed contribution for twenty-five years, but which can be reduced every five years, with the option to renew it during the five years following without being able to exceed the set limit.

We accept that the maximum annual contribution for the whole of France, i.e. 2.250 million.

Here is what the distribution method would be:

According to a formula that would be too lengthy to explain. here (1), the total of life's needs being designated by 15/15, Vabri, that is to say the enjoyment of any construction, to the di-

"(1) See the Kings of the Republic and the Next Revolution.

|
-

vais n art e

t0
Cr
frs

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

From the perspectives of tools and housing, it occupies a proportion of 6/15. Therefore, assuming that the French population must find satisfaction for all its needs throughout its territory needs, it is clear that the contribution to be requested will have to be fixed according to the same proportion. Therefore, 6/15 of the annuity of the total will be distributed across the built-up areas, 9/15 will be distributed on undeveloped land; the following figures are thus found fronts:

Number of Contributions

hectares. in francs,
Developed land	244,893,900,000,000
Undeveloped land.	49,144,677 4,350,000,000
Totals.	49,389,570 2,250,000,000

This provides a general average for all of France of 27.47 francs per hectare of undeveloped land and of 3.675 francs per the built-up hectare.

To give an idea of the average share that would amount to each house measuring 10 meters by 10 meters, or one are, note that each hectare supporting 3,675 francs would contain one hundred houses, or 36.75 francs per house; likewise the average share of the unbuilt are would be 27 and a half centimes.

Each of the major divisions into built-up and unbuilt land would give rise to ten classes or series, to proportion populations.

For built-up land, the ten classes would be established in taking as the basis for each of them the population density municipal and the cube of the construction.

For undeveloped land, the ten classes would be established in based on the density of the municipal population, the nature and state of cultivation of the land.

It is good to give an example of the departmental distributions tales from which one can get an idea of the communal distributions

Ca L
(

952 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. |

meet

blades that would have been too delicate to introduce into the present presentation:

EXAMPLE OF ALLOCATION FOR EACH DEPARTMENT.

NAMES TAXED BY AREA

Re ee . 2 E

AN sas A 2% 93.4 0 24.930

Aisne: males eds 31 10.50 0 99 444

Allier..... esse i 32 51.65 0 22.08

Alps (Basses-). 34 0130 00133 |

Alps (Hautes-). 36 36.60 0" 08.4849 |

Alpes-Maritimes. 7 62 89.60 0 93.540

Ardèche io 49 411.90 0 19,300 \

Ardennes nrracadues &1 99.00 0 24.793

Ariège..... PR 31 925.06 0 18.928

Dawn leaves ads 9% 39.54 0 16.630

Anders etes, 87 59.84 0 920.050

AVEYTON. ss se 44 78.20 0 18.145

Bouches-du-Rhône,.... 80 831.48 00 44.435 \

Calvados... eo. 56 21.90 00 30.910 |

Cantal ua lise 39 37.70 0 45.827

Charente... rs 21 39.64 00 JUICE |

Charente-Inférieure..... _ 49 85.70 00 926.41

Dear nada nsc x 35 97.70 0 418.930

Corsica (no land registry).
Côte-d'Or..... Dei 99 98.93 0 47.005
Côtes-du-Nord ,... at 40 96.50 0 35.238 |
Crédsbiinae eines GA 74.40 0 49.308 |
Dordogne 97 10.92 0 20.89%
Doubs AIDS ac Lot 48 88.20 0 922.837 |
Drôme..... ss 51 82.70 0 18.53% |
dresser 95 55.82 0 924.032
Eure-et-Loir 92 14.51 0 18.588
Finistère..... net ee 31 88.19 0 39.151 |
Cards sie aires 61 81.10 0 27.414 |

THE HIGH BANK AND REVOLUTIONS. 953

TAX PER AREA

NAMES ES
of BUILT. NON-BUILT.
DEPARTMENTS. fn. oc. fe, c.
Garonne (Haute-).,.... 32 09.90 00 98.697
PEOPLE ii elite 11 76.90 0 17.496
Gironde.,..... located at 27 923.95 00 29.900
Hérault,.....4,.... Hs 85 76.10 0 27.334
Ille-et-Vilaine 34 31.80 0 35.664
Indre... re denenue 28 61.60 0 16.230
Indre-et-Loire..... 25 15.35 00 928.984
ISÉPO In no trickery 32 95.50 0 921.524
BEAST PR: 36 47.00 0: 22.032
Lindes ts aunesauce 19 74.30 0 12.371
Loir-et-Cher,.....,.... 97 33.80 0 19.622
LOITE Sn ei 68 56.90 00 48.999
Loire (Haute-)..... 57 97.70 00 24.709
Loire-Inférieure.....,.... ! 40 40.30 0 35.232
Loiret..... Sedo its RS 99 58.40 00 20.887
DOI Mist does not. PRINT 29 94.90 00 20.886
Lot-et-Garonne.,..... Mass 34 43.00 00 922.426
DOZRFe laughs 46 30.00 0 10.796
Maine-et-Loire ,.... 93 37.00 00 928.722
Sleeve..... 9% 14.00 0 34.590
Marne: Sas dre 35 38.00 00 20.097
Marne (Haute-)....., 31 64.33 0 15.831
Mayenne: 4,444 EUR. 23,981,500 25,986 Meurthe-et-Moselle (no cadastre).

Meuse siens 43 45.80 0 18.144
Morbihan ins ase ; 35 86.43 00 929.817
INIOVPO space 37 175.72 0 19.705

OS nue outre A	22	31.81	0	26.776
Oh mother-of-pearl with gold	24	31.81	00	24.026
Pas-de-Calais.....	38	21.68	00	48.139
Puy-de-Dôme.....	45	59.89	0	27.443
Pyrenees (Basses-)	3%	97.73	0	22.036
Pyrenees (Hautes-)	99	97.55	0	20.111
Pyrénées-Orientales	76	60.20	0	19.634

. REA F CARS CEST RES

Digitized by Google

A me = - +

=

256 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

built-up and unbuilt land is established in such a way that
The more you build, the more the proportion of the built-up area will decrease without that, nevertheless, this results in a significant increase for the undeveloped area. In fact, the more buildings there are,

The number of owners enjoying it will also increase.

directly from their homes; therefore, ceasing to be lo-tenants, they will be relieved of the annual payment representing their rent. 1

tion (depreciation and management fees), as will be seen in draft law relating to exchange agreements between parties culiers.

Another result of the new system will be to further reduce the scarcity of
In addition, the kind of construction where the inhabitants are super-posed; hence a general sanitation and hy- conditions
more life-friendly environments.

These considerations, applicable to the north of the Seine, will also apply to the whole of France. The departments, however different-Population growth will tend to balance out, which will lead to a

Furthermore, the much-pursued goal of tax equalization would be achieved, because the new system, which introduces density _ of the population in the calculations, corrects the cho- provisions quantities and unjustified ones that are noted when examining the contingent of each department. Finally, the owner of the largest land area, built upon or unbuilt upon, would pay in proportion to his fortune, much more truly than through taxation on Income mixed with personal taxes.

VARIABLE PRODUCTS.

Customs proceeds 400,000,000 francs.

In the proposed system, the grants would actually be re- at the border, the equality of trade would be applied trade agreements and customs duties upon entry would it

ji

NS OS CR,
THE

| HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS, 257
elevated. However, we maintain the budgeted forecasts- areas of 1886, which confine 400 million.

Tobacco and powders + 400,000,000 francs,

This is roughly the figure projected in the 1886 budget.

Posts and telegraphs..... ist 165,000,000 of fr.
These are the forecasts from the 1886 budget.

Domains and forests... ceoscossee 40,000,000 of fr.

This is roughly the total projected for 1886 minus revenues Removed by the new system.

His seess. 80,000,000 francs.

These are the forecasts from the 1886 budget with some additions

tions and Deletions resulting from a difference in the rou- |
Chapter layout.

Miscellaneous budget products

Lighting by gas or other means. 400,000,000 francs.

The new system allows for the repurchase of all concessions.
lighting at 84, because they use the piping

_ Underground or the use of public roads themselves and cons-

they hold a public service.

We have assessed the total revenue from lighting for France

_Cltière .on the basis of ten times the average net profit of the

element, 1"

Parisian gas company. This figure will increase _cerlai-the exercise of this state-owned monopoly would be Organized, moreover, by means of managing and responsible companies

Sands of their staff; the same would apply to all the mo-

17

Digitized by Google

064 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Article 4. - Throughout the liquidation process, the budget

annually; the annuities available as a result of the capital Extinguished revenues will be added to the surplus, so as to be able to to repay, that is, forty billion in twelve and a half years, or eighty billion in twenty-five years, in accordance with statements which will be drawn up according to the following instructions:

Article 5. – The debts to be repaid are: 1° All annuities or annuities recorded in the general ledger, excluding life annuities and pensions; 2° the sums representing the redemption of all the monopolies granted to the State under this Act.

Article 6. – A special law will determine the capital amount of debts to be repaid; they will be consolidated, and the repayments selections will be made annually by random draw. The inter-Loans will be paid up to the day of repayment.

Article 7. – The distribution of the maximum contribution above estimated at 2 billion 250 million, on 244,893 hectares of land-built-up areas and 49,144,677 hectares of undeveloped land, gives the
The following averages apply to the whole of France:

For one are of built land..... iniboées
For one are of undeveloped land...v..e

Article 8. – Algeria and the colonies shall be governed by laws
special.

Article 9. – The following are repealed: All laws, all decrees
and all regulations contrary to the provisions of this law,

in this respect:

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 965

III. – ORGANIZATION OF APPROPRIATION AND CONVENTIONS
EXCHANGES BETWEEN INDIVIDUALS.

EXPOSED.

The Civil Code, entirely based on the principle of pro-
the state property, only provided for cooperative association between the capitalist sovereigns; the mass of proletarians is doomed to

As long as this organization exists, the para- levies sites and disruptors, the capitalist prelude, will rebuild incessantly the hoarding and accumulation which ruin the individual and jeopardize the lives of nations.

French citizens are now considered no longer as sovereign owner, but as a contributing user, he is It has become essential to rationally define the main ones: contracts which are the subject of books II and IIT of the Civil Code.

The law, the text of which follows, focuses on the fundamental principles tales and draws completely the plan according to which they must be all ancillary provisions have been modified.

It regulates: 1° perpetual use; 2° temporary use; 8° the individual work] ; 4° random operations.

Wherever the state acts like an individual, it is subject to provisions of the said law, which are combined in such a way that they agree with the forecasts of the LL liquidation higher up.

42

©
[has (es

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS,

BILL.

TITLE I.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Article 10. – Appropriation is the right to enjoy French soil, to enjoy and dispose of movable or fungible things, by in accordance with the laws.

Article 2. – The right to enjoy the land classified as real property to the exclusion of the control of anything else belongs solely to French citizens. French; it is evidenced by a long-term lease issued by the ad-

Article 3. – The act by which one or more citizens tend to Balancing their social utilities is an exchange.

Article 4. – The means of exchange is metallic currency minted imposed by the State; the stipulated quantity is called the price.

Article 5. – Exchange contracts or agreements are ins-struments stipulating and fixing the obligations of the contracting parties; they have the force of law in everything that is not prohibited by the laws general.

Article 6. – The French nation does not grant recognition, sanction and legal protection than to exchange contracts having for aim :

1° To regulate the perpetual use of a movable thing or the acquisition-position of a fungible thing;

2° To regulate the temporary use of a movable thing;

8° To regulate the temporary cooperation of individual work to individual title or collective title.

Article 7. – Coinage minted by the State is neither a thing movable property, nor fungible goods; consequently, it cannot be the main purpose of none of the contracts listed above; its its unique role is to serve as a means of exchange.

HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS. 207

IT TITLE.

OF PERPETUAL USE.

Article 10. – The contract that governs the perpetual use of a movable property or the possession of fungible property is a sale; the sale entails the free disposal of the thing stimashed potatoes.

Article 2. – The sale is only perfected when the contracting parties agree on the nature and price of the item sold.

Article 8. – Any movable object, any fungible thing, may
to be the subject of a sale.

Art. 4, – Land, the only legal real estate, cannot be sold;
However, the emphyteutic title 'which governs the usufruct is ass-

real and personal enjoyment under penalty of nullity: it is therefore It is forbidden to temporarily transfer, that is, to lease a security emphyteutic.

Article 5. – The sale of a long-term lease automatically entails right to substitute the lessee for the obligations, rights and benefits
The seller's fees. The price will be calculated based on the number of annuities.
of the land tax previously paid to the State,
counted from the first year of the emphyteusis, without tou-
however, it can never exceed seven times the amount of the contribution annual fee.

Article 6. – The sale of a building will always entail
the transfer of the emphyteutic title relating to the land which it super-door.

Article 7. – Transfers of possession may be made as an inheritance or free gift.

TITLE III. FOR TEMPORARY USE.

Article 107 – The contract that governs the temporary use of a thing
Furniture is called Rental.

968 HIGH BANKING AND REVOLUTIONS.

Article 2. – The law expressly prohibits the rental of a thing movable property for an indefinite or perpetual period, and that things that are fungible in any capacity whatsoever.

Article 3. – The lease agreement obliges the lessee to return the thing rented at the expiration of the time for which the use was made conferred. The user is only liable to the lessor for the degradations deemed abusive by law.

Article 4 – The price of renting a building. What?
conch shell: house, factory, hangar, workshop, arranged tooling or
of any other movable and non-fungible object, includes two elements:

1° An annual sum representing the reimbursement of the cost

20 An annual sum representing the cost of maintenance, the management or administration fees for the rented item.

Art. 5. – When it concerns a building, dwelling, etc. the annual usage price will be calculated in such a way as to amortize the cost original within a period of twenty-five years, at a rate of 4% per annum (annuity 6, 4012 0/0).

Article 6. – Maintenance expenses remain the responsibility of the lessor; the land contribution established by the law on the built-up areas will be distributed among all users of a same construction, in proportion to the rental price paid by each one of them.

Article 7. – Any lessor who, by means of the above annuities stipulated, will have received reimbursement for the cost of construction rented, will no longer be able to collect, for its administrative costs, management, etc., that 3% of the original cost, and this per year.

Article 8. – Every user always has the right to stipulate that After twenty-five years of use and regular payment, the He will retain possession of the leased building. In this case, he will be automatically subrogated to the rights and obligations of the ter the lessee, and the emphyteutic lease will be executed in his name. The contract thus stipulated is transmissible by inheritance in the line di The right to use the property, but it cannot be transferred without the landlord's consent

Article 9. – The rights reserved to the user by the preceding article are only applicable when it uses all of the construct- rented units; under no circumstances may the tenant of a unit be to become the owner of the fraction after twenty-five years.

ALPHABETICAL TABLE

INDEX OF NAMES CITED

HAS

DISPLAY, VII.

AGIOTAGE, XXII, XXII, 6,174.
Aguado, 85, 178.

Alexander (Tsar), 69.

Algiers, 97, 122,

flora XXVIII, 19, 41, 9, 495 and following.

ANNOTATIONS, 41, 15, 20, 21, 3, 50, 77, 98, 119, 117, 119
496, 198, 130; 434, 136, 447,
465. 174 187, 188.

APPROPRIATION, 265.
– (draft bill), 266 to 272.

Arago, 121.

Arlberg (Duke of), 39.

REAR, 36, 37, 48,

Artois (Count of), 31.

INSURANCE, 958.

Audry-Puyraveau, 39, 90, 95,
i,

AUTOCRACY, 3.
Austria, 98.
SES XXVIT, 168,

Balguerie, 39.
Balzac, 140.
Black band, %.
Bannatyne, 229,

BANK OF FRANCE, 15, 39, 42, 98, 127, 138, 258.

BANKRUPTCY, 1.
Parngs 00, 52, 66, 67, 75, 76,

Barrault, 102.

Barrot (Odilon), 108.
Bavaria, 98.

Bazard, 102.
Beerenbrock, 206.
Bernadotte, 28.
Bernard (Samuel), 154.

ALPHABETICAL TABLE.

Bethfort, 39.

Bethisy (de), 134.

NATIONAL PROPERTY, 37.
Bismarck, 50.

Blanc (Louis), 112.
Blanc-Collin, 119.

Blücher, 63.

Boétie (Étienne de la), 166.
Boissaye, 129.

Bonaparte (Joseph), 30.
Bordeaux, 2%5.

Boucher, 155.

Bouquet (Paul), XXI, XXIIIT.
Bourbon, 8.

Bourret, 155.

Stock exchange, 140.

Boyd, 197.

Breteuil (de), 134.
Broglie, 11.

Bruges (Count of), 63.
me DE (palace of), 100,

LIQUIDATION BUDGET, 248 to 259, 263.

– (Bill), 260.

GC

Cabet, 112.

Cahen (Édouard), XXV.

Cail, 106.

Calonne, 166.

Cambon, 10.

Canova, 212.

CAPITALISM, 114, 117.

Caussidière, 126, 161.

Cavaignac, 129.

CENSORSHIP, VI.

Centregauche (newspaper), XXIV.

Chambord (Count of), 21,

Changarnier, 131.

Charles V, 154.

Charles X, 83.

RAILWAYS, 108, 137, 174.

Chevalier (Michel), 102, 112.

CAIMIE, 39.

Choiseul (de), 91.

Christ, 183.

Cicero, 166.

ConE, XXXI.

Heart (Jacques), 154.

Colbert, 166.

Collot, 30, 39, 118.

ComMuNnaRDS, XXXII.

COMPANY OF THE INDIA, 22, 212.

VIENNA CONGRESS, 41.

CONSERVATIVES, ©.

SOCIAL CONTRACT, 9.

CONVERSION, 817.

– (life annuities), 930.

LEGISLATIVE CORPS, 98.

Corsaire (newspaper), VIF, X.

Corvetto, 60, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67,

206, 22. .

Coster (Laurent), 466.

Cottier (André), 90, 119.

Courier (Paul-Louis), 185,

Courier from France, XVIIIIL.

Literary Courier, XXNIL

Crémieux, 122, 132.

Crochard, 132.

Cromwell, 21.

D

David, 156.

Debrousse, XXIV.

|
|

Tecare

5

+

D 4

ALPHABETICAL INDEX, 975

Se €

Decazes (duke), 156, 198.

DeEricirs, 188.

Delessert, 90, 36, 63, 77, 90,
101, 407, 4419.

| Delorme, 39, 41.

Derosne, 106.
Desteyère, 118.
Mr. PUBLIQUE, XXV,9, 146,

Doumergue, 30, 39.
DROIT prvin, XXXI.

"Human Rights (newspaper)"
XXI.

Dubochet, 129.
Duchêne (Georges), 132.
Duverrier, 102.

E

+. 265.

– 7, (bill), 266 to:

: (journal), XXIV.
Childish, 102, 112.

Eichta] (d'), 102.

VOTERS, 93.

ÉUIGRÉS, J0, 136.
EMPHYTEOTIC, 245.
LOANS (Removal of),

SAVINGS, 5.

Scammers, 470.

Espagnac (d"), 31, 156.

Spain, 79, 80, 85.

United States, 104.

FOREIGNER, XXIX, 259, 962.

Gournal event), X, XVI.

F

Fampoux (accident of), 456.

Faucher (Léon), 112,

Fayette (de la), 92.

FINANCIAL FEUDALITY, XXXI,

FARMERS GENERAL, 6.

Figaro (newspaper), XVI.

FINANCE, XXIV, 118, 134, 168.

Flachat, 102.

Fleury (cardinal), XVII.

Florent-Lefèvre, 174.

Fould, 132, 133, 134, 156.

Fouquet, 166.

Fournel, 102.

Frascati, 63.

Frémy, 132.

Froshdorff, 21.

G

Galiéra, 132.

Ganneron, 101.

Garnier-Pagès, 122, 199.

Gaudin, 42.

Gaulois, XVI.

Gazette du Midi, XX VII.
Georges III, 201, 206.
George IV, 212.
MANAGERS, 3.

Gévaudan, 39, 41.

Gibiat, 132.

Girardin, 132,

Gladstone, 198.
Goudchaux, 121, 122, 199.
Gouin, 106, 107.

es PH UES, XXVIII, 189, 190,

PE 7 EE

bats ne Sets – ut d –..

976 ALPHABETICAL INDEX. L
Greece, 104. Financial newspapers, XX. |
Greffulhe, 30. Juies, 51, 64, 133, 154.
EUROPEAN STRIKE, 121. JEWISH CENTERS (History of), VL. |
Gros-Davillier, 119. è
Gutenberg, 166.
Guyot-Montpayroux, XVIII.
Karr (Alphonse), X, 116.
H Kerveguen, 142.
Hachette, IX, 1429. Kestner, 108.
Halévy, 102.
Hausraann, 100, 132. L |
Heine, 132, 156,
Henri JL, 154. Ladébat, 233, |
Henry IV, 48. And ES
HERITAGE, 102. 85, 87, % to, 1,406, |
Heron, 166. 407, 1 10
Hinguerlot, 30. Lamartine, 121,
Hope, 50, 52, 66, 617. Lameth (earl of), 92
Hottinguer, 30, 63, 77, 419. Lanterne (journal), VL
Hugo (Victor), 135. Lapanouse, 82.
Human, 39%. Lariboisière, 118%.
Latour, 155.
I Laveissière, 129.
BUILDINGS, 245, 247. pan, 72 RER

SINGLE TAX, 250

Ivernais (d'), 197.

J

Jadin, 154.

Jecker, 132, 139.

Games, 449, 151, 168
272.

252.

Industrial (journal 1'), 119.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, 175.

Ledru-Rollin, 121.

Lefebvre, 101.

Liancourt Se de), 91.

FREE TRADE, 23

. Lindhurst (lord), 18, gu, 2%.

LiquipaTioN, 493, 248.

Lobau, 94.

Louis XIV, 47, 22, 155.

Louis XV, 7, 155.

Louis XVI, A.

to 174, 958, Louis XVII, 20, 206, 232.

Louis (baron), 4, 32, %6, 3h

Journal of Public Works, 38, 40, 54,

Louis-Napoleon, 90, 410, 12

:
|
|
|
|

|

|
|

ALPHABETICAL INDEX. 277

Louis-Philippe, 20, 22, 197.
Luther, 183.

M

Machiavelli, 157.
SURCHARGES, 241.
Mallet, 30, 36.

Marie, 121.

Marmont, 26, 29, 30, 32.
Marmontel, 455, 156.
Marseille, 225.
Martignac (de), 91, 92.
Martin, 933.

Massicault, IX.

.. Mauguin, 94.

* Ménilmontant, 103.
Metternich (de), 77.
Millaud (Polydore), 132.
Er XXII, XXIV, 139, 135,

Mitchell (Robert), XVIII.
Mollien, 42.

Monginot, 135.
MONEY, 4, 14,
Montaigne, 166.
Pawnshops, 52.
Montesquieu, VIII, X, XVII.
Moreau, 98.

Morgan, 148.

Morny, 131.

Mortier, 26, 29.

Murat, 99.

Murger, 154.

Museums, 51.

N

Napoleon I, 90, 2,

nn nenem

National (newspaper), 162.

Necker, 166.

O

Odier, 30, 36, 90.

ORIENT (question of), 22, 106.

Orléans (duke of), 87, 91.

Osmont (d'), 63, 118.

Ouvrard, 8, 30, 39, 42, 43, 50,
22.6, 64, 66, 85, 118, 495

P

Pagnerre, 1929.

Papin, 166.

Paterson (William), 22.

PATRIOTISM, XXIX.

STEPS 102, 112, 132, 135

Pericles, 183.

Pérrier (Casimir), 73, 85, 87,
9, 94, 99, 100, 107, 419, 7439.

Perregaux, 90, 32.
Pessard (Hector), IX,
PHALANSTERA, 107.
Pinard, 129.
Pitt, 22.
Polignac (de), 92.
Pontalba, 135.
Popelinière (de la), 155.
PREMISES, 3.
Press (newspaper), XXIV.
PRESS (freedom of the), VI.
PROGRESS, 16, 120.
PROPERTY, 140, 241.

– (draft bill), 247.
Proudhon, 112.

278

has --

R

BEARER ANNUITIES, 101.
REPUBLIC, 111.
RESTORATION, 8, 25.
REVOLUTIONARIES, 1, 113.
Richelieu (Duke of), 8, 52, 53,
55, 58, 60, 61, 69, 74, 116,
226, 232.
Robespierre, 21.
Rochechouart (de), 8, 118.
Rocheport, XXI.
Rochefoucault (de la), 92.
Rodrigues, 102.
Rome, 183.
Rothschild, XXII, XXX, 46,

50, 74, 76, 71, 18, 79
80, 81, 85, 87, 88, 91, 92, 94,
99, 100, 104, 409, 122:
198, 129, 433, 139, 154, 160,
4161, 163, 178, 479, 19, 498, 236.

Rouher, 198, 132, 198.

Rousseau (J.-3.), 9.
Roy, 50, 87, 418.

Saint-Simon, 101, 119.

Salleron, 39.

Sanlot-Baguenault, 62, 63, 71.

Sartoris, 82. |

Savary (Charles), XIV.

Say, XI.

Scholl (Aurélien), X, XVI, XVII.

Schonen, 94.

Scribe, X.

Sevastopol, 27.

'Séguin, 30, 39, 85.

Seillière, 30, 132.

has

SENATE, 8.

Century (newspaper), 19th century.

Sigismund Lacroix, XXL.

Sina, 58.

Smala (tableau), 456.

The Socialists; 1x, 184

Solacroup, 132.

Solar, 135.

Stieglitz, 90.

Strauss (Paul), XXIII,

Suez, 23.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE, 470.

Sully, 166.

T

NUMBERED TABLES; 99, CT

48, 493, 446, 141, 203

955.

Talabot, 132.

Talnouël, 132.

Talleyrand, 31;

Talma, 156.

Ternaux, &

Terray, 166.

THEATRES;, XXIV.

90, 46, 156.

Thiers, VAL, 1%; 97,404, 106, 108.

Thurneysen; 41932.

Titian (the), 154.

Tourton, 30, 90.

Toussenel, XVII, XVII, 487.

Treaties of 1815, 41, 48,
following

__ of 1818, 54 to 6, 198 and
following:

Soubeyran; 432.

Souvré (Marquis de), XVII

L

|

|

has

|

|

|

|

{
ALPHABETICAL TABLE.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX. 279

INDIVIDUAL WORK, 270 to 279, Versailles, 156.
Turgot, 166. Villèle (de), 73, 82, 91, 92.
| Virmaître (Ch.), XXIII, XXIV.
U Voltaire, XVII, 9, 183. |
General Union, 2. wW
PERMANENT USE 2:
eo Waterloo, 27, 43, 61, 493.
– temporary, 267 to 270. Wellington, 30, 63, 70, 74
Uropies, 165 and sui to SL ngton, 90, 69, 70, 71, » 765 and following William Paterson, 22.
VY
Vallée (Oscar de), 141. Yves–Guyot, XXI.
Vanloo, 155, 456.
Vassal, 119, Z

Vaucanson, 155, 156.
Venice, 22, Zeno, 166.
Vernet (Horace), 456. Zola, 141.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| Pages
Variations in public opinion..... located v
Note on this edition..... ii sons seins ses “EAN

Preface to the 3rd edition (1876).....5...eeo.. XXIX

THE STARTING POINT.

II. Premises..... snsnsossse
AI. Simple overview....., shoes seioes de ee
IV. The trade in crowns.....
V. English corruptiono.ossese.

In
© in 01 CE at

THE ASCENTIAL WALK.

I. The First Restoration des aeess cits, 20
IT. The Hundred Days..... sion Send Tes 38
IIT. The Second Restoration... AS or teens. 4
IV. Financial Occupation (1815–1818) | 53
V. Financial Liberation (1818–1829). – | Fall of 'Ja Restauration. At 68
VI. The revolution of 18900 sus se ton oo Ssisecs. DE
VII. The Last King..... TR Jihautas
VIIL, 1848 eue ni diaus Diese: . 112
IX. 1852–1870. Dai cs Sois die ons cotes. AUÙ

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

THE FINISHING POINT.

I. The Great Book..... RL
II. Consequences..... ,
III. Moral Assessment LL
IV. Utopias..... So daeoat Niue dede these LE M LL. sance din ot:

VI. Conclusion of 1887.....oo.esvoereeoreeesreeenntt

DOCUMENTS.

France's claim against England. ...s-serertttt

& 4. – General violationssencerrereerttt

82. – Which inspired the diversions +e.sserts"

S 3. – First diversion. –orornorersssrestet

S 4. – Second diversions... ..ssosmpenrertette

$5. – Alleged deficitesessee sonoreosses

$6. – Conversion of ES Life Annuities. .sornsertre

& 7. – Third group of diversions..--eert:

II. Codification of the reforms..... Ru

$ 1. – Property Regime....sps.sest PU

Idem (draft law)..s.sesessesensttt

$2. – Tax base and liquidation budget.

Same (bill)....s..-se"t"

$3. – Organization of appropriation and con
exchange agreements between individuals.

Same (bill)...ossssssvose 00%. Ë

Alphabetical table and index of names En denis.

TO BE PUBLISHED IN APRIL 1888

Collection in-18 Jesus at 3 fr. 50

LADISLAS MICKIEWICZ

ns

ADAM MICKIEWICZ

HIS LIFE AND WORK

According to previously unpublished family documents,
With portrait by Th. BÉRENGIER.

*

VASSILE VÉRESCHAGIN

MEMORIES

YOUTH – TRAVELS – WARS

Illustrations by V. VÉRESCHAGIN.

BENJAMIN CONSTANT

LETTERS TO HIS FAMILY

Published from the originals;
by
J.-H. MENOS

747673

TO BE PUBLISHED IN MAY 1888

HG: 56 nn
Count Nicholas Tolstoy
CH, sn
188% | LIFE

: | Translated from Russian.

_ ÉDOUARD ROD

maybe

FORGIVENESS

AUGUSTE CHIRAC
L'AGIO TAGE
UNDER THE THIRD REPUBLIC
(1870–1897)

| DOCTOR S. BASCH

MAXIMILIAN IN MEXICO

MEMORIES OF HIS PERSONAL DOCTOR

1 nat
9, Place des Vosges

Paris. – Typography A.–M. BEAUDELLOT;

es ON + 9079
D

R0

HG186

77679

LULU LULLLEE

AGOG00G1107%2

LIL LLULLL

A000000110 7th

French

English

Full text of " Historical Documents on 19th Century French Nationalism, Part Two "

See other formats

About this book

This is a digital copy of a work that has been preserved for generations on library shelves precaution by Google as part of a project aimed at allowing internet users to discover the
line.

Because this book is relatively old, it is no longer protected by copyright law and is now “Belonging to the public domain” means that the book in question has never been subject to Expiration. The conditions required for a book to enter the public domain can vary from country to country. These are all links to the past. They bear witness to the richness of our history, our culture, and our knowledge, too often difficult for the public to access.

The footnotes and other marginal annotations present in the original volume are reproduced of the long journey the book has taken from the publishing house through the library to fi

Instructions for use

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize works in the public domain and make them thus accessible to all. These books are indeed the property of everyone and we are simply making them accessible. However, this is a costly project. Therefore, and in order to continue disseminating these works, we have taken necessary measures to prevent potential abuses by third-party merchant sites, in particular by implementing technical constraints related to automated queries.

We also ask you to:

+ Do not use the files for commercial purposes. We designed the Google Books Search program for personal use, not for commercial use. We therefore ask that you use these files for personal purposes only. They may not be used for any commercial purpose.

+ Do not perform automated requests. Do not send any automated requests whatsoever to the research concerning translation software, optical character recognition, or any other field. For large amounts of text, please do not hesitate to contact us. We encourage the use of works and documents belonging to the public domain and we would be happy to be of service.

+ Do not remove the attribution. The Google watermark contained in each file is essential and allow them to access more documents through the Google Books Search Program. Do not de
No cases.

± Stay within the law. Whatever use you intend to make of the files, remember that it is v other countries. The legal duration of copyright for a book varies from country to country. The works whose use is authorized and those whose use is not. Don't assume that simply posting a book search means that it can be used in any way anywhere in the world. The sentence to which you are subject The penalties you would face in the event of copyright infringement could be severe.

About the Google Books Search service

By facilitating searches and access to a growing number of books available in many languages, Google Books Search contributes to promoting cultural diversity through Google Books Search. Indeed, the Google Books Search service allows internet users to discover the world's literary heritage, while helping authors and publishers to reach new readers.

online searches in the full text of this work can be found at <http://books.google.com>

1,447,789

= DTA ESS NT, 0

Lo.

F4 SN no AREA AS

HAS Nothing to report

AA \ "I \ THE 'To Far 1e
ANNE VIFS

PROPERTY OP

THE EMPIRE

INDUSTRIAL

ee

PARIS, = [PRIMERIE L, POUPART-DAVYL, RUE DU BAC. 30.
EL |

. -

THE EMPIRE

INDUSTRIAL

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONCESSIONS

OF THE SECOND EMPIRE

BY

GEORGES DUCHÊNE

Author of Speculation before the Courts

E

PARIS

CENTRAL BOOKSTORE

9, RUE CHRISTINE, 9

AND AT CALVET'S, 11, RUE NOTRE-DAME-DES-VICTOIRES

| 1869

All rights reserved.

POTATO L'on A

THE EMPIRE

INDUSTRIAL

INTRODUCTION

#

This book is not a pamphlet; it is not a... tag a current events brochure inspired by the events of the day. It's a warning to the country about the economic revolution that has transformed our relationships and our social balance, a revolution that no one seems to suspect, and that the ignorance or complicity of the pro-Official teachers strive to conceal everything.
Possible means. Transformation in the world of labor, commerce and industry has been well at-extremely profound even in the spheres of the politics. Nothing remains of the principles and laws on which the company had been living in since 1789. The property, delivered to the sloppy sponsors, is no longer this domain

1

2 INTRODUCTION

The quiristic law imported from Roman law-into the Civil Code of 4803; the mortgage has been eased, mobilized, to fold anx combinations of the credit organizers fon-" ceir; the stipulations relating to the lease agreement, to the Pledges, sales, and loans have fallen into disuse.
in front of the concessions, the regulations, the invasions-
the practices of large companies; the law of supply and demand:
the request has no possible application with the privileges laws granted in all important branches of national services.

Today there are two million French people who are e-eligible, endowed with their civil, civic and politicians, for whom there is no longer a Civil Code, nor Code of Procedure, nor Commercial Code, and to which
On the other hand, a new Penal Code is being applied, the Public authorities don't even suspect its existence.

You will find a hundred proofs of this in our third chapter:
Moral depression.

The symptoms of this transformation date back a long way;
The oldest dates back to the year 1800, to the establishment of the Bank of France; then came the law of 1810
on mine ownership; the laws of 4821-22 on the mins of iron.

However, until 1852, the monopoly does not appear in our economy is only in a state of collusion and tolerance; it is forced to hide behind the mask of public interest to make it bearable; it is scattered, it is broken up. The Bank of France, reduced to Paris and a dozen of branches, with nine competing professional banks—mining concessions; mining and quarrying concessions are comprised of tents by the thousands; the internal piping is distributed between about twenty companies; the network of paths of iron, barely begun, already about forty companies.

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS 3

The school of economics, truly worthy of the name of liberal, ensures the maintenance of the sacred laws of free concurrence; she has her eye on privilege, she distrusts it, she harasses him, she denounces him. In vain he shrinks, husband, philanthropist even;

This flour-covered block doesn't bode well for him.

The distinctive characteristic of a monopoly, says Bastiat, is to allow the great social law "service to serve" to remain in force vice," but to bring force into the debate, and as a result of altering the fair proportion between the service received and the service provided.

This is precisely the case for contemporary privileged people. What is the relationship between the fares of the companies of gas, railway lines, liners, and a price of Does it come back to anything? There are taxes of 45 and 30 cents. times for the same object, 30 and 50 for a Same route and same commodity. You are forced to pay according to the class into which arbitrariness has placed you, — deburdened or overloaded, depending on whether grace has been favored to you. rable or hostile.

The monopoly transfers wealth from one pocket to the other, but much of it gets lost along the way. When monopoly is an isolated event, there is no shortage of to enrich the one whom the law has invested with it. It can happen while each class of workers, instead of for- to follow the fall of this monopoly, demands for itself a similar monopoly. This nature of plunder, re- duite en système, then becomes the most ridiculous of mys- adjustments for everyone, and the final result is that everyone believes they will get more out of a general market ap- destitute of everything. (BASTIAT.)

4 INTRODUCTION

Also, communist propaganda has never been better founded only in the presence of this invasion of mono- poles for twenty years. Why, she said, all the work Wouldn't he be in the same position as the Bank? railways, factories, mines, spinning mills, the forges, with the difference that the directors are state officials, as are already the governors neurs and deputy governors of the Bank of France and of the Mortgage loan?

It goes without saying that this singular regime introduces a universal antagonism between all classes, all professions, all peoples; that he demands a -constant interference, but always certain action governmental;... that it places all industries in an irremediable insecurity, and that he accustoms the men to place on the law, and not on themselves the responsibility responsibility for their own existence. It would be difficult to imagine a more active cause of social disruption, (BASTIAT.)

It was in such terms that the heraldic school denounced the demoralizing effect of monopoly. It is easy for everyone for us to verify how accurate the prediction was. Ja- but the upheaval of facts, laws and ideas has deserved, better than today, to attract attention philosophers and economists. The so-called newspapers Conservatives, those who, in all political matters, know no other appreciation than the formula of

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS ... $

_and the officials, the most dangerous kind of drafts and revolutionaries in the world, cross themselves and cry out in horror at a few proposals which occurred in non-self-organized public meetings ridiculed.

What good did it do us to crush the hydra of anarchy in "18512!" they cried, filled with terror. "We believed in to have finished with communism, socialism, mutualism lism and all the barbarisms in 1st grade born of surprise of February; we had restored order, family, the property, religion; in short, we had replaced the pyramid on its base.

But now, these unauthorized meetings reveal an unknown evil, the non-predictability of which was impossible to foresee not only intensity, but also existence: the spirit of subversion, the foundations of society, the gnawing canker, the disorder of minds, the anarchy of ideas, the se- The safety of the wicked, the terror of the good,

And so on and so forth!
ba *_ We put everything into these speeches!

The astonishment was such that the emperor felt obliged to to reproduce the echo in his opening speech of the legislative session.

The two laws that aimed to develop the
The principle of free discussion, said His Majesty, has produced

6 INTRODUCTION

-

two opposing effects; on the one hand, the press and the meetings public figures have created unrest in certain circles artificial and brings back ideas and passions that one believed to be extinct..

Furthermore, adventurous spirits sought to disturb the Public peace was at its deepest.

A preliminary observation regarding this paragraph: It is that freedom, however restricted, is for the governments a better means of information than the The most sophisticated police forces. What are the henchmen for? and the investigators on Jerusalem Street if they have persuaded to the agents of power, even the head of state, that certain ideas, certain passions, more vivid than Never, had they been extinct for a long time? Let's hope so. that, in favor of his valuable information, the right to The meeting will be maintained and expanded.

As for the heart of the matter, it is surprisingly... conservative world and the government that takes place to surprise us. There's no denying it: these are not the demagogues of the republic and of society who have raised This generation of eighteen-year-olds. They were outlawed, deported, exiled, interned, monitored, muzzled, whipped of importance, of their persons and their ideas. They have no newspapers, neither daily, nor weekly, nor monthly. Public meetings have not yet taken place. Time to corrupt minds. Besides, the minds of darkness, to speak like Cassagnac and Mr. Veuillot, They presented themselves from the very first day in a tight-knit group, hardened, skilled in combat and attack, disdainful of to defend themselves and immediately charge forward. Where So how did she get this education? You have no idea.

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS | 7

No? It's quite simple, though: it's the result of bad examples from above.

What would the official and conservative world have to say in response? to the most ardent socialist who would speak to him in this way:

"The government gave 10 million sugared almonds to the The Crédit Foncier was officially launched; it guaranteed 400,000 francs. per year the lactation and childhood period of the Credit agricultural; it subsidizes 9 million annually Transatlantic ocean liners and roughly as many Imperial mail service; he commissioned the large industrial-sorting of the 50 million remaining available on the loan from the Italian war; he bought it back for 100 million the wrong numbers in the Mexican lottery; he awarded ONE AND A HALF BILLION in subsidies to shareholders railways; it guarantees them the amortization of Four BILLION in loans and 184 million in annual interest. And they would haggle over us, the needy, the strength and basis of its power, a few hundred million sponsorship to be taken from this same collective fortune which our taxes are paying for!... When the agents of change, brokers, solicitors, bailiffs, no-silences, when the preferred gas companies, of Railways impose on us, the consumers, arbitrary tariffs, completely disproportionate to the service Defect rendered, rates approved by the government, having the force of law, they were scandalized that we did in turn to approve – by the minister and the Council state control of our wage rates, thus becoming, like the tariffs for monopoly beneficiaries, a law of the country which The violation must be prosecuted! We're limiting it

8 INTRODUCTION

'the number of bosses in a hundred and so many professions' privileged individuals are thus protected against the competition of capital, and we would be forbidden from to guarantee our wages against competition from labor, in restricting the number of apprentices! Finally, when the Apital draws heavily from the public treasury and within the legislative arsenal for maintaining its income, work would remain, for his Quolilian bread, reduced to the meager portion, to the chances of unemployment and to the discussions "Wage differences!... Oh, that! And equality!"

Thus, facts and ideas are brought into balance and in unison. Monopolies were given free rein, and The public, en masse, demands, each in their own sphere, their share of privilege and favor, as Bas-üiat. What terrible logicians these poorly educated workers are. instructed, by the material practice of things, a hundred times better and faster than by transcendental theories, calling for the widespread adoption of a system whose elected officials they fit in so well!

I tell you the truth: there is no basis for this. scandal What we only SAY DOWN THERE is what This practice has been going on for a long time, EX HAUT.

This is what made the economic school so strong and glorious. liberal, of which Bastiat was the last representative, It's because she fought everywhere: in the academies, in newspapers, books, lectures, to legislative chambers and the Council of State, against this invasion of monopolies, and that it succeeded, in a strong measure, to maintain its principle until the advent Birth of the Empire.

And indeed, despite the few exceptions to the law

Es

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS + 9

common points raised at the beginning of this paragraph, under the Restoration, under the July Monarchy, under the Second Republic, the law of relations is indeed the concurrent, supply and demand, laissez-faire and the passes; formulas more pretentious than se-laughing, more sonorous than substantial, but which had at least the advantage of responding to their social environment, environment of which no trace remains. Also, when we Let's see the pedants and sellouts of the current school system repeat themselves. and keep repeating the axioms of the ancients about what today, we are struggling to contain the explosion 'sion of our contempt and disgust. Let one judge a little of the difference in times according to the transformations operations carried out since 1852!

The Bank of France, whose privilege has been extended of thirty, in 1857, absorbed the provincial banks commercials and obtained a monopoly on branches to be established in all departments, in all commercial centers commercial spaces where there is room for a counter. What is there to common between this vampire with a thousand arms and his humble origins? Go talk to him about supply and demand. as the basis for the discount rate and the interest rate 0e sponsorships!

The mining concessions, which were once estimated per hectare, are given or amalgamated today per square kilometer.

The canal companies, disgusted by their inter-taken in response to the enthusiasm for railways, have eventually led to the state taking over, at a cost of ten, the works that had cost them two

The railways, granted on average for five-1.

There

\

410 INTRODUCTION

forty years, were extended to ninety-nine, with the date postponed beyond 1852; the forty companies were grouped into six, which agree and are joining forces to maintain current tariffs. Go talk about competition from these myriapod cankers; go recite your bucolic passes to monsters who They say: You will not be allowed to travel if you do not sign at prior commitment to renounce against us the benefits and rights conferred upon you by the laws of the country.

11 There are perhaps five thousand cities and towns today. gas-lit communes; these are then five thousand monopolies, except for mergers, which further reduce the number businesses, bending several municipalities under their abuses. * |

Wherever a water distribution system of any size is established Importantly, it is by virtue of a monopoly.

Imperial Messengers, monopoly.

Transatlantic ocean liners, a monopoly.

Crédit Foncier, a monopoly.

The Paris Omnibus, monopoly.

Public exhibitions, monopolies.

The privilege is not only limited to its object immediate; it spreads like an oil stain, it invades, it It agglomerates, it clumps together, it snowballs. The Bank from France, by centralizing the discount service, inevitably monopolizes the cash receipts. The chemins of iron, when the traveler and the merchandise have Having left the railway, they continue their operation by means of Trucks, boats, cars. A number of industries, whose products are placed exclusively in these companies become an annex, an essential branch the monopoly. The water and gas companies pretend to have their plumbers, their tap fitters, their manufacturers of certified meters and devices.

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS 11

The mania for privilege knows no bounds; the administration of funeral services in Bordeaux intends to reserve for itself the exclusive supply of letters and bills of burial permits; a court judgment gives him winning the case, while regretting that the concession decree includes a similar extension. The city of Paris leases, at a price of 220,000 francs, it is said, the car storage around the market halls and markets; the peasant does not have the right to leave his cart in the care of his child; he is forced to pay the law, if he prefers not to come. A major company has been requesting the privilege of building model and uniform boutiques my advice for the traveling merchants: at the ham fair, to that of gingerbread, to the feast of the 15th of August, to the first of the year. The building, costing 200 francs, would be rented for 50 francs." with each exit; from the first year, the capital would be reimbursed, since Paris includes the four pre-festivals cited, and, for thirty or fifty years, the recipe would be net product. There has already been some semblance of implementation artwork.

Besides property and offices, we also find ministerial privileges, commission agent privileges, porters, wheelbarrow vendors, merchants of - newspapers, waste disposal concessions, advertising, etc. placement on public roads.

In addition to all these monopolies established by law, there are de facto monopolies: insurance companies, including brokers ° are recommended by mayors and accompanied by

49 INTRODUCTION

"rural guards; the monstrous stores, which crush small-scale, non-profit retail for consumption; large factories, which obtain loans from the State and tax breaks on their transport; entrepreneurs, favored direct concessions without advertising or competition; the docks, the general stores, favored by the em- placement and by the option of actual or fictitious warehousing; the grain merchants and flour merchants, censors at the Bank, using their position to extend their credit and restrict that of their competitors; the administrators of anonymity services- prostitutes, asking with one hand for favors they vote for themselves On the other hand, there are graduates from government schools. closing the door to advancement for practitioners; residents living near traffic routes, crushing the produce landlocked villages.

thiel, who was admired by Say, Bastiat, and others Blanqui and all the masters, with the authority of-
What do these ignorant schoolchildren think they can crush us?
The scope for individual initiative is narrowing and becomingdiminishes every day. The professions that remained free do not can only compete on the condition of paying, to the thousand and a privilege that bound them, a uniform tribute,
that is to say, the competition, instead of drawing on all branches of work to compose its elements cheap, is reduced, by the prelibations of large, subservient industry, to eke out a few centi-
my focus on labor and profits.

Industrial feudalism took control: of the State, by subsidies and interest guarantees; on the public, by surtaxes; on shareholders, through discounted bonuses

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS 13

so much the future; on employees, by regulations and the Agenda items. Public wealth, in all its forms, belongs to her; she disposes of them as her property own, to the detriment of the nation, which believed it had consented to a dismemberment of its common lands only in View of better service at cost price. Strange Anomaly: brochures and journal articles are raining down.
and newspapers about the budget, overdrafts, and the em-Prunts, and nobody talks about this alienation, well otherwise disastrous, of the public domain in the hands of the finance for ninety-nine years.

Not content with having usurped the material fortune of
in this country, the caste still claims to control customs, the consciences and bodies. It decrees, it regulates,
She legislates without regard for principles or written law.
Even the law gives way to its coups and retro-
I stand by my actions. I know nothing more.
It's sad that this universal moral depression is culminating to the mass abdication of the French population hands of the bold, the audacious sponsors and of anonymity.

The granting of privileges is a prerequisite for a absolute monarchy, a natural consequence of law divine. The old monarchy could only sustain itself by the division of the nation into three orders and by the orga-
the corporatization of labor and commerce, all rights, even the right to work, emanating from the sovereign.
This is not a particular feature of our history

Frederick II, known as the Count of Mirabeau, in his History

14 INTRODUCTION

the history of the Prussian monarchy, had a kind of Passion for trading companies. Company of the Elbe, Oder company, Levant company, com-Company of the Jews, Company of the Herrings, Company of the Salt, insurance company, shipping company, come

Firewood Company, etc., etc.: such is the mass
The bizarre nomenclature of the companies HONOP0/QUSSS that it established.

The first of these companies undertook trade
grains on two of Germany's largest rivers Magne. It was in 1750 that the one in India was created, in Emden; Frédéric He had declared this small free port city in this single view; but a company so little
The natural rock fell in 1769, and from its debris it was formed,
in the same town, one for herring fishing.

In 1774, Frederick granted the exclusive trade in salt of the sea and waxes to a company, with freedom to do maritime trade under its flag. In 1765, it gave the tobacco farm to another company.

Finally, Frederick II, in his harsh climate, did not fear to favour a company for the sale of wood to burn in Berlin and Potsdam, and thus brought him to a excessive rate.

Convinced that it was indifferent to whether such or such, in His country reaped the profits from trade, or com-
how they perceived them, provided that in fact one gained from it;
convinced that the companies were less complicit-
a group that individuals, seduced by the lure of the skies
that all these associations offered him, Frédéric IL s'ÿ lent money readily and granted them favors.
reported, without which the companies would not know subsist and with which even they cannot
to sustain for a long time, so that by crushing the others,
They themselves are falling into ruin.

a way to acquire money for one's treasury or even
For his own personal cash register? He didn't hesitate to...

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS. 415

to grant a privilege, as the author of the project always said necessary for maintaining its speculation. All these companies had some monopoly which put them in a position to exist at the cost of the people's subsistence. Frédéric:
He himself had reserved several very important ones:
besides salt, a general monopoly of all governments
For Europeans, it was tobacco, coffee, playing cards, the firewood. When he saw that large advantages in the grant he had given, he took the en-
-enterprise for its own account, and entrepreneurs in development-employees were born.

One might be tempted to take this quote as a page of contemporary history, was only under the an-
In old monarchies, privileges were sold for profit of the public treasury, whereas today, at the constitution
to monopoly we add a subsidy or Pants |
of dividends taken from tax.

Thus, nothing remains of the economic revolution.
of 89; privileges and mercantile feudalism are revenaked; consumer exploitation is more ruthless than never, and the current serf of the large companies is fallen well below "naked neck companion of the mai-trises,

I]

This is the heartbreaking story we are trying to tell.
quitting today. The official economy is quick to to abandon us on such an adventure. Indeed, as long as it involves describing, estimating, inventorying,

16 INTRODUCTION

academic science will draw up official reports.
as far as possible; she doesn't stop before the persuasive. That is his entire audacity, and despite his dis-Creation, the world of the satisfied has given him more than one committed a crime.

But as soon as it comes to addressing the problem of re-
Partition, political economy protests; it declares itself Essentially fatalistic. Let it happen, let it pass.
she said, as in the days of freedom and autonomy industrial. Instinctive spontaneity is better than any organizational system. In short, the eco-political nomy deals neither with politics nor with legislation
lation.

Is it awareness and conviction? Is it simply Desertion and cowardice? Political economy has undergone a
Her great misfortune: it's that she's become official. To her
In its early days, it was, like all new things, suspect and outlawed. The invaluable and incomparable Napoleon I, a great consumer of men and for-ideological sparring partner, had crossed her off the list of con-human births compatible with his despotism.
Therefore, upon his downfall, J.-B. Say did not hesitate to dedicate his Treatise to the Emperor of Russia, restorer of French liberties. As a result of an inevitable reaction,
The outlawed science became, with the change of regime,
in great favor; it was raised to the level of an institution
tion by creating a place for him in one of the five sections of the Institute. The favors of power, in the governments
The provisions of the granted constitution are otherwise dangerous.
uses for science than proscription. Since it

E ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS 17

has taken place in the state councils, the economy is
It has fallen to the level of bureaucracy: it no longer gives his oracles without having first consulted the master who consults.

So it can be said that it has been running for thirty years.
in the same circle, repeating, harping on, and commenting the themes of the ancients, without taking a step forward, offering for any new statistics that differ, as to the figures, those of yesteryear, without allowing oneself to to draw the slightest conclusion for fear of displeasing. That's why the study had to be continued, pursued by a
a new school, socialism, which stops at nothing, not even when faced with the problem of distribution. (May-
will he never know the lethal honors of the aca-

Who is right, the innovators or the conservatives?
Limits? Which ones are in the given and the tradition?
To answer the question, it suffices to recall that the
The Church Fathers had defined economics as: "The science of pro-production and distribution of wealth.

When writers are judged without taking into account the mi-
In the place where they have been, one exposes oneself to the most serious dangers.
taken; the Catholic Church, which is unchangeable, has the sole right to condemning contemporaries using borrowed texts to the deceased authors 11 fourteen or eighteen hundred years ago
years; progressive sciences do not admit this a method of argumentation specific to theology; they consider
On the contrary, writers, by the very fact that they...
given to their time everything that the state of societies where they lived, would still be today in before, if they had been born later, in a

e

18 | INTRODUCTION

another environment. That is why we strongly affirm that the Smiths, the Says, the Rossis, the Blanquis, the Du-walnut, the Bastiats, if they had written since the constitutiontion of financial feudalism, that is to say since 14852, would have been with us against the Horns, the Batbies, the Bénard, the Baudrillarts, the Garniers. Among men convictions that serve science to advance it cer and the clever ones who use it to advance themselves-
Even so, there is a chasm.

The crux of the problem has shifted with the evolution-economic factors; it resides today entirely in the distribution, which it would have been superfluous or premature to to take care of forty years ago. Currently, everything is at:
the machines, the grouping of forces, the division of work no longer has anything to teach us or give us
ner. The spontaneous distribution of wealth, under the law competition died with the competitive regime himself. The two hundred thousand railway workers

Iron is riveted to wage labor for life, forbidden from rising
an establishment of their own and to seek their property
to be or their fortune in combinations of good mar-to be presented to the public. The cities are linked for five-for many years and more to water and gas companies;

Physics, mechanics, and chemistry are not allowed.
to consumers and inventors to reach an agreement and to
to set up factories next to those already under concession.

To stick with these examples and really make the point clear
The difference in situations is such that one only needs to compare the means industrialists twenty or thirty years apart. When the transport was carried out by river transport, by road transport,

ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS 19

by cuckoo clocks, stagecoaches, coaches, no career was not closed to the proletariat. This was the case when Lighting remained the domain of candle makers and of oil lamps; when the water supply is found-was, as it still is in some neighborhoods of Paris, served by commission agents and porters.
Each person was capable of shaping their own destiny; society would have shown to be indiscreet, an usurper interfering in the repair-Profit and expense allocation.

But since the commons have been appropriated,
alienated, monopolized with guarantees and subsidies to budgets; since the scope of the proletariat has expanded and closed on the employee like a gate to hell; of-since there are populations and professions by-categorized, like the castes of India, in hierarchical work rarchical, with fixed salaries, the problem of the distribution became social, the whole of the revolution and of the company.

Let us therefore take it boldly, hand-to-hand, this pro-problem of the distribution of profits and expenses, which does not was only just beginning to emerge in 1848, and which threatens us today to devour society if it doesn't unravel it. In vain we
We would exhaust ourselves searching for new methods of Overproduction of machines, equipment, and groups
by force; we would only aggravate the problem, quantity and intensity. Do we only know in the Publicly, the law on the development of pauperism? Some
A few lines on this subject would not be out of place here.

20 INTRODUCTION

II

According to Mr. de Watieville, a compilation is being made in France destitute out of twelve inhabitants. We will not stop whether it is exaggerated or attenuated; it suffices for us to see before what law is misery distributed, if its intensity believes in direct or inverse proportion to public wealth.

And first, according to our author, the average is one in fourteen inhabitants in the department-agricultural matters, and one on hut in the departments manufacturers. This is, however, a well-established fact. that agriculture lags behind the economy by fifty percent industry in terms of the means of production.

Ask the first person you meet what the centers are the richest in France. He will quote them to you without hesitation. departments of Nord, Pas-de-Calais, Aisne, of the Somme, the Bas-Rhin, the Bouches-du-Rhône, Lyon, Rouen, Bordeaux, Paris, Mulhouse. He will not come to per- the idea of seeking wealth in the Highlands sounds appealing and Basses-Alpes, Creuse, Corrèze, Lozère, the Haute-Loire. However, the poverty situation is alarming, in the first category, from one in five indigent people to twelve inhabitants, and in the second, one in twenty-only eight to forty-two.

A geographer writes about the Nord department:

No department, relatively speaking, has as many major roads, waterways, and

€,
ECONOMIC TRANSFORMATIONS 21

railways than the Nord department. If the population was distributed throughout France as it is in this region, there would be on French territory 85 million inhabitants, and if each of the 86 departments had an agricultural production equal to his, the pro-Gross production from our countryside would exceed 17 billion. France can therefore, with good reason, be proud of such a department.

But Mr. Blanqui, speaking on the same subject:

The Northern department, he said, is the one where the greater misery alongside greater opulence, and: in which the fortune seems to have accumulated, in a desperately seeking to overcome the most difficult problems of

Conclusion of the official statistics:

"One in five inhabitants is indigent."

If we compare the various states of Europe with each other...
rope, we find at the two extremes of progress in-industrial and mercantile, below, Russia, a people of bar-barons and serfs, according to general opinion; at the top, England, the great nation, in the unanimous opinion of economists. ,. | |

While in other states, the proportionate number
The rate of poverty among the indigent varies from 1 in 5 to 1 in 25 or 30.
In Russia, it is one in a hundred. (MOREAU-CHRISTOPHE, CON-(Signed by Mr. LE PLAY.)

In the United Kingdom of Great Britain, the poorperism reaches a quarter and in some places a tier of the population. (Mr. DE MOROSNER)

29 INTRODUCTION

Mr. Moreau-Christophe also said, speaking of the Belgium:

This country, one of the most populated and industrious,
the richest, the most agricultural, the most liberal Europe is at the same time the most miserable and the most poor. Statistics show that the number of in-The number of people receiving aid was: in 1828, 1 in 7 inhabitants, - in 1839, still 1 in 7, - in 1846, 1 in 6.20,
- a proportion that becomes stronger when we approach it-explains the population of the most industrialized provinces, where the ratio of the poor is 1 to 5 and 1 to 3.87. :

Public wealth and pauperism go hand in hand. They are
The official investigators who proclaim it. Why?

The aforementioned author, Mr. Moreau-Christophe, a man
those who are more enlightened and least suspected of heresy,
When searching for the answer to the riddle, don't hesitate to say:

This is because the increase in well-being goes to a few-some, and the increase of misery for all the others.

It's like a response to Malthus.

We don't need to say that in thought of the writer as in ours, no intention to incriminate individuals or groups, except in cases of fraud. Institutions dominate the personalities. Thus, the rights inherent in property are independent of the virtues or vices of the owners areas.

CHAPTER I

DISTURBING LEVIES

197. – THE PRIVILEGE OF REAL ESTATE OWNERSHIP

2
>

It is precisely through the example of the property that we will begin to demonstrate how well-being, the fruit of collective work, goes to a few, first because, in the historical series, the property appears first; then because, according to the order of gradation, it is today, whatever one says, the most innocuous sampling systems.

The word "property" cannot be uttered without evoking... immediately raises the idea of privilege. This is because, in fact, between values that are also respectable, legitimate, and dignified of interest and payment, there is no equality. Thus "the "claim of the owner," says Article 2102 of the Code Napoleon, "is privileged."

Privileged against whom, against what? – Against others

24 CH. 1, – DISTURBING SAMPLES

claims that are not, and which nevertheless enter into counts in the calculation of public wealth. Who Suppliers? Such an employee at 3,000 francs, in charge of 800 francs rent, exhausting all the neighborhood resources of its credit: Despite an African-style sobriety, He spends 1,000 francs more in his year than he has received. There is force majeure and a complete absence of resources. What will the creditors do? Agree to a reduction proportional to their claims?

– May it please you to act thus, replies the killer to the suppliers; as for me, I have privilege. I begin by taking my 800 francs in full; arrange Take care of the rest.

Thus the security and prosperity of the owner prove not from the creation of wealth, but from a displacement, to the detriment of the baker, the carpenter, from the fruit seller, the butcher, the wine merchant, the tailor, of the shoemaker, the haberdasher and other people without privilege, although at least as interesting as the pro-owner.

We've seen worse: the owner seizing the Furniture that is still owed to the upholsterer by the tenant:

because that is his right.

Instead of a residential rent, suppose a rental industrial, a vast business, leases to long term and a forced transaction between the occupier and his creditors; Suppose bankruptcy.

The owner's advantages, in this case, increase. precisely because of the loss suffered by its co-creditors. The law act as the supreme arbiter of the situation.

REAL ESTATE $

1Q

has)

Thus, he can demand the termination of the lease, destroy therefore the fund which, in the hands of the trustee, of the composition agreement or the assignee could have safeguarded to amortize or reduce liabilities, in whole or in part.

Or he may demand the immediate deposit of all the remaining annuities until expiry

And yet, he has his six months' rent paid in advance, privilege-light for the current: no loss to compensate for in the past, there is no disaster to fear in the future.

The newspaper La Presse of September 11, 1863 cites an example of a terrible application of the aforementioned privilege:

A question that is stirring up the legal world and also the business world has happened in the last half-century lately with great intensity, and we believe it would be appropriate to put a stop to the regrettable controversies to which it gives rise, in making them definitively settled by law; This is it: In the event of the bankruptcy of its tenant, the proprietor. Does the owner have a currently due debt that... allows for immediate payment of all Rents that are due and even those that are yet to become due?

The question having been submitted, by referral from the Court of cassation, at the Imperial Court of Orléans, this Court has enshrined the owner's rights in their broadest scope large.

– It is not simply a privileged right based on Article 2102 of the Napoleonic Code, which the decree devotes to profit of the owner, for all rents, even if not due; the Court of Orleans recognizes the owner's right to bring an action against the bankrupt or his trustee in a direct action aimed at the payment of all outstanding rents and of all rents due, otherwise to immediate termination of the lease agreement,

26 CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

The case referred to the Imperial Court presented circumstances of fact on which the tenant, in order to postpone the requested termination, to delay the failure to pay, disastrous termination for the liquidation of its bankruptcy.

The owner demanded immediate payment of approximately 58,000 francs for rent due until the end of the lease. This payment would have absorbed, had it been made, beyond even the bankruptcy assets. Paid into the hands of the owner, this sum constituted for him, by his interest alone, a considerable advantage.

On the other hand, the tenant alleged that if, by the fact:

However, the remaining guarantees he had were of a nature to...
to protect him from any serious fear: – 1° The im-furnished, rented for six years and for a period of twenty years, had been considerably increased, in its vatheir sale or rental, through improvements including the figure exceeded 20,000 francs; – 2° the total value of The rents granted by the trustee amounted to 5,000 francs.
instead of 2,800 francs, the original rental amount;
– 3° finally, furniture superior to the bankrupt's furniture, of goods of a value at least equal to those which furnished the building during the bankrupt's period of enjoyment were sufficient guarantees for the owner.

All these considerations were not apparent to the Court of
A reference that could alter the solution to the question.
The court only granted the bankrupt a three-month extension.
and to the trustee to satisfy the payment request;
and, in the event of non-payment within the said period, she pronounced
the termination of the lease.

Following this ruling, which deprived the tenant of all with hopes for future commercial success, this one has given itself the dead.

Dura lex, sed lex; the protests against this Exorbitant privileges are part of all points:

\

REAL ESTATE 97

prosecutors' offices, chambers and courts of commerce
commerce, assemblies of notables; we have here a a petition addressed to the Senate on this subject. However, this is not
'not the biggest enormity of privilege.

The farmer who drained, fertilized, marled, limed, irrigated,
wooded, cleared an area and doubled the value of the land,
has only one right upon the expiration of his lease: the right to pay to the owner the interest on money and labor that he, the settler, incorporated into the land of the master, to unless he prefers to leave without compensation or remuneration scholarship for his efforts, his capital and his sweat.

With regard to the community, this right of access (all that which unites and becomes incorporated into the thing belongs to the pro-(private) is taking on frightening proportions. Let's take

The city has reportedly spent two billion in sixteen years to beautify themselves, to give themselves air, light, and promenades, squares, sewers, sanitation and of health: inexchangeable pleasures, imma-
"The realities," the old economists used to say.

But the owner said: – Materials, non-exchangeable, he said; I'm not that spiritual.

Indeed, the scarcity of housing, the advantage of the terrace on the edge, sold for 1,000 francs when they are not worth only 100, being enclosed, the big day, the ventilation, the proximity of a garden, a haunted street, fashion and the enthusiasm on top of everything else, all things considered which the owner did not spend a penny on, have were attributed, categorized, rated, and evaluated by him to his budget.

This added value, created by the competition and the contributions

28 CH, I – DISTURBING SAMPLES

goals of all citizens of Paris, rich and poor, Without exception, all 50,000 landowners have placed in their wallets and safes. so that the inhabitants, after having paid in capital the two billion in works, will pay for it in perpetuity. interest at 10 and 15 of the 400 to the owners, who did not have them Not provided.

Why doesn't the community reserve the Capital gains it creates? 2 billion, at 5 per 100, that's 100 million in revenue. With that, the city of Paris could eliminate all its municipal contributions. What's the point of pushing the exam any further? There's no of possible ambiguity: ownership removes from the work col- it reads more than it contributes.

| II

It is not enough to simply state a fact; it is incumbent upon- It is up to the economist to explain the reason and to demonstrate – the legitimacy of a reform.

The excellence of the property above all others means of production stem precisely from the fact that the peoples, at the time of Roman law, the basis of our Code

Dear friend, so far away, what was our economic situation before?
the constitution of industry under the First Empire and The Restoration? France, essentially agricultural, subjected to fragmentation by the great liquidation of '89,
had little or no trade.

REAL ESTATE 29

The ideal for the peasant was to gather on his estate or his plots all the crops necessary for his consumption food; he had, as much as possible, grain, and vineyard, hay, hemp, fruit, vegetables, a house. Buying nothing was comfort; those who
Those who had surplus to sell were the rich.
To satisfy this mode of organization, the associations were forced to ments to the detriment of production; such soil suitable for Wheat was planted in vineyards, and vice versa, history
to have everything you need at home.

Wise ancestors, through an anti- division,
cipé, the subdivision of their children in accordance with the principle that everyone needs a handful of each a kind of culture. Lacking the wisdom of the fathers, the
The Code had foreseen this case; the second paragraph of the ar-
Article 832 states, in effect:

It is advisable to include in each batch, if possible,
the same quantity of furniture, buildings, rights or
of claims of the same nature and value.

Some wills were annulled for failing to recognize this prescription.

What would the legislator do today? Contrary to...
that of 4804, it would stipulate: | |

The batches should be grouped together as much as possible.
of homogeneous values, so that the land goes to the farmer, the factory to the industrialist and the mobile values hours to the merchant. Thus the paternal fortune, to the instead of becoming a source of income in the hands of children idlers will continue to serve primarily as an instrument of work.

There is a whole revolution at the heart of this difference in the way of understanding the best subdivision of inheritances; it is proof that in the past people lived off the owned, lands that today we live off separation industries, division and specialization of Work, in short, exchange. Legislation must to follow social transformations under penalty of raising unanimous protests. That is why the privilege of property, surviving its preponderance as An economic element, it becomes odious, incompatible. But while also pointing out current and future abuses, Let us be careful not to overlook the services he has rendered. in the past. If we consider population growth as a symptom of well-being, the most beautiful period of France's period is from 1821 to 1826; in those five years, The increase has exceeded one million. The country, recovered from Napoleonic exterminations, he develops a taste for life; the The fragmentation of national assets scatters ownership in everyone's hands. The distribution is almost equal-silence: proof that public wealth is an issue distribution is at least as important as production. Owner privilege, the complication of the procedure when it comes to selling, alienating, exchanging, donating-. to maintain property within families; usury Jesuitism struggles to gain traction on such a value. guarded. General well-being remains.

Consider, on the contrary, what has happened since 1852. with our securities, fluid as water. The Saint-Simonian plunder devoured 8 billion in savings of the country, and the monastery has captured, captured more goods than she had before 1889. Concentration of wealth in the hands of a few; explosion of pauperism,

MOVABLE CAPITAL 34

– despite the marvels of mechanics, grouping and of the division of labor: decide the problem of the distribution is not insignificant.

–

$2. – THE QUOTA OF MOVABLE CAPITAL

[IT

As long as ownership is no longer the main driving force of the working class, its share of the spoils, so shocking whatever it may be, it is neither the biggest nor the most disastrous. Since movable capital takes precedence over real estate, that is to which we must look for the large accumulations of fortune and disruptive levies.

Property must be considered from two perspectives: view: as a working tool or as material for rent. The ownership of tools is as irreproachable as any element of production. The property-Rent is the only thing at stake in our review. The small colon does not distinguish his gross product from his product net; he confuses the income with the selling price Remuneration of the workforce. Deductions only become clearly apparent with leasing. However, rent of the earth is the least of all forms of prelibation; it rarely exceeds 3 out of 100, except in the urban fantasies, subsidized by taxes.

Along with real estate ownership, appears the mortgage, a movable asset that the constitution owns

32 CH, I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

The building owner is forced to call for help with the service and traffic needs. However, the hypothèque still participates in earthly fixity. Thus it affects the entire property, not an equivalent parcel-slow, liquid and mobilizable; it follows the building in no matter which hands it passes; it is privileged against the fiduciary and unsecured claims; among several Registrations are ranked according to dates. The benefit avouable is 5 out of 100.

Commercial lending, more mobile than any of the va-their previous ones, without preference or privilege, can legally increase to 6 out of 100. – Note that the The legislator, here as in most cases, observes and sanctions a PAU use that it does not impose an idea criphon.

Industrial partnerships, movable capital par excellence, governed by the Commercial Code, it knows no limits nor to its profits or its losses,

– It follows from these comparisons: 4° that a pro-value the more protected it is by the

all the more so since the displacement and the waxing are show easier. Thus, money, in the hands of the pre-small-time operator, becomes the suction pump of the entire substance of the worker, stopping only from-before anesthesia and death.

MOVABLE CAPITAL 33

4

IV

Movable capital has triumphed over property, which it dominates through mortgages, discounts, loans, and even, since fifteen years, through sponsorship, he in turn became an economic engine, and consequently a power-sant organ of grasping in the collective product.

The profit from industry and commerce does not rot less than 10 out of 400; it has no limit in the upward direction; the average is 20 to 30 of 400. Let's reason about the number 20, and do some calculations.

Woolen fabric, -before reaching the consumer, to passed from the hands of the farmer to those of the transporter-trans-

carrier; from there to the factory that processes the wool into flakes, then to the one who spins it, then to the one who weaves it, finally to the tailor: that is, not counting the sheep farmer, five essential specialties well honed by the division work. Assuming a large manufacturer bringing together all the shaping processes in his factory, he counts no less its profits like the small ones that follow one another and a-trade from workshop to workshop. The labor or price of returns, therefore finding itself charged five times with a levy-ment of 20 of 100; so that 1,000 of shaping sc pay 2,000 at the last sale.

The consequences are easy to deduce: two categories-producers' ries contributed to the manufacture of the

Cloth: 4° those who have only their salary; 2° those who enjoy, in addition to the cost price, the 20 for 400 of profits.

94 CH, 1, – DISTURBING SAMPLES

They can, in turn, buy each other's goods. products; they are at par. But first of all, one notices—believes that, in exchange, their alleged benefits are offset and cancels itself out; each pays, with their 20 out of 100 of profit, 20 out of 100 of his partner's profit. Hence the economic axiom that throughout society, the Net product and gross product are one and the same; the concept income falls under the domestic economy, not under political or social economy. Adam Smith and J.-B. Say had had some kind of perception of it; Ricardo to He did better: he reduced the annuity to a simple basic right. thinker taken from the lands and instruments of pre—first quality, in order to allow the tools and the cul—last-class techniques for producing at cost price: something similar to a customs duty.

V

If the annuity recipients are simply being duped wage laborers are, in fact, victims of an illusion. times of an expropriation. How indeed to buy back 200 for which only 100 was paid? How can one work from a from one end of the year to the other when production lasts six months Is that enough for those who are the only ones with the means to buy?

When problems arise with such simplicity, The solution is obvious to everyone: there's no need to search—dear here greater forces in mechanics, in the organization of the workshop and the improvements of the out—tillage. Assume the staff is doubled and there is production

MOVABLE CAPITAL 35

Even if there are four times as many, the distribution will always be the same: a plethora Bankruptcy at the top, unemployment and poverty at the bottom. For—Why don't such peremptory facts break the silence? In everyone's eyes? That's because the disturbances are their effects are ricocheted off in very unequal ways.

Our society, so foolishly infatuated with pretensions

Property privilege,
Mortgage privilege,
Tax privilege,
Privileges regarding salaries and service personnel,
Privilege of expenses for the preservation of the thing,
Privilege of food suppliers,
"Bank privilege,
Credit Fonefer privilege,
Railway privileges,
Dockside Privilege, |
Omnibus Privilege,
Privilege of gas companies,
Cruise Ship Privilege,
Privilege of ministerial offices,
Privilege of oil changes,
"Prioritizes powders and tobaccos,"
Display privilege,
Privilege of the sweep,
Lawyers' privilege,
Privilege of funeral homes, etc., summer.

Unequal privileges, gnawing away with an unequal appetite
one on top of the other, and ultimately on work,
the basis of all wealth and all income.

Alongside legal monopolies, enshrined in law-

100,000 francs and the greaser at 25 sous a day, the Marshal of France at 430,000 francs and the tourlourou at 5 centimes, the minister at 100,000 francs and the suriumé—starting from scratch, the artist commissioned by the Institute and the rapin, the high-wage worker, and the machine operator the bare minimum. One takes too much, by a hundredth. the other for a hundredfold.

VI

Expiation, inflexible as a mathematical theorem—matics. It relentlessly pursues all usurpers. The High-paying professions appear, at first glance,
the most favored; but economic inevitability soon sets in.
Not to reverse the roles. To the big winners, Long Islands.
Unemployment; small profits, permanent poverty.
In Paris, the tailor can always work if he agrees.
Endless reductions in labor costs. A man
The party was citing households where, in the dead
During the season, the husband and wife gave eighteen days' worth of work.
fourteen hours for 42 francs; that is, with the small items supplies, fuel for heating the tiles and Lighting. 2 francs per day per person. 4 francs for
The father and mother; 6 francs if you have a grown daughter good seamstress; or finally, at 300 days of work per
. year, 1,200 to 1,500 or 1,800 francs annual salary.
How many jewelers, engravers, bronze workers,
Do typesetters manage to earn such a sum?
After deducting unemployment benefits?

#

MOVABLE CAPITAL 31

The problem, as we already understand, would be that a | A day's work is paid for a day's work. Thus would each producer be guaranteed placement of their three hundred working days per year: public wealth that, that is to say the quantity of value created, could
This would increase, in this respect, from twelve to twenty billion each year, by eliminating unemployment. That if, in these conditions, mechanics, machines, the improvement—
the equipment allowed workers to practice a trade
to double their production every day, the col- wealth.
lective would really still have, in this profession,
doubled. But we are committed to our aristocrat—

our share of privilege. So the situation can be summarized as follows:

High wages lead to unemployment; commerce and...
the industry's major beneficiaries, bankruptcy and ban-:
queroute; to rich nations, pauperism.

Vanity, it must be said, takes up as much space as ignorance of the causes that maintain the state a mess that we denounce. Who doesn't congratulate themselves on not being Not at the very bottom of the ladder? Who would even consider the idea?
To see the lower classes rise up to him? He
You should see how jealous the workers are of the dike.
professional. – I don't work in cellars, me
said, frowning, a carpenter to whom I...
I was asking someone to come and put down a bottle rack; it's Fine for the city dweller; I, on the other hand, am a craftsman.

The first need of the French is to create for themselves great men. During the June uprising, a A squad of national guardsmen had just crossed a _ abandoned barricade, partially demolished; a straggler

8

38 CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

notices, amidst the cobblestones, a scrap of red flag fixed to a stick; he takes it and carries it away. When he
As he arrived at his post, his comrades-
They start in great tumult; a cry rises: He has taken a dra-Skin to the insurgents, he took down the flag. The drummer

"7 bats in the fields, the guard presents arms. No one, well
Of course, he is not fooled by the heroism of the militiaman, who does not knows what to do, unsure if it's an ovation or a position being prepared for him. Without a word of explication, by a general, spontaneous, electr- movement
The conspiracy grew, eventually reaching a fever pitch, bordering on enthusiasm.
the company felt the need to have a hero in his ranks; a trick of fortune sent him

,ya Thersite; she improvised an Ajax. The cross of the Legion of Honour, seriously requested, no less Seriously awarded, it transformed the farce into an apotheosis.

The national guard and his valor remained committed to history.
Loire.

$3. – PARENTHESIS: THAT EQUALITY OF CONDITIONS RESULTS
ON THE ORGANIZATION OF A SOCIETY BASED ON EXCHANGE; THE MECHANISM OF INDUSTRIES.

VII

A long experience with hierarchy, corroborated by this ridiculous vanity we are talking about, makes the institutions survive well beyond the reasons that gave rise to them.

evoked the establishment. We have become accustomed to persunnifying each industrial advance in one or more individuals

INDUSTRY MECHANISM 39

of whom we have made masters in the double sense of the word, magister et dominus; it was the natural corollary of the orgapolitical nisation. Even though the citizen recognized governing leaders, likewise the worker, have become in-filmed in front of head producers. The privileged few did not missed opportunity to take advantage of this provision of minds and to formulate their claims to greater shares, under the pretext of property, dignity, capital, talent, genius, personal service
or through ancestors.

Capital, a broader term than the word property,
Although it is not synonymous with it, it in turn came into the development of economic categories. That's him which formed the strong Arts and Crafts society, ante-laughter at the subjugation that we denounce in this book.
In turn, he too had to drop back in front of a phenomenon-
leads superior, predominant, circulation, exchange.
The master of industry, the magister, that is to say the producer encyclopedic author, professor, initiator, scholar,
is and always will remain – the master of the estate, dominus,
privileged owner, advantaged owner, beneficiary of benefits
is being downgraded and must disappear in the new organism, because we no longer live today-
d'hüi of capital rather than property. |

We wrote about this in the Specu- Manual
Author:

By WORK, we commonly mean the way in which from human hands to matter. Thus the plowing of the earth, stone cutting, ore extraction, the wells, sowing of grains, grafting of ar-

A0 ® CH, I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

Bres, are work. That's the point of view, moreover restricted, which has come into use to designate as special—under the name of the working class, the mass of manufacturers, craftsmen, farmers, winegrowers, day laborers, all those who, as they say, put their hand to the work.

Capital is defined as accumulated work. This will...

leads this category to the previous one and amounts to saying that

The production of capital is none other than the production of labor even.

Thus the blacksmith employs, in the exercise of his profession—sion, raw iron, coal, tools; it is, with the money that serves as its working capital, its capital. His craftsmanship, the way he works the iron, that's his the actual work.

—But the coal he burns, the iron he forges, are the the result of previous work similar to his. From a on the other hand, the carts, the axles, the cart fittings carts and wagons that he delivers to the farmer become—They provide the latter with production tools.

so that, in the general system of the economy, capital and work become one. What is produced, coming out of the in the hands of one, becomes raw material or capital, in—passing into the other's hands. The cottons, the wools, The product of the settler or farmer will be the capital, or of the less part of the spinner's capital; the threads, product of These will become the weaver's workable material; the canvases and sheets, a product of the latter, will form the — raw material from the clothing workshops for linen

Gerie and clothing.

So capital is the material on which and with the-
which one works; the work itself is the way
new information on this subject.

»

Thus, all the operations formerly categorized under your

Special names of ownership, capital, are reduced and

Es

(S MECHANISM OF INDUSTRIES A

are subordinated to this superior element, exchange.
The market or saleable value of the goods is not determined than by delivery or change of ownership. That's why-what the merchant, laden with goods, can become insolvent and failing, something that was not seen when the | property was predominant and that the owner derived all of his funds, for then the holder enjoyed simple-
the ability to live for several years without anything to do, having everything at gngo's place.

This reversal of conditions deserves our attention.
Let's stop there for a moment.

Since we live, unlike in the past, particularly-binding of the waxing of the products, anything that interferes and hindering trade is anti-economic: that's why
We have described the samples as disruptive.
unequal, whether they come from rent, dividends or disproportionate salaries. Equality is the only basis of the new regime. It lies at the heart of diversity
even skills. 5

The apprentice carpenter is a producer at twelve years old, the doctor at thirty. If both work until the
The first, in his fifties, will have thirty-eight years of activity.
to settle the twelve years he remained unproductive;
the second will have to pay his dues in twenty years of service
thirty years of spending and studies, in accordance with the principle that each profession must cover its own costs.
The distribution balance is not violated if the wages

4/20. What is a Newton? A man whose education—
This development cost humanity five thousand years.

One cause of the exorbitant differences we see,

|,
42 CH. I. — DISTURBING SAMPLES

as for remuneration, between the various professional categories professional expertise, it is said, stems from rarity. But the claims—
The value of talented people decreases with competition and multiplicity of scholars, like gold diminishes before a Increased production from gold deposits. The Levelling comes through education. Already the workers mechanics, carpenters, stonemasons, sculptors,
are more or less designers, composers, architects texts.

To direct the construction of a road, said Mr. Du-walnut, it might be better to have a pioneer and a postilion, rather than a newly graduated engineer from the Corps of Bridges and roads.

+

Does this mean that so-called liberal specialties must disappear? No, that would be returning to the confusion of responsibilities. Our industrial state is advanced enough to to support this division of labor; alongside the manufacturer of chemical products there is room for the expensive chemist-
choir; and the manufacturer of optical instruments must not
"not necessarily being an astronomer and physicist. Only—"
how if the claims of men of theory, under pre-texts of pure science, become too high, the con-
The currence of their abilities will bring them to their senses.

Moreover, in a free, autonomous society, there is no preferred professions of wealth. The calculation of the economist who estimates it at 87 cents per day and per Per capita: The share of income due to each individual,
is true of any productive specialty.
Science, the arts, and literature have their proletarians, their
the destitute, their ragged clothes, as well as the labor manual; between the chorister and the first tenor, between the sculptors and painters, members of the Institute, responsible for decorations, medals, and the scoundrels reduced to the bric-a-brac customers, between the director of Chemin de iron and grease, calculate the sum of the profits and that For individuals, you will reach 87 cents of income family, per day and per person (3 fr. 48 c. for four people). Fortune, at least, is always the A reward for merit? We appeal to the favorites. themselves. How many charlatans, a disgrace to the body! dical, ride in a carriage, splashing with conscientious doctors to whom stubborn work does not give enough to live. Strictly speaking, there is no aristocracy; there are only aristocrats.

VIII

In a series of facts of the same category, subject
* to a common law, there are relationships of precedence and of posteriority, of principle and of consequence; but of
* Hierarchy, period. Nutrition fuels the circulation of blood, which maintains and repairs the organs, spreads the strength and life in all parts of the body; the hand does not command the heart to beat, nor the head to think to digest tomato; each function is accomplished by virtue of a natural law, not by way of hierarchical command-rarchic. The apologue of Menenius Agrippa, despite The application made by its author is a high environmental quality (HQE) semi-egalitarian.

A4 CIE. I, – DISTURBING SAMPLES

Returning from people to institutions, we say that the current productive world no longer lives by the property and the privilege granted by its great men. Our key asset is circulation.

We can compare the economic society to an im-a machine endowed with its own motion, perpetuating tuel, as in the world system; each piece receives and transmits the movement in turn, is at once effect and cause; rotation is everywhere, the driving force is zero Part! Look at the railway! Squads of conductors baggage handlers, mechanics, drivers, provide traction services; the road workers, bar guards-Signalmen and switchmen ensure the safety of the track;

weighers issue tickets, load and unload the goods; the workshop workers make the repairs; wheelwrights, carpenters, upholsterers, painters, con- Machine builders manufacture rolling stock; the miners supply it with fuel; the engineers- Engineers, pickers, earthmovers, masons, built them earthworks and engineering works; forges and high places" Furnaces converted the ore into rails; vegetation centuries ago, the railway sleepers were produced by the lumberjacks, pit sawyers and others cut timber to length and of thickness; the rural roads, the main roads of land and water, stations, ports, docks, like These were all precursors, preceding and encouraging it. the establishment; they continue to bring him all sorts of things points of the territory, by the road transport, the boats, the mes- wisdom, and goods and people; they are like so many tributaries of a great river: the drying up of

INDUSTRY MECHANISM 43

tributary streams would dry up the main course
cipal. | | |

All industries touch each other, penetrate each other, and... bound by a close solidarity. There are about five a number of specialties in the building industry, in focusing on the categories of workers employed in the chan- third. But this is only a tiny fraction of the professions concerning the building; we do not understand the following Sales: stone quarrying, brickmaking, pottery and pipes, tiles, terracotta and earthenware, roof tiles, sand and pebbles, lime, plaster, laths, nails, slatted, planks, Slate roofing, felling, cutting, sawing of structural timber and carpentry, scaffolding, pins, glue- strong, extraction and handling of lead, zinc, iron, sheet metal; charcoal and coal for the trade- metalworking, brick firing; hardware; pottery; extraction, sawing, cutting and polishing of mar- bres; manufacturing of colors: zinc white, ceruse, red lead, vermilion and others; oil mills and varnishes; products chemicals, wallpaper, paste glue; glassware windows and glass; extraction and cutting of paving stones; trans- carrying of materials.

Where would this nomenclature end? We could ask ourselves that. to also include the manufacture of tools, machines, cranes, capstans, the products consumed by the ou- DIY stores: food, shoes, hairdressing, clothing; letterhead and invoice printing; all

Compasses, levels, pencils. Then, going back to science
In pure form, we would encounter statics, dynamics, the chemistry (composition of cements), mineralogy, the me-

8.

is

_ CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

tallurgy, geometry; that the arts: drawing, the sculpture.

Enfo, starting from any industry and seeking all those that derive from or are related to it, we
we could, through an unbroken chain, traverse
the full extent of human knowledge, to enumerate
everything that man knows how to do.

Reciprocity of services, mutuality and solidarity
The producers' rights are the conditions of this great
A movement that sweeps through economic society.
This charming anecdote, recounted by Franklin, will...
to make this truth tangible:

The skipper of a longboat that was sailing between the cape
May and Philadelphia had done me some small favor.
for which he refused any kind of payment. My wife, upon learning that this man had a daughter, he sent her to
He presented a fashionable hat. Three years later, the boss... finding at my home with an old farmer from the surrounding area
Cape May, who had passed in his longboat, spoke of the bonnet sent by my wife, and told how her daughter
She had been flattered. – But, he added, this bonnet cost
"Very dear to our canton: – How so?" I asked him.
"Oh!" he replied, when my daughter appeared in the assembly,
the bonnet was so admired that all the young per-Sons wanted to bring some from Philadelphia; and we
My wife and I calculated that the whole thing didn't cost Less than one hundred pounds sterling. – That's true, said the farmer,
But you're not telling the whole story. I think the
The bonnet was of some advantage to us, because it is the
the first thing that gave our daughters the idea to knit tinsel gloves to sell in Philadelphia, and to procure caps and ribbons by this means; and You know that this branch of industry is growing every days and should have even better effects.

I was quite pleased with this example of luxury, because not only were the girls from Cape May becoming more... reuses by buying pretty hats, but because that also provided the Philadelphians with a supply of gloves hot.

IX

The body of theoretical knowledge, the processes practices and great works that have been bequeathed to us by previous generations constitute the capital of humanity manité.

—

Imagination is frightened, says Mr. Horace Say, by the extent research that would need to be done in order to show all the work that was necessary to bring about its perfection the least of any products whatsoever, in one 'branches of the manufacturing industry in our societies modern. ' |

Let's consider navigation. For a ship to... brings from the other hemisphere the products that are lacking In our case, we had to invent the art of working the wood, metals; that the properties of textile plants, the means of making ropes and sails; that the best arrangement to give to be recognized the hull to allow it to fight against the winds to milk and to advance despite the storms; it was necessary that Physics revealed the compass to us, which astronomy... taught us to be guided solely by the inspection of stars on a shoreless sea.

The sciences most distant, on the surface, from the

48 CH. L. — DISTURBING SAMPLES

ordinary practice, provides us with data from a invaluable usefulness.

cost longer, more patient efforts than the calendar-drier. However, there is none whose enjoyment can be acquired today at a lower price, and consequently, it became more necessary. How then? How can we explain this change? How does the calendar-drier, so useless to the first hordes, for whom it sufficed of the alternation of night and day, as well as of winter and of summer, has it in the long run become so indispensable, so little Expensive, yet perfect? For, by a marvelous accord, In the social economy, all these epithets are treated as duisent. s

So that the work necessary for the production of the calendar-Drier was to be executed, was to be possible, it was necessary that the man found a way to save time on his first occupations and those that resulted from them immediate. In other words, these industries needed to: became more productive or less costly than they were not at the beginning: which is to say that he first, the problem of production had to be solved. calendar on the extractive industries themselves.

I don't need to add how civilization, that is to say, the social fact of the increase in wealth, multiplying our affairs, making our moments more and more more precious, forcing us to keep a perpetual record and The calendar, a detailed record of our entire lives, has become... all of the most necessary things. We also know that this admirable discovery has aroused, like its natural supplement, one of our most important industriesenchanted, watchmaking. (P.-J. Proulxon, Contradictions) economic.)

Thus, industries, like races, have their lineage.

THE SAINT-SIMONISNE RAID | 49

tion. We can say about navigation and the calendar as with Newton: These are inventions that cost five thousand years of work for humankind.

In this immense workshop, each individual has their task determined, defined; he is, rightfully, the owner of the tiny portion of products that falls to him. So that the rotation does not stop, this portion must, if However small it may be, it remains entirely within him. We have already Two types of disruptive sampling were observed: the wage inequality. As long as there hasn't been any more...

Very much so, the company was still able to move forward at a fairly good pace.
cheerful, since these are institutions as old as work, while pauperism is a modern invention.
last. Where then does our distress come from? What legitimate tribute-
We can be asked when our landlords,
our directors, our inventors, our industry leaders,
Are our trade intermediaries adequately supplied?

4. – THE SHARE OF THE SCUMBERS

X

The excessive levies that we have just mentioned-gnaler are attached to institutions that have emerged as they are social spontaneity, on the same level as machines,
The corporate grouping and the division of labor. It is-
It would be pointless to complain: humanity began by

Fr

50 CH. I – DISTURBING SAMPLES

* to create gods, priests, kings, castes,

masters, in short, in the spiritual realm and in that of the temporal; whatever the naturalists may have said
realists of the eighteenth century, continuators of the Bible and defenders of original perfection, the ogre is in front of us, not behind us. No doubt he would have been pre-
It is advisable to start with equality, freedom, and autonomy.
Apparently, the genius of the race did not include it.

In any case, there is no reason to incriminate in the past intentions and attributing our miscalculations to a caste or class perversity. We are all responsible and united in a situation which, at the end of account, gave back in its time what it could give-
ner. That's another matter for what we have left to say.

How speculation, starting from gambling or betting to abou-
The rampant fraud and theft has covered the country in ruins.
under the influence of Saint-Simonianism and for the benefit of Israel, This is what we have explained at length in courts, whose natural place here would be in the form of chapter, was only the chapter forming a volume of 336 pages. We will simply give a quick overview. summary of ways and means.

XI

|

The Constitution of Financial Feudalism. – The pre-
The first point to note is the appropriation by the coalition banker of all the major machines of national labor.
We made it the subject of our introduction. We

THE SAINT-SIMONISM RAID 51

We will give a synoptic table of it here, because we
One cannot overemphasize the things that the official economy
Cielle stubbornly refuses to see or hear.

Before 1848, monopolies were few and far between; there were the canals, the Bank of France, some companies railways, too weak to crush river transport,
urban monopolies of gas or cars, fog-
tilles against which, however, the liberal economic school
Mique was in a state of permanent revolt.

The Bank of France and its meager branches were competed with by nine independent banks established in Rouen, Nantes, Bordeaux, Lyon, Marseille, Lille, Or-Léans, Le Havre and Toulouse. Today. All the ins-collective credit institutions were bought back, amalgamated, merged, concentrated. Privilege envelops the country in full force. The Bank of France must have prochaining at least one branch per department.

The three mortgage lending institutions in Nevers,
Marseille and Paris have been reduced to one for everything
The Empire.

Forty-two railway companies, which they themselves already contained mergers, were, of-then 1852, melted into six great commandments inindustrials, to whom competing channels were handed over, where they could worry the railway monopolies; téminus the Canal du Midi, from Bordeaux to Cette, ceded to the

The Bank of France and its branches, that's the whole the country's circulation delivered to an institution headed by a in an autocratic manner by twenty-two people, governor, sub-governors, regents and censors.

82 CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

The mortgage loan, or long-term mortgage—the library, is monopolized in the hands of a government company born by twenty-four proconsuls.

All transport is concentrated between the six large railway companies, administered by one hundred and thirty-six sovereigns.

When we talk about the number of administrators, It's actually the number of places that matters. The fee

Financial duality has indeed invented improbable accumulations blabbery due to its sheer enormity. We have cited, in the Speculation in the courts, the example of Mr. Émile Pereire, who governed nineteen countries in 1863 Companies and three and a half billion in capital.

One of our friends was curious to know exactly The state of high finance: banks, companies credit institutions, ocean liners, railways, large factories, large metallurgy, gas, companies of some importance whatever it may be, are concentrated in the but of one hundred and four—twenty-three (183) individuals.

These one hundred and eighty-three characters have in an 'absolute' way of capital agglomerations that they manage, representing more than twenty billion actions and obligations during the issuance period, that is to say of the bulk of the public wealth, and especially of all large industrial machines through which the rest of the production, known as free production, is obliged to pass.

Abyssus abyssum invocat. The Ban monopoly that creates the monopoly of third-party merchants ture. The Crédit Foncier privilege excludes property owners silences already mortgaged for the benefit of those who are not

No. Railways have their favorites and subcontractors. for suppliers. Imperial Messageries, services State-subsidized maritime companies created the Forges and Mediterranean shipyards for the construction of their equipment.

The Parisian Gas Company reserves a crowd of establishment and construction privileges.

Water distribution companies in large cities act similarly. The Marseille Docks impose-sent to the merchants, not only the warehouse, but their port staff, whose customers pay dearly services, without the laborers being any better off, Far from it.

Thus competition, this great law of labor, has made Everywhere there is room for coalition and hoarding. We we have described at length, in a previous publication- This system of subjugation, which cannot be too easily understood, is a dangerous one. to remind the public.

And now, let the Hi customers enjoy themselves res- Limitations on the duration of their deadlines. – That's freedom "From the Bank," replied the waiters. the financiers.

Railway travelers, shippers of goods, fill the air with their clamor against molestation, surcharges, preferential treatment, and the treatment of preferential treatment, tariff and specifications violations the responsibilities of the directors. – It is the freedom of companies! growl the bulldogs assigned to the guard of the nabobs' safe.

An employee, dismissed without cause from a company

54 CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

any one directed by one of the one hundred and eighty-three proconsuls, can no longer appear anywhere in the Big industry. – Supply and demand! they reply the Jesuits of liberalism.

An unfortunate customer, assaulted in his office against all rights and laws, he said: If I plead, the the company has a legal dispute; whether it loses or not all exceptions; she will drag out the case two years. I will be of my time, of my advances. In ga-By being a grievance, I will lose even more than the claim is worth.

cation. We must therefore let ourselves be strangled without saying a word!
– Seek redress from the justice system; it is the equality of-
"Before the law," screams the lackey of the financial scribe.

O Blanqui! O Bastiat, if you had been witnesses to This depravity and this derision, you would have come to
we shouted at each other: | |

To the attack, comrades! And let's start by crushing
All of them, boors, great lords, and castles. We...
We will explain later.

XII

The frauds. – After the hoarding, the plunder. The frauds invented by financial feudalism are such than ever the imagination of novelists and predictions
The legislature did not go that far. It certainly seemed For the past ten years, about twenty comedies and twice as many novels about the plundering of speculation; none

>

THE RAID OF SAINT-SIMONISM 5

_oeuvre.ne s'a élever à la réalité. In É font
In the correctional court, the magistrates found themselves powerless.
more than once, because the law could not have foreseen acts as revolting as those whose debates their app-carried the revelation.

Eight hundred forgeries were found in the books of an agent of change;

Manufacturing of a ministerial approval to the shareholders by a swindler disguised as a general of division;

Putting into action areas that do not exist;

Ten million embezzled in a case with a high ca-
a pit of forty million;

Clappers completely unrelated to the company;

Coal and iron mines, costing five hundred thousand francs, contributed to the company by the founders for the price of thirteen million; |

Dividends distributed on capital in proportions
tions of more than one hundred million in less than twenty exercises;

_Duplicate actions placing the burden on the a-. Mortissement twenty and forty million who have never
. were paid;

Transport of excavated material and materials from a road iron under construction charged to revenue and product of traffic;

Immediate discounting of securities, e.g., funds which do not exist and companies that do not have to carry out the capital gains promised only in ninety-nine years, to assuming that they generate capital gains;

BG CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

Looting of cash registers, breach of deposits, transfers of accounts allocating expenses to establishment costs operating expenses, with a view to increasing the dividend for the year and to push upwards in stocks, just at the moment:
where the swindlers decided to sell: ne

Concealment, by a limited partner founder, of 6,000 reserved shares versus 4,000 that he admits:

These are the disruptive and criminal levies that have dug the abyss into which work threatens to be swallowed up national. è

The premiums artificially created by speculation and
In financial slang, fraud is called surcharges.
Thus, in 1855, the Crédit Mobilier distributed a dividend dende of 2038 francs. Thanks to the initial investment, the shares, issued at 500 francs, rise to 1982 during the course of 1856; that's an increase of 1482 francs. Since then,
the same shares initially fell to 300 francs;
It was a minorization (the self is not yet established) 200 francs on the even number, and 1682 francs on the higher number high price. With 420,000 shares outstanding, it
At one point, there was a loss of 200 million for

Then that 1982 price fell to 160!

Here is the summary table of the pertur- samples
the activities carried out by speculation; we call it: the raid of Saint-Simonianism.

|
|

|

| Mortgage loan.

|

NAMES OF THE VALUES

Three percent.....,

Four and a half

Four percent...

Department of the Seine...:

City of Paris 1652
1855-60...

Bank of France ee
Discount counter (old)

store sees

...,°e

se

Railway Fund,...
Water Company.,
General stores of Paris...
Chemin et Docks Saint-Ouen...
Docks of Marauille,, coter eces este

Lyons dre sen aneeu

Lazy midday – tetoeesestotesse

North

crettotetat ttes e

Orléans, init yes

West ons tostereetet eurs ee

Five percent Italian,,

Mexican Bonds,

Dutch Credit

Bank of the Netherlands...

Spanish furniture (antique) ...,

(new)...

Austrian roads ..,.....

Northern Spain ..,.....

Cerdoue-Seville, ..,.....

Seville-Jerusalem.

Madrid-Zaragoza. ss. "sses

Pamplona-Zaragoza.....

Portuguese cc... . essrsove

Victor Emmanuel

*"ervstcoseeoss

C]

South Austrians-Lombards
Guillaume-Luxembourg ,... ,...

More

high courts
Since 1852

At

Course

December 31st 867

by title

French values

86 107 100 235

1.410
500
4,600
810
1,760
760 20
720
5+0
650

1.982
700 700
620
1,200
1109
1.025
1,550
530
900 390 746 570
800 500
1.060
1,850
896
1.175
1.575

990

» 68
» 99
» 90 » 233
s | 1,210
» 461
| 3,120
» 612
» 1:310
» 620
on) A70
620

535 505
» 406
50,162
» 162
» 19
» 276
» | 1.442
» 980 » 195
723
» 275
» 36

» 977
» 103
280

» 310
535
» 865
518
1.160
» 856 550

D UT
Ds Er 5 5 Qu cs

THE SEL ru rever ds

=

= =

»

S SEXES ESTrEE=

+

Difference | Number

of securities

.900
.000
.0:0
000 000 600

000 000
.000
.000
170,000

34 0:0

85,000
119,000
40,000
16,000

80,000

50,000

20,000

80,000

50,000
5K4.000
800,000
250,000
25,000
600,000
300,000

Total loss

EL SS228s
©
8

SSS

2222222832

Bb
QT fn 01 The SSSES

©

102,000,000
86,400,000.
4,000,000
8,150,000
9,310,000
41,600,000
8,000,000
306,600,000
788,000,000
87,000,000
3,875,000
431,400,000
132,009,000

Total French values... .,.,.,. | 4,792,657,000

Foreign values

» A4
» 123
» 285
» 485
» 175
» 175
504
» 65
» 97 » 20
p 83 » 40
p 64 » 40 50
b 340
» 96

Total foreign securities...

59

31
230
255

125
325
453
502 16*
530 587
465
AGR
655
530
345
319

EVE Tres Ci

»
855,000
80,000
40 0: 0
120,000
120,000
400,090
200,000
36,000
140,000
240.010
55,000
70,000
200,000
170,000
750,000
50,000

ste

French values. ,.,.,.,.,.,.,.,.,.

TOGETHER, "we will be dedicated

1,132,200,000

196,650,000
20,400,000

87,000,000
40,000,000
181,200,000
100,400,000
6,000,000
74,200,000
140,880,000
25,775,000
.32,760,000
131,000,000
90,100,000
251,250,000
15,950,600

2,531,965,000
4,796,570

7,324,622,000

58 CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

For the nitpickers, the men of the comma and the little bug doesn't give us trouble, let's say right away that we have not drawn up a review of re-formal demand, as if it were a matter of making them give throats too gripping, by francs, sous and centimes.

We know that the actions of Orléans, 2nd series, have not not awarded a prize in 1875, the same cannot be said of those of Lyon, from the East and the South. But we also know that the shares of the original Orleans were exchanged at a rate of 8 new ones against 5 old ones, i.e. £,000 francs re-known against 2,500 francs paid; {em for the shares. from old Lyon, exchanged at a rate of 3 new ones for 2 old ones, valued at 1,500 francs, now worth 14,000 francs poured; and those from Lyon to the Mediterranean, mounted at 2,200, then doubled, that is to say 500 recognized francs against 250 francs paid.

We haven't talked about the depreciation of bonds tions, fixed income, and the Crédit foncier, and the che-iron mines, cities, and industrial companies borrowers.

We also said nothing about another category– – category of foreign bonds, which do not yield interest nor depreciation.

Finally, the decline hasn't given up yet.

So that our total of seven billion and a third is Below the truth.

We would not be embarrassed to find more,
among the compromised capital, half a billion in desastres, whose foundations and depths are equally exploratory than the increases in the aforementioned values.

And as proof, we are collecting, as the pen flows,

THE SAINT-SIMONISM RAID

/

59

'800 million and more (half a billion), in Island table

below :

VALUES

Credit in Spain..... ;
Commercial Society (Madrid).....
Graissessac in Béziers..... é
Libourne to Bergerac
Lyon to Sathonay.....
Quest Switzerland,sessosonoseosis Franco-Swiss. ss...
Swiss Railway Union.....
Italian line... issues!
Savoue in Turin..... dates
Bar: elone-Zaragoza... .., Tarragona and Montblanch in Reus...
Northwest Spain
Ciudad-Réal in Badajoz....., Grauollers in San-Juan.....

Medina del Campo in Zamora.

- from Kef-oum-Theboul.....,
- not

APPROVEMENT. css r.onseoreosoe PR

Ocean Shipyards. Its

Lenoir engines.,,

Essunnes Stationery....., Vono os

Ebro Canal..... Lists

Conflaus at sea.....,

Ports of Brest..... sockets

Boulevard du Temple "

General real estate... ..,

Jardin d'acclimatation....., be

Leather market..... tds:

Auteuit Exhibition..... ue

New district of Luxembourg...

Parisian billing... M:

Seven billion three hundred million plus five hundred

CAPITAL

39,000,000 francs.

16,000,000

2,500,000

50,463,000

42.01 0.000

39,000,000

25,000,000

20.1:00.000

47,250,000

47,000,000

16,000,000

6,000,000

4,000,000

5,500,000

4,000,000

4,500,000

2.01:0.000

2,400,000

33,600,000

5,500,000

20,000,000

4,010,000

3,250,000

12,500,000

10,000,000

5 000,000

305,863,000 fr.

millions, already make SEVEN BILLION L FOUR-FIFTH.

What will be gained from the loans: Danubian, Egyptian,

60 CH. I. – DISTURBING SAMPLES

Romain, Tunisian, from the Cavour Canal, from the Chemins mé-Italian rurals, Lombard Cheinins and a hundred similar combinations whose deficit could still to be valued at over half a billion.

However, let's remain optimistic, and Let's pass, by profit and loss, another 200 million.
that is, with the aforementioned 7.8 billion,
EIGHT BILLION, a round number.

The Chicananous would still say: all these values are specifically addressed to France and its surrounding areas gne, no doubt; but the foreigner has certainly taken some of it.
shipwrecks.

were subscribers to securities at par, which they have resold with a markup of 25 to 50 percent. Transi-Let's consider this, though: let's put TWO BILLION on the liabilities side of the law.
foreign; out of eight, we have six left. And it's a m-minimal, far below the reality. We However, we accept it.

What we would have done with those six billion, we
We can get an idea of it from a few figures.

The Furniture, with 60 million in capital, leaves
A loss of 218 million on the first issue, € is- to-
to say that with the deficit, we would have made four times as much as...
sogne. | |

Orléans, with 300 million in capital, is losing 431 million.

'Lyon, with a 400 million euro stake, partly fictitious, leaves a gap of 788 million, which will never be found again-
but: the cost of 2,000 kilometers of railway.

That is to say, if, instead of wasting it on added value,

\

THE SAINT-SIMONISM RAID _ . 61

destroyed today, the six billion loss is well observed, pocketed by the swindlers, we had employed in reproductive labor, we would have:

With three billion in public works:

Our national and departmental roads have been rectified.

Our local roads are finished,

It even builds agricultural roads;

Our canals have been completed and perfected; |

Established the most urgent departmental railways gents. oo

With three billion left for self-employment:

Agriculture would have drained, limed, plastered, and covered its active lands, cleared of uncultivated lands, pierced by roads coppices and high forests, drained its marshes, reclaimed its paulds. a

Where a loaf of bread grows, says an economist, a man.

We would be strong in products and manpower; we would hold—
We would be leading Europe as producers; we do not would not be shamefully crushed by the treaty of com-
trade and by the successes of Prussia.

This is no longer about proletarians and pot-potters;
It is the entire nation, large and small factory owners,
merchants, farmers, owners, employees, dirtyried, which is being brought under control. Will it still be said that the pro-
Is the problem of distribution irrelevant? Will we deny the in-Anesthetic influence of disruptive samples?
Will we finally dare to argue that politics has nothing to do with learning from social economics?

CHAPTER II

CONTINUATION OF THE TOPIC: THE REINFORCEMENT OF POLITICS. — MONOPOLY CONCENTRATION

LS

—

$1%. — IDENTITY OF 'POLITICS AND SOCIAL ECONOMY'

e

—

\

Who will rescue us from the clutches of the usurers? Who will
To hold the dealers to account? Who will restore the balance?

the Jacobins, the Communists and the conservatives.

The State! What is this myth, this emblem? Is it a separate, external entity, like the deities of the theocracy, to human society and to the universe itself? The believers in power, in a strong and restorative power, do not are not far from thinking so. For us positivists, we Let us declare that the State is not, cannot be other something that a branch of the social economy, the expression, the summary, the quintessence of the surrounding society, of his aspirations and his ideas. The State, born from an environment economic, can only change with this environment, not by-to please the augurs who claim that politics and the Social reforms are things foreign to one another.

ECONOMICS AND POLITICS 63

Throughout history, man has made God and his rulers in its image. First, work is enslavement; not only-the product, but also the producer are the pro-the privilege of a caste. Similarly, God is the absolute master of the universe; he directs it according to his whim: he can order in the sun to stop, in the shade of the retrograde gnomon last on the dial, to the dew to moisten the grass without wet Gideon's fleece. The government, monarch-Whether it's a dog or an oligarchy, it suffers no control.

Each people modifies these general data according to his temperament and economic constitution. Among the barbarian hordes, always at war, living by plunder and plunder, the deities rejoice in the cries and the torture of the victims; they feed on sacrifices humans. The greatest exterminator of men becomes the prince of warriors.

Non fœneraberis proximo tuo, sed alieno: you do not You will not do usury with your fellow citizens, but with the foreigner, Jehovah told the Hebrews. The spirit of nationalism The ferocity of this people is bordering on ferocity; it is the holy nation, the chosen race; the others have been delivered into exploitation by the Eternal. God strikes, decimates, exterminates all enemies of the Jews; when the sword Warriors alone were not enough; he sent his angels to their help. But no nationality is strong unless it remains united; Therefore, it must not be divided into exploiters and into exploited. Hence the biblical precept against usury between nationals and the fiftieth anniversary jubilee that abolished the debts. On the other hand, the infidels are exploitable material. table without pity or mercy. Speculation and usury are the rule. essential element of Israelite customs. This race cannot to maintain a homogeneous nationality, confined to the same territory. It needs to spread among the peoples in order to extorting money from them, being incapable of submitting to them work.

G4 CH. 11. – MONOPOLY CONCENTRATION

Under the beautiful Greek sky, where nature produces
 "Without effort, the citizen is not obliged to argue by a arduous labor, his life exposed to the elements. There is no need for either of a powerful nationality, nor of severe laws to con-to force the slaves to work. Each one was self-sufficient.
 even; the company seems to have been created more for art than for usefulness. Each city forms an independent state, Athens, Lacedaemon, Argos, Mycenae, Corinth: the federal link
 The lightest weight is a useless yoke. Likewise, Olympus...
 a people of countless, talkative, and amiable deities,
 independent artists, seemingly having no other
 It is a concern to hear the hymns of poets, to be inspired the chisel of Phidias, the brush of Zeuxis.

The Romans of the monarchy and the republic, a people conquerors, devote a special cult to the god Mars; agri-Cultivators and landowners, they invent the god Terme.
 Their institutions all refer to war or to property; public officials are of one or the other the other order. The citizen, master in his own house, cannot tolerate point to state encroachments. Also, no society has better achieved the separation of powers, this palladium public freedoms. The individualistic Romans have again created the Droat, this something prior and

ECONOMICS AND POLITICS 65

superior to the will of sovereigns, according to the ee
 sion of our republican constitutions.

In the Middle Ages, the worker, enslaved to the land,
 He plows and harvests for his lord; he has no rights,
 Neither city nor family; it is a thing, not a man.
 Princes continue to rule by the sword, and God by the

from their corporations and franchises, begin the protest: the labor federation serves as a base and support for the federation of cities. It is primarily against the powers of the earth they wage war against; they dare not. They were once again mixing religion into their quarrels. Fortunately. For their cause, the temporal and the spiritual become one. in addition to one point, because the bishops and abbots are in. At the same time, great feudal lords. Then came John Huss and Luther, the question will be paid PARee that it will be generalized.

Religious reform is a product of the emancipation of work and contemporary political emancipation. See the difference in the writings from this point onward. era. Philosophy eite to its tribunal all the institutions: she asks the priest the reason for his dogmas; kings, why and by what means they reign; to By what right do nobles collect tithes and forced labor? world powers respond first with proscriptions the tions, the executions, the massacres. But always the questions arise, increasingly pressing, increasingly... more threatening: we must finally talk. Princes, kings and priests, setting aside the old baggage of divine right and Ja revelation, are forced to enter the Island the closed arena of the dispute, and to prove, by arguments and quotations, that they are established for happiness and use– the freedom of all. On which the French Revolution concluded that a nation has the right to get rid of what is in its way trave and lui est onerous. Tithes and cervées are abo– . lies without redemption. The Church and the monarchy descend to rank of simple police institutions, endowed with a budget get that representatives can restrict or suppress to prioritize if that seems to be their wish and interest. general. God and the king, in short, pass into the state of sovereigns; who reign and do not govern don't.

4th

66 CH. II. – CONCENTRATION OF MONOPOLIES

As work becomes more liberated, as ri– as the country develops, the citizen gains in independence. dance and dignity, the notion of the State, including religion is but a branch, retrograde and fading away. Nor a con– _ a chamber of ministers, nor a legislative chamber, assuming that it was composed of the most intelligent minds of the nation, would not be enough to resolve 'all the questions that raise the issue of credit organization, customs, circulation-tion of railways, waterways and ter-restraints, profit distribution, the high cost of subsidies assistance. We also see governments, even so-called absolutes, since the First Empire, of-order: to the consultative chambers of commerce, of information on learning, the work of the en-children, salaries, passbooks, labor courts; to learned societies, commissions for the study of tra-public works; to industrialists, jurors for the examination and the classification of the products at the exhibition; to the com-financial companies, capital; to economists and to manufacturers, advice on the extension or degree-

ECONOMICS AND POLITICS 67

customs protection. The functions of the government government issues are returning to society everywhere.

© Today, the absolutism of governments is in direct reason for industrial and productive inferiority nations, and vice versa; examples: Russia, Turkey Quie, the Papal States at one end of the scale; Bel-gic, England, the American Union to the other.

We have gone through all phases of politics,
from absolutism to constitutionalism and to the republic; where do we stand now?

IT

France's greatest misfortune is not having no government has been able to acclimatize or discipline since 1789, having consequently been constantly tossed about from despotism to anarchy, from action to reaction, tou-days thrown to extremes: where suddenly projected into forward, or violently pulled back. The phenomenon-
The strangest thing is that all the powers, that they were born from a decline, like the two empires, or from a Progress, like that of 1830 and 1848, is plagued by a same problem. In the aftermath of its establishment, the new-government calf, strong from the environment that produced it, nathan to indulge in the application of its principle. But ten or fifteen years later, new generations have
As a result, new needs have emerged. Public opinion, extension of freedoms if the charter is liberal, a res-

68 ct. II. – CONCENTRATION OF MONOPOLIES

=

}

restriction to state prerogatives if the constitution is despotique. — |

However, the young people of yesteryear, the founders, mere translators of a common thought, imagining themselves.
that they were Moseses, Messiahs, began
by distributing civic rewards, the spoils, he said
the poet; then they became stuck in their roles and in their program. What made their fortune must to remain unchanged; were they not once called the Saviors of the homeland? They will save it again from the temer-rites of innovators. That is why, instead of probing opinion and to march with it, they put themselves in tra-towards. In the meantime, they've gained weight; stubbornness
The pedant and the old man get involved; the slightest re-
This form must shake the country; anarchy is the inevitable outcome.
A reduction of one thousand écus in one budget item. The ephemeral conflagration between public opinion and power.

This evil, which plagues all governments
French from their eighth or tenth year, sometimes
Much earlier, it's gerontocracy.

Can one imagine anything more ridiculous, more stupid-
What was the fall of Louis-Philippe like? What was it about?
From a trifle, a foolishness, an extension of the law
voting rights for citizens included on the second jury list, and paying less than 200 francs in taxes, which is called-milk the addition of capabilities. There was enough there to give-to satisfy public opinion for ten years. – The public would be so patient with a government that would demonstrate of goodwill! – Nothing less than a Gui-Zot, impertinence personified, arrogance personified man, hiding beneath the hypocritical austerity of the Quaker a

ECONOMY AND POLITICS: 69

pride matched only by impotence and worthlessness
incomparable, to transform this benign request

great gravediggers of the monarchy; this makes one believe in
They are so naive, yet so serious and profound.

With the July Monarchy overthrown, the republic was only possible. No legitimist or bona- pretensions
The party member, moreover, did not dare to perform under the influence of the events.
February measures. The electoral reform could not to stick to the previous day's program; for the very nature of revolutions is to proceed by leaps and bounds; she went until universal suffrage, without any property qualification or of education. It was a meager gift to our ou-illiterate farmers and peasants, rather than granting them the electorate rat, even eligibility, if the reform po-the fight for a corresponding economic reform. The
The 200-franc property qualification for voting – what was it really all about?
predominance of wealth and capital, of wealth,
well- or ill-gotten gains, on honest poverty, on the ins-instruction and intelligence; a Teste, a Martin (from the North)
were preferred to a Lamennais, to an Armand Carrel.
– I'm counting on your vote, said a Winiste candidateriel to Mr. Cousin. – Sir, he replied, I have found good enough to make a minister and a peer of France;
But I am not a voter.

There has never been a concordance between the economic system and the political organism was no longer complete until under the property-based system. Trade was subordinate to the Banking. Business is about speculation, work is about capital.
The February revolution was supposed to, if not overthrow the roles, at least to restore relations on an equal footing

10 CH. IH. — MONOPOLIES CONCENTRATION

lity. The gouts of the Provisional and the Commission executives understood nothing. Most professed that politics was a purely speculative domain;
that preoccupation with material interests was dangerous-reuse; that the people would cease to be heroic if they cease-knows when they're hungry. Their first tenderness was for the annuity, which was paid in advance, while we were doing bankruptcy for the hardworking members of the Savings Bank and the bonds of the Treasury. The Jews, subscribers to the 1847 loan, concessionaires of the Northern and Paris railways
_ in Lyon, were relieved of their duties. The republic-
The republic claimed to govern for and by capital, in at the same time as it granted universal suffrage.

The contradiction between the two elements, political and economic, it was bound to bear fruit.

possessions from the reign of Louis-Philippe, but also those from the Restoration period, with variations of monks, priests, vicars general and archbishops.

